"In addition, it should be stressed that the basic principle of the negotiations was the acceptance in principle of the viewpoint that possible agreements on points of detail are conditional on the achievement of an agreement on the whole.

"The government's positions and activities on foreign policy are crystal clear, aim at guaranteeing national interests, and have been made known to the Greek people.

"On the contrary, the leader of official opposition, although he has repeatedly been challenged, has not replied to the following grave questions for the nation's fate about which all Greek's without exception wait to be briefed.

"He denounces the government for the dialogue it is conducting with Turkey in order to achieve a peaceful settlement of existing differences without national concessions and within the framework of the common defense alliance. The question arises:

"First: With what specific policy does Papandreou intend to replace this dialogue? Does he intend to replace it with the policy of 'Sink the Hora' [allusion to Papandreou's bellicose slogan in 1975 when the Turkish ship Hora was prospecting for oil in the Aegean], a policy he promulgated in Alexandroupolis before being briefed by the then government? A policy that he subsequently tried to cover up with allegedly 'national reasons' letting it be understood that the then prime minister knew about it although it has been fully proven that he did not?

"Second: What stance will he take toward the EEC? Will he remain in it, will he withdraw from it, will he seek a referendum? Will he remain in it, violating Greece's obligations as a member, or will he withdraw, seeking a 'special relationship' as a third country with certainly worse conditions than any equal member?

"Third: What is his position on Europe's missile defense? Papandreou has declared his opposition to the installation of U.S. defense missiles in Europe, although installation has been accepted by West Germany, Britain, Italy and the Netherlands. The policy of Mitterrand--whose electoral victory Papandreou celebrates almost as his own--on this issue is: Abolition of the Soviet SS-20 missiles aimed at Europe, installation of U.S. defense missiles in Europe and the parallel retention of France's independent nuclear force. Finally, Social Democrat Chancellor Schmidt follows the same policy, and, if the issue was discussed during Papandreou's recent visit to Bonn, then the meeting, which he so much publicizes, must have not been at all pleasant.

"What will Papandreou's position toward NATO be? Will he remain in it or will he withdraw? If he withdraws, on what will he rely in order to strengthen our country's defense? On exclusively Greek capabilities for arms? Or on the support of the 'nonaligned countries' which have been the exclusive victims of all military clashes that occurred after World War II? Papandreou constantly brandishes the Turkish danger. Nevertheless, he supports political positions which consign to Turkey all the advantages provided by our link to the Western alliance. I regret it, but Papandreou's positions--on the points that have been published--are dangerous for Greek interests, and I am sure that these positions will be rejected by the Greek people at the upcoming elections."

As soon as he learned of G. Rallis' statement, PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou stated the following: "I am glad, because Rallis at last decided--replying to some of my questions--to admit to the Greek people that his government indeed limited the Limnos terminal corridor, raised the lowest altitudes of six air corridors and linked other corridors among themselves. Of course, Rallis--his government's decisions were made under the unbearable pressures of NATO and the Turks--has transformed them into 'arrangements of air corridors' which serve airplanes following this course, especially in the conservation of fuel. However, Rallis does not give any reply to the more grave question I have asked him; to brief the Chamber and the Greek people on the Greek Government's positions during the course of negotiations with the United States for the bases.

"As long as Rallis does not reply, he remains exposed not only to the Greek people but also to history and the nation. It is precisely these most profound national responsibilities that the Greek people will apportion to New Democracy, which will suffer a historic crushing defeat at the next elections.

"As regards the questions Rallis asks, I suggest that he read my interview with TO VIMA newspaper on 26 April in which I have already given a full reply. It is indeed a pity that Rallis' advisers did not suggest he read my interview. Fortunately, there is still time."

AKROPOLIS INTERVIEWS AVEROF ON NEW PORTFOLIO

NC052021 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 5 Jul 81 p 14

[Exclusive interview with Evangelos Averof-Tositsas, deputy prime minister and national defense minister; place and date not given]

[Text] Question: By undertaking the coordination of the entire economic sector, you somehow abandon the Ministry of National Defense. Wouldn't this be detrimental to the armed forces?

Answer: It will not be at all detrimental. The armed forces are already at such a level of morale and organization--and many other things are on the correct course--that the Ministry of Defense will proceed unhindered on its brilliant path. The ministry's organization and staffing, as well as the quality of the officers corps in general, are at such a high level that my presence or absence does not change things. Besides, I am not abandoning the ministry that I had under my direction and loved for 7 consecutive years. I am working and will continue to work from my office in the ministry; I have retained some basic responsibilities (operational, appointment of senior staff, statutory penalties, NATO questions and some others) and of the responsibilities I have relinguished, the two deputy ministers and four chiefs will point out to me all those matters of which they feel I should be aware. I do not have the slightest worry.

Question: The present economic situation is described as problematic. How do you intend to deal with the matters that have popped up and to what do you give priority?

Answer: The first remark, I would make is that economic progress without the citizen's confidence in the state and economy is, by definition, impossible. As circumstances become more difficult, the importance of confidence becomes more apparent.

Firmness in decision, persistence on correct positions as well as flexibility for improvement on the basis of realistic facts and already adopted decisions are conducive to the restoration of trust, and constitute a prerequisite for economic development. Conversely, revocation of decisions and change of stand on matters without the fullest possible justification contribute to the creation of a climate of uncertainty.

The cooperation of social groups and the assuming of responsibility by the social partners who constitute the basis of our policy create peaceful and democratic relations.

Economy has many (?aspects). For the ordinary citizen, economy is not a sophisticated and sensitive aggregate in the handling of economic facts. For the ordinary citizen, economy is something more simple, and the elements they look for are seriousness, consistency and responsibility. These are also the landmarks that I will follow in charting the political [as published, presumably meaning economic] recovery.

At the same time, I should mention that there are other aspects that are of interest to the experts or those who are directly affected. These aspects concern not only the means for the best regulating and functioning of the laws of supply and demand, but also concern special matters such as the level of interest rates, the extent of financial credits, the charting of priorities for investment activities, parity of currency and so forth. I have already started following these matters together with special technocrats and particularly with the capable and responsible experts of the relevant ministries.

Question: What measures are you going to take to strengthen the citizen's confidence and invigorate economic activity?

Answer: Some measures will be announced soon after I have completed the study of certain elements and the discussions with relevant colleagues as well as with the representatives of the productive classes.

I should tell you that I will form a committee which will not receive any compensation and will consist of New Democracy deputies who are experts in economics, technocrats and representatives of the productive classes. I will receive suggestions from this committee. I will have these worked out and then discuss them with relevant colleagues with whom I will also discuss certain ideas I have from my experience in economics.

In the National Defense Ministry I have set a few simple but very basic principles: meritocracy, organization, defense spirit, aggressive doctrine. Here, my basic principles are: orderly house, consistency, courage and imagination wherever needed, social justice, state respect for the citizen.

Question: Last year on 8 May, immediately after the election of the new New Democracy chairman, you were offered the deputy premiership. You refused. What has intervened since then that made you accept now?

Answer: Your question is justified. If, however, you take into consideration that the actions of a politician should be characterized by realism and stem from national interest, you will be able yourself to give the reply. It was not possible after 40 years of political life, which I want to believe was distinguished by consistency, to absent myself from the roll call to help on the one hand the upcoming electoral struggle and on the other to strengthen a sector that has direct influence on our people's life.

Question: Some people claim that entrusting the deputy premiership to you is pre-electoral fireworks.

Answer: I have heard this and I know that this is supported by the professors of pyrotechnics because it suits them, because they create erroneous impressions, because they deceive the Greek people. New Democracy does not need fireworks, and promises to win the elections. For these 7 years it can show a huge accomplishment thanks to which the foundation of democracy were laid and a better future was secured for our people. Elections are not won with fireworks, which are the distinguishing mark of demagogues, or with promises. As I said, they are won with deeds.

The Greek people are mature and can judge who we are and who our opponents are. We are the great party that contains in its folds the patriots of the right and the center, who have been present in all the struggles of the nation. We are the party that can guarantee our people's progress and prosperity. We constitute the only party that can guarantee the maintenance of the welfare Greeks currently enjoy.

Question: It has been repeatedly reported that you disagree with the policy of a mild atmosphere. What are your viewpoints on this issue?

Answer: I thank you for affording me the opportunity to clarify my position on this truly burning issue. The best environment for the conduct of a correct and civilized political dialogue is indeed a mild political atmosphere. However, a prerequisite for such an atmosphere is respect by all political parties for its maintenance.

In practice, PASOK has never manifested such an intention. If you want I can cite many examples. Therefore, it is inconceivable for one to wage a battle with mildness when one's opponent uses demagogy and abuse as weapons. Prime Minister Rallis was the first to adopt the policy of a mild atmosphere, because, obviously, he wanted to give an opportunity to the PASOK chairman to establish the manner in which the political game should be played. However, the PASOK chairman remained incorrigible. He used abusive language so much and so often (traitors, cheap politicians, sellers of our national rights and so forth) that, like the bourgeois of Molliere who did not know that when he talked he was making prose, also Papandreou, when he said these things, did not know he was being abusive. Personally, I am a very mild man, but I reply with a punch to whoever wants to slap me.

Question: How are your relations with Rallis?

Answer: Excellent. I am sure he would give the same answer were you to ask him about my relations with him. I would add that even when, as a natural thing, we have different viewpoints on an issue, this happens with full understanding of each other's positions, and thus the pursuit for a common denominator is facilitated.

Question: Newspapers have reported that as deputy prime minister you asked to be given the office of deputy minister to Prime Minister Akhilleas Karamanlis, and that a dispute arose over this issue. How much truth is there in this?

Answer: I will answer in two parts, and I think that thus we shall agree better. First it is not true that I asked for that office. I believe that had I asked for it I would have been given it. Second, the man makes the position not the position the man. These things alone attest to how unfounded these rumors were? After all, from the very first moment I expressed the wish to have my office in the Ministry of Coordination so that I would have a more direct contact with all groups.

Question: Do you believe that Mitterrand's election as president of the French Republic and more generally the French elections will influence the result of elections in Greece?

Answer: I do not believe it, or rather I am sure of the opposite. I have many times declared that I believe in the virtues of Greeks. Greeks should not be able to find similarities between Mitterrand and Papandreou and between the French Socialist Party and PASOK.

PASOK has some cadres who can stand up to a comparison. However, the majority and the chairman of the party cannot stand up to a comparison. Francois Mitterrand never said that "he is a Marxist beyond any doubt" or that he is a Marxist with reservations liable to many interpretations. In World War II, Mitterrand fought as a noncommissioned officer in the French army, was wounded, made dangerous attempts to escape and, finally, succeeded in arriving in France where he fought again with the resistance. As soon as Francois Mitterrand was elected president of the republic, he took a clear position in favor of the nuclear arming of France and Europe, stressed that the Soviet SS-20 missiles which can strike at Europe but not at the United States should be dealt with, aligned himself with the United States, and declared himself for NATO. I cannot see any similarity with Andreas Papandreou's and PASOK. Greeks know all these things. They also know that Papandreou's foreign policy will lead Greece to isolation and military weakness and that if Papandreou continues his regular provocations to Turkey he will lead us to perhaps great misadventures. Greeks have a critical spirit and they understand very well these and other things. For this reason, I am sure that the elections in France will not influence the Greek elections at all.

Question: What do you think will happen in case New Democracy wins an independent majority in the next elections? What government lineup will be formed? In case New Democracy cannot form a government the mandate will be given to the second party which will be PASOK. If in order to survive in the Chamber Papandreou cooperates, openly or indirectly with the KKE, what will the consequences be for the country? How will New Democracy react?

Answer: You are being misguided by the uproar PASOK is making, an uproar that often (as, for instance, in Lakonia) [allusion to recent political speech in Lakonia where thousands of alleged PASOK followers had gathered] costs him many millions. A lot of noise, however, does not mean many voters. Do not be at all uneasy. You will see. New Democracy will win a comfortable majority and alone will form a government.

GOVERNMENT INFORMS USSR OF BALLERINA'S DEFECTION

TA061601 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 6 Jul (AA)--Galina Cursina, a ballerina of the Bolshoi troupe on tour in Turkey, does want to go to the United States and not to return to the Soviet Union, reiterated an official statement issued by the Foreign Ministry today. Cursina stated her intention to do so both orally and in writing to Turkish authorities, the statement stressed. The Soviet Union was duly informed by Turkish authorities.

The ballerina had sought asylum from the U.S. Consulate General in Istanbul Saturday and she was free to go to that country, according to the statement.

Further Details

TA161902 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1824 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Galina Cursina, the Soviet ballerina who applied to the U.S. Consulate General in Istanbul for political asylum 2 days ago, stated her application verbally and in writing to the Turkish authorities. According to information supplied by the Foreign Ministry Information Directorate General, after Cursina applied to the U.S. Consulate General on 4 July, the U.S. Embassy in Ankara informed the Turkish authorities of the situation. The Turkish authorities asked Cursina to confirm the situation verbally and in writing. After she supplied this confirmation, the Soviet Embassy in Ankara was informed of the situation. The necessary procedures are being carried out. The Soviet ballerina is now at the U.S. Consulate General in Istanbul.

Meanwhile, (Alekse Usin), head of the Bolshoi troupe, which is in Istanbul, held a news conference and said: We believe this incident is meant to damage Turkish-Soviet cultural cooperation. The Bolshoi is in Turkey for the 9th International Istanbul Festival.

EXPORTS TO LIBYA INCREASE; BULGARIAN DELEGATION

TA011545 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 1 Jul 81

[Text] Istanbul, 1 Jul (AA)--Turkey has exported 616 million dollars worth of goods to Libya in the first 5 months of 1981, and has signed additional export contracts worth 408 million dollars, raising the total over one billion dollars, Libyan Trade Attache (Muhammed Sharshari) today told members of the Istanbul Chamber of Industry. He was addressing a meeting to mark the occasion. (Sharshari) added Turkish-Libyan relations were a good model for widespread cooperation between Islamic countries.

A Bulgarian trade mission is expected in Istanbul Monday, 6 July. The 20-man team, representing 15 exporting and importing agencies of Bulgaria, will stay 4 days in the city.

Bulgarian Trade Talks

TA061954 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1824 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Talks aimed at developing Turkish-Bulgarian economic relations began in Istanbul today between officials of the two countries' chambers of industry and trade. Mehmet Yazar, chairman of the Turkish Union of Chambers, said in an opening speech that certain goods needed by Bulgaria could be manufactured in Turkey. He said ways and means would be sought to export certain products and goods, such as furniture, household appliances and agricultural machinery, besides traditional export goods. He stressed that the transfer of technology would benefit both countries. Yazar also said work was underway to open a Turkish fair in Sofia.

The Bulgarian deputy minister of foreign trade, Petur Bashikarov, said at the meeting that Bulgaria could cooperate with Turkey in the field of construction and that it was ready to purchase various agricultural goods, mainly citrus products and olives.

(Peter Rusev), head of the Bulgarian Union of Chambers, pointed out that agricultural cooperation between the two countries would develop industrial cooperation as well. Talks between the Turkish and Bulgarian delegations will continue for 3 days.

Reactions to Libyan Trade

NC030804 Istanbul GUNAYDIN in Turkish 30 Jun 81 p 5

[Text] The "protocol" that Turkey has signed with Libya, officially stipulating $1 billion worth of exports to Libya, has caused near panic in Western countries to the extent that it has become the topic of the day. The main world news agency, ASSOCIATED PRESS, the German parliament and the Italian president, all in chorus, are trying to upset Turkish-Libyan relations.

Efforts to "hinder" Turkish-Libyan trade, which has developed through ties inspired by history, were first exerted by AP. The day the agreement stipulating the sale of $1 billion worth of goods to Libya in 1982 was signed, AP carried a 3-page report, in the form of a commentary, in which it persistently argued that Libya wanted to purchase submarines and warships from Turkey, as if Turkey had nothing else to sell.

Two days after this AP commentary, the Foreign Affairs Commission of the German parliament maintained that Turkey had sold to Libya the four submarines it had obtained from Germany. Using this argument as a subterfuge, Germany has suspended until September German military aid to Turkey.

Another effort to hinder Turkish-Libyan trade talks came from Italy. President Sandro Pertini argued that "all the terrorism in the world, including that in Turkey, was being masterminded by Al-Qadhdhafi and 'Arafat." The Italian president's particular mention of Turkey and his argument that terrorism was being directed by Al-Qadhdhafi implies nothing more than an attempt to undermine Turkish-Libyan relations.

The reason for this ill-tempered reaction from Germany and Italy becomes obvious when their share of exports to Libya, which is capable of importing goods worth $10 billion per year, becomes apparent. These countries, which are used to securing a large share of the Libyan market, cannot tolerate the fact that Turkey, which sold Libya only $60 million worth of goods last year, should increase its exports to Libya to $1 billion, and sign an official protocol for this purpose.

POLISH UNDER SECRETARY ARRIVES FOR VISIT

TA062104 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] The Polish under secretary of state for foreign affairs, Marian Dobrosielski, arrived in Istanbul by air at 2155 this evening. He will come to Ankara tomorrow morning. He will hold talks with Foreign Ministry officials.

NIGHT CURFEW LIFTED IN EASTERN PROVINCES

TA031509 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1505 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Erzurum, 3 Jul (AA)--The martial law commander for Erzurum and three other eastern provinces entirely lifted the remaining few hours of night curfew. The lifting of the curfew was announced to the public Friday.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 130 8 July 1981

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

SPD Chairman Brandt Discusses Moscow Talks [DER SPIEGEL 6 Jul] J 1
Opposition 'Strongly Criticizes' Brandt Remarks J 9
Ambassador Reports on Disarmament Talks With GDR J 9
Genscher Sees Cooperation Between EC, ASEAN J 10

FRANCE

Mitterrand Calls Soviet Supremacy 'Real Danger' K 1
President on Domestic Issues, U.S. Ties, Mideast [LE MONDE 2 Jul] K 1
Qaddumi Asks Paris To Upgrade PLO Representation K 10
Cheysson, Mexican Envoy Discuss Oil Problem K 11
Mexican Embassy Communique K 11

CYPRUS

President Kiprianou Returns From Athens Visit R 1
Statement on Arrival R 1
Austrian Foreign Minister Continues Official Visit R 1
Rolandhis Hosts Dinner R 1
Air Agreement Signed R 2
Lebanese Phalangists Seek Larnaca Airlink [TA NEA 7 Jul] R 2
Government Denies Report R 3
Greek, Turkish Cypriot Journalists Seek Ties R 3
North Party Consults on Coalition Government [Bayrak Radio] R 3

GREECE

'Revolutionary Left' Sets Bombs at Beach Area [MESIMVRINI 7 Jul] S 1
Fires Damage Piraievs, Athens Department Stores S 1
Government Condemns Arson S 1
Cyprus President Concludes Visit, Leaves for Home S 1
Meeting With Rallis S 1
Statement on Departure S 2
Rolandhis Comments on Haig's Cyprus Role [MESIMVRINI 6 Jul] S 3

TURKEY

Soviet Ballerina Depart Istanbul for Frankfurt T 1
Polish Under Secretary Begins Contacts in Ankara T 1
Ozal Leaves for IMF Meeting in Washington T 1
NATO's Luns Comments on 'Favorable' Developments T 1
Prosecutors Demand Death Sentence for 21 T 2
DISK Officials Sentenced for Strike Activities T 2
MILLIYET Analyzes Turkish Cypriot Elections [2 Jul] T 2

SPD CHAIRMAN BRANDT DISCUSSES MOSCOW TALKS

DW070904 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 6 Jul 81 pp 23-29

[Editors Klaus Wirtgen and Dirk Koch interview with SPD Chairman Willy Brandt in Moscow--date not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Brandt, in Moscow, you have pointed out increasing dangers for world peace, saying on several occasions that you consider the situation to be very serious. Did you receive any new unpleasant information or are you painting everything black to save detente?

Brandt: My assessment of the international situation was not changed by the Moscow talks. I came to Moscow with a very serious assessment of the international situation. I said it was alarming, with growing tensions and increasing araments. I realized more clearly here, however, what Brezhnev's Tbilisi speech meant. We can expect very delayed negotiations to take place as well as the adoption by the Soviet side of an alternative to what emanates from one part of NATO's Demcember 1979 decision.

SPIEGEL: You mean Western counterarmament.

Brandt: Actually, that was clear from the start. In answer to the second part of your question, I have not made the situation appear more serious than it is just for tactical reasons. It really is serious, as many people in the Federal Republic as well as elsewhere in Europe are aware.

SPIEGEL: Did the Soviets express additional threats?

Brandt: No threats at all were made. A big power simply expressed self-assuredness that it will be able to go along if the other big power believes it can demonstrate superiority with regard to the great means of destruction. It is my experience--and this has also been said in Moscow, by the way--that the intervals between the inventions of one side or the other have become increasingly shorter in the course of history: first with regard to the atom bomb, then the hydrogen bomb and then other arms systems. I do not believe that the concept of "ruining the other through armament" is realistic.

SPIEGEL: Helmut Schmidt and Hans-Dietrich Genscher believe that the nuclear balance has been upset in Europe because the Soviet Union has deployed its SS-20 medium-range missiles. The Soviet Union now says that if NATO deploys 572 U.S. weapons, it will counteract with new arms. What is that if not a threat?

Brandt: Regarding the figures, this is one of the most depressing things we have experienced. While the general secretary was speaking, Hans-Juergen Wischnewski took our files out and found that there is an enormous difference. By the way, he was absolutely correct in saying, and I said it also: I have no satellites and I cannot count in any other way either, but there is a fantastic difference between the number of launchers and warheads.

SPIEGEL: Could you cite some figures?

Brandt: I shouldn't but the differences range between 1 to 10 and 1 to 100. It makes one realize that a party chairman, no matter what he has done otherwise, is not there to take measures which must be taken by governments. I say, if for no other reason, this should be reason enough to begin negotiations as soon as possible.

SPIEGEL: The counting of arms as such doesn't help much either, as was demonstrated by the tough Vienna negotiations on the reduction of troops in Europe.

Brandt: Regardless of what Vienna may have meant and of what was carried on so laboriously over the years, it still has its significance.

Some marginal things were accomplished with regard to such things as whether music bands or mess personnel should be counted. Such things were discussed by Brezhnev and me as early as 1971 on the Crimea. Basically, however, both sides know rather accurately through Vienna what they have in those areas being discussed at the Vienna MBFR negotiations...

SPIEGEL: You mean that the Soviet negotiators have learned from the figures of the U.S. intelligence service how strong the USSR really is?

Brandt: ...this should eventually take place with regard to nuclear arms in Europe, and therefore, I support negotiations on the subject as soon as possible.

SPIEGEL: Federal Defense Minister Apel stated recently that in medium-range missiles an eastern superiority of 8 to 1 exists. You mentioned a difference of between 10 to 1 and 100 to 1.

Brandt: It depends on what the figures refer to. It depends on whether the calculations include land-based missiles, on whether the French and the British potentials are included and whether the U.S. forward-based systems are included, which also belong somehow to the gray zone. It depends on whether one includes the submarines which have been counted in part in connection with SALT II, which has not been ratified, as well as the Soviet submarines in the Baltic Sea.

SPIEGEL: The five U.S. submarines with Poseidon missiles have been counted already.
Brandt: Yes, whether we like it or not, the Soviet side says--I understand their feelings--the following. If we come to the negotiating table, we must include the U.S. forward-based systems. We will at least bring them up. I think it would be realistic for NATO to deal with this.

SPIEGEL: This position was represented by the federal chancellor here in Moscow in 1980...
Brandt: Yes, I think so...

SPIEGEL: ...but it seems that he has abandoned that in the meantime, perhaps under the influence of Mr Genscher.
Brandt: I am not so certain. Mr Genscher just said that he feared that negotiations would be complicated by the inclusion of these additional elements.

SPIEGEL: So far, however, he, together with the Americans, seems to be against it.

Brandt: One can very well imagine negotiations taking place in steps. I have held discussions during the past few days with people in the Soviet Union--not just people I met in the street, but high-ranking personalities--who have outlined another sequence of steps to me.

SPIEGEL: What does the Soviet model look like?

Brandt: Well, they just said: We have taken notice of your zero solution. That pertains to the material involved in the NATO decision of December 1979, that is, the Soviet SS-20 missiles, the U.S. Pershing II and the cruise missiles. Let us assume, the Soviet discussion partners, say, that we are prepared to scrap our SS-20 missiles.

SPIEGEL: "Scrapping," not just withdrawal for deployment against targets outside Europe, that was not demended by you?

Brandt: I discussed figures, deployment and ranges. My Soviet discussion partners said: Assume that we are prepared to scrap them. Then you must reckon, they said, that we are heading for a comprehensive zero solution. It should encompass more than just the new medium-range weapons and should include, the Pershing-I, which we consider to be a short-range weapon. Corresponding weapons would then naturally be dismantled on the Soviet side.

SPIEGEL: It is a current belief in the West that this tactical weapon with a range of about 750 km cannot strike Soviet territory but can graze it at best.

Brandt: The Soviets said that the Pershing I can reach the outskirts of Leningrad.

SPIEGEL: How did you react to the new suggestion from the Soviets?

Brandt: In one of the accompnaying talks, I suggested not overburdening the matter. But naturally, I cannot doubt the legitimacy of a course of action which indicates that more is actually involved: We want to hold a second state of discussions on all other arms, not merely the new ones which can reach Russia. We also are prepared to discuss weapons which can reach you.

SPIEGEL: Will Brezhnev's "zero solution" lead to quicker negotiations than your own suggestion?

Brandt: Without wanting to introduce Brezhnev into the game, I somewhat fear that if one throws all this together, nothing will come of it and that the second thing will crush the first. I am in favor of discussing the matter on which Schmidt, Genscher and Brandt agree: It would be good to create the prerequisites for a situation where there would be no need to implement the second part of the NATO decision on the Pershing II and cruise missiles.

SPIEGEL: That is also up to the Soviets.

Brandt: I advise the Soviet side not to turn their basic considerations for the future into a kind of prerequisite, for current matters, because otherwise one thing would not just burden the other, it could kill it. We are aware of such stories. If you look carefully at Brezhnev's toast on Tuesday, he said: We are prepared, as a kind of introduction for negotiations, not to continue with the SS-20 missiles, if the Americans let us know at the beginning of the negotiations that they will do nothing during the negotiations that would increase their nuclear potential. In other words, they do not voice conditions regarding production or excavation or concrete work at missile sites. But they concentrate everything on the decisive point--deployment. I consider that to be very significant.

Brandt: I cannot judge the SS-20's aimed at China.

SPIEGEL: ...That is, the entire SS-20 potential aimed at West Europe.

Brandt: We would be in good company with Federal Chancellor Konrad Adenauer who made this his fundamental principle...

SPIEGEL: ...Who fought against the deployment of Thor and Jupiter missiles in our country.

Brandt: ...Who said that after everything we have been through, it would be good for us to keep out of this.

SPIEGEL: What would you say to somebody who maintained that Brezhnev's idea of a gradual plan creates new conditions for negotiations, thus demonstrating that the Soviets are not prepared to negotiate?

Brandt: Well, I have frankly outlined the ideas mentioned to me in addition to the official texts. I have nothing at all to say about the things the Soviet Government will really suggest. That is a different matter and remains to be seen.

SPIEGEL: But at the same time, the Soviet side said: If no successful negotiations take place, there will be "counter-counterarmament" before the U.S. counterarmament has taken place. Has "counter-counterarmament" been outlined more concretely?

Brandt: No, that is my term. This expression has never been used by a Soviet politician in talking with me. If I could change it, I would say preparatory counterarmament. One doesn't know how fast these things will work. There are experts who say: Naturally, they have something up their sleeve, such as what could happen on the territory of the other German state and in Czechoslvakia. That would work a bit faster than the Pershing II.

SPIEGEL: You mean the SS-20 missiles which could hit the Federal Republic very quickly from these Warsaw Pact states.

Brandt: There are other things but nothing of that has been mentioned to me. I know it from the remarks of experts--I almost said of such people as Arbatov and Bahr--who deal more closely with their respective further steps.

SPIEGEL: Is that directed only against Europe? Can you be more explicit?

Brandt: Take a look at the map and notice the distance between Soviet islands far out in the East and the California coast.

SPIEGEL: Is that within range of the SS-20?

Brandt: If that were so, it would mean that these arms would not be a subject of the SALT II treaty.

SPIEGEL: Was this matter pointed out to you here?

Brandt: No.

SPIEGEL: You knew it before?

Brandt: Yes.

SPIEGEL: Egon Bahr just recently was in Moscow to prepare for your talks. Why were you so suprised by the differences in figures?

Brandt: I must correct something regarding the preparations. It has been misrepresented at home, as though the SPD had launched a two-stage missile--first Bahr, then Brandt. Bahr was here as a member of the Palme Commission. But of course, he gave me his impressions. By the way, you are right. To be sure, I had received hints even prior to Bahr's visit that there is quite a divergence in what the one side thinks of the other, but I have never before seen such drastic references to different figures as those I was confronted with by the general secretary. I don't mean by this that they are correct.

SPIEGEL: Does Moscow perhaps want to establish its starting position for negotiations with the help of extreme figures?

Brandt: This would mean overrating the importance of my visit. No matter what I may have against the Soviets otherwise, I must really say that they want to negotiate. One can say what one wants about Brezhnev, but he is most anxious for world peace. That is beyond a doubt. Regarding the figures, they must be clarified if the Soviets want to negotiate, and I hope--no, I am certain--that our U.S. friends also want to because they agreed--it is contained in the Brussels decision, it has been confirmed by the NATO decision in Rome, and Helmut Schmidt brought this back with him. If they want to negotiate at all, the Soviet side knows that it must not beat around the bush if negotiations are to take place.

SPIEGEL: Whose fault is it that negotiations do not get underway?

Brandt: First, we must say that the Soviet side has taken too much time. It assessed the matter incorrectly as is shown by the statements by Andrey Gromyko in Bonn in late 1979. Moscow let time run out up to the fall of 1980. Then there were the Geneva negotiations in October-November, which were not merely procedural negotiations--I did not know that immediately the next day; I learned it a few weeks later.

These were not negotiations such as those between Secretary of State Haig and Ambassador Dobrynin, who have met once a month or every 6 weeks. The matter was really addressed in Geneva. I learned the contents almost 1 year later. But to be fair, I must say that this was not mainly the fault of the U.S. side.

SPIEGEL: Who is guilty now?

Brandt: Now comes the second phase with the great surprise for such people as myself, and for the Russians and many others. It was thought that a new U.S. Government with a domestic policy a bit more rightist was coming. We all have had dealings with Republican governments. After relatively few weeks, they could all be sized up clearly. I have talked to Boris Ponomarev here. He is the chairman of the Supreme Soviet's International department. He was in America several years ago and met Reagan when he was still govenor of California. Ponomarev told how Reagan put him on the speaker's chair in the capitol in Sacramento and said: "What a practical system you have in the USSR! The Supreme Soviet meets twice a year for 2 or 3 days, while I have this congress here which is constantly a pain in the neck for me." The two of them obviously got along quite well. There was no prejudice on principle against Reagan.

SPIEGEL: Nothing of that can be felt at present.

Brandt: Naturally, the Soviets feel insecure and one must try to understand. Half a year has passed now and no one still really knows what is happening. This doesn't just apply to such vitally important matters as missiles. Take the following, for example. President Reagan says: We don't like Communists involved in the French Government, but France remains our good friend. A day later, a story comes from the U.S. State Department which does not agree with the President.

SPIEGEL: Different positions are said to exist occasionally even in Communist states.

Brandt: For a state which is organized like the Soviet Union--I do not say that I consider it the highest development of human society, all I say is that it is an important state which is organized as it is--it must be irritating for them still not to know what the Americans really want.

SPIEGEL: Do you know what is supposed to come of the talks between Haig and Gromyko, planned for the fall? Worldwide this is being called the starting date of the negotiations? What hopes do the Soviets have with regard to this meeting?

Brandt: When Brezhnev spoke Tuesday evening about "negotiations on the issue," he did not mean the meeting between Gromyko and Haig, which is seen by Moscow as a political meeting and not as the start of negotiations on the issue.

SPIEGEL: Which means a different assessment from that in Washington?

Brandt: I'm not sure. I haven't talked about that with any American.

SPIEGEL: So you haven't succeeded here in eliminating the great Soviet doubts about the seriousness of the U.S. desire to negotiate?

Brandt: The statements by the Soviet side indicate that it is very uncertain indeed with regard to the U.S. stance. I expounded the consequences of the Rome decision as well as the news Helmut Schmidt brought with him from Washington.

SPIEGEL: His news was, among other things, that Haig will meet Gromyko.

Brandt: And that subsequently negotiations will begin as planned.

SPIEGEL: In Rome, the Americans made their willingness for negotiations dependent on the good conduct of the Soviet Union. Wasn't that a setback with regard to the dual decision of December 1979?

Brandt: I can't really judge that because I wasn't in Rome. I am for negotiations. My party is against the decision of December 1979 being manipulated. By the way, I will make sure that the U.S. side, if it is interested, is informed about what the Soviet side thinks not only about the procedures but also about the issues.

SPIEGEL: So you are an envoy after all?

Brandt: No, I am a man of good will. That's something quite different from a "go-between." I would be neglecting my duty if I did not keep in mind three other partners apart from talking to my own party and briefing the federal chancellor and the foreign minister. First, I must tell my French friends how things are seen here because the Russians asked me about our French partners. Second, I must tell our U.S. allies and friends how I assess what I have heard here. I must convey it to them. Third, in mid-July, 20 leading representatives of the Socialist International will be in Bonn. I will explain the results of my talks to them. Some of them will even come earlier to hear something about the outcome of my talks.

SPIEGEL: Mr Brandt, you are considered here in Moscow to be one of the, if not the most, credible Western politician. Have you succeeded in dispelling or mitigating the Soviet distrust of Washington.

Brandt: I can't be sure myself. I am afraid the distrust is very deep-seated and exists on both sides. Why is that? I said in my speech in the Kremlin on Tuesday evening that I do not talk at all on behalf of governments and even less so on behalf of the U.S. Government. But that did not prevent me from explaining in my talks that it would be wrong to see the United States as a monolithic bloc opposed to negotiations, but that things will develop and that, in my view, negotiations will take place.

SPIEGEL: If this fails nonetheless, will it be possible in your view to preserve detente at least in Europe or will everything then be bound to develop into the new cold war that Brezhnev talked about?

Brandt: It depends on the time span you have in mind. Experience shows that despite the deterioration of relations in general, meaning above all the relations between the two superpowers, bilateral relations have not basically been harmed. Last year, we saw European governments in the East and the West stating their interests in not being dragged into the whirlpool of worsened relations between the two big powers, although they belong to different alliance systems. Then came the adverse effects of developments in Poland.

SPIEGEL: But history is not bound to repeat itself.

Brandt: Brezhnev said, stressing that the rest of the difficulties were another thing, how highly he assessed the importance of bilateral relations. I confirmed this from our angle, from the angle of my political friends and, as far as I know, from the angle of the Federal Government.

SPIEGEL: He talked about the "strategic" importance.

Brandt: Yes, but that is a different thing. It's roughly like this: Brezhnev's visit to Bonn in November can be useful for bilateral relations and also for the negotiating process. I suppose that's what Brezhnev means by "strategic" importance. He is also aware that unless everything breaks down, he will meet with the U.S. President sometime next year. Therefore, it is not uninteresting for him to discuss with the German federal chancellor matters that go beyond bilateral affairs, before he will have talks with the U.S. President.

SPIEGEL: Do you also see in these forthcoming East-West talks an indication of a stabilization of the situation in Poland?

Brandt: I was talking now of the visit in November. Developments in Poland naturally brought some influence to bear on East-West relations as of late last summer although this was not a problem between the alliance systems. This is a matter of how a state in the Eastern alliance system manages to handle its problems of economic and social renovation, as they call it themselves. I was interested to learn of the Soviet opinion, about the opinion of the highest authority regarding the nature of their concern. That is not so easy for us to understand because we live in different worlds of thought in this respect. I firmly rejected the reproach of Polish Politburo member Olszowski who claimed that West German revanchism had something to do with the Polish matter. That is poisoning an already difficult situation. That has been clearly said. I pointed out that the French Socialists and Communists obviously share this opinion. Nevertheless, I want to say: As little as I understand some things which are being said by the Soviet side on Poland, I still do not have the impression that those who are predicting acute and dramatic developments in Poland are right.

SPIEGEL: Did you detect further evidence of Soviet preparedness with regard to

Brandt: Just before I came here, a Finnish paper carried a Brezhnev interview, which received much attention in northern Europe, on whether northern Europe could be freed of nuclear arms. He explained this on his own, by the way, in one part of our talks--first because I am a European and second because, from the Soviet point of view I am somebody who knows something about northern Europe. I had the impression that he took it for granted that if northern Europe were freed of atomic weapons, this would also include some Soviet territory.

SPIEGEL: Moscow has never pointed out this prepare ess so clearly.

Brandt: It is not my business to comment any further. This will be done by those directly involved. This is one side of the coin if you want to put it that way--the more hopeful side.

SPIEGEL: The less hopeful side aims at California in the form of the SS-20. But let us get back to northern Europe. How concrete and how detailed was the preparedness to include Soviet territory in a northern zone free of nuclear arms?

Brandt: It was clear enough for me. Mrs Brundtland, the Norwegian prime minister, will visit me in Bonn in 2 weeks. When this interview is published on Monday, the Norwegian deputy party executive board will already have been in Moscow.

SPIEGEL: Could this suggestion be a model for considerations made not only in sectarian circles but also by people to be taken seriously, namely, the suggestion to have a nuclear free zone in both parts of Europe...

Brandt: Let them try it. I was surprised by something else, namely, by the changed accents set by Brezhnev in the North-South issue.

SPIEGEL: Did you pin him down on this issue?

Brandt: I did not intend to pin him down. Despite all the other agreements with the federal foreign minister and his colleagues who made the preparations for all this, I was not convinced that I should insist that the Russians must go in October to the North-South summit in Cancun, Mexico. I always believed that a big state such as the Soviet Union will not make decisions based on our pressure, but that it will decide according to its own interests. But before I touched on this point, Leonid Brezhnev told me in his presentation of the matter: "Well, you know our basic standpoint--we, the Soviet Union, are not responsible for the consequences of colonialism."

SPIEGEL: Will the Soviets take part in the conference?

Brandt: Brezhnev said: "Without changing anything about our basic standpoint, we are considering how we could participate in the matter to begin in Mexico in October." That is different from what we have heard before. In this case, it becomes interesting for somebody who has been deeply involved in the North-South problem for some 2 years.

SPIEGEL: Why were you so defenseive when we asked about the role you could possibly play at some time with regard to disarmament in Europe? Are you afraid to become involved in a discussion on "neutralism," "Finlandization" or "detachment from NATO?"

Brandt: No, my qualifications in this field consist solely in the fact that I spent the most important years of my life as a young man in Norway and Sweden, and sometimes in Germany, France or Spain. But I lived in Scandinavia which has very self-confident people, governments and states. They would not tolerate the SPD chairman, who is a good friend of many of them, acting as some sort of a "guardian." They take care of themselves. For me, it was interesting and we will see what will come of it. What you mentioned, something which could involve Europe as a whole at some time, is just a dream, but not an unpleasant one for me.

SPIEGEL: Will you go to America in the foreseeable future?

Brandt: According to present plans, I won't go before early October.

SPIEGEL: Will you see the president?

Brandt: I don't think so unless he asks me. Why should he? I have business with the United Nations and with the most important Jewish organization in the world, the B'nai B'rith, which wants to present me with an award. I think it is important for us at this very time to be in trusting contact with the Jewish organizations, particularly in the United States. I have some other appointments. In the light of all this, am I to get myself into trouble?

SPIEGEL: Through your activities here, don't you risk discrediting your party with the German people who are trained to be afraid of the Russians and who rely on a policy of strength?

Brandt: I work closely with those of my friends and colleagues who hold government responsibility. In addition, I am convinced that the majority of our people, far beyond the ranks of those who think highly of the social-liberal coalition, want every possible chance to be used to preserve peace. The people in both German states are aware that we Germans would be the first to be eliminated if peace is destroyed. We would be eliminated as a nation. Whatever resentments may exist, the Germans want every reasonable realistic effort to be made to preserve peace. This is the lesson from the past. I would like to add, that even if it were not true that the majority wants it, I would make an effort.

SPIEGEL: What must happen to somebody like you who encourages comrades at the SPD congress in Munich next spring to hold to NATO's dual decision?

Brandt: Let's wait and see. It is now July 1981. You are talking about April 1982. What happens during such periods of time nowadays? I am telling you, by then negotiations will be underway. Then the SPD will formulate its expectations regarding these negotiations and they will by no means be small. But, even if this were not the case, seeing the world as it is, it would not be the worst thing for the SPD to stick precisely to what it has said, namely, that the stationing of new weapons must depend on the result of negotiations. That's what we decided.

SPIEGEL: But the Americans interpret the dual decision differently. They want to station the missiles under any circumstances.

Brandt: I said: what we decided. This is also contained in the Brussels decision.

SPIEGEL: What is the prospect for Europe which you called "not unpleasant?"

Brandt: Well, as a young man, I walked from the island of Namedywerth near Andernach on the Rhine to Koblenz. I was a hawk, but not in the U.S. political sense. I was a red hawk. I went to the Deutsches Eck where, believe it or not, there were French soldiers--in 1929. They were withdrawn shortly after, more than 10 years after World War I. That annoyed me, being a boy who was brought up to be an internationalist. Then we marched back from Koblenz to Andernach, singing: "Never, never will we bear arms."

SPIEGEL: This song also was sung by the Easter demonstrators against the nuclear arming ofthe Federal Republic.

Brandt: Could be.

SPIEGEL: Do you also still remember the melody?

Brandt: Never, never will we bear arms. Never, never again do we want war. Let the honorable men fight alone. We simply don't chip in any more. Never, will we...and so on.

SPIEGEL: Willy Brandt as a leader of the choir of the "peace movement?"

Brandt: That's a bit too simple. But it isn't very far away from what many think today. Therefore, I also understand them quite well. If you ask me--although the world of the powerful doesn't care very much--what I want is that we rid ourselves of this folly of the arms race. If it is possible for Europe in the foreseeable future to be largely free from nuclear arms, that would be sensible. But I do not dare hope that I will live to see it.

SPIEGEL: Mr Brandt, we thank you for this talk.

OPPOSITION 'STRONGLY CRITICIZES' BRANDT REMARKS

LD071716 Hamburg DPA in German 1512 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Bonn-Hamburg, 7 Jul (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt today gave Chancellor Helmut Schmidt a detailed briefing on his talks with the Soviet leaders in Moscow.

The CDU/CSU opposition strongly criticized Brandt's remarks concerning the readiness Brezhnev expressed to include Soviet territory in a nulcear-free zone in northern Europe. Their spokesmen urged the chancellor and Foreign Minister Genscher to put Brandt firmly in his place and to distance themselves from his remarks because he is endangering the Atlantic alliance. Deputy Chairman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag Group Manfred Woerner said that a nuclear-free zone in Europe would create the nucleus of a split in the Western alliance and dramatically alter the balance of power of NATO's northern flank in favor of the Soviets.

AMBASSADOR REPORTS ON DISARMAMENT TALKS WITH GDR

LD071700 Hamburg DPA in German 1541 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 Jul (DPA)--Problems connected with medium-range weapons were the main topics at the recent disarmament consultations between the Federal Republic and the GDR.

Ambassador Friedrich Ruth, the Federal Government's authorized representative for disarmament, told newsmen today after his return from East Berlin that during the consultations the GDR side did not mention or even hint at Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev's new stance on a moratorium on deployment. The GDR's position regarding medium-range weapons is identical with that of the Warsaw Pact.

Ruth assessed his talks with Ambassador Ernst Krabatsch of the GDR Foreign Ministry as "frank, businesslike and generally useful." He left Krabatsch in no doubt at all that the readiness of the United States to negotiate is serious and that negotiations can begin in the fall as soon as they are agreed upon at the meeting between foreign ministers Alexander Haig and Andrey Gromyko on the sidelines of the UN General Assembly in New York. NATO in Brussels has been briefed on the course of the negotiations between the two German states. A date for their continuation has not yet been set.

GENSCHER SEES COOPERATION BETWEEN EC, ASEAN

LD071112 Hamburg DPA in German 1046 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher expects new impulses for further expansion in political and economic cooperation between the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) and the European Community from the third joint conference of foreign ministers of the two regions, which is scheduled for 13 October in London.

Genscher said in Bonn today at a luncheon for the ambassadors of ASEAN countries (Indonesia, Singapore, Malaysia, Phillipines and Thailand) that cooperation between both communities could be taken as a model for the future by the Third World. ASEAN itself is gaining increasingly in external presence, Genscher stressed. Genscher said he considers the efforts for a political solution in Kampuchea and Afghanistan to be the focus of political cooperation between the European Community and ASEAN.

MITTERRAND CALLS SOVIET SUPREMACY 'REAL DANGER'

NC071844 Paris AFP in English 1835 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 7 Jul (AFP)--The Soviet Union knows that if it intervenes in Poland it will freeze any chance of negotiation on detente, disarmament, and collective security, President Francois Mitterrand says in an interview whose advance text was released today by the president's office.

In the interview, to be published on Thursday by the West German weekly STERN, Mr Mitterrand said that the installation of Soviet SS-20 missiles and Backfire bombers "breaks" the balance of power in Europe.

" I do not accept it," he said, "and I accept that one must rearm to restore the balance. From that point one must negotiate."

Reiterating that there was Soviet "supremacy" in Europe that constitutes a "real danger," Mr Mitterrand said that "the United States has the means to restore the balance of power" and that "France will not hesitate to complete its deterrent weaponry."

"The Russians, in this affair, practise the flexible fallback," he said. "They have already corrected their initial position. It is a close game that supposes that all weakness will be eliminated and that one knows when to arm when necessary and negotiate when necessary.

Asked about the situation of the Communist Party in France and the influence of the Communist movement in the world, Mr Mitterrand replied:

"The fewer the errors of judgment and political mistakes that the West commits with regard to both the workers and the Third World, the quicker will be the decline of international communism."

On French relations with West Germany, he said: "Everyone in France now tells me there has never been a Paris-Bonn axis but a special friendship. A special friendship--I am in favor of that."

The major achievement of postwar Europe, he said, had been Franco-West German reconciliation. The fact that the two countries had overcome their antagonism had constituted a major factor in the creation of the European Economic Community (EEC). "This basic fact will inspire the policy that I intend to conduct," he said. "There is no need for a Paris-Bonn axis to express that."

He justified his meeting with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher at the recent West European summit in Luxembourg by pointing out that he had met West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt shortly after his election, adding: "Franco-West German friendship is not at the mercy of a cup of tea."

PRESIDENT ON DOMESTIC ISSUES, U.S. TIES, MIDEAST

PM071451 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Jul 81 pp 1, 10, 11

[LE MONDE interview with French President Francois Mitterrand; date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] Mr President, the presidential and legislative elections were marked by considerable political upheaval, but the system remains as it was before. How will you exercise more liberal powers within the framework of this system?

[Answer] When you say "the system remains" you seem to regret that the institutions have not changed; but this was not the aim of the electoral consultations which brought about the change of which you are aware.

The French people elected a president and then deputies. It was not a referendum on the organization of public powers. It is true that the Constitution is not unalterable and that reforms are necessary. I proposed some myself during the presidential campaign and I recently recalled in front of the Supreme Council of the Magistrature that I intend to respect this commitment just like the others.

But the law, the ordinary law, will allow a lot to be done while we are waiting for the constitutional train to get underway, which will only include a few freight cars anyway and which will only be set in motion after the urgent problems posed by the economic situation have been tackled. In some cases anyway, statutory measures or simply usage will be sufficient. For instatnce, I have invited the premier, who is entirely of the same sentiments, to take a series of initiatives with a view to improving the functioning of parliament when he gives his opening speech to the National Assembly next week. This I hope will put an end to the abuse of blocked votes or these well-known laws adopted by the subterfuge of "noncensure." In the same way, "topical question time" must provide deputies with the opportunity every Wednesday to engage in real dialogue with the government and must not be a pretext for the latter to monopolize the media, as has been the case until now.

Moreover, for the premier to demand a vote at the end of the debate on his program is an event for him alone.

It was almost a different concept of the regime than the one which, since the election of the president by universal suffrage in 1965, required the government to refuse the sanction of the deputies after taking office.

[Question] Among the constitutional reforms, do you still envisage limiting the presidential term to 5 years with only one renewal possible or the nonreeligibility of the elected president after a term of 7 years? Or do you want to keep the existing conditions?

[Answer] I already expressed by preference for a nonrenewable 7-year term and I intend to act in this direction.

[Question] Let us come back to the practice of the institutions. Apart from what you have just said, how will this change be marked?

[Answer] I intend parliament to exercise its functions more in the elaboration, discussion and voting of the law and I will ask for all the useless and dangerous procedures which have led to its deterioration to be discontinued. The premier will expand on this.

As far as the relations between the executive and the judiciary are concerned, the reform of the Supreme Council of the Magistrature will bring new guarantees to the independence of justice. And I will not wait for the commotion of constitutional reform to make my will known for a change of the mores and customs in this sphere.

In the information sphere, I think the statute on the audiovisual media can be voted on at the fall session and that the climate which is detrimental in all ways to my idea of democracy will be ameliorated in one sweep.

[Question] You haven't mentioned the way in which the president-government partnership will develop.

[Answer] I will exercise the power given me by the Constitution to the full. No more and no less. The government and I know in this connection what the 10 May vote means.

Several Stages for Decentralization

[Question] This is what you called in one of your speeches the realignment of central powers. There is another guiding force and idea in everything you said and which is contained in the 24 January manifesto (Editor's note: manifesto adopted 24 January 1981 at Creteil by the PS extraordinary congress, which designated Francois Mitterrand as the party's candidate for the presidency of the republic). This is the reduction of the powers of the state by decentralization, not only of the administration but also of the economy. Moreover, this is a philosophy which is totally new in comparison with what we have experienced, not only under the Fifth Republic but even under the Fourth. So, what is the limit?

[Answer] The main bill of any scale to be introduced in the first session--an extremely short session, it is true--of this first legislature will, in fact, be the law on decentralization. And Gaston Defferre, who as everybody knows could have become president of the National Assembly if he had wanted, will introduce and defend it before parliament. Well, he wanted to devote himself to this present task. This indicates the importance which he the premier and I myself attach to this text.

The reform under preparation will include several stages. The first, which ought to be completed in the next few weeks, is probably the most important not only because it is symbolic on several points but also because it includes very novel ideas which emphasize our desire to reform in depth and to reach a sort of point of no return.

Gaston Defferre's original idea is simple. He asked the question: Who exercises power? And he noted that as a general rule it was the central services of the ministries relayed locally by the prefects and the exterior and technical services.

So it will be proposed to transfer, these powers to elected regional, departmental and municipal representatives who will become invested with authority and responsibility.

Personnel serving in the departments will keep their status but will be placed under the authority of the president of the general council for the tasks which are passed down to them through the decisions of the departmental assembly. For everything else, they will remain under the authority of the state representative. The exterior services will not have to liaise with Paris all the time as they do today.

Talking of local organizations proper, a priori tutelage will be stopped. The state representative will only exercise control a posteriori. The deliberations of local assemblies will be operable immediately and fully. If the state representative considers one of them to be illegal, he will be able to ask the judge to give a verdict without the appeal acting as a stay.

The local budgets will follow the same rules. But, in case of an imbalance, the state representative will intervene to implement restorative measures which will be elaborated by a regional audit chamber, a new and independent organism, a direct offshoot of the audit office.

Before the end of the year, if possible, we will attack the financial aspect of decentralization.

[Question] Who do you manage to reconcile and even join together regional power elected by universal suffrage and departmental power?

[Answer] Let's be clear: We are not attacking the traditional and customary powers of the department. As for the new regional organization, it will keep its powers--which are very modest anyway--from the law of 1972 and will receive new powers, notably a proportion of those exercised by the state centrally. I am more a departmentalist, but we must recognize that the departmental framework is too narrow for a major policy of development, a policy of employment, a plan and so forth.

[Question] Aren't the regions as they exist at present inadequate? If they are reorganized, will it be necessary to redefine some of the departments?

[Answer] The present situation results from the decree of 2 June 1960 which has not been really disputed until now, even at the time of the vote on the law of 1972. Certainly, some regions--though they are few and far between--have asked for a redefining of boundaries, sometimes to be separated from a department, sometimes to claim the inclusion of another department and sometimes to detach or attach an arrondissement or a few cantons. When this is put before parliament, it will do what it wants in this sphere. But I do not think you can tackle a geography which does not respect the departmental boundaries. This is why I have the feeling that the map of 1960 will still remain in force, at least at first.

[Question] You have no idea of any particular statute for a particular region?

[Answer] Yes, for Corsica.

"I Do Not Wish Either To Flatter or To Categorize Young People"

[Question] In a completely different sphere, how do you see your relations with the country? Your predecessors talked a lot, were always visible. Aren't you a little too discreet?

[Answer] This discretion was dictated by circumstances. I wanted to speak as little as possible during the election campaign. I only did so once, at Montelimar, between the two rounds of the voting and without asking for radio and television to be at my disposal, as my predecessor did. This discretion was answered with discretion from the media which did not even carry all of a 5-minute speech! I add that, as far as I was concerned, there was no question of saying anything after the legal end of the campaign, that is, on the Saturday before the voting. That privilege which other presidents have granted themselves seems to me to be intolerable, like all privilege. The head of state has no more rights than the most humble of citizens.

Now my silence stems from something else. I would consider it wrong to address the country directly when the deputies are about to meet. In accordance with tradition, I will convey a brief message to parliament. Then the premier will give his program speech. So I will wait until mid-July to say something on television. A direct link between the country and the president certainly is necessary. It must not be abused. It is up to the press to inform the public of my activities and my choices according to the needs of the moment and according to how they see it.

[Question] Regarding youth, you have received many representatives from socioprofessional or sociological categories since 10 May. I noted in the manifesto, which defines your philosophy as candidate and doubtless as president too: "The right for youth to be itself, in school, in the army, by profession, in leisure and by access to public life." Can you tell us the place you wish to give to youth?

[Answer] I think this phrase from the manifesto says enough. It is via the schools that youth will possess all the opportunities and will gain the means to be itself. It is at school that it will learn to be responsible. Hence, the necessary opening from school into the outside world. The profession, the job, the leisure or time for living--I should say the rhythm of life--is there any other way of gaining possession of oneself? Provided, of course, that the work contributes to the development of responsibility and that time is set aside for reflection, for development, for the personal life, for play and for exchange, with the social organization that presupposes.

I myself have never spoken down to youth. I respect it too much for that. To simplify, I would say that I do not wish either to flatter or to categorize youth. What counts in my eyes is to recognize its right to express itself as it sees fit and to conceive its own future. Young people need neither copy us nor follow in our footsteps. Don't think that I am asking them to oppose our customs and ways of thinking. No, I simply want their curiosity of spirit to be satisfied and for them to be capable of transforming the world as they want when the time is right. To this end, I want to encourage the awakening of the personality from the earliest age and to foster by education and culture a sense of responsibility and a taste for participation.

But there are other paths I wish to open up. I have always regretted that the capacity for idealism and devotion that can be seen in youth is so often left unused. What realms open up in the social field! Our society is divided: on one side, the active and on the other, the inactive; on one side, the young and on the other, the old. Yet there is so much to do, even if only via the opportunity provided for young people to carry out tasks of social interest!

I also marvel at young people's passionate attraction to the defense of human rights. Let's not neglect this powerful ardor which glows in the spirit and heart of a generation. Finally, don't you think that aid to the peoples of the Third World could provide immense prospects for our youth in the form of expanded cooperation? To set off to discover the world and look around one, to learn about other people and things--this is how to awake and exalt energies which are too often dormant. This can be conceived in various ways, mainly in the framework of a revitalized military service. I have talked of this to the defense minister and the premier and I have submitted the above-mentioned ideas to the national solidarity minister, asking him to study new projects.

[Question] You are thinking of a civic service offered to young people?

[Answer] I don't like that word because I would really like to avoid the false impression of an enrollment.

[Question] And are you thinking of lowering the voting age to develop this sense of responsibility?

[Answer] I have proposed 18 for political elections and 16 for trade union elections. The government and parliament will have to decide. I want this question to be debated seriously. It is to do with society. The important thing is to develop in every young person, boy or girl, the taste for learning and creating, in short, for living freely in a more cohesive society.

"I Do Not Forget My Raison d'Etre"

[Question] Isn't there a risk for you of excessive power, especially after the legislative elections? How are you going to keep this in check? How do you see things?

[Answer] It is in fact the first time in the history of the republic that a party has an absolute majority of seats in the National Assembly. Gambetta and De Gaulle carried along and covered with their name and their prestige what in reality was a coalition of parties. I never foresaw this hypothesis. How many times did I reply to journalists when they questioned me: "A majority in France can only be a coalition majority." I was mistaken. This double phenomenon of a presidential election bringing change (and which suddenly created a flux among our people) and of legislative elections favorable on a mass scale to the Socialist candidate gives us, I admit, a great power, all the more so as a third element has been added: the length of time. Seven years for the president and five for the deputies, and this upsurge, this popular confidence around us--is that excessive power?

I know that all power always tends to stretch itself to the limit. But we are not faced with an individual adventure here. And we no longer are faced with the taking of power by any old party and by any means. The Socialist Party has its laws, its traditions, its ideals and its history. It stands for a demand for freedom of human thought in the face of the oppressions of industrial society. The Socialists have analyzed sufficiently the causes and progress of totalitarian excesses; they have suffered enough from them not to protect themselves--including against themselves, hence their plan for an audacious decentralization, hence their self-managing approach, for the coming of a classless society, for the development of individual responsibility--and thus individual consciousness. And this in my profound conviction.

As for the power which belongs to me, I will use it as I must. I don't know if I will resist intolerance, exasperation or excessive personalization of authority. The future will tell. But I can say that I have prepared myself for this arduous confrontation with myself for years, during the long years when I fought against the deviations of the regime. So I hope I have accumulated enough internal reserves to keep my distance and above all, to remain in agreement with myself. I wrote this during the presidential campaign. I hope to have a new outlook on everything and a free spirit. I do not forget my raison d'etre.

"Recovering All the Lost Ground"

[Question] On the subject of Communist ministers, what is the main reason which decided you in favor of their participation?

[Answer] I always said that I would form a government which would be not the emanation but the expression of the parliamentary majority. This majority adheres to my presidential opinions as a guideline. I do not see why I should exclude people who asserted their desire to respect the political line which I myself defined. During the whole quarrel with the Communists, and what a quarrel, I did not give way on anything and people know that I have no intention of starting now. But on 10 May, the Communists entered into the presidential majority of their own free will after having to admit that they had been on the wrong track. I thought about this. I consulted the main Socialist leaders. All of them without exception believed it necessary to draw the logical conclusion from the ballot. Our situation allowed us to strictly maintain our line. I ask you: "Have I abandoned anything?" An interlocutor voiced surprise recently: "You have an absolute majority and you are accepting Communists?" I replied: "That's an additional reason." I do not want to hark on it, but nobody is unaware that within the government, as elsewhere, the president may at any moment obtain acceptance of the opinion which he has of the national interest.

[Question] Was the interlocutor you mentioned Bush?

[Answer] Mr Bush did not ask me any unanswerable questions. So no, it was not he.

Too many commentators don't look beyond the end of their noses. About 4.5 million French people voted for the Communist candidate or candidates. Then they voted for me, then for the Socialist candidates. Quite honestly, I don't see why I should have eliminated them, why I should have excluded and upset these millions of people by excluding them from French political life when all they asked in exchange was to be respected. By acting thus, I have prepared for the future in a much surer way than if I had done the opposite. I am not speaking of the majority's future since this is ensured for 5 years anyway. I am speaking of France's future. Remember. In reply to journalists who were asking me about this during my first campaign television appearance on channel 2, I said: "De Gaulle needed everyone. That was war. Today there is a crisis. I will need everyone." Yes, there is a crisis and I call on all forces of work creation and imagination to come and join me.

[Question] And what about the criticism which is sometimes directed against you--that after succeeding in weakening the Communist Party, without perhaps trying to, you risk strengthening it by bringing it into the government?

[Answer] While you were asking me this question, I was thinking of something else. I have been accused of Machiavellianism. "He has succeeded," it has been said, "in doing via union what others have tried to do via struggle. He is still more anticommunist than others." This is turning the problem inside out. Yes, I have tried to make the socialist Party more numerous, more powerful, to increasingly expand its audience. What is more natural?

Back in 1971 at Epinay, I invited Socialists to "receive all the lost ground," ground lost on Christian Democracy, on youth, on the new social strata, on the Communists. I wanted to build a great Socialist Party. Not by chance. Not anyhow. But by taking up and carrying still further, if possible, the struggle of Jaures and Blum for a liberating socialism. That presupposed the withdrawal of forces situated at the same point as us in French politics, at the same point and against us. It was a loyal combat. I prefer having won it, but I know that life is all-powerful and that winning doesn't mean a lot if one eases up on one's action. I will not ease up. Power is not a bauble but the means to accelerate matters. It is there. As for believing that I have reinforced the Communist Party because four of them are in the government, let time be the judge. Its judgements are not rash.

[Question] Does the idea of a reunification of what was formerly the French section of the Workers International Party seem conceivable to you?

[Answer] It is the permanent dream of all socialists, but there are two ideologies and these two ideologies remain in contradiction. Ideological conflict has not ceased between Marxism-Leninism and our socialism, that is, between Lenin and Blum. We will not be allowed any monetary inattentiveness.

[Question] You reacted strongly at Dun-les-Places to the statements of the U.S. State Department after your meeting with Mr Bush.

[Answer] Let us be exact. The truth is that [External Relations Minister] Claude Cheysson went to the United States first and that that visit was useful and fruitful, that our relations were at once put on a good footing. Certainly, this was before the forming of the second Mauroy government. But Claude Cheysson did not make it understood--he was not under an obligation to do so--that he would not have Communist ministers. He did not deceive his U.S. partners. Quite simply, he judged that this potential decision--it had not then been made--was a question for the French alone.

[Question] Was he asked about it?

[Answer] I imagine so. Anyway, I received a very cordial message from President Reagan. I appreciated the fact that Mr Bush then came to see me in Paris despite the inclusion the previous day of four Communist ministers in the government, that he talks with me openly, sympathetically, constructively, with real courtesy which consists in not asking useless questions and without concealing from me that when he met with journalists he would tell them of the "concern" which the event caused the U.S. administration--yes, I appreciated that.

I don't call it pressure--the opinion which foreign countries and especially friendly countries may have of us and of our choices. I do not take offense at opinions different from my own. There is nothing shocking about the fact our allies have difficulty in understanding the reasons for my actions. On the contrary, the pressure started with the communique from Washington.

Hence, my reaction at Dun-les-Places. Whithout ranting, French policy is determined in France and it would not be admissible for the head of state to be led by considerations other than those he deems to be in the interest of France and the French people, but this pressure stopped there. The letter of thanks which Mr Bush sent to me at the end of his trip was in keeping with what I might expect from a personality of his quality, a quality which I must say I appreciated very much.

[Question] It was implied at one point that if there were Communist ministers, a certain amount of military information provided for France by the United States might cease.

[Answer] Nothing of that has reached me. I know that a U.S. television channel claimed that I had given assurances on military security. You don't bother to deny rubbish. The Council of Ministers takes on a collective responsibility. That is where the country's policy is determined. For the rest, every minister assumes a particular task and it is not for him to avoid this. As for the president, he exercises an overall power, particularly in the sphere of foreign relations and defense. This division of roles doesn't imply any sort of exclusivity against anyone. It reflects my desire--a legitimate one--to have direct and personal control over everything which affects the country's security.

[Question] In what respect do you think the content of French-American relations may be affected?

[Answer] If the secretary of state wants to tell me that the content of the alliance has changed becasue the U.S. Government will end the practice of intolerable interest rates, I would rejoice at this change. If the change was to no longer subject France to the infernal pair of the dollar and oil, to return to a coherent international monetary system, to a more serious policy with regard to the Third World, what good news that would be! I will restrict myself on this score to remarking that one cannot wish for greater political and military homogeneity from the Atlantic alliance and, at the same time, be satisfied with each one for himself, economically speaking.

[Question] Do you feel that the question of interest rates is the main problem regarding the United States?

[Answer] That is an important problem. It isn't the only one. I attach equal importance to the problmes of the Third World countries and their relations with the industrialized countries and the question of the International Monetary System and of adequate institutions, particularly in the "energy branch." The poor countries' development is not only a matter of humanity, but also clearly a matter of the rich countries' interests. We can only overcome the recession by multiplying exchanges. We must give ourselves the means of doing so. Some 40 percent of the EEC's exports already go to the Third World. I regard this direction as one of the chief instruments for a return to growth.

"I Have Major Reservations About U.S. Policy in Central America"

[Question] Do you feel there is a chance that the Americans may tone down their monetary policy and their high money rates?

[Answer] Not in the short term. In the medium term, yes. By the short term, I mean something of the order of 6 months, which is a long time--perhaps too long--for the Europeans.

[Question] The Americans must put their economy in order first.

[Answer] They do indeed regard it as a necessary evil, the only way of reducing their inflation. But they do not make a theory of it. So it is possible to discuss it with them and, by virtue of discussion, to reduce the time taken to return to a less strained situation.

[Question] And on the Third World, do you sense some evolution there?

[Answer] Yes, but not in the best possible direction....Their preoccupations are East-West, seldom North-South.

[Question] Can you see a strategy which could bring the Americans to change their stance?

[Answer] On topics of this kind, Canada, Japan, Italy, France and even Germany have adopted broadly similar positions. That is four or five out of the seven countries which are to meet in Ottawa.

[Question] Do other differences exist?

[Answer] Divergences, certainly. For instance, I have major reservations--to put it mildly--about U.S. policy in Central America. The peoples of that region want to put an end to the oligarchies which, on the basis of bloody dictatorships, exploit them and crush them in insane conditions. A tiny proportion of the population possesses nearly all the wealth. How can we help but understand the people's revolt? It isn't a question of communist subversion but of the rejection of poverty and degradation. The West would be better advised to help these peoples than to force them to remain downtrodden. When they cry for help, I don't want Castro to be the only one to hear them. But I have faith in the U.S. leaders' capacity for thought.

"The Camp David Process Could Be Widened if Israel Approached the Palestinian Problem More Positively"

[Question] You have talked about the Near East with them. Do you believe that there is room, in the Near East, for a French or European initiative, either now or later?

[Answer] In any event, I have reiterated my approval for Camp David. At one time, I was the only French politician and leader of a major party to say so and I have not changed my ideas because I have changed my job. Could the Camp David process be widened? Yes, if Israel approaches the Palestinian problem more positively. All peoples have a right to land. In that event, perhaps other Arab countries will soften their line. But people always talk about the Palestinians and not much is said about the holy places. A good approach to this problem--and this means possible to me--would make a major contribution to pacifying people.

[Question] Is that one of the topics that King Khalid brought up with you?

[Answer] I think I brought it up myself.

[Question] And what about the possibility of a resumption of the European initiative in this sphere?

[Answer] I'd like it to conform with what I have just said.

[Question] To come back to Europe, in particular, I think at the end of "The Rose and the Fist" [book by Mitterrand], you said that, as things now stand, the framework of the national state would not suffice to promote the necessary transformations?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] Do you think that Europe as it is today, the Community of Ten, offers possibilities, in view of the correlation of forces which exists within it and of the presence of a conservative government in Britain, for promoting the transformation of society?

[Answer] We have not yet reached that stage. Let us begin by putting our soul into Europe. Let us bring the Treaty of Rome fully into play. Let us rectify what can be rectified. Let us avoid dealing with European problems piecemeal. Let us convince ourselves that none of our countries can resolve many problems on its own. Look at the airbus, look at Ariane. In short, let us regain our sense of perspective. I don't want to export French policy. Everyone is free to make his own internal choices. Ultimately, I rely on the force of reality...and on the contagiousness of ideas.

Precise Timetable for Nationalizations

[Question] Coming back to the economic sphere, one of the main questions people are asking themselves today, at least in business circles, as they say, concerns the pace at which nationalizations will take place.

[Answer] Pierre Mauroy will speak of that next week.

[Question] It affects administrative conditions for a number of companies regarding their plans, investments and so forth.
[Answer] We will begin next October.
[Question] In the October session?
[Answer] Yes.
[Question] Will you settle it all at once?
[Answer] No, but a precise timetable will be fixed.
[Question] There is a general question which the tone of our interview suggests to me. You are in Charles de Gaulle's office, not Valery Giscard d'Estaing's....
[Answer] The office used by General de Gaulle and Georges Pompidou.
[Question] And Georges Pompidou. Is this choice significant?

[Answer] No. This office is nicer, more central and in my view more convenient, although it is on the first floor. Giscard d'Estaing used to use it from time to time to receive a delegation. This office is at the axis of the palace and the garden and is very stylish. You must not see anything else in it. I would have preferred to be on the ground floor to have easy access to the garden, but no provision was made for that.

[Question] You give the impression of being at home in General de Gaulle's office, but also in the institutions he bequeathed.

[Answer] The institutions were not created according to my intentions, but they are well suited to me. However, I can see some defects. I believe I wrote something about that.

QADDUMI ASKS PARIS TO UPGRADE PLO REPRESENTATION

NC071424 Paris AFP in English 1406 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 7 Jul (AFP)--Faruq Qaddumi, head of the Palestine Liberation Organization's Political Section, said today that he has asked French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson to upgrade the PLO's representation at Paris. At present the PLO has an "information and liaison office" here, officially authorized by the French Government in 1975.

Mr Cheysson recently said that France did not recognize the PLO as the only representative of the Palestinian people, and that such recognition could come only from the Palestinian people themselves.

Saying that he expected the new French Government to take a more positive view of the PLO, Mr Qaddumi noted that Mr Cheysson had promised to study his request, and that he was "convinced" that France would take a "step in this direction soon."

Mr Qaddumi rejected the idea of a European solution to the Middle East problem. He said that in the past concerted European action had been blocked by individual countries such as Sweden and Denmark. "What interests us now," he added, "is the position of each individual European country, so that the Arabs can deal with each country according to its stance."

CHEYSSON, MEXICAN ENVOY DISCUSS OIL PROBLEM

FL072130 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 2003 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 7 Jul (NOTIMEX)--French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson today proposed to Mexican Ambassador Horacio Flores de la Pena that "Mexico and France make a joint study of the means of developing medium and long term cooperation in the field of petroleum." The French minister explained to the Mexican official that "the autonomous management of French companies does not always permit their positions to be in agreement with those of the government." However, the French minister made it clear to Flores de la Pena that La Compagnie Francaise des Petroles (CFP) wishes to find a solution to the short term problems that have emerged and that it has announced this to Mexican Petroleum (PEMEX) this morning. The CFP proposed the resumption of talks with Mexico regarding the details of the agreement that was suspended this weekend, according to the CFP sources.

After the CFP decided to suspend its petroleum purchases from Mexcio, the Mexican Government announced on Saturday that it had annulled all French participation in Mexican economic development projects.

In view of the cordial atmosphere of the Cheysson-Flores de la Pena meeting, the sources believe that an end to the recent difficulties between the two countries can be expected. During his meeting with the Mexican ambassador, Cheyyson stated that we had found total "coincidence between the foreign policies of the two countries" during a meeting in Paris with Mexican Foreign Relations Secretary Jorge Castaneda. During that meeting, "the desire of the two governments to develop their economic relations, including the energy sector, in accordance with the cooperation agreement signed on 18 February 1981" was confirmed.

Mexican Embassy Communique

NC072036 Paris AFP in English 2005 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 7 Jul (AFP)--A meeting today between French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson and Mexican Ambassador Horacio Flores de la Pena was described by the Mexican Embassy here as "highly positive."

In a communique, the embassy said a "frank and friendly" discussion had been colored by optimism that a solution could be found to tension between the two countries sparked by Mexico's cancellation of all French participation in Mexican development projects after the French petroleum company CFP decided to suspend oil purchases from Mexico.

The French Foreign Ministry here said after the meeting today that the discussion had been cordial and both sides had shown a "constructive spirit."

The Mexican Embassy said that Mr Flores had received "with satisfaction" the news that the Compagnie Francaise des Petroles, which markets under the Total brand, would shortly resume negotiations with the Mexican Petroleum Company Pemex.

Mr Cheysson and Mr Flores also discussed "the possibilities of short and long term cooperation, not only in the field of oil, but also in industry, agriculture and transfers of technology," the embassy said.

PRESIDENT KIPRIANOU RETURNS FROM ATHENS VISIT

NC081200 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] A short while ago, President Kiprianou returned from his official visit to Athens where he had talks with the Greek Government on Cyprus developments. On his arrival at Larnaca Airport, the president was met by House President Ladhas, who was acting president of the republic during Mr Kiprianou's absence, by members of the Council of Ministers, Greek Ambassador Zakharakis, the National Guard and the police chiefs, the city's authorities and other officials.

Statement on Arrival

NC071505 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] President Kiprianou returned shortly after 1300 today from his official visit to Athens, where he held talks with the Greek Government on developments on the Cyprus issue.

In a statement upon his arrival at Larnaca airport, President Kiprianou said that his visit has been useful in every respect and he expressed the conviction that the visit took place at the appropriate time. Mr Kiprianou said that in his talks with the Greek Government it was established that the Cyprus issue is entering a very delicate and critical phase that will also determine future developments. President Kiprianou reiterated that the Turkish side was repeatedly promised and undertaken obligations to submit, by the end of this month, concrete and substantive proposals on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus issue.

Mr Kiprianou stressed: Without proposals on the territorial aspect, the continuation of the dialogue is problematic. The dialogue cannot continue forever nor can it be used by the Turkish side to promote the faits accomplis. Mr Kiprianou has declared that on the part of the government there is good will and political decision for a Cyprus solution, provided true freedom and justice are secured and the solution is based on the UN decisions and the summit agreements. President Kiprianou said there was absolute unanimity in Athens over the support to Cyprus both on the part of the government and on the part of the opposition parties. He added: There may be disagreements and shades of opinion on ways of handling [the issue]. The goal, however, is to strengthen Cyprus and support the Cyprus Government policy in its endeavor to find an honest Cyprus solution.

President Kiprianou further stated: I firmly believe that, with this multifaceted support by Greece, regardless of what developments may be, we will sooner or later be able to accomplish our mission and task. He concluded: For us, Greece continues to be our basic mainstay.

AUSTRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER CONTINUES OFFICIAL VISIT

Rolandhis Hosts Dinner

NC070816 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0330 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Speaking last night during a dinner given in his honor by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr, currently on an official visit to Cyprus, referred to the continuing occupation of a section of the Republic of Cyprus and expressed the wish for an early Cyprus solution and the restoration of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of Cyprus. The Austrian foreign minister stressed his country's de ire to contribute to the fair solution of the Cyprus problem. He also referred to the prospects for further development of bilateral relations, particularly in the economic and cultural fields, and stressed that the two sides can work out practical ways for the implementation of this goal.

In his address, Foreign Minister Rolandhis referred with cautious optimism to the awaited prospects for progress in the inter-Cypriot talks. Speaking about the international situation, Mr Rolandhis stressed the need for the predominance of the principles of justice throughout the world. He extolled the good relations between Cyprus and Austria and the cooperation between the two countries in the Council of Europe and the Madrid Conference and stressed Austria's role in connection with the Cyprus problem, emphasizing the participation of an Austrian contingent in the international peace force.

Attending the dinner were the House president, members of the Council of Ministers, the Greek Cypriot side's representative at the inter-Cypriot talks, the dean of the diplomatic corps, party leaders and representatives, the UN secretary general's special envoy in Cyprus, the commander of the UN Peace Force in Cyprus and other officials.

Air Agreement Signed

NC071022 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Today an air agreement was signed at the Foreign Ministry between the Government of Cyprus and the Federal Republic of Austria. The agreement was signed by Foreign Minister Rolandhis on behalf of Cyprus and by Foreign Minister Pahr on behalf of Austria.

Speaking during the ceremony, Mr Rolandhis expressed his satisfaction with the signing of the agreement. During our talks yesterday, he said, we noted that there is a trade imbalance between Cyprus and Austria; we are resolved to find ways to remedy the situation. One of the ways to achieve this is to increase the number of tourists from Austria to Cyprus, a thing which will also serve as an impetus to our political, economic, trade and cultural relations. We look forward to the day when relations between our countries will become as close as possible.

In his reply, Mr Pahr expressed his pleasure with the signing of the agreement which, he said, will bring the two people closer together and will help Austrians who visit Cyprus and Cypriots who come to Austria. This agreement, he concluded, will strengthen our relations in the future and I belive that this effort will be successful.

LEBANESE PHALANGISTS SEEK LARNACA AIRLINK

NC070800 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 7 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government will be providing facilities to the Lebanese Phalangists. This has caused a strong reaction from the Arab countries which, until now, have been most openly and boldly supporting the Cyprus cause and have practically and unreservedly opposed any form of partitioning of Cyprus.

According to our reports, the Cyprus Government, within the framework of its cooperation with the Phalangists, has reached an agreement on an airlink between Larnaca airport and the piratical airport at Juniyah, Lebanon.

The agreement of the Cyprus Government--an agreement that is actually tantamount to recognizing the partitioning of Lebanon and is just what the Phalangists, who control part of northern Lebanon, have been seeking in cooperation with Israel--provides, among other things, for regular flights to transport passengers by helicopter from Larnaca to Juniyah and from Juniyah to Larnaca. This will take place despite the existence of the internationally recognized Beirut airport, from which the Phalangists can freely travel despite the fact that the majority of them have taken refuge in enclaves, which they control through the force of arms.

Government Denies Report

NC071111 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Referring to reports carried in today's papers that it [Cyprus] is allegedly considering a request by Phalangists for a Cyprus-Juniyah airlink using helicopters, the Foreign Ministry announced that these reports are inaccurate. The Cyprus Government, the statement says, has had no contact with Phalangists, nor could it possibly consider a request for an airlink between Juniyah and Cyprus. The statement added: The request for such an airlink has been submitted to the Foreign Ministry by the legitimate Government of Lebanon by means of an oral message from the Lebanese Embassy in Nicosia. Because of the seriousness of the question, the Foreign Ministry has refrained from responding until an investigation is concluded on all aspects of the request, including possible repercussions.

GREEK, TURKISH CYPRIOT JOURNALISTS SEEK TIES

NC071804 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] The Union of Cypriot Editors and the Association of Turkish Cypriot Journalists have issued a joint declaration for the promotion of cooperation and friendship between Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot journalists, for the strengthening of the journalists' role in forming positive public opinion, and for the promotion of a peaceful, just and viable Cyprus solution. The joint declaration was read at a joint press conference given in the British House of Commons by three Greek Cypriot and three Turkish Cypriot journalists.

The declaration includes practical suggestions for the achievement of these aims. Among other things, the United Nations will be asked to provide facilities for the establishment of a joint journalists club where journalists from both sides and foreign journalists can meet. The declaration also expresses the conviction that journalists from both sides should have access to all parts of Cyprus through the assistance of the two journalists organizations. The two organizations have announced that they intend to institute an annual prize to be awarded to the journalist or for the article that contributed most to the strengthening of understanding between the two communities and the elimination of mistrust between them.

NORTH PARTY CONSULTS ON COALITION GOVERNMENT

TA071206 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] The party council of the Communal Liberation Party has authorized its chairman and its executive committee to start consultations with other parties excluding the National Unity Party for the formation of a new government. In a written statement, the council said it gave the authority to the executive at its meeting in Nicosia yesterday. It also asked the executive to report back any developments on the matter.

The present administration is a caretaker government following the parliamentary election on June the 28th. A new government has to be formed after the convening of the new legislative assembly on Monday.

'REVOLUTIONARY LEFT' SETS BOMBS AT BEACH AREA

NC071959 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 7 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The extremist "Revolutionary Left" organization claimed responsibility for yesterday's incendiary bomb incident at the "Asteria" Beach of Glifadha [Athens suburb] which caused damage estimated at 1.2 million drachma. The manager of the complex, described the fact that there were no human victims as a miracle, as the beach was full of bathers.

The three homemade bombs exploded at the same time at 1610. They were made of bottles, containing an incendiary liquid, batteries, bundles of matches and clocks, which were placed in toilets in the three dressing rooms of the complex. Two of the devices caused superficial damage only, because personnel of the complex managed to put out the fires before they spread. The fire caused by the third one, however, destroyed the dressing rooms, which contained bathers' clothing. It then spread to a small wooded area behind the dressing rooms and destroyed trees before it was put out. The fire brigade used 5 fire-fighting vehicles and 17 men. Suburban police authorities are conducting an investigation. Reponsibility for the incendiary bomb incident was claimed soon after the explosions with an anonymous telephone call to the offices of the newspaper ELEVTHEROTIPIA.

FIRES DAMAGE PIRAIEVS, ATHENS DEPARTMENT STORES

NC071935 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Excerpt] After 4 and 1/2 hour efforts, the large fire at the Lambropoulos department store in Piraievs, on Vasileos Konstandinou Ave, was put out. A fire at the Dhragonas department store in Athens was also put out 1 hour after it started. The two fires broke out at 1550 and at 1615 respectively, from as yet unknown causes. Fears have been expressed that arson is involved, and it is expected that a government statement will be issued when evidence is available.

Government Condemns Arson

NC071937 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Excerpt] The following government statement was issued a short time ago: Today's criminal action at the Dhragonas and Lambropoulos department stores is an act by the same circle of perpetrators who acted in December 1980 and in May this year at the Minion, Katranzos, Athene and Klaoudhatos department stores. Police authorities have substantial suspicions about the perpetrators without, however, evidence available to prove their guilt.

In such instances, preventative control is the best method to prevent actions by such insane criminals. For this reason, the Public Order Ministry will implement preventative night checks which are also being conducted during daytime hours. At the same time, owner of the larger stores are asked to implement similar checks and controls with personnel working in their businesses. The public is also requested to mention every suspicious move to the authorities and to call the fire brigade at telephone number 199 without delay in case of any fire.

CYPRUS PRESIDENT CONCLUDES VISIT, LEAVES FOR HOME

Meeting With Rallis

NC062208 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] This evening Prime Minister Rallis had another meeting with Mr Kiprianou, president of the Republic of Cyprus, who thus concluded his talks and contacts in Athens.

Following this evening's meeting with the Cypriot president, the prime minister stated: On the occasion of the visit to Athens by Mr Kiprianou, president of the Republic of Cyprus, and by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, we again discussed the major national questions--the Cyprus problem. As in the past, we agreed on the strategy charted by the Cyprus Government. As you know, we always give our assistance. What we hope for and desire at this moment is that the other side will submit serious proposals on the territorial aspect so that it may become possible for the dialogue to enter a phase that will provide hope for a solution. But I fear that if the Turkish Cypriot side does not take advantage of this opportunity, the dialogue may not possibly survive. If the dialogue is to survive, there must be serious proposals so it may become obvious that both sides have the will to arrive at a result. The Greek Cypriot side has already proved this. Now it remains for the other side to prove this as well. And I repeat that I pray and hope for this; that is, that they will take this opportunity to submit serious proposals on the territorial aspect so that the dialogue can continue and so that it can arrive at a happy result for the island.

On the other hand, President Kiprianou said the following: Now that our Athens talks have concluded, I would like, first of all, to thank Prime Minister Rallis for the hospitality and to stress that these contacts have been very useful in every respect. There was an indepth review of all developments and an exchange of information and appraisals. As the Greek prime minister stated, we have arrived at some conclusions in connection with the handling of the national question. I fully endorse what the prime minister said. If the dialogue is to survive, indeed, this time the Turks will have to submit substantive proposals on the territorial aspects. A dialogue cannot be held for the sake of dialogue or be continued indefinitely without results. Of course, if the dialogue fails, the Turkish side will be fully responsible for this because on our part--the Greek Cypriots and the government side--we have been exerting every effort with all good will for a constructive dialogue since the day the dialogue started.

I would also like to use this opportunity to express my very warm thanks for the full understanding of the Greek Government and its full support in all fields without exception. In general, I wish to repeat that my visit to and talks in Athens have been useful in every respect.

Statement on Departure

NC071241 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Cyprus President Kiprianou, who left Athens for Nicosia shortly before noon today, expressed full satisfaction with his Athens talks.

At Ellinikon Airport, Kiprianou made a statement stressing the fruitful nature of the talks he had with President of the Republic Karamanlis, Prime Minister Rallis and Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. He added that the views between the two sides coincide completely on their evaluation of the current phase of the Cyprus issue, which, he reiterated, is entering into a delicate phase upon which the continuation of the intercommunal dialogue will depend.

Kiprianou expressed the warmest thanks for the support of the Greek Government, the political world more generally, and the entire Greek nation, which, he said, is the main support of the Cypriots in their struggle for liberty and justice.

In conclusion, he described the new phase of the Cyprus issue as definitive with regard to the future developments of the problem.

Foreign Minister Mitsotakis spoke in the same spirit while seeing Kiprianou off at the airport. He said the talks were particularly useful for the progress of the Cyprus issue and that a complete concord of views will help advance the issue. He expressed the hope that during the next few weeks the inter-Cypriot dialogue will enter a basic phase, and that the struggle conducted not only by the Greek Cypriots but by all the Greeks will be justified.

ROLANDHIS COMMENTS ON HAIG'S CYPRUS ROLE

NC070724 Athens MESIMVRINI in Greek 6 Jul 81 p 5

[Excerpts] Shortly before leaving for Nicosia (last Friday) Cypriot Foreign Minister Rolandhis was good enough to be interviewed by MESIMVRINI correspondent Loukas Thanasekos.

Question: Is it true that U.S. Secretary of State Haig has asked you and your Greek counterpart, Mr Mitsotakis, to make some improvements in the Greek Cypriot constitutional proposals, with the promise that the Turkish side would improve its proposals on the territorial aspect?

Answer: No, this is not the case. I explained to Mr Haig that at this moment the Turkish Cypriot side's proposals on the territorial aspect are not on the negotiation table so that we are able to proceed. The U.S. secretary of state realized the importance of the need for comprehensive proposals by the Turkish Cypriot side. I hope that relying on--let us call them--promises, which Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen has made, as I hear, to various other foreign ministers, that there will be proposals on the territorial aspect by the end of July. I am not saying this with optimism because past experience does not allow such optimism.

Question: There have been press reports about the utilization of the northern occupied part of Cyprus as a base for the U.S. Rapid Deployment Force. What do you have to say on this?

Answer: I have made it clear from the beginning that the Government of Cyprus would not agree to the conversion of the British bases to a springboard at the expense of the interests or contrary to the interests of our Arab friends. Besides, the treaty of establishment provides that the bases must be used by the United Kingdom for defense purposes of the United Kingdom. There have also been rumors about the northern part of Cyprus; the same goes for this case as well. Under no circumstances would we agree to such a thing.

Question: Are you pleased with President Reagan's Cyprus reports?
Answer: We have many times pointed out to the Americans, through diplomatic channels, that part of the reports did not respond to reality.

Question: Has the U.S. done what it should or what it could do in connection with the Cyprus problem?
Answer: I hope that Mr Haig will help in the direction of Ankara during this crucial month. I cannot say that in the past the U.S. has done the maximum. I hope and pray that what was not done in the past will be done this month.

Question: Do you have any facts on this?
Answer: I am simply referring to my meeting with Mr Haig and the U.S. vice president on 18 and 19 May. I was given the impression that they would try to lead the Cyprus problem toward some progress, if not solution.

Question: Could there be any connection between the failure of the talks on the U.S. bases in Greece and the U.S. inaction toward the Cyprus problem?

Answer: Objectively, there is some connection between many questions that are in the same area. There is a unified U.S. policy in the area of the eastern Mediterranean and its goal is to strengthen the U.S. defense positions, and without fail to restore Greek-Turkish relations to the level that the U.S. considers desirable. It is within this framework that its interest in Cyprus is placed. However, I make it clear that this does not concern us because we are a nonaligned country. However, from the U.S. point of view this is how the question is viewed. Thus, for them, many questions of the area appear to be mutually connected; that is, they are questions of unified policy. And possibly progress in one would entail progress in another or the opposite.

SOVIET BALLERINA DEPARTS INSTANBUL FOR FRANKFURT

TA071833 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Galina Cursina, the ballerina from the Soviet Bolshoi troupe who applied at the U.S. Consulate General in Istanbul for political asylum, has been sent to Frankfurt. According to information given by a Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] correspondent, Cursina was taken out of the U.S. Consulate General at about 1740 and her face was covered. She was driven in a car to Yesilkoy Airport. The plane taking Cursina to Frankfurt took off at about 1900.

POLISH UNDER SECRETARY BEGINS CONTACTS IN ANKARA

TA071929 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] The Polish under secretary of state for foreign affairs, Marian Dobrosielski, who is on an official visit to Ankara, has begun his contacts. Dobrosielski, who called on the Foreign Ministry secretary general, Ambassador Kamuran Gurun, said that during his contacts in Ankara views will be exchanged on bilateral relations and the international situation, primarily East-West relations, European security, and Middle East and Mediterranean problems. Gurun said that his contacts with Dobrosielski will be beneficial to further strengthening relations between the two countries.

Dobrosielski later called on Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen. In a statement during the meeting, Turkmen expressed the belief that the talks between Gurun and Dobrosielski will be concluded positively from the viewpoint of bilateral relations.

OZAL LEAVES FOR IMF MEETING IN WASHINGTON

TA051158 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 5 Jul 81

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has said that Turkey received a record level of credit from the World Bank last year and that he will hold contacts to ensure as high a level of loans this year. Ozal left for Washington to attend the IMF meeting there. In a statement to the Turkish Radio and Television at Yesilkoy Airport before his departure, Ozal said that Turkey's relations with the IMF and World Bank would be reviewed in Washington. He added that during his visit he would hold talks with U.S. officials on Turkey's economic development. Ozal said: It has been exactly 1 year since we signed our last agreement with the IMF. We will make a big and important appraisal of that. Furthermore, there is a new World Bank director. We will hold talks with him. Last year, Turkey received a record level of credit from the World Bank. It was $717 million. I will hold talks to ensure that we receive as high a loan this year. Turgut Ozal is expected to return on 15 July.

NATO'S LUNS COMMENTS ON 'FAVORABLE' DEVELOPMENTS

TA031930 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] NATO General Secretary Joseph Luns has said in connection with the ratification of the bill on the formation of the constituent assembly: This is a favorable development. Luns talked today in Brussels with a group of Turkish industrialists and businessmen.

Turkish Radio and Television correspondent Nusret Ozgul reports that in a statement he made prior to the meeting, the NATO general secretary said that he considered the latest developments in Turkey constructive. Recalling that Turkey had a very stable relationship with NATO, Luns said that military aid to Turkey would continue. He added that the necessary steps would be taken to allow the FRG military aid to Turkey to begin in September.

PROSECUTORS DEMAND DEATH SENTENCE FOR 21

TA031955 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Summary] The prosecution of 70 suspects belonging to an extreme leftwing organization has started in Elazig. The Elazig military court prosecutor accused the suspects of killing 16 persons, of subversive activities, of wounding 11 persons, of placing explosives in various buildings and of armed robberies, and asked the death sentence for 13 militants and various prison sentences for the rest.

The Istanbul military prosecutor asked the death sentence for 4 terrorists out of 33 leftwing terrorists belonging to 3 different illegal organizations. The indictment accuses the suspects of killing 2 persons, of subversive activities, of carrying out numerous armed robberies and fighting against the security forces. The prosecutor asked for various prison sentences for the 29 others.

The trial of 18 leftwing militants began in the Golcuk military court today. In his indictment, the military prosecutor accused the suspects of subversive activities, and asked for the death sentence for 4 of them and prison sentences for the 14 other suspects. The same court convicted five other militants for conducting antisecular propaganda.

DISK OFFICIALS SENTENCED FOR STRIKE ACTIVITIES

TA031502 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Istanbul, 3 Jul (AA)--President of the Confederation of Revolutionary Labor Unions "DISK" Abdulla Basturk and six members of the Executive Council have been sentenced to 6 months in prison for provoking workers to strike illegally. DISK had called on members to conduct a 2-hour work stoppage in March 1978 as a so-called "warning to fascism."

Basturk and a number of DISK officials face more serious charges with the prosecutor demanding the death penalty in an ongoing trial before a military court in Istanbul.

MILLIYET ANALYZES TURKISH CYPRIOT ELECTIONS

NC070842 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 2 Jul 81 p 2

[Looking at the World" column by Sami Kohen: "The Aftermath of the Elections"]

[Text] It is obvious that following the elections on Sunday, the TFSC has entered upon a difficult phase. After the tough campaign, which became heated through serious and exaggerated accusations, all the political parties and politicians now have a duty to cooperate in preserving their unity and solidarity. The days ahead will show to what extent the political parties and the politicians will act in line with this sense of responsibility and common sense.

The results of the elections have created an unexpected situation. The former party in power and the main opposition possess equal strength in the new assembly. The rightist National Unity Party [NUP] which has lost its majority, obtained only 18 out of a total of 40 seats, while the leftist Communal Liberation [CLP] and the Republican Turkish Parties [RTP] have together won a total of 18 seats. Of the remaining 3 seats, 2 have gone to the Democratic Peoples Party [DPP] and 1 to the Turkish Unity Party [TUP]. The DPP are social democrats, the TUP rightists.

The election results confirm that Rauf Denktas, who secured 51.7 percent of the votes and who has been reelected president--though he has lost a lot of ground compared with previous elections--still enjoys the support of the majority of the Turkish Cypriots. However, the defeat which his party, the NUP, has suffered and the failure of some well-known persons to be elected proves that this party has recently lost its former support.

The serious economic and social problems facing the TFSC and failure of the NUP government to find effective solutions to them, in addition to the inability of the government to seriously tackle certain disorderly acts and cases of corruption, has disturbed the people and has caused many votes to slide to the opposition.

The NUP leaders must push aside the charges they made during their election campaign; they must evaluate the outcome of the elections with cool heads and they must draw the necessary moral lesson from it. Thanks to his past services and his strong personality, Denktas has managed to be reelected; that is, he obtained a kind of "confidence vote" from the people. But he, too, must examine the reason for losing so many votes and must draw the necessary conclusion from it.

As stated above, the reason why the TFSC has entered upon a difficult phase is because the party in power and the two main opposition parties have equal seats in the assembly. Therefore, Nejat Konuk's DPP is in the"key party" position.

Undoubtedly, various formulas will be suggested in the days ahead. The outcome may be a minority government, or a coalition government between the NUP and the DPP or between the DPP and the two main opposition parties.

It is our sincere hope that the government is formed in as short a time as possible without a political crisis or further tension. The TFSC cannot endure such a crisis. The baby fatherland [Cyprus] must not fail to benefit from the experiences of the fatherland [Turkey]. It must not be forgotten that the young democracy of the TFSC is going through an important test before the eyes of the whole world....

The completion of the elections in the Turkish Cypriot sector as well as the just concluded Greek Cypriot elections have encouraged certain expectations in several circles, including the United Nations.

The intercommunal talks were suspended for a while owing to these elections. As a matter of fact, not the slightest progress was recorded during those weekly sessions which lasted for months. Probably the suspension of the talks, because of the elections, has saved them from being completely disrupted.

But now that the elections are over in both sectors, a new impetus will surely be given to efforts for the resumption of the talks. As a matter of fact, there has been some talks about a new plan. In any case, a plan or rather "new views" or "new recommendations"--because some diplomats don't like the word "plan"--are bound to come up in the next few days.

The elections held in both the Greek Cypriot and the Turkish Cypriot sectors have one thing in common; the leaders have preserved their positions, but their parties have lost ground while the opposition parties in both sectors have emerged stronger. Kiprianou is now facing a stronger Kliridhis and stronger AKEL. Denktas too is facing a stronger opposition.

To what extent will leaders on both sides pay attention to the voice of the opposition? On the other hand, to what extent will the opposition show flexibility and act responsibly toward finding a solution to the Cyprus dispute?

Much will depend on this attitude if efforts to resume intercommunal talks are to be successful.

DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 131 9 July 1981

CONTENTS

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Lord Carrington Discusses Talks With Gromyko B 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Federal Government Rules Out Missile Moratorium J 1
Genscher Views Brandt Visit, Armament, Detente J 1
Genscher Leaves for Talks With Bulgarian Leaders J 7
Reportage on Visit [cross-reference] J 7
Jallud-led Libyan Delegation Requests FRG Experts J 7

FRANCE

Premier Mauroy Outlines Economic Policy K 1
Cheysson Addresses International Issues [LE MONDE 5-6 Jul] K 2
Foreign Trade Minister Comments on Tasks [LE MONDE 27 Jun] K 4
Council of Ministers Discusses Mexican Ties K 5
PCF Group Leader Cites Parliamentary Aims [L'HUMANITE 30 Jun] K 5
Marchais Reports to PCF Central Committee [L'HUMANITE 27 Jun] K 7

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Premier Spadolini Outlines Government Policy L 1
Government Announces Eight New Ambassadors L 2
PCI, PCE Delegations Issue Joint Statement [L'UNITA 30 Jun] L 3

PORTUGAL

PCP's AVANTE! Comments on Situation in Poland [2 Jul] M 1

SPAIN

Basque Premier Comments on Talk With Calvo-Sotelo N 1
Authorities Arrest ETA Members, Other Militants N 1

CYPRUS

Intercommunal Talks Resume; Envoys Make Statements R 1
Talks End, UN Statement R 1
O AGON Doubts U.S. Intentions on Cyprus Issue [8 Jul] R 2
Austria's Pahr Holds Out Hope For Talks [CYPRUS MAIL 8 Jul] R 3
CYPRUS MAIL on Soviet-Syrian Maneuvers Incident [8 Jul] R 3

GREECE

Mitsotakis, Austria's Pahr Begin Official Talks S 1
Spain's Perez-Llorca Comments on Results of Visit S 1
Opposition Press Criticizes Extradition of Turks [NEWS 3 Jul] S 1
Government Statement S 2
Papandreou Asked for Answers on Foreign Policy [NEWS 7 Jul] S 2
Prinos Oilfield Begins Pumping Oil, Gas 5 July S 2

TURKEY

VOTCP Accuses U.S. of Kidnapping Soviet Ballerina T 1
Visiting Polish Official Holds News Conference T 1

LORD CARRINGTON DISCUSSES TALKS WITH GROMYKO

LD081330 London PRESS ASSOCIATION in English 1200 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Excerpt] [No dateline received] Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington insisted today that the Common Market's Afghanistan peace plan is still "the best hope of a negotiated settlement" with the Russians.

He was speaking at the European Parliament here, following talks in Moscow on Monday during which Soviet Foreign Minister Mr Gromyko described the proposals as "unrealistic."

Lord Carrington said: "It is obvious that a Soviet refusal to negotiate on Afghanistan makes it impossible to speak of normal relations and prejudice efforts to reach agreement with the Soviet Union on other matters. Ours is a serious proposal and I hope that on reflection the Soviet Government will react in a constructive manner."

He will not be proposing any compromises by the EEC in the continuing bid to persuade the Russians to come to the negotiating table.

His speech marks the beginning of Britain's presidency of the EEC's Council of Ministers.

Lord Carrington said he emphasised to Mr Gromkyo that the Afghanistan problem was of global significance, and that the solution was essential in the interests of peace, stability and the development of East-West relations. "I reminded the Soviet Government that the Ten--and indeed the great majority of the international community--are convinced that the complete withdrawal of Soviet troops is an essential element of any solution," he said.

"Mr Gromyko took the view that the proposal by the Ten was, as he put it, unrealistic because the main problem was intervention by others in the affairs of Afghanistan; because it was not stated that the present Afghan regime should participate at the outset; and because the proposed composition of the conference was unsatisfactory," said Lord Carrington.

"I told him that I did not find these arguments convincing. Mr Gromyko did not say that he rejected the proposal and did not exclude further discussion.

"For my part, I made it plain that the proposal, which had already received an encouraging degree of support in the international community, remains on the table, and that a positive response from the Soviet Union was highly desirable in the interests of world peace and stability."

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT RULES OUT MISSILE MORATORIUM

LD081340 Hamburg DPA in German 1239 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 8 Jul (DPA)--Following SPD Chairman Willy Brandt's talks in Moscow, the Federal Government, for the moment, is awaiting the promised additional elucidations by the Soviet leadership on Eurostrategic disarmament. On the basis of the present information on Brandt's talks, however, it is maintaining its position that the new proposal formulated by Moscow for a halt to the siting of medium-range weapons in the East and the West cannot be considered since such a moratorium would consolidate the existing Soviet superiority.

Bonn's attitude was reported by Government Spokesman Kurt Becker today following a 90-minute discussion in the federal cabinet on the SPD chairman's report. Becker stressed that the entire Federal Government welcomed Brandt's talks in Moscow. His reports are still being examined, whereby the promised additional elucidations by the Soviet Union will be included. Afterward, Bonn will brief its NATO allies on the subject. According to Becker, the government once again welcomes the two superpowers' readiness to start talks on disarmament without preconditions in the sphere of medium-range weapons.

Asked whether Brandt's talks in Moscow have, in the government's view, paved the way for talks, Becker replied that no one in the cabinet expressly voiced this impression. Given the present information, the Federal Government's present position on the question of talks [words indistinct]. The additional elucidations expected from Moscow will, according to Becker, probably be connected with the central issue of the talks or certain steps being demanded or which are desirable prior to talks. The spokesman said he assumes that this also will include the question of the moratorium on which state and party leader Leonid Brezhnev made a newly formulated proposal to Brandt.

With regard to the proposal, Becker, who summarized the cabinet's discussion, referred to positions adopted by Bonn several times in the past. Becker drew attention to the cabinet's rejection of a moratorium in February and to the Bundestag's resolution in which Moscow was requested to halt the stationing and production of and to gradually dismantle its SS-20 missiles. He also recalled an April statement by the chancellor, in which he said that, in view of the more than 200 SS-20 missiles, even a unilateral Soviet moratorium would not eliminate his deep concern.

Regarding the possibilities of a so-called zero option--foregoing the setting up of new U.S. medium-range weapons at the same time as an appropriate reduction in arms on the part of the Soviets--Becker noted that the main thing is that Moscow has to eliminate its arms lead. The goal of negotiations is a balance of armaments at the lowest level possible. It has always been the Federal Government's view that Moscow should abolish its additional weapons if the West were to forego stationing its new weapons.

FDP Parliamentary Group Chairman Wolfgang Mischnick today was his party's first leading politician to positively assess Brandt's visit. It is "vital, particularly in difficult times, to clarify one's own political viewpoint through direct contact and thus avoid misunderstandings," he told DPA.

GENSCHER VIEWS BRANDT VISIT, ARMAMENT, DETENTE

DW080930 West Berlin RIAS Network in German 0800 GMT 5 Jul 81

[Reporters Juergen Rusche and Fritz Pettelkow interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher in the program "Studio Bonn Reports"; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Let us begin with foreign policy matters. There are reasons enough for it--the most important being your office, Mr Genscher.

It seems that Bonn's foreign policy is being pursued not only by the foreign minister, but also by other politicians not holding government positions. This is demonstrated by this weekend's remarkable headlines. Apparently, more news comes from Moscow; new information on the Soviets' approach to the difficult problem of nuclear missiles; and there are new interpretations. The whole affair seems to be intended to create the impression of some motion on the Soviet side. They want, it was said, information from the West on the political and disarmament policy measures they must take to prompt NATO to renounce counterarmament in Eurostrategic medium-range missiles. They have allegedly amended their moratorium somewhat regarding the freezing of the respective levels of missiles in the beginning of the negotiations.

Mr Genscher, you will meet with SPD Chairman Brandt on Monday to discuss the results of his trip as a whole. Yet, I would like to ask you the following question today. Have these new interpretations made you reconsider your position?

[Answer] I fully agree with Mr Brandt's opinion that we must avoid rash judgment. Problems which concern and affect all of us are involved. Because of the significance of the issues to be discussed regarding East-West relations, it would indeed be wrong to jump to conclusions. This pertains to rash jubilation as well as rash criticism.

I talked by phone to Mr Brandt as well as to Mr Wischnewski. Early in the week, I will receive the protocols on the Moscow talks and, most importantly, I will meet with Mr Brandt on Monday. I think I will have a clearer picture after I have been thoroughly briefed on the contents of the talks. The fact must also not be ignored that the Soviet side told Mr Brandt and Mr Wischnewski that additional explanations will be given. All that must be included in forming an opinion.

I would like to say at this time that I very much welcome the fact that, as during my visit in March, the Soviet side again confirmed its preparedness to negotiate with the United States without preconditions. This is important in view of the U.S. desire to hold these negotiations with the Soviet Union. I think that it must be particularly stressed in this connection that another meeting between Soviet Ambassador Dobrynin and U.S. Secretary of State Haig took place on Thursday in Washington. This meeting served, above all, to prepare for negotiations on medium-range weapons. Mr Dobrynin himself made a public statement to this effect. This is important because it eliminates the foolish talk about the alleged lack of talk between the two big powers. Contact between the United States and the Soviet Union has never been and is not now disrupted and both world powers continue a close exchange of views.

In this connection, the message sent this spring by President Reagan to the Soviet general secretary must not be underrated. The U.S. secretary of state informed me of this letter when we met in Rome. We are interested in seeing the dialogue between the Soviet Union and the United States continue and, as desired by the United States, agreement achieved at the September meeting between Gromyko and Haig on the beginning of negotiations.

[Question] As Juergen Rusche said at the beginning, the word moratorium still plays a key role. It means that armament in medium-range weapons will be frozen at the current level. As far as I can judge, the position of the Federal Government so far has not changed.

[Answer] Mr Pettelkow, I don't want to discuss details of this or that question now. I want to point out the crucial problem of medium-range weapons. We had a balance for a long time with regard to medium-range weapons in Europe. This balance has been destroyed by the Soviet arming in the field of medium-range weapons, creating a completely new situation with regard to range, destructive capability, invulnerability and mobility.

This Soviet lead in armament has given impetus to the arms spiral, creating a horrifying threat to West Europe. This threat is depressing and shocking and is of such magnitude as to make possible the annihiliation of our country as well as of West Europe. This is what depresses us. This is why we continuously appeal to the Soviet Union to stop increasing the arms spiral.

After very long and thorough consideration, we eventually decided to support the dual decision of 1979. This decision introduces a new philosophy into international security discussion--a philosophy which is different from earlier patterns. Formerly, it was held that if armament takes place on one side, counterarmament will follow on the other. Now we say that we will respond to the armament of the other side by our determination to counterarm as well as to negotiate.

After this decision and after the arming that has taken place, the Soviet Union obviously holds the key and is responsible, not NATO, Bonn or Washington. Whether there will be Western counterarmament is solely up to the Soviet Union. If the Soviet Union states today--and neither negotiations nor our permission are necessary for this--that it is going to eliminate its lead in medium-range weapons, our counterarmament would be superfluous. If the Soviet Union declares that it wants to reduce its lead in medium-range weapons, we will examine whether our counterarmament can be reduced. In other words, Moscow alone is responsible. All suggestions from Moscow must be examined to see if they fit these criteria--whether the Soviet Union says it wants to eliminate its lead in medium-range weapons--which we would appreciate most because we do not want to counterarm at any price, but are being pressed to do so--or whether it wants to reduce its arms, which would mean striving for an arms balance on a lower level--and we desire this.

With the support of the German Bundestag, which discussed this issue in May, I would once again like to appeal to the Soviet Union to discontinue the further production and deployment of SS-20 missiles and to gradually start reducing the number of existing medium-range missiles. That would be a realistic step. The people of Europe are waiting for such a step by the Soviet Union.

[Question] Mr Genscher, I would like to bring up an issue we will certainly discuss in the domestic political part of our talk. I would like to ask you about your impression of the so-called pacifist movement made up of the many people and groups who are unable and unwilling to follow what you have just explained. They say out of fear or other emotions or maybe for the most moral reasons that all missiles are bad and every attempt to reach agreement with the Americans in this matter is wrong.

[Answer] I believe that we must take the discussion on safeguarding peace very seriously. This is the difference between liberal democracies such as the Federal Republic, the United States or France and communist countries where such discussions cannot and may not take place. But there is an even bigger difference between us and communist countries. Discussions on arms are being publicly held in our country. That creates security for the other side insofar as it cannot be suddenly assaulted with newly developed arms. I mean politically assaulted. At the same time, the development of arms is not being discussed in Eastern states--I would like to replace the word assaulted, which I just used, with the word surprised--so they could surprise us.

I consider the discussion on safeguarding peace to be useful, important and necessary. I know that both sides have offered considerable moral arguments. Nobody has a monopoly on peace and morality. I simply believe that this discussion must be held as one on safeguarding peace and freedom. Peace and freedom are the great aims to which we feel committed. I am convinced that this discussion will contribute to handling the pros and cons more factually.

This discussion will demonstrate that we are not threatened--at least at present--by nonexistent U.S. medium-range missiles, but that we are under the threat of Soviet medium-range missiles. I sense at many meetings the high degree of thoughtfulness of citizens who really are rather sceptical about the decisions we have made. Those who take the citizens maturity seriously should also take their arguments seriously and deal with them. I believe, therefore, in the usefulness of this discussion which I term explicitly as one on safeguarding peace and freedom. I am firmly convinced that in the end it will lead to a more factual discussion of these vital problems which could also be called questions regarding the survival of our people and the people of Europe.

[Question] Mr Genscher, is it possible for the SPD, your coalition partner, to achieve a majority decision against counterarmament and against NATO's dual counterarmament decisions at the next federal SPD congress?

[Answer] I keep to what we have jointly agreed upon. I also remind you that in May this year all the parties in the German Bundestag reiterated that the Bundestag supports the Federal Government in implementing both parts of the NATO decision of 12 December 1979 consistently and in due time and that it emphasizes in this context the statement in the dual decision that the West will study NATO's requirements for medium-range weapons in the light of concrete negotiation results.

You see, the fact that all Bundestag parties have agreed to the resolution in this respect is an indication of some predictability in German foreign and security policy for our allies as well as for those in the East with whom we urgently want to hold talks and negotiations. It is very important, I think, to make clear to what extent the Bundestag approves the Federal Government's security policy. I consider this a gain. I am trying to win the opposition over to this policy, but agreement by the opposition cannot replace the second necessity, namely, that this policy also has a majority within the government coalition. The vote proves that this is the case.

Our desire to negotiate is clearly expressed by our efforts to take advantage of every possibility for talks and negotiations with the East. If you refuse to negotiate and talk, you cannot achieve progress in such issues. That is why we assess every effort for such talks positively. This also applies to the trips of Mr Brandt and Mr Wischnewski.

[Question] But Mr Genscher, assuming that, contrary to your expectations, this approval within the coalition camp doesn't come about, is it possible for the government to continue?

[Answer] Mr Rusche, I have no doubt that the Social Democrats will honor their pledge.

[Question] Perhaps a word about what obviously has been broached in Moscow and what certainly will also be discussed in Moscow this weekend--the Soviet relationship to Afghanistan. The Soviets allegedly are prepared to withdraw their troops under certain conditions. They say that all intervention from neighboring countries must be ruled out, Afghanistan's nonalignment must be guaranteed and the Soviet border secured. Lord Carrington is due in Moscow on Sunday and will suggest a European Community initiative for settling the Afghanistan conflict through an international conference. What is behind this?

[Answer] Mr Rusche, all statements must prove their worth at the negotiating table and international politics is characterized by great distrust at the moment. This distrust is understandable, considering the fact that the Soviet Union has invaded a small country like Afghanistan and is still waging a bloody war there and considering the fact that the Soviet Union is threatening us with gigantic medium-range armament. Therefore, confidence-building acts by the Soviet side would be very important to ease world concern about peace.

What confidence-building measures can be taken? I mentioned one thing, namely, the demand raised also by the Bundestag that the Soviet Union discontinue the deployment and production of its medium-range weapons and dismantle, step-by-step, the medium-range missiles it has already deployed. In addition, the Soviet Union should respond constructively to the proposal advanced by the European Community to hold a conference on Afghanistan because this proposal does not seek unilateral advantages for the West, rather this proposal is intended to help the small Afghan people live in independence and freedom and to ensure that Afghanistan's nonalignment is guaranteed, that the Soviet troops withdraw from Afghanistan and that Afghanistan is kept free from any intervention by any side. Naturally, we also respect Soviet security needs. This holds true for international disarmament discussions and it holds equally true for the discussion of the Afghanistan issue. This means that the West has no intention of making Afghanistan a bastion against the Soviet Union.

We are interested in only one thing--we want Afghanistan to be nonaligned and independent. The conference we are now proposing could be a signal. This means that the reaction of the Soviet leadership, which we hope will be positive, could be an important confidence-building measure. Positive Soviet cooperation in politically and peacefully solving the Cambodia issue, which will be discussed at the United Nations the week after next, would also be extremely welcome because the ASEAN states are trying to find a political solution there in the same way the European states are trying to find a political solution for Afghanistan. By the way, this also shows the high importance regional groups of states can have for the political settlement of international issues. We also share these efforts with other regional groups such as the Islamic Conference, which understandably is worried about Afghanistan.

[Question] There were diarmament talks recently between the GDR and the FRG. These talks were conducted by Ambassador Ruth of the Foreign Ministry. My question is what's the use of these talks? In addition, hasn't the appearance of a Foreign Ministry representative in East Berlin resulted in a slight change and a certain upgrading of the GDR's position as compared to earlier practices?

[Answer] No, not at all. As you know, this was not the first disarmament discussion we've had with the GDR. We had discussions 2 years ago in Bonn and we are continuing them with these talks in East Berlin. I consider it necessary, right and useful for the two German states to talk about problems of arms control and disarmament, just as we discuss these problems with other Warsaw Pact states. I must say that I assess these recent talks as extremely useful. They were conducted in a business-like atmosphere and hopefully also will help make the disarmament and arms control discussions between FRG and the GDR more factual.

I believe that we will continue this disarmament dialogue. I will talk about this with GDR Foreign Minister Fischer at the meeting planned during the General Assembly session in New York. We will agree there on how in our view the dialogue can be continued. Everybody knows that we are a member of NATO and the European Community whereas the GDR belongs to the Warsaw Pact. Nothing unilateral is intended in this respect. However, if we are serious in our view--and we are --that war must never again emanate from German soil, then I consider at a matter of course for the two German states not to withhold from one another their views on issues regarding arms control and disarmament policy. On the contrary, they must engage in an intensive dialogue.

[Question] Mr Genscher, do you actually share the hope that with the disarmament talks in East Berlin this weekend, other intra-German contacts, that is, contacts in other fields, could be strengthened?

[Answer] No, we always have said that the talks on human conditions and on cooperation have a value of their own. But I repeat again that with what we are doing in the fields of disarmament and arms control, we not only fulfill an obligation to our own people, but also to the peoples of Europe and the world in general.

And with regard to the other aspect, I am convinced that the two German states must be aware of the fact that the Basic Treaty not only creates the opportunity, but also obliges us to seek new ways of cooperation time and again. In this connection, there is a number of important issues worthy of discussion in the interests of the people in the divided country. I feel that we and the GDR--and both of us have signed the Helsinki Final Act--must strive to achieve the highest standard in the implementation of all parts of the Final Act. This means that he must be exemplary, so to speak, in implementing all parts of the Helsinki Final Act and demonstrate that the two states are particularly serious about this. This would set a good example of the European responsibility of the two German states--the FRG and the GDR.

[Question] It is certainly not surprising, Mr Genscher, that foreign policy and everything connected with it naturally commands the broadest scope in a talk with the federal foreign minister.

However, there is a question on the situation related to the preparation of the 1982 budget. Having heard the latest debates in the Bundestag, we have the impression that the SPD-FDP coalition partners are entering these preparations with at least relatively different points of view. Could you please outline the F. 's stance on this?

[Answer] I think that what matters is that we are obliged to consolidate public budgets and to also create additional elbowroom in the interests of securing the future and to prevent us from living today at the expense of our children and grandchildren. To achieve this, it is necessary that these decisions are based on the principle of social justice. Thus, burdens cannot and must not be placed unilaterally on civil servants, farmers and those with independent professions. Likewise, employees must not be unilaterally burdened. A high sense of justice will be required in this respect. I believe that our public is considerably prepared to face such a factual discussion and the necessary decisions. It will contribute to an improvement of our economic and social stability. In turn, this is a prerequisite for our political stability and our political stability is an important contribution to safeguarding peace in Europe and the world.

I am not saying this because I am the foreign minister. This is not the reason why I create this connection. I am most firmly convinced that our people, who must live in two states on this highly armed continent, are particularly interested in seeing that no aggravation of the international situation takes place. This is why we make such urgent efforts aimed at arms control and disarmament--the visits of Mr Brandt and Mr Wischnewski must be seen in this connection.

It is important for us, in this connection, to know that we are in accord with our European Community partners and the U.S. Government in pursuing these aims--which means that we are in accord with the NATO partners.

I believe it most important that this accord also was established by the May 1981 decision of the Bundestag, the decision which I mentioned earlier. That is a good basis for our peace policy. This is a good basis for our policy aimed at safeguarding internal and external freedom. It is in this connection that I view important domestic political decisions. I have no doubt that our coalition partner views this reponsibility exactly as we do, so that we will, therefore, make the necessary decisions together.

[Question] You are certain that this endurance test will be withstood? You will have to face more. If you look at the figures, considerable economizing and reduction must be done and possibly some thought must be given to the piles of debts.

[Answer] Mr Rusche, I am fully aware of the difficulties. This is why I discuss it so seriously. But I am confident that we will master them.

GENSCHER LEAVES FOR TALKS WITH BULGARIAN LEADERS

LD081004 Hamburg DPA in German 0931 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 8 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher left by air today for a 4-day visit to Bulgaria. Genscher is to meet with state and party leader Todor Zhivkov, Premier Grisha Filipov and his counterpart Petur Mladenov.

One probable topic of the talks is the political development in Poland on the eve of the PZPR congress. According to diplomatic circles, Genscher will state the West's position in this respect, together with a warning against interference "in all clarity and detail."

Prior to his departure, the foreign minister stressed, during an interview on Bulgarian television, the traditional German-Bulgarian friendship. At the same time, Genscher stressed the German desire for an expansion of scientific-technological cooperation and contractual agreements on investment promotion and more cooperation between the two countries' firms.

Reportage on Visit

For West German and Bulgarian reportage of the state visit of Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher to Bulgaria, see page C 1 of the 9 July Eastern Europe DAILY REPORT and subsequent issues.

JALLUD-LED LIBYAN DELEGATION REQUESTS FRG EXPERTS

LD071554 Hamburg DPA in German 1427 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 7 Jul (DPA)--Libya is interested in German aid in the form of training experts. This request was made by a government delegation from Tripoli at talks on Tuesday at the Bonn Economics Ministry. Possibilities for an increase in business cooperation also were discussed at the meeting. According to information from Bonn, no progress was made on the question of an early reconvening of the German-Libyan economic commission.

A second talk was planned in the afternoon between Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and the leading politician 'Abd as-Salam Jallud, a close intimate of the head of state Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi and de facto "second man" in Libya. Jallud has been in Bonn since Monday.

Bonn and Tripoli agreed in principle 6 months ago to strengthen economic cooperation and reached an agreement on air traffic, double taxation and the furthering of investment. The joint economic commission was to meet in May, but this was stalled by Libya, although it gave contracts worth billions to German firms. Libya is the Federal Republic's second biggest oil supplier and, in the past year, had a surplus of about DM5 billion in their joint trade.

PREMIER MAUROY OUTLINES ECONOMIC POLICY

NC081434 Paris AFP in English 1423 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 8 Jul (AFP)--The economic policy of France's new leftist government will continue to be based on fighting unemployment, Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy told parliament.

Outlining the main themes of his government's policies in the new parliament's first major debate he said that in December the government will present a two-year plan for a "merciless fight against unemployment" which will be followed by a "more ambitious" five-year plan.

The two-year project would be in three parts: a lasting boost to economic activity, the creation of 210,000 jobs, and the reduction of working hours. But the premier warned that time would be needed for the measures to take affect.

The prime minister also said that the French franc will be maintained within the European Monetary System (FMS). He reaffirmed the government's desire to defend the currency and to take determined action against inflation. He said that the government's measures to put the economy on a sound footing would "not take the easy way out."

Mr Mauroy announced that the proposed 1982 budget will include a tax on fortunes which are not tied up in productive capital equipment. The proposal would also tackle anomalies in the income tax system, a fight against tax evasion, and a ceiling on tax allowances for children. He declared: "There will be no miracles and there is no jack-pot to provide payments to some, without taking it from the income of others." He said that there must be changes in the "unjust and rotten" tax system.

Commenting in general on the need to "liberate state justice," he confirmed that there will shortly be a debate on abolition of the State Security Court and of the Armed Forces' Permanent Courts. Other measures to be debated would include abolition of the death penalty and civilian court reform.

The government's priority measure in the autumn will be a bill to nationalise the banking sector, Mr Mauroy said commenting that no new policies were possible without effective control of credit. Major French banks are already nationalised, and the premier said that the new nationalisation programme will not effect foreign banks operating in France, cooperative and mutual banks, or small independent banks operating locally or regionally.

Ruling out any idea of a France "trembling and greased with subsidies," the premier said that corporate and bureaucratic thinking would not be able to impose their views on the state.

He said that during the seven-year term of former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing, unemployment grew worse and now totalled 1.8 million people, including one young person out of six. He added that 60 per cent of people unemployed are women.

As a result of policies followed by the previous administration, inflation in France was twice as high as in some neighbouring countries. He declared: "The economy was allowed to lie fallow. Price rises in the public sector were delayed. We were left a deficit of 50,000 million francs (about 8,500 million dollars)."

Mr Mauroy recalled that the day President Mitterrand took office--May 21--he introduced measures to defend the franc, adding that "in the last seven weeks these have been fully effective despite a 'detestable' overseas background originating in America where the dollar is too expensive and interest rates are intolerable."

During the life of this parliament 11 industrial groups will be nationalised, he said, but added that this extension of the public sector would be carried out "with a certain degree of flexibility so far as the timetable and framework are concerned." The Dassault aerospace firm and the arms division of Matra would be nationalised immediately, as would the whole of the SACILOR and USINOR steel giants.

Mr Mauroy said that "the state has the duty as a shareholder to undertake immediately its responsibilities for total restructions."

In addition five industrial groups will be nationalised immediately through control of the parent company. Mr Mauroy named these as la Compagnie Generale d'Electricite, Pechiney-Uginekuhlmann, Rhone-Poulenc, Saint-Gobainpont-a Mousson and Thomson-Brandt.

Negotiations are to begin immediately with the heads of CII-Honeywell-Bull, ITT France and Roussel-UCLAF in which overseas interests have large holdings. Mr Mauroy said that French shareholders will remain free to keep their shares or sell to the French state, and these firms will not be affected by the forthcoming nationalisation programme, he said.

The prime minister said that France would work for a new world economic order and help the Third World to become a full partner. On the problems of immigration France will welcome exiles and will treat immigrants fairly, but he repeated that no new immigrants would be allowed in because of the high level of unemployment.

CHEYSSON ADDRESSES INTERNATIONAL ISSUES

PM081119 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Jul 81 p 3

["M.D." report]

[Text] "We are excellent U.S. allies," External Relations Minister Cheysson told the Anglo-American Press Association on 3 July.

The Atlantic alliance, the minister added, describing it as a "fundamental element of agreement" between Paris and Washington, "is, in our view, the means of defending" a specific idea of man, freedom and democracy. He continued: "We French have always been committed to that, but I will say that we are now expressing it even more clearly with the Socialists' arrival in government, carried there by a great, fundamentally humanist element. And since--I am not embarrassed to say this to you--there are in the left, which is our majority, elements who at one time accepted a totalitarian approach to problems and praised the totalitarian approach in some countries, we Socialists place all the more emphasis on the defense of humanist values--freedoms which are at the root of the Atlantic alliance.... We will be all the more eloquent on that issue since some members of our majority once took a different approach. We intend to express this constantly and consistently."

"Yes, the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan is intolerable," Cheysson also said. "Yes, the presence of Vietnamese forces in Kampuchea is unacceptable. Yes, we are committed to the market economy, that is our future.... I am presently the only Western foreign minister to have said that we cannot have the relations we usually have with the Soviet Union because its troops are in Afghanistan. Questioned in Washington about a visit to Moscow which, under normal circumstances, would have followed my visit to the United States, I replied that it is not possible in the immediate future because Soviet troops are in Afghanistan.... We will take a perfectly clear line, especially since we are fortunate enough to have a country which has not so far been affected by neutralism."

Mentioning another "element of agreement" with the United States, Cheysson added: "Finally, we have a nuclear capability which is considerable, especially since we maintain complete control over it and have the capacity to use it as we wish in a show of force."

The disagreement between us, Cheysson also said, relates to the means of overcoming the crisis. "We cannot accept that it should be the weakest who are the victims....A policy which inevitably increases unemployment means that it is the weakest who fall first on the battlefront of the struggle against inflation."

Replying to other questions, the minister stated that high U.S. interest rates are "injuring" the Europeans by forcing them to pursue the same policy "in an open economy." "It strikes me literally astonishing that the Americans should allow the dollar to get out of control as they are," he said. He made it clear that he was by no means convinced of the efficacy of that policy since it is not accompanied by budget or stock market interventions. "We do not understand," he said in substance, "how the United States can prevent inflation by increasing military spending and cutting taxes."

Change in the Nuclear Balance

The minister mentioned a French-American disagreement on North-South relations which is likely to emerge at the Ottawa summit: "I have been told that our American friends tend to think that it is not a priority. It is a priority for us because we are smaller and more dependent on our relations with foreign countries... If President Reagan can return from Ottawa with the conviction that North-South relations are a priority for his allies, I think that Ottawa will have been very important." But "we are heading for a serious situation if a subject which is a priority for us is only marginal for the Americans.... We have here a major problem between us for the coming years."

Furthermore, the minister said that he is "very concerned" about the situation in Central America. But, he said, "we do not think that force is the answer," whether used by governments, oppositionists or, "worse still," foreign forces. It is important to understand these countries' aspiration to independence and to help them to consider the matter "calmly" and to "reach a verdict democratically."

Questioned on the Soviet SS-20 missiles, Cheysson replied that their deployment in Europe "represents a modification in the nuclear balance." He added: "We do not regard this modification as acceptable. We think that we must negotiate with the Soviets as soon as possible to remove it. If they agree immediately to negotiations to remove the SS-20's, we will be perfectly happy. If they refuse, we must try to restore this balance and respond in the sphere of theater nuclear weapons. That is why France fully supports the decision taken by its Atlantic allies on the U.S. Pershing and cruise missiles."

"Since this matter relates to the overall nuclear balance," he pointed out, "the problem can only be discussed in the general context, in other words, within the SALT negotiations."

On the subject of French-West German relations, Cheysson stated that, after "such an effort to achieve friendly, close and preferential relations," it is "natural" that "we should give them the place they ought to have, in other words, make our relations the closest which France has with a foreign country, but in the context of relations with many other countries." "It is to our advantage to have common stances," he said, "with the Germans, of course, but also with the British" who, like the French, are members of the Security Council and have a nuclear force and national positions, and also with the Spanish, who are "very close" to France on relations with the Arabs, North-South dialogue and in their "thinking" on Central America and the Caribbean.

FOREIGN TRADE MINISTER COMMENTS ON TASKS

PM061518 Paris LE MONDE in French 27 Jun 81 p 9

[P.B. report]

[Text] True to his style, Michel Jobert refrained from answering the questions put to him at the diplomatic press luncheon on 25 June, but he did speak "in a less direct way" than during the last 7 years so as to take account of his responsibilities and governmental solidarity.

Asked whether he has the administrative means to act, in view of the fact that his functions as minister of state for foreign trade have not yet been defined by decree and taking into account the respective spheres covered by the ministers of external relations, economy and industry, Jobert replied jokingly: "Four ministers--there you have an interministerial committee where we can meet to coordinate and to act."

As for how he sees his actions, he specified: "I would like to be quicker, more precise, simpler and more effective. That is a great deal to ask and it will be necessary to exercise cunning regarding the nature of things and administration." He also stressed that, without denying the principles affirmed by the head of state, "France has no interest in neglecting the material aspects if it wishes to express itself and to count for something abroad beyond a capacity for analysis and intellectual liveliness."

Jobert then dealt with the following points.

The problem of the Arab boycott of Israel and of boycotts in general: It is necessary, according to the minister, to distinguish between boycotting states "of a racial or racist order." [sentence as published] What is the distinction between the two? Questions arise for suppliers and clients as time goes on, the minister explained. "A study is underway by the premier and the finance minister, with the participation of the ministers of external relations and foreign trade.... The authorities are also carefully studying how to establish a common attitude with the European partners."

Public aid for exports and for research: "It is true that a large proportion of foreign trade is accounted for by a small number of powerful companies because they are often well equipped.... A bigger share must be given to what is called 'small business'--as practiced by small and medium businessmen who are not familiar with the jungle of procedures. They should be better informed."

Exports: Jobert recalled that the minister of economy and finance, the premier and a cabinet communique "have stated unambiguously that France will honor its contracts." He added: "Past commitments will be taken into account even with regard to extending them. However, it is up to the government to shape the future."

The foreign trade deficit: "My role is to discourage costly imports. It is also necessary to press exports in familiar areas and to explore others, with Japan, the United States and the FRG. The balance is not satisfactory. We must try to improve it, first by means of discussions with our partners, but also by putting ourselves in a position to improve our exports."

Concerning exports, Jobert stated: "Planning exchanges with the Third World and the Arab world is not a political step but a matter of survival, for them and for us." Stressing that this sphere must be tackled seriously, he noted that in general terms he favors an interim 2-year plan to "manage our inheritance and embark on a new policy," then a 5-year plan with a view to "long term thought and action."

Relations with Japan: Jobert explained that not only trade exchanges count in rectifying exchanges. "The attitude which Japan adopts with respect to the international monetary system will be very important. The time has come to divide responsibilities better in this sphere."

The high U.S. interest rates: "They are the effect of imbalance rather than its source. That imbalance results from the multiplication of monetary symbols which are not backed up by gold or industry, but which represent what I have called a drunken money supply."

The French language: "This is a volatile but necessary product.... I would be falling down on my responsibilities if I did not concern myself with promoting the French language. Someone in my office will devote himself to one of France's principal products: Its language and culture."

On southern Africa, the Near East and the Iraqi nuclear powerstation, Jobert referred to statements made by Claude Cheysson and the head of state. Finally, he noted that he will take part in the EEC conference which is to meet next Tuesday and Wednesday [30 June-1 July] to prepare for the Ottawa meeting.

COUNCIL OF MINISTERS DISCUSSES MEXICAN TIES

LD081329 Paris Domestic Service in French 1300 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] Relations betwen France and Mexico were discussed at the Council of Ministers meeting this morning. Claude Cheysson made the point that industrial and trade relations between the two countries are continuing. The foreign minister will visit Mexico very soon with Michel Jobert, minister of state for foreign trade. The date of this trip has not yet been fixed.

PCF GROUP LEADER CITES PARLIAMENTARY AIMS

PM070943 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 30 Jun 81 p 3

[Magali Jauffret report on PCF National Assembly Group Chairman Andre Lajoinie's 29 June news conference in Paris]

[Text] The Communist group in the assembly met yesterday for the first time in this new legislative term. All the deputies present welcomed the three newly elected members, Jean Combasteil (Correze), Jacques Rimbault (Cher) and Paul Chomat (Saint-Etienne) and the two replacements for Jack Ralite (Seine-Saint Denis) and Marcel Rigout (Haute-Vienne), who have become ministers. The latter two, Maguette Jacquaint and Roland Mazoin, will be declared deputies exactly 1 month after the appointment of Ralite and Rigout as ministers. Ernest Moutoussami, deputy for the Guadaloupe Communist Party, associated to the Communist group, was excused. He will arrive in Paris today. The deputies unanimously elected A. Lajoinie their bureau and group chairman. In the afternoon, they divided into six working groups corresponding to the six commissions: foreign affairs, national defense, finance, production and trade, laws, and cultural and social affairs.

The group will meet again on Thursday, when the session opens, just before the assembly meeting to elect its speaker.

Full members of Leftwing Majority

Following the group meeting, Andre Lajoinie gave a news conference. He first read out the following statement, approved by the Communist deputies during their morning meeting.

"Having elected Francois Mitterrand to the presidency of the republic, the French people have given the left a large majority in the National Assembly. The right has suffered a crushing defeat.

"The Communist deputies greet the success to which they have contributed.

"The participation of Communist ministers in the government, for the first time in 34 years, reflects the sovereign will of the French people, as clearly and democratically expressed by universal suffrage.

"The Communist deputies convey their warm congratulations to Charles Fiterman, Anicet Le Pors, Jack Ralite and Marcel Rigout and wish them complete success in discharging their lofty responsibilities.

"As full members of the leftwing majority, the Communist deputies are determined to act in a constructive and responsible spirit to implement the new policy that French men and women have chosen.

"Despite the fact that an unfair electoral method robbed it of the representation to which it was legitimately entitled, the Communist group will play its full part in the change. It will do so with its own specificity and orginality, without subordination or excessive rivalry.

"From the 2 July opening session, the Communist deputies will act in five directions, for:

"--The progressive solution of the social problems of all kinds facing French men and women, attaching proper priority to the unemployment problem;

"--The defense of the nation's economic, technological, scientific and cultural strength and a new boost to its activity;

"--The guaranteeing and strengthening of the workers' and citizens' rights and democratic freedoms so that they can better participate in choices and decisions in the various fields of social life;

"--The democratization of the state, the institutions and political life and the decentralization of powers, specifically by establishing proportional representation in all elections, the establishment of real regional government with an assembly elected by direct universal suffrage and the extension of the powers and resources of municipalities and departments;

"--Action for disarmament and peace, for international cooperation and France's freedom of action.

"The democratiziation of the National Assembly's functioning must enable it to exercise the powers--particularly legislative powers--granted to it by the Constitution. Thus, the deputies elected by universal suffrage will be able to completely fulfill their mandate.

"Loyal to the principles of democracy and pluralism, the Communist deputies, who while in opposition were excluded for 23 years from the major decisions of parliamentary life, reassert their adherence to observance of proportional representation in the election of all the National Assembly's elective posts, particularly commission chairmanships."

MARCHAIS REPORTS TO PCF CENTRAL COMMITTEE

PM031445 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 27 Jun 81 pp 4-6

[Text of PCF Secretary General Georges Marchais report to the PCF Central Committee on 25 June: "Resolutely Looking to an Increase in Our Influence"]

[Text] The text of the report which Georges Marchais presented to the Central Committee:

Comrades, France has just experienced an intensive political battle with the two recent elections--the presidential and parliamentary elections. The aim of this Central Committee meeting is to analyze the profound changes this has made in our country's political situation and, on this basis, to make the necessary decisions on our future action.

1--Our Overall Analysis of the Presidential and Parliamentary Election Results

Before turning to the characteristics of the situation which has emerged from the parliamentary elections, I will briefly recall a few aspects of the presidential election results.

Francois Mitterrand was elected president on 10 May with more than 52 percent of the votes cast. We made a decisive contribution to that victory. Without underestimating the inadequacy of our first round results, I would like to point out that we openly called on the 4.5 million voters who had placed their trust in us on 26 April to vote for Francois Mitterrand.

It was in these circumstances that the new president dissolved the National Assembly and sparked off new parliamentary elections, as he had said he would. Those elections have just taken place. What are their main characteristics?

Crushing Defeat for the Right, Progress for the PS

First, in the first round, the left as a whole attained its highest score in our history, winning almost 56 percent of the votes cast while the right dropped to 43 percent. The second round last Sunday confirmed and extended that trend. The left will have 333 seats in the new assembly compared to 158 for the right.

The latter, therefore, suffered a crushing defeat. In the first round, the right as a whole lost almost 6 percent compared with the score achieved by its two main candidates in the first round of the presidential election. This reversal chiefly affected the UDF, Giscard d'Estaing's party, which lost more than 7 points between 26 April and 14 June. In all, the right lost 129 seats.

This trend which, in some cases, amounted to complete collapse, benefited the PS almost exclusively. With 37.3 percent of the votes cast going to the candidates it put forward or supported, the PS in a few weeks gained almost 12 percent more than the score achieved by Francois Mitterrand on 26 April. Thus, the considerable increase in its score since 1978 has been considerably strengthened since Francois Mitterrand's election.

This advance was made at the expense of all the other political parties. The small parties like the Unified Socialist Party, the leftists or the ecologists in particular have been virtually flattened. In all, with its 271 deputies, the PS alone has an absolute majority in the National Assembly.

The high number of abstentions in the first round of these elections should also be noted. Almost 30 percent of the registered voters, in other words, more than 10 million people, did not vote. They include many rightwing voters but also some leftwing voters and Communist voters.

Communist Candidates' Result

Of course, I would like to dwell at greater length on the Communist candidates' result.

With 16.2 percent of the votes cast, our party did slightly better than its percentage result in the presidential election but dropped considerably in the number of votes--around 400,000 votes. It lost more than 4 points compared with the 1978 parliamentary elections.

Over and above these overall figures, we should note a disparity in our results according to local situations.

Generally speaking, we have made progress or maintained our influence where our positions were strong and hence where our candidates seemed to be in the best position to defeat the right. This is notably the case with our outgoing deputies. They all obtained a higher score than our result in the presidential election and almost one-third of them attained or bettered their 1978 result. Many of them who were not reelected were not so much defeated as overtaken by the Socialist thrust.

It should be noted that our influence increased or was maintained principally in working class areas, among the people's electorate in the cities and rural districts. But it should be added that this percentage increase in or maintenance of our positions was accompanied by a drop in the number of votes, mainly owing to the high number of abstentions.

On this point, it also should be noted that in cases where our positions were strong and the Union for a New Majority [UNM] candidates did not seem in a position to worry us, a considerable number of rightwing voters voted for Socialist candidates in the first round in order to eliminate the Communists. This phenomenon was confirmed by the slight increase in rightwing votes in the second round in a number of constituencies or indeed by the fact that not all the votes cast for the Socialist candidates in the first round were transferred to the Communist candidates in the second.

On the other hand, in cases where the Socialist candidate was in the best position to defeat the rightwing candidate, we lost ground compared with our 1978 result, in some cases to a considerable degree.

Therefore, the Communist and affiliated deputies' group in the National Assembly will total 44 deputies. As we have stressed on many occasions, this type of election is particularly unjust. It minimizes our party's real influence in the whole of national life. I must point out that, if proportional representation had been applied, we would now have around 80 deputies despite the inadequacy of our result.

Of course, in addition to spelling out these facts, we must pinpoint the overall significance of these parliamentary elections. Since they took place not only in the wake of the presidential election but also in the context of the balance of political forces it created, it is appropriate to combine these two elections in the same general analysis.

Three General Remarks on the Significance of the Presidential and Parliamentary Elections

The first factor for consideration is that these two elections constituted a veritable rejection of Giscard d'Estaing and his policy. The condemnation of Giscardian policy's disastrous record for the workers and the country and the refusal to "take more" for another 7-year term were the main reasons for the choice made by the French people. From this viewpoint, the parliamentary elections certainly constitute a second defeat for Giscard d'Estaing even though he did not take part in them. The people's hope for change in the country is now equal to the rejection inflicted on the right and its undivided domination over the country for the past 23 years.

Second, it should be pointed out that the desire for change, which has constantly been growing in the country, covers very diverse motivations. Obviously, not all the voters who expressed their desire for an end to Giscard d'Estaing's policy have an identical awareness of the reality of the crisis affecting the country and of the new policy to be implemented. As we said at the Central Committee meeting in April, the very nature of the presidential election means that the voters have a limited choice in the second round. Therefore, this people's movement comprising very diverse aspirations and currents was polarized in support of the candidate who seemed to be the only one likely to defeat the outgoing president.

Third, the right's defeat and the left's success, which we wholeheartedly welcome, cannot make us refrain from analyzing a number of aspects of the situation. For instance, the desire to change and get rid of Giscard d'Estaing at any price largely overshadowed the question of the content of the change itself. The orchestration of the election campaign in the main sections of the media, the desire to dodge the fundamental issues at stake in the election, the many petty political maneuvers and the rejection of the big national debate for which we constantly called amplified that phenomenon. Despite the clear battle waged by the party throughout its election campaign, the question of the right conditions for change, the means of steering the country out of the crisis and the far-reaching reforms which that implies did not receive an adequate response in the country. It was not taken into account by broad masses.

The fact that 4.5 million voters chose to vote Communist in those very difficult circumstances is a very significant achievement. It is the sign of a high awareness of the economic, social and democratic choices which the interests of the workers and country require. It reflects the determination to take action for progress in that direction. This is valuable backing.

There is no doubt that the proposals--especially those put forward in the struggle plan--which we upheld during the great presidential and parliamentary election battles profoundly influenced and are still influencing the development of the situation. As I noted in a L'HUMANITE editorial between the two rounds of the presidential election, we contributed to rallying "a great force which is not only defined by the number of people who now form part of it but also by the clear-sightedness, determination and capacity for action which it represents."

II--Reasons for Our Party's Results

Obviously, we must carry out a detailed analysis of our party's results on the basis of these general remarks on the significance of these two elections. It must be admitted that we have just suffered a serious setback. We must therefore try to understand the reasons for it, pinpoint its causes and draw from this analysis all the necessary conclusions for pursuing our action.

This means that we must not examine this question in a superficial way. Furthermore, we do not intend to resign ourselves to the present situation, merely seeking to limit its harmful effects. Quite the reverse. We intend to answer the fundamental problems posed by the party's development and the acquisition of its rightful place in national life. We resolutely look to an increase in influence and to progress for our party.

Date of the Next Congress

Our rules state that the congress, the party's highest body, is convened by the Central Committee every 3 years. Our last congress was held in 1979. Therefore, in the normal course of events, we should hold our next congress in 1982. The congress and the preparations for it provide the opportunity for an overall examination of the party's policy and activity.

The Politburo proposes that the date of the next congress be fixed now for the end of January or the beginning of February 1982 and preparations be started in October on the basis of a document which will be drafted and adopted by the Central Committee after the vacation period. This will create the right conditions for a serious, broad and detailed debate in the whole party.

The vacation period which starts tomorrow and the immediate tasks which stem from the new situation justify the date which we are proposing for the start of congress preparations. But, without waiting until then, it is necessary to take this opportunity to put forward a few essential aspects of the analysis of our result.

Existence of the "Presidential Factor"

The first aspect to be stressed is undoubtedly the one which all the commentators refer to as "the presidential factor." During the Central Committee session which we held 28 April, we recalled what we had said from the start of the campaign, namely, that the presidential election was far and away the most difficult election battle for our party.

Indeed, the institutional mechanism and the very nature of the presidential election lead to a bipolarization of political life, in other words, to the marginalization of all the political forces which do not seem to be in the best position to feature in the second round of that election. As I recalled, the political conditions in which the campaign took place accentuated the negative characteristics of this election for our Communist Party by reducing the election to a duel between the outgoing president and the PS candidate who, having led the left in elections in previous years, seemed the only candidate likely to defeat the right. It was in those circumstances that Communist voters voted for Francois Mitterrand in the first round.

This "logic of the institutions" was continued and extended during the parliamentary elections which took place in the wake of the presidential election and in the framework of the new balance of forces which it created. It had the effect of polarizing the voters' choice around the "president's party." The institutional pre-eminence conferred on the president, the need to give him a majority in keeping with his political options therefore favored the "useful vote" which in the vast majority of cases worked in the PS candidates' favor. As I stressed a short time ago, this explains why those of our candidates who had the strongest electoral positions gained ground compared with 1978 while, at the same time, some Communist voters voted for the Socialist candidates in the first round when they seemed to be in the best position to confirm the right's defeat.

It should be noted that the influence of the "presidential factor" which we are now observing is not a new thing. It has "operated" twice in the history of the Fifth Republic.

This was particularly the case in November 1962, during the parliamentary elections which followed General de Gaulle's decision to dissolve the National Assembly. Those elections took place immediately after the referendum-plebiscite with which, in the political conditions which existed at the time, De Gaulle intended to strengthen his personal power precisely by organizing the election of the president by universal suffrage. Those parliamentary elections then produced the regrouping of rightwing votes for the Union for the New Republic and the strengthening of the Gaullist party.

That was also the case in the parliamentary elections which followed the assembly's dissolution in 1968. Those elections, held immediately after the big confrontation of May and June, were characterized by the president's personal involvement. They gave the Union of Democrats for the Republic, his party, an absolute majority in the National Assembly with 293 deputies out of a total of 487 seats.

As soon as De Gaulle made his decision in 1962 to revise the Fifth Republic's Constitution to enable the president to be elected by universal suffrage, we demonstrated how dangerous this plan was for democracy in that it tended to personalize and centralize power.

But there can be no doubt that we underestimated the actual effect of this system on political behavior and the struggle to reveal its harmful aspects. We will therefore have to return to this to make a more detailed analysis.

Party's Attitude in Face of "Presidential Factor"

Of course, by mentioning the "presidential factor" and the specific role of the Fifth Republic institutions, we are not losing sight of the double question which we must answer, namely, why did a section of our voters not resist the attraction of the PS? Furthermore, on a broader level, why isn't our party in the best position to lead the struggle for change?

To answer these questions we must not only go back to 1977-81 but to the whole period through which we have lived since the 1960's--a period characterized by the struggle to defeat the right's power in the framework of the Fifth Republic.

During the first presidential election by universal suffrage in 1968, our party already noticed the considerable difficulty a party like ours has in presenting its candidate in an election which poses the question of power at the highest level by the election of one man. Hence, the decision not to put forward a candidate and to seek a single left-wing candidate. Our party was particularly motivated to follow that course since at that time it was already involved in the battle to rally the leftwing parties behind the joint program. We thought that that was the only way likely to create the right conditions for an alternative to the government in office.

Therefore, we decided in 1965 to support the candidacy of Francois Mitterrand who was not a member of either the PCF or the PS.

The presentation of Jacques Duclos' candidacy in the 1969 presidential election did not invalidate that opinion. Quite the reverse. Indeed, at that time, our party stepped up its efforts to achieve agreement on a single leftwing candidate. The PS, which at that time refused to discuss the drafting of a joint program, chose its own candidate without any consultation with our party. Faced with the fait accompli of a Socialist candidacy seen as reflecting the leftwing forces' division, the party appointed its own candidate who fought the campaign on behalf of the union of workers' and democratic forces.

It is interesting to examine how the "presidential factor" worked in that election. The two candidates who emerged in the best position for the second round were Pompidou and Poher--two rightwing candidates. Obviously, neither could therefore win over our voters who were, in a way, "preserved" from the consequences of this institutional logic. But that logic worked for all the other groups of voters. That explains why Jacques Duclos was then able to maintain the party's normal electoral influence while the PS was crushed and fell to 5 percent.

In 1974, in the new conditions opened up by the signing of the joint program with the PS, our party reverted to supporting a joint candidacy--that of Francois Mitterrand who had become PS first secretary.

What lessons should be learned from our attitude throughout this period in the face of the presidential election question?

Our party undoubtedly gauged the harmful nature of the Fifth Republic's antidemocratic institutions, of the system of electing the president by universal suffrage and of the excessive extension of his powers. But we must now admit that instead of facing these considerable difficulties by putting forward a candidate in the first round each time, it thought it could overcome the obstacle by working in favor of a single leftwing candidate. As we can now see, there is no doubt that this attitude did not enable us to counter the doubt cast on our party's credibility in this battle for the presidential election, which has become essential. It has even helped to spread among our voters the idea of the "useful vote" for a non-Communist leftwing candidate.

This systematic quest for a single leftwing candidacy in various presidential elections went hand in hand, moreover, with the strategy of union around a joint government program with an advanced content. Indeed, until 1972 this option was regarded as a means of hastening the signing of the joint program and after 1972 as the natural consequence of the existence of such a program.

As things turned out, the conclusion we must draw from that period is clear: the course we adopted meant that we ourselves backed the idea that the party as such should fade into the background so that change could take place in France.

Form of Union With Major Defects

We had already perceived that essential lesson at the time of our 23d congress, when we learned from the "experience of the joint program."

Thus, we showed that the joint program nurtured illusions about the PS by allowing people to believe that the PS had changed entirely, to the extent of annulling the difference between our two parties.

In parallel, by putting forward throughout that period the idea of the need for a joint program for the leftwing parties to obtain change, we ourselves contributed to the situation where the people who desire change attach far greater importance to the actual existence of the joint program, which was achieved as a summit agreement, rather than to the content of the program and the specific changes for which it provided. Thus, the illusion became established that the growing approval of the joint program amounted to approval of the profound anticapitalist reforms it incorporated. Life has shown that this was not so.

In these conditions, it was natural for the current in favor of changes, accentuated by the existence of the joint program, to move chiefly toward the PS. I quote the 23d congress: "Some of the French men and women who found themselves drawn toward change by virtue of the attraction exerted by the union around the joint program, while continuing to have reservations about the reforms included in the program, turned toward the PS with the idea that this party could bring them change, but limited change."

Thus, these illusions favored--I quote again--the "PS, which--as subsequent events confirmed--only formed an alliance with us with the aim of strengthening itself at our expense," so as to gain power in a dominant position.

We did not underestimate the dangers which lay in that strategy of union around a joint program. We perceived them, in particular, at the Central Committee meeting in June 1972 at the time the program was signed. But contrary to what we then thought, it was not possible to face up to them because these defects were inherent in the form of the union we conceived.

I will say firmly: In the form of the union, for there was never any question--despite the tendentious fashion in which some people represent our attitude--of renouncing the Union of the Left in order to combat the right, assure victory and march forward. I will come back to that.

Our Goals in 1977-1978

This is the background against which the events of 1977-1978 took place.

What was the problem facing us at that time? I will recall it briefly. The joint program was concluded in 1972 for 5 years, the length of a parliament. So before the March 1978 elections, it was a question of taking account of the changes which had taken place while preserving intact the program's general orientation so as to retain its effectiveness and its transforming content. It was a question of "updating" it, as we said.

That is what we tried to do, with our partners. I believe we did it in a spirit of frankness, without "shying away" from any particular provision. We wanted to succeed. There was only one thing which we decided to stick to: We wanted to preserve the gain which the 1972 agreement constituted and maintain the advanced content of the contract we had signed, which included a statement of the profound reforms which we were convinced were necessary for change.

Since the PS kept its distance on these provisions--which we regarded as essential--to the extent of provoking a break, we turned to the country to open a political debate. In doing this, we maintained to the end, to the very last day, our goal of reaching a good compromise, a good agreement which would permit a joint victory over the right in the parliamentary elections.

As I recalled at the Central Committee meeting which followed those elections, in April 1978: "During the campaign, we had only two concerns, which were closely connected: On the one hand, to update the 5-year-old joint program without extravagance or maximalism--that is, to modify those aspects which had become outdated while scrupulously respecting the fundamental orientation and provisions; on the one hand, to make the March 1978 elections the elections of leftwing victory and democratic change."

Should We Have Yielded?

Should we have acted differently at that time? Should we have yielded and submitted ourselves to the PS' will?

The 23d congress has already given a negative answer to that question.

Here I would merely like to recall that the party's electoral downturn began well before what was called in 1977-78 the "polemics" within the left. If the 1968 parliamentary elections are discounted, for reasons which everyone will acknowledge, then what transpires is that during this period the party went successively from 22.4 percent of votes cast in 1967 to 21.3 percent in 1973, then, after successive setbacks at the time of the parliamentary by-elections in 1974 and 1976, to 20.6 percent in 1978. This movement was therefore based on more deep-seated factors.

All the same, this setback, which the PS claimed to seek, was not on the scale which that party required. The difficulties which emerged in 1977 arose from that--from the PS desire to obtain a weakening of our party in that situation and a much more favorable correlation of forces, either by persuading us to capitulate or by abandoning the joint program and causing a rupture.

That was the basic strategy which the PS defined at the time of its Nantes congress in May 1977. Thus, Jean-Pierre Chevenement clearly explained some time later--and I quote --that "in relations with the PCF the Nantes line means rejecting all compromise on power."

So you can see that capitulation on our part would have meant deliberately abandoning the joint program of the agreement concluded in 1972. Not only is there no evidence that such a choice would have made it possible to avoid the 1978 defeat of the left, but there are good reasons for thinking that it would not have put us in a better situation than we are in today. Except that, in that instance, we would have subscribed --before even fighting--to positions which we do not hold and some of which--I am thinking in particular of the referendum on the strike force--have since been abandoned by the PS itself.

"Ideological War"

Having said that, it is true that we did not succeed. Neither in 1978 nor since then have we been able to make ourselves understood by millions of people whom everything should persuade to approve and support us. Why not? It seems to us that first it is necessary to take the measure of the stake in the battle we have been waging all these years. It is necessary to assess the level of the change we wished to see and to assess what that means in a country like ours. Clearly, in these conditions, the bourgeoisie and all the forces at its disposal have unleashed against us what we rightly described at the 23d congress as a real "ideological war."

Systematically, methodically, all that we have said and done has been either firmly ignored or caricatured and outrageously distorted in such a way that it means the opposite of what we really wanted, which has never changed--to create the conditions for change.

All the methods of mass manipulation have been used to give us the image of a totalitarian communist party, dogmatic, secretarian, divisive, aggressive, violent, domineering--in brief--for I have certainly omitted some elements--to lead gradually to the concept, as Reagan recently put it, of communism as an "aberration," as an "abnormal way of life for a human being."

Thus for months, even years, a large section of public opinion has received its information about us through the filter of this predetermined model.

This constant ideological bombardment, this distortion of all our stances, and even, at times--let us state it clearly--in view of that climate, some of our stances themselves therefore promoted the worst interpretations of our real intentions, our true aims. I am thinking particularly of the struggle we had to wage over the question of union, for instance, regarding the problem of standing down in elections. I also am thinking of some of our stances concerning international events, such as events in Afghanistan.

Afghanistan and the Meeting with the CPSU

In this connection, I will recall that, at the time of the Politburo meeting of 4 January 1980, we determined our position on that problem, taking into account, on the one hand, the peoples' rights to control their own destinies without outside interference, and on the other, every country's right to conclude treaties and if necessary to call for help from an allied country. We adopted our stance on the basis of these principles --naturally without claiming to pass judgment on the details of the events.

I also will recall that it so happens that the time when we were confronted with this problem virtually coincided with the highest level meeting we have had with the CPSU, from 8 through 10 January 1980. The result of that meeting, which was made possible after long discussions between our two parties, was eminently positive. For the first time in the history of the international communist movement, the CPSU signed a communique unambiguously acknowledging the existence of differences with another communist party. These talks and the resulting text made it possible to develop relations between our two parties on a new, unprecedented basis.

With hindsight it is easier to see how far the proximity of the Afghanistan events and the holding of that meeting made it possible simultaneously to manipulate our stance on Afghanistan and to represent our meeting with the CPSU as symptomatic of a complete realignment of our party in line with Soviet positions, which is exactly the opposite of the meaning of the joint communique.

Problems Resulting From the Exacerbation of the Crisis

In addition, we were forced to fight in the very difficult conditions of a deteriorating crisis, which has serious consequences in all spheres of life, particularly the life of its first victims--the most underprivileged working people, the unemployed, young people. This overall deterioration, which--as we have often stressed--is not only economic and social but also ideological and moral, raises numerous, crucial problems and we continue to regard it as our responsibility to propose solutions to these problems, not to look the other way.

On this battlefield, we have come up against real campaigns of hatred, lies and slander, which have profited by the support of the combined forces of the mass media. For instance, regarding that was called the "Vitry affair," we were victims of provocation, pure and simple, and then of a distortion of the facts aimed at reversing the blame.

We are not saying that all the initiatives taken--whether in the light of the problems raised by the formation of real poverty ghettos for immigrant families or in the light of the increase in drug trafficking and use--were faultless. But events as they happened cannot really be understood without taking account of the urgency of the problems now facing certain communities and of the feeling on the part of our elected representatives that it is impossible to let the situation deteriorate without doing as much as possible to oppose this. Perhaps that led people unintentionally to attempt to resolve people's problems in their stead and without their participation.

Finally, we must admit that in our legitimate concern to take better care of the needs of the most underprivileged working men and women, including small and medium businesses, we have not succeeded in confronting, at the same time, the problems of all categories of working people in all their diversity.

Naturally, we are not calling into question--even by implication--the efforts we have made toward those who are least well provided for and most exploited and with respect to all enterprises. Recent investigations by Secours Catholique and CREDOC [Centre de Recherche de Documentation sur la Consummation] which L'HUMANITE has reported during the last few days remind us, on the contrary, of the scale of what must be called poverty in our country. This effort must be continued and, wherever possible, extended. But we must undoubtedly ask ourselves whether the justified emphasis we have placed on providing a better response to the needs of those categories may not sometimes have been interpreted as exclusivity and lack of interest regarding others.

Fundamental Problem

Having said that to explain the situation we are in today, we cannot confine ourselves to factors which certainly played a part but which are nevertheless partial and limited in nature. We must go deeper.

The real problem is the one which exists between the high level of the solutions which must necessarily be implemented to lead the country out of the crisis and the real level of the goals around which it is possible to muster an extensive following in current political conditions.

We failed to make ourselves understood by millions of working people, millions of victims of the crisis, because they were prepared to subscribe to a political change which they think will bring them what they want to improve their lot, although the question of the means of effecting this improvement has not been made clear. This is a gulf, a contradiction which raises a fundamental question: that of the way in which it may be possible to really advance toward the implementation of the transforming goals which amount to necessities if we are to emerge from the crisis; that of the political alternatives which we must be able to offer and to promote by assembling extensive forces around it.

Party's Earlier Answers

True, this is not the first time our party has faced this question and it has endeavoured to answer it at different times in its history. It did so in 1934-36 as the initiator and the firmest supporter of the Popular Front. Naturally, at that time, the aim was to hinder fascism and to allow certain claims to be satisfied. The question of the transformation of society was not directly on the agenda. Nonetheless, one can perceive, from that time on, the first attempts to draw from current experience more general thoughts regarding the progress of socialism in a country like France. Thus, the concept of democracy as "continuous creation" was put forward back in 1936 by Vaillant-Couturier. And Maurice Thorez stressed that socialism in France "will take account of our country's particular national features in all spheres: economic, social, cultural; it will take account--it must take account--of the elements which are characteristic of our French people."

The quest for an answer to this same question can be seen, after the war, as the central feature of the TIMES interview with Maurice Thorez in 1946. This dealt for the first time in public with the problem of the "march toward socialism" in France, a march which will "necessarily" use "different paths from that followed by Russian communists": "The French people will find their own way toward more democracy, progress and social justice."

The cold war period, which began in 1947, interrupted this thought process or at least prevented concrete new developments. But a few years later reality brought this essential problem back to the agenda in the theoretical and political debate.

This was the case with the holding of the 20th CPSU congress in 1956, which, at the same time as condemning the Stalin cult, revived the question of the diversity of national routes to socialism.

In our country itself, after the new power arrived in 1958, the popular movement resumed its forward march from the early 1960's. The question of a way out, a political alternative to rightwing power, was thus raised in a concrete fashion. The more so--this has become clearer today--since from 1962 onward the very machinery of the presidential election by universal suffrage, of which I spoke earlier, made it still more imperative for a party like ours to have a plan of that kind if it wished to keep its place in national life.

A new attempt to find an answer to this fundamental problem was made in 1964 by Waldeck Rochet at the 17th congress and above all by the Champigny manifesto, which was adopted after the events of 1968. This same desire was at the basis of the progress of the book "The Democratic Challenge," published in 1973. But it was in 1976 that the 22d congress really began to define in global terms the prospects for socialism in the French style and for a path toward socialism suited to our country: the democratic path. The 22d congress--deepened and enriched by the work of the 23d--can legitimately be described as historic for the PCF.

Considerable Lag Beginning in 1956

It can be seen that, during the whole period which separates the 20th CPSU congress in 1956 from our party's 22d congress in 1976, our party found itself confronted by an increasingly imperative necessity to find new answers to the new problems which were gradually posed. In these 20 years, the world changed a lot. France first of all, saw changes take place in its economic reality, sociological composition, political and ideological traditions, behavior and manners, institutions themselves--I mentioned this just now.

And something else which also changed gradually was the situation and the reality in the socialist countries. Countries whose progress provoked the revelation of new problems in all spheres of social life which call at the same time for adapted and innovative solutions and a critical reflection on the past which the work of the 20th CPSU congress had initiated.

When we examine this entire period, we admit that we responded to all these problems with considerable lag. We made this observation at the 23d congress. I recall that we stressed the reality of this "lag of 1956" by pointing out that--I quote--"our party did not draw as from that time all the necessary lessons from the 20th CPSU congress. Admittedly, it was a question of events which happened in the Soviet Union under Stalin and lessons which stemmed from knowing about them. But some comrades quite justly pointed out regarding this period that it was a question above all perhaps of reflection on original ways adapted to our conditions by which the French people can head toward socialism. In connection with this question, another problem also posed was that of the nature and forms of relations of solidarity between communist parties after the dissolution of the Cominterm."

In fact, during all those years, whereas the situation required our party to be the bearer of a strategy of union and change adapted to the specific conditions of our time and our country, for it to be capable of defining and proposing political objective around which the forces for change might gather in their social, political and ideological diversity, the party continued to provide old answers which were no longer adapted to the needs of the struggle.

Strategy of the 22d and 23d Congresses Is Indeed the Right One

Everyone will understand that the only definite result of this analysis which we are making today is to underline with more force the importance and validity of the work of our last two congresses.

What we proposed in defining a socialism which is democratic, self-managing and corresponding to the facts of our epoch and the traditions, tastes and aspirations of our people, does not stem in fact from an arbitrary choice. It is a modern and realistic response to the serious problems besetting the country. It is the way out--the only positive and lasting way out--of the crisis of our society.

I insisted on this at the meeting of our Central Committee held in September 1978: "In choosing our strategy, we have not been content to merely 'take account' of national realities: We have not 'adapted' a ready-made model--socialism--to the conditions peculiar to France. It is from nonpresuppositional analysis of these conditions that we derive the certainty that we must change the social structure. It is the specific and particular problems posed by the development of the crisis in France, which urge a profound social transformation as a specific and particular response; a series of democratic changes building a socialist society."

As for the path to travel to reach this new society, it is in the image of this choice of society: Democratic. This path is the path of struggle--social and election struggles to obtain increasingly advanced democratic victories, to win new positions and new gains so as to gradually modify the correlation of social and political forces.

Path of Union

This process can only develop with the broadest possible rallying at every stage of the transforming struggle. That is why the democratic path that we propose is at the same time indissociably the path of union, union of all popular forces, union of the left, the path--in the words of Waldeck Rochet, which we took up at the 23d congress--of a "majority movement of the laboring nation."

We categorically reject the interpretation that the work of our last congress led to a final abandonment of union. Exactly the opposite is true. It was precisely to overcome the difficulties into which union had fallen, to allow it to set off again on a good basis and to last that our congress applied itself to drawing all possible lessons from experience and to defining a new concept of union.

How is it new? First of all, because this union is union at the grassroots level, in struggle, in all fields, a solid union because it is built between all interested parties around aims which they set themselves. And it is on this union that union between political groupings can be based, around agreements "which favor and do not check union, which correspond to and do not anticipate the real movement."

We are convinced that it is this new concept of union which will allow us to take it as far as possible, as far as the new society which we desire. We have often said: We are supporters of building socialism in France within political pluralism and in cooperation between parties.

This path is at the same time the path of independent activity by the revolutionary party, the path of strengthening the PCF's support, organization and the capacity for initiative.

Advancing in the Direction Set by the 22d and 23d Congresses

Indeed, far from detracting from its value, the analysis that we can make of the present situation leads the Politburo to say that this strategy of our 22d and 23d congresses is indeed the right one, the one best adapted to needs. In particular, it is only this concept of the march toward socialism as a process of democratic advances where each new position constitutes a prop for continuing further. It is only this concept which can permit us to resolve the problem posed by the existence of this gap between the objective requirements of the transformation of society and the political consciousness of the popular forces, such as it is--all the while bearing in mind the essential teaching of the 23d congress that "there is a series of difficulties, obstacles and contradictions which we cannot resolve by the mere struggle of ideas. In this sphere, as in all others, only practice and experience can change consciousness."

Let us go further. Since the holding of our congresses, circumstances have not allowed us, insofar as we have had to act under pressure of interlocking events, to develop this line in all its magnitude. It is now a question of doing this, of proceeding toward the necessary enrichments, to the definition of all the orientations in work which that presupposes, and of marching resolutely ahead.

III--Directions for Our Reflection and Action

This question will of course be at the center of the preparation and work of our congress. So I will limit myself to listing here some of the directions in which it is appropriate, in our opinion, to deepen our reflection and to develop and improve our activity, integrating in it all the characteristics of the new situation, the opportunities it gives us and the responsibilities it implies.

Elucidating Our Long Term View of Democratic Socialism

The first of these directions for our work is to enrich and to make more tangible the long term prospects for the democratic socialism we propose for our country.

At our 22d and then at the 23d congresses, we said with the greatest clarity that socialism in France would be "French style" or not at all. The new situation in which we find ourselves can only increase what is at stake in the debate we must hold on this question and also the interest which it arouses among manual workers and intellectuals.

We must make it clearer that socialism for us is not, as I have just recalled, a stereotype, a sort of predetermined "off-the-shelf" model reproducing--maybe touched up in places--what is happening elsewhere. Advancing toward socialism and building it, from our viewpoint, means providing new answers adapted to the problems which face our country. It means lifting the obstacles which today obstruct the development of French society and the development of the potential in which it is rich. It means finding a national solution for the crisis into which capitalism has plunged it. It means satisfying our people's legitimate aspirations for justice and social progress. It means giving the working class, and with it the manual workers and intellectuals in general, the place due them in running affairs at all levels. It means creating conditions for the blossoming of every personality, developing new human relationships in all spheres, creating new solidarities while ensuring free determination for everyone. In short, it is a question of giving our concept of socialism its complete social, human and moral dimension.

In general, and even beyond this debate on socialism, we must devote ourselves--without any narrowness and without wishing to give the impression that we have settled everything once and for all--to finding and making known in all spheres the progressive and revolutionary answers to the multiple problems confronting men and women today and to elucidating the choices to be made in the face of the profound changes which mark our epoch.

Our reflection has made much progress on numerous important questions connected with the social movement, for example, self-management, new growth, the new world order and the relationship between the evolution of science and social progress. And these are naturally only a few examples. This must be translated into a more imposing presence and more active participation by the party and also individually by communists in the great debates which mark our epoch. We must devote ourselves to making our distinctive contribution better known.

For Better Concrete Expression of Our Strategy of "Gradual" Advance

At the same time we believe we must better assimilate in all its implications and put over in a concrete manner our strategy of "gradual" advance, of increasingly progressive democratic victories. This is the second big question which must hold our attention.

Our 23d congress indicated and underlined the decisive importance of this. The resolution which we adopted at that time noted: "In France today democratic progress can only result from setbacks imposed on capital, which become the prop from which new setbacks are inflicted. Each right, each freedom, each democratic advantage which is gained, preserved and developed is one privilege less, one arm less for the bourgeoisie, and one extra position, one extra lever for the workers."

It must be noted that because of the conditions of the political battle, but also because of insufficient assimilation by the party of this strategy of democratic advance, we have not progressed on this path as much as would have been desirable. We must be all the more attentive to showing that this orientation remains entirely valid and that the situation created by the defeat of the right opens up new opportunities to obtain positive results. We believe that we must use these opportunities without reticence and in a responsible manner.

The workers must of course guard against the idea that things can be arranged from above and without them. This would certainly result in serious disillusion. It is in fact perfectly obvious that the right and the employers still have major forces and are determined to use them against change.

Participation and active and conscious intervention by the workers is therefore indispensable for achieving their demands, preserving the results obtained and ensuring the democratic progress of society as a whole.

Giving a New Boost to Communists' Mass Activity

This leads me quite naturally to a third question: Concretely applying our strategy and making it grow in life means giving a new boost to communists' mass activity. From this viewpoint, and while continuing to devote the necessary attention to the party's own activity, we must assess the importance of the trade unions, of the organizations, and of the associative life which makes up, according to our congress resolution, "one of the essential means for the autonomous intervention of millions of people in the most diverse concerns." As far as trade union organizations are concerned, the document which we elaborated on this subject still holds good. There are also tenants, parents and consumers organizations, family, social, women's cultural, sporting and youth associations and movements which contribute to the expression of popular demands and to the action to make them succeed. Communists must be more in evidence and more active in these organizations and assume the mandates and responsibilities which are entrusted to them.

More generally, we must develop a vast mass activity on the basis of a clearly asserted will to act with all those who want to in the broadest possible union to respond to the needs which exist or emerge in all spheres. Less than ever can we be satisfied with actions which are undertaken but not brought to fruition and which risk seeming merely like activism or sterile agitation. We must be present with everyone in enterprises and residential areas and districts; wherever there are problems, ponder possible solutions with them, initiate action, if necessary, in agreement with them on the aims and forms which it is necessary to give it and devote attention to creating the best possible correlation of forces.

From this viewpoint, our participation in the new majority, both presidential and parliamentary, and our presence in the government may lead us to be with people with whom we have had no experience of acting higherto. We must not be afraid of doing this, since the aims are clear and in conformity with the needs of the interested parties. In short, we must not disregard anything which may allow us to obtain positive results. At the same time we rate these results highly, we must also throw light on the difficulties and obstacles encountered, and, in line with experience, promote awareness of the need for more profound transformations to extricate the country in a lasting manner from the crisis and make it embark on the path of renewal.

Taking Responsibility for Everyone's Interests

Developing our mass activity also implies--this is the fourth question we wish to examine--that we soundly take responsibility for the aspirations and interests of all elements of the working class, from the most exploited strata to the technicians, and of all categories of manual workers and intellectuals.

Of course, it is not a question of relaxing our priority efforts in favor of the working class. This is in effect decisive, both because of its place in the country's life and because, from an economic, political and social viewpoint, satisfying its demands is a necessary condition for change.

But it is a question, while maintaining and developing these priority efforts, particularly in enterprises, of getting better acquainted with and taking better account of the diversity of categories of working men and women who make up this class, the diversity of situations. And it is also a question--I have noticed that this was without doubt one of the difficulties that we met--of preventing this priority from becoming translated into exclusive action. It is a question of developing permanent activity in favor of the other social categories which make up the vital forces of our people, and of meeting their interests and their legitimate demands, while making them take account for themselves and for the general interest, of the need to recognize the place of the working class in national life and in responsibilities.

At our last Central Committee meeting, we also emphasized, in conjunction with the lessons which can be drawn from the last elections, the importance of developing our work in favor of women, who are taking their place in greater numbers than previously in the action for change. And also in favor of young people, who, as everything proves, can participate by our sides in great numbers in the battles to come. Finally, we must continue to improve our activity among the various categories of intellectuals.

This concern to improve our activity and to meet popular aspirations better must lead us to deepen our knowledge of the reality of French society, a reality which we know has undergone profound changes. We already felt this need at our 23d congress and we decided at that time to undertake a study of this. We must ensure that this study is completed.

Strengthening the Communist Party

Of course, action among the broadest masses, carried out in depth and with continuity and requisite precision, presupposes in order to be successful a continuation of the efforts which we have begun to strengthen the party and to improve its democratic life.

In talking of strengthening the party, I have in mind strengthening it numerically, we must and can perceptibly increase our membership in the coming period, making a particular effort for this in the direction of large, medium and small enterprises and working class residential areas.

Strengthening the party also means rapidly integrating new members. Be must be especially attentive, as we have recently gained tens of thousands of members, to take the time, even in view of the acuteness of the political battle, to give all these new members a proper welcome. In particular, we must ensure that intensive educational work is carried out and, of course, reflect on the content of this work in line with the new situation and the tasks arising from it.

Strengthening the party also means strengthening and improving its activity, its ability, and its speed of intervention. The present phase of the battle, and the tasks whose importance I have just underlined, show that it is a question which demands our full attention. In this situation, many responsibilities become incumbent on our primary organizations, cells and sections. Less than ever is it possible to wait passively for directives "from above" and then apply them mechanically; it is a question of meeting every situation with a spirit of initiative, with imagination, boldness and responsibility.

Improving the Democratic Life of the Party

This necessary development and this improvement of our activity are closely linked with the need to improve the party's democratic life.

This is and must be a constant concern for us. In this sphere, too, it is important not to lag behind life. In view of the changing conditions of the political battle and of our own strategy of democratic advance, at our 23d congress we approved a certain number of changes to our statutes. We have tried our utmost ever since to implement them. Primarily, we have convened the national council on several occasions. One of these meetings, dealing with our activity among intellectuals, was preceeded by a platform for discussion in our press.

We must continue along this path. This must be the business of our leadership at all levels, from the Central Committee to the cell. At all levels, each of our leaders must consider how best to translate this effort in the life of our organizations.

This need for democracy will of course be seen in the debate which is going to begin within our party. We have already said so; we intend this debate to be conducted seriously, in a comprehensive and profound manner. We will monitor this with great care.

Debate for the Next Congress

This means at the same time that we intend to reject all intervention and all external pressure from any source, including pressure relying on the use of methods totally opposed to the democratic rules of our party as the communists wanted them in adopting our latest statutes. Since it is legitimate for our next congress to arouse interest beyond our ranks, everyone must also understand that the communists must have the opportunity to discuss their party's past and future policy freely, democratically and without any constraint imposed from outside.

As a party of struggle, a revolutionary party proposoing a global and coherent plan for society, and clearly indicating the path by which to attain this, we must also assert in the field our image as a party of government; in the communes, the cities, the departments--wherever we have responsibilities, and wherever there are problems. We must listen, propose, act, unite and--I have already stressed this--we must obtain concrete and immediate results. We must prove ourselves the best in responding to the expectations of workers and young people, the best in removing obstacles and promoting change.

At the same time, we must attach increased importance to the struggle of ideas. I dwelt on this point just now. Of course, this must be accompanied by an effort to expand the circulation of our press--L'HUMANITE, L'HUMANITE DIMANCHE and REVOLUTION.

Indeed, those who predict our decline, our marginalization, will once more be disappointed. We will ensure that they are. Our party is neither an "auxiliary force" nor a "busybody" but a force which counts and which will count. The 700,000 communists that we constitute will work all the time to improve the great mass revolutionary party; the party of struggle and determined, efficient, open, realistic and responsible government; the great force for social and national renewal which the workers and the country need to make change successful.

IV--Our Immediate Tasks

The policy of our 23d congress naturally serves as the main source for the action we are carrying out.

It is on this basis that we have acted, especially since the 10 May success of the left-wing forces. It is on this basis that we must continue to act. Our aim is to contribute, to the full extent of our capabilities, to meeting the country's expectations in a positive manner and to seeing progress made in all spheres on the path of increasingly advanced democratic changes.

For this purpose, being clearly part of the majority, we are applying ourselves to developing our own appropriate action and to expressing our specific qualities, rejecting both extravagance and capitulation. We have already said we intend to respect universal suffrage. That does not of course mean that we abandon our own ideas and proposals for the future. But we apply our own approach which takes into account respect for universal suffrage to define the tempo of the advance toward change which the country needs. It is within the framework of this approach that we propose to work on the implementation of the policy chosen by the country.

Five Directions for Action

In this spirit, we believe that we must try especially, both in respect to the overall work of the party in enterprises and at local level, and in respect to the work of our deputies, to act in five directions:

--The progressive solution of social problems of all kinds which face workers and their families, with the necessary priority given to the problem of employment;

--The defense of the national economic, technical, scientific and cultural potential and the revival of its activity;

--The guaranteeing and extension of the democratic rights and freedoms of workers and citizens so they can better participate in choices and decisions in the different spheres of social life;

--The democratization of the state, institutions, and political life, and the decentralization of authority, including the introduction of proportional representation in all elections, the creation of real regional power with an assembly elected by direct universal suffrage, and the extension of the authority and resources of communes and departments;

--Action for disarmament and peace.

These will be the main guidelines of our intervention and our proposals, particularly when parliament reassembles at the beginning of July.

Communist Ministers; A Turning Point in French Political Life

Before concluding, I would naturally like to dwell briefly on the major factor in national life at present; the inclusion of four Communist ministers in the French Government. Although for 34 years we have been denied any participation in running the country's affairs, as from yesterday our comrades Charles Fiterman, Anicet le Pors, Jack Ralite and Marcel Rigout are members of the Council of Ministers and exercise high responsibilities there. It is an important turning point in French political life. We stressed at our 23d congress how much it was in the interest of the popular forces for "Communist ministers to assume their full part in managing the affairs of France as soon as possible." It has happened, and all communists are very pleased.

Participation by Communists in the government--as we see nowadays around us--meets the profound wish of millions of French men and women who, having long felt remote from the decisions taken by the government of their own country, at last legitimately feel themselves represented at the forefront of the state and feel they at last have their place.

All these people see the presence of Communist ministers as an additional asset for implementing the changes they anticipate. They are right. And we are going to do everything within our power to satisfy their hopes.

Naturally, we appreciate the difficulties of such an undertaking--particularly in view of the election results which our party has just recorded. But this necessary clear-sightedness does not affect in the least our determination to contribute fully to successful change.

We will do this in the government. Our comrades, as we have agreed in the accord concluded with the PS, are going to work "in the government in impeccable solidarity" to implement the changes desired by the country.

And we will do this outside the government, in the National Assembly within the framework of the new majority, and throughout the country, in enterprises and at local levels--with the revolutionary party that we are playing its original, independent and irreplaceable role.

The French people will be able to guage the seriousness, the competence and the loyalty of the Communists--both in the government and in the country itself. They will thus verify from their own experience that the Communists, contrary to the caricature that has so long been made of them, deserve their confidence.

Everyone will understand the scope of the work of our Central Committee session. The in-depth study and discussion of it, which will be started without delay by meetings of cells and section and federal committees, are essential for the reflection and action of all Communists, to understand the reasons for the setback we recorded and to initiate successfully a new stage in our struggle for democracy and socialism.

PREMIER SPADOLINI OUTLINES GOVERNMENT POLICY

AU071615 Rome ANSA in English 1550 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 7 Jul (ANSA)--Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini kicked off the parliamentary confidence debate in the Senate this morning saying his new government is based "on an emergency platform commeasurable with the gravity of the moral, economic and social crisis shaking the nation."

The five-party coalition is a partnership of Spadolini'a small Republican Party (PRI), with the Christian Democrats (DC), the Socialist (PSI), the Social Democrats (PSDI) and the right-of-center Liberals (PLI). The premier said that the new government's platform will be a limtus test of the willingness of parties destined to remain on the opposition, such as the Communists, to take part in an open and constructive confrontation.

Spadolini summed up the key points of the platform as four emergency situations: the moral emergency, the economic emergency, the civic emergency and the tensions surrounding Italy's international positions. The government leader dwelled on the wave of revelations on the Propaganda 2 Masonic Lodge, with its many occult ramifications in the highest levels of Italian public life and the need for moralization in this sector.

With respect to terrorists, the premier referred to yesterday's murder of Montedison official Giuseppe Taliercio by the Red Brigades, and listed the measures the government intends to take to combat the resurgent terrorist wave.

In connection with the civic emergency, Spadolini assured that the government intends to overcome the shortcomings of the nation's judicical organization and improve the effectiveness of its security forces. The government's response to terrorism, both of domestic origin and foreign-rooted will be "resolute and inflexible."

In other points, the premier said that the government will dedicate constant attention to "relations between the state and Catholic Church and other religions." Spadolini reiterated that his government will attribute primary importance to relations with Parliament, and urged unity within government ranks, saying that it will be his duty "to avoid dispersion in government action, or worse, contrasts among ministers which would have no constitutional legitimacy."

Spadolini then went on to foreign policy and said his government intends to strenghten ties between Italy and other Western democracies. "The Atlantic alliance and the European Economic Community," he added, "must remain cornerstones of Italy's foreign policy in years of strong tensions. The European Community's prospects for development will be broader if temptations within the Community to create a directory are avoided," the premier observed.

He firmly rejected the idea of a European "party" juxtaposed to an American "party" in a stage of international relations, and with the waning of detente, that requires a strong Euro-American partnership. "This partnership, in turn, requires a desire for loyal cooperation on both sides in order to strengthen ties of solidarity."

Spadolini went on to say that Italy is closely following the situation in Lebanon and that it attributes priority importance to a search for a peaceful solution in the Iraq-Iran conflict.

He also stressed that Italy will emphasize respect of human rights "from El Salvador to South Africa," that it intends to promote cooperation with "all African nations irrespective of their international position or political or social orientations, and will continue to urge negotiated and peaceful solutions for the African Horn, in respect of the principles of the United Nations and organization of African Unity charters, while not failing to broaden relations with Somalia."

With respect to East-West relations, the premier observed that Italy is in favor of a resumption of negotiations on European theater armaments but added that these talks cannot stem from the recent Soviet proposal on a nuclear weapons moratorium, "which is not accpptable in its current form."

Italy also favors a return to the U.S.- Soviet SALT negotiations, but added that a return to coexistence would be seriously undermined "by another wound such as the invasion of Afghanistan."

The Italian Government leader condemned the Soviet military occupation of Afghanistan and Vietnam's occupation of Kampuchea, and reiterated that Italy "explicitly condemns any gesture of interference and pressure on Poland, whose political course must develop in absolute autonomy."

Turning to the economic emergency, Spadolini said it stems from a complicated number of facts, "unique in the industrialized world for its extent, including inflation, foreign trade deficit and a state budget deficit." The premier said he considers this the major concern facing his new government.

In order to cope with this emergency, he proposed an economic policy "of extreme firmness and absolute, rigorous coherence, based principally on the battle against inflation." He said the first "severe option" is to reach a social pact between the government, management and organized labor and set a ceiling on inflation through fixed prices, labor costs and tariffs and some form of revision of the current mechanism which automatically adjusts wages to the cost-of-living index.

The other priority of the Spadolini government will be the defense of jobs, "in terms of productivity and not welfare," together with reform of the system enabling workers' mobility and state-subsidized lay-off compensation. However, Sapdolini warned, "the margins for a last-ditch effort to carry out a policy which is not exclusively and drastically [word indistinct] are narrowing greatly.

The soaring dollar on world markets, he added, has stepped up inflation and the balance of payments deficit reached 6.5 billion dollars in the first 5 months of this year. In the same period, the Central Bank's reserves decreased by 5.5 billion dollars. While prices rise at an annual rate of 20 percent, Spadolini went on, the growing deficit in the public sector is of particular concern. In the first 5 months of this year, state sector debts reached 18.3 billion dollars.

Spadolini disclosed that the government's talks with management and organized labor will deal primarily with wages and labor costs, including the automatic cost-of-living-wage system known as the escalator.

Spadolini also announced interventions to ease the deficits in the health, social security and educational sectors, as well as "opportune tax measures."

"Because of the extreme difficulty in the situation, it will be necessary to maintain monetary conditions that defend the exchange and the currency's stability." More flexible measures will be possible only after "the general economic situation shows signs of significant improvement," he concluded.

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES EIGHT NEW AMBASSADORS

AU082110 Rome ANSA in English 1920 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 8 Jul (ANSA)--The names of eight new Italian ambassadors approved for their posts by the Cabinet were announced today.

The new head of the Italian representation to The Hague will be Ernesto Mario Bolasco, the former ambassador to Mogadiscio and a minister plenipotentiary. Claudio Chelli, the former ambassador to The Hague, will represent Italy at the Holy See.

Bartolomeo Attolico, the former ministerial councillor at the Embassy in Washington and a minister plenipotentiary, will become the head of the Italian diplomatic mission in Ankara. In Bucharest, Benedetto Santarelli, the director of political affairs in the European Economic Community press office, will represent Italy as ambassador.

Giovanni Paolo Tozzoli, the former ambassador to Tirana, will go to Prague. Giorgio de Andreis, the head of the official Italian school abroad run under the [word indistinct] direction for cultural relations, is the new ambassador to Wellington.

Emanuele Costa is the new head of the Italian representation in Seoul. He was consul general in Madrid. Francesco Sciortino, past consul general in Mogadiscio, is the new Italian ambassador to Monrovia.

PCI, PCE DELEGATIONS ISSUE JOINT STATEMENT

PM081141 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 30 Jun 81 pp 1, 13

[Unattributed report: "PCI-PCE Joint Statement"--First paragraph is L'UNITA introduction]

[Text] A PCE delegation headed by Secretary General Santiago Carrillo and composed of PCE Executive Committee members Comrades Jaime Ballesteros and Manuel Azcarate met in Rome on 29 June 1981 with a PCI delegation headed by Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer and composed of the following comrades: Directorate member Paolo Bufalini, Central Committee member and Foreign Section Chief Antonio Rubbi, Central Control Commission member and Foreign Section Deputy Chief Rodolfo Mechini, and Central Committee member and Foreign Section aide Lina Fibbi. The two delegations approved the following statement:

1. We are now in an international situation in which the threats of conflicts and war are increasing, while a new thrust is being imparted to a frightening arms race, starting with nuclear arms. Such a situation is made all the more worrying by the aversion demonstrated up to now by the new U.S. administration for any immediate resumption of East-West dialogue or start of negotiations on weapons in Europe.

The PCI and PCE delegations confirm that the defense of the supreme asset of peace is a decisive issue facing the workers and all peoples of the world. It demands above all the prompt beginning of negotiations on the Euromissiles issue--taking into account every other system of nuclear bases and missiles--which will prevent, both in the Eastern bloc and in the West, a nuclear arms race on our continent, and will be aimed at achieving a balance at the lowest possible level. Europe and the world do not need new nuclear weapons. A balance must be achieved by halting the deployment and construction of these weapons, by dismantling and destroying them. The important thing to this end is the immediate beginning of negotiations, in accordance also with the specific decision taken in this connection by the NATO Council meeting of 12 December 1979. Both sides stress the importance of the broad movements, composed of different forces, which are fighting in Western Europe against the arms race and the deployment of Euromissiles in West European countries, such as Italy, and which consider themselves committed to this decisive battle; they will welcome every new initiative and proposal from governments and political forces aimed at unfreezing the situation, thus providing the go-ahead for negotiations.

Both sides stress that it is important for the Madrid Conference on European Security and Cooperation to achieve positive results and, in particular, to decide to convene a conference on confidence-building measures and military security and to put forward new proposals for balanced and controlled disarmament.

2. Following a period in which Western Europe has experienced an advance by conservative forces, there is now a reverse trend, reflecting the European peoples' desire for change to provide democratic and progressive solutions to contemporary problems through the regeneration of society.

With Mitterrand's election and the left's victory in the presidential and general elections and with the formation of a new government composed of Socialists, Communists and Radicals, the French people have written a new and important page in their history, the repercussions of which will influence the whole of Europe. At the same time, the leftwing forces have achieved significant successes in Italy, Britain, the Netherlands and Cyprus, while the European masses' desire for peace is being reflected in forms of struggle and involvement that have not been seen for some time. In this way, Western Europe is called on to play an essential role in favor of the peace and progress of mankind, asserting its own autonomous policy for detente, for arms limitation and reduction, for the banning and destruction of nuclear weapons, for the effective establishment and observance of the principle of the independence and sovereignty of every people and state, for the establishment of a new international economic order that will guarantee the development of the economically backward peoples, for the democratization of international relations, and for the elimination of bipolarism and of the split into opposing blocs. In this framework, Spain's entry into NATO would be a lamentable factor that would alter the existing balance, thus causing new tensions in the Mediterranean and Europe.

3. In view of the continuing serious situation in the Middle East, and Israel's aggressive acts, such as the annexation of Jerusalem and, most recently, the bombardment in Iraq; the two sides proclaim their support for a European policy aimed at promoting a political solution of the current conflicts and tensions, based on recognition of the Palestinian people's right to exist as a nation and on security for all states, including Israel, within the region.

The PCI and PCE also declare themselves in favor of the following:

--A policy in the Mediterranean of security--starting with the initial step of extending mutual confidence-building measures in this area--and of cooperation among all the littoral countries;

--Solidarity with the Polisario Front and a solution to the conflict in the Western Sahara that will guarantee the Saharan people their self-determination;

--Solidarity with the Nicaraguan and Salvadoran peoples and with all peoples struggling for their independence and freedom.

The PCI and PCE expressed their solidarity with the process of socialist regeneration which, despite serious difficulties, is taking place in Poland. They express their confidence in the Polish United Workers Party's ability--with the responsible cooperation of the fundamental components of Polish society--to complete it successfully, surmounting both dogmatic and sectarian and rash and anarchical positions. They confirm their rejection of any form of foreign intervention or interference, for whatever reasons. Poland's problems must be resolved by the Poles themselves.

Both parties confirm their well-known stance on the Soviet troops' withdrawal from Afghanistan, for agreements among all the states concerned guaranteeing the cessation of any foreign interference and for the Afghan people's right to choose their own system and government.

4. The building of Europe is experiencing a particularly difficult period as a result of the economic crisis and a policy dictated mainly by the major monopoly groups. The present U.S. monetary policy threatens our continent's economic stability.

Both parties stress the new factors and approaches that have emerged in government and major political forces in Europe and that are now creating more favorable conditions for a positive role on the part of the West European institutions and for increasing the influence and weight of the advanced workers and democratic forces in the building of Europe. Therefore, the PCI and PCE are in favor of a growing role for the European Parliament and for greater trade union influence in EEC life. Consequently, the parties confirm their position in favor of Spain's EEC entry and stress the pressing need for Spain's increased political representation in the European structures, irrespective of the timetable established for its economic integration.

5. Though the terrorism that is dealing heavy blows to both our countries has different origins and manifestations, it seems to be a very dangerous enemy of democracy and acts exclusively in favor of the reactionary forces which long for a return to fascism. The gravity of this phenomenon must not be underestimated. The coup d'etat in Turkey, the attempted coup in Spain, the conspiracies in Greece and, under different conditions, the conspiracies and subversive actions of various kinds in Italy, all demand a steadfast struggle against terrorism and putschism. The communists and socialists are committed to this struggle, seeking unity with all the democratic forces of all countries and, on the European plane, in action aimed at strengthening the democratic and parliamentary institutions and the role of the parties and of the democratic organizations.

6. The trends emerging in Europe toward an advance by the progressive and leftwing forces--trends distinguished from those of other periods by a stronger unitary awareness and will--confirm the correctness and values of the fundamental concepts on which our two parties have reached agreement in recent years--concepts which they jointly defined at the 1975 Leghorn meeting and which are known by the name of Eurocommunism.

The PCI and PCE confirm their conviction that socialism can only be achieved in the West through the development and complete implementation of democracy; and within the framework of full observance of individual and collective freedoms, of the principles of the nonconfessional nature of the state and of its realization in a free dialectic among the parties, of trade union independence, of religious freedom, and of a freedom of expression in culture, art and science.

The two parties stress the fundamental importance in relations among all communist and workers parties and among the world's progressive forces of observance of the principle of the independence of every revolutionary party and process.

In the present situation in Western Europe more favorable prospects are opening up for cooperation at the European level among communist and socialist parties and other Christian and secular progressive forces, and for unity among trade union forces. To this end, both parties declare their desire to contribute to the development of more active cooperation among the Western communist parties--cooperation that has already been apparent in positive initiatives.

In tackling the tasks of the workers and democratic movement, a decisive role belongs to the dialogue between the communist and socialist parties to reach understandings that will make it possible to build a progressive alternative to Europe's crisis and to promote new initiatives, primarily for the sake of disarmament and peace.

Progress in leftwing unity will make it possible to provide more advanced substance to democracy in both our countries and on the European plane; to provide a real solution to the problems afflicting the masses, and primarily unemployment; to respond in a new spirit open to the aspirations of the people's masses--and in particular young people and women--to the regeneration of production and social relations and of living conditions and culture, that will free them from all forms of oppression and alienation, ensuring social justice and the development of every individual.

PCP'S AVANTE! COMMENTS ON SITUATION IN POLAND

PM081425 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 2 Jul 81 p 11

[Unattributed commentary: "Solidarity With Socialist Poland"]

[Text] At this particularly difficult time for Poland, solidarity with the Polish people and with the Polish communists and workers is emerging as a need incumbent on all progressive forces: in defense of socialist Poland and in defense of peace in Europe and worldwide, because the same people who are attacking socialism in Poland and are delighting in (and supporting) the progress of counterrevolution uphold the arms race in theory and practice.

On the eve of the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] congress (which is being held under abnormal conditions of tension and pressure from forces alien to socialism), the party's Central Committee has emphasized: "All party members and all Poles should be aware of the historic responsibility currently borne by our state and our people. And it stressed the international repercussions of what is happening in the country: "The security of Poland's borders and its independence and sovereignty, as well as the correlation of forces in Europe and in the entire world, depend on whether Poland remains a powerful socialist state."

Nothing could be truer. If Reagan officially makes statements openly interfering in Poland's internal problems, even having the audacity to threaten the Polish Government with respect to the way in which it decides to halt counterrevolution, if every kind of support for counterrevolution in Poland is coming from the United States, Britain and the FRG and the bourgeois press is talking about "retaliation" in Cuba, El Salvador or Nicaragua for the forms which the situation in Poland takes, as if this were something obvious and commonplace, this is because much is at stake in Poland--much that has nothing to do with the initial pretext and mobilizing factor of the market supplies and prices situation.

This very point was emphasized at the 11th PZPR Central Committee Plenum.

Capital Does Not Invest Without Profits

(G. Walcinski), director of a department of the Polish Internal Affairs Ministry, emphasized that foreign espionage services--specifically U.S. and FRG espionage services--are in close contact with the counterrevolutionary groups operating in Poland. Thus about 400 centers assigned the task of collecting funds for counterrevolution in Poland--which currently total about $300,000--have recently been set up in the capitalist countries.

This is a longstanding process which gathered momentum with the U.S. Carter administration's official policy from 1977 to 1980, which under the cover of the cynical defense of "human rights" promoted and encouraged the setting up and development of antisocialist organizations such as the "self-defense committees" and the "movements for the defense of civil and human rights." It is not by chance that the "Polish counterrevolutionary organization" designated DKOR, set up in 1976, changed from the "Workers Defense Committee" to the "Social Self-Defense Committee" exactly in 1977.

The whole course of events in Poland--which undoubtedly reflects the accumulated problems and mistakes which had been made--could be cited as an instance of what counterrevolutionary activity is, all the more so since certain concessions have led the reactionary groups' leaders to feel confident enough even to reveal some of their real aims.

Thus, following the signing in Gdansk in the summer of 1980 of an initial agreement between the strikers and the government, this agreement was suddenly called into question and the the central demand for the formation of "independent" trade unions was put forward. Why? Kuron, the leader of the KOR counterrevolutionary organization, explains in the "Bulletin of Information": "...this is the first step toward organizing trade unions independent from the state; a subsequent destruction of other social structures should occur in the People's Republic of Poland--among young people, in the Polish countryside, in the cultural field and so forth."

The matter of free Saturdays--a demand which was regarded even in several bourgeois newspapers as completely unrealistic, as a result of the extremely grave repercussions on the Polish economy, which was already greatly weakened during this period of instability--once more demonstrated that the aim of reactionary organizations and elements operating from within Soldarity is to destroy socialism in Poland.

In Defense of Socialism

"A vigorous offensive is necessary. Following the 11th plenum, slogans are not enough in themselves. Specific actions are necessary, above all, in the field of the major news media," Gen N. Michta asserted at a meeting at the PZPR Central Committee's higher school of social sciences, of which he is director. At the PZPR Central Committee Plenum, Henryk Kostecki from Nowy Sacz emphasized: "It is time to put a stop to the attacks against the party and state cadres.... All state bodies should rise up in defense of order, which is being violated with impunity."

The defense of socialism in Poland requires increased solidarity worldwide with the Polish communists and working class because solidarity is the appropriate response of the working masses, the progressive forces and the communists to reaction's offensice and because socialism, peace, democracy and freedom must be defended at all costs.

Imperialism calls this "interference," or even, more frequently, Soviet "expansionism." The words should not impress us. To carry out a revolution it is necessary to mobilize an entire people: mobilize them in the destruction of the power of big capital, mobilize them in building a new society, mobilize them for their defense. This is why revolutions cannot be exported--they can only be aided, since it is necessary for the broad masses to be committed and mobilized to build them. But counterrevolution can be exported--it does not need a people (it can at most attempt to use them through deception at a certain moment). It does need dollars and the "theoretical" and practical support of the centers of provocations. Above all, it needs repression against the people and against the masses. Instances abound, our national experience is very clear in this respect, and the meaning of interference is not unknown in Portugal: real interference, the only possible interference--interference by imperialism.

In relation to Poland, which is today experiencing such a difficult time, solidarity is necessary--against interference and imperialism and for independence, socialism and peace.

BASQUE PREMIER COMMENTS ON TALK WITH CALVO-SOTELO

PM081231 Madrid ABC in Spanish 26 Jun 81 p 9

[Text] Madrid--"There are fundamental disagreements between Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo and the Basque Autonomous Government," [Basque country Premier] Carlos Garaikoetxea stated on leaving his meeting with the prime minister at 1430 hours yesterday afternoon. This meeting lasted 75 minutes, and it was attended by the government's general representative in the Basque country, Marecelino Oreja.

"There was no tension in the conversation, because there has never been tension in my talks with the head of government, but I reiterate that there are grounds for disagreement, both on the pace and on fundamental issues, which are those which are really grave," Garaikoetxea asserted. He stated that they had also broached state issues and that "Prime Minister Calvo-Sotela reaffirmed to me his desire to carry out the Basque autonomy process, in accordance with the statute."

He said at another juncture that a number of arrangements to make communications smoother had been decided on, and another meeting in July was also agreed on. "I hope that the situation appears brighter next time," Garaikoetxea stated.

Asked about the Basque Autonomous Government's specific grounds for complaint, the premier replied: "We find no overly satisfactory aspects, for instance no specific agreements have been reached in the joint transferences committee during the first half of this year, as well as the fact that there have been very few decrees to implement the existing agreements for some time."

"Some sections of the autonomy statute have scarcely been implemented," Garaikoetxea said, and he expressed his disagreement with various government bills, such as the university autonomy bill and the local government bill, as well as the decree law on industrial reorganization. He asserted that it is a matter of a general complaint and that he is not questioning the government's desire to implement the Basque autonomy process.

Asked whether Calvo-Sotelo had criticized what has come to be termed the "selling of frustrations" by the Basque Autonomous Government, the premier said: "It is natural that the government should not like all aspects of the policy conducted by the Basque Government because, among other things, we are from different parties and have different viewpoints for approaching problems; but I wish to say that what has come to be termed the 'selling of frustrations' by us is a meaningless cliche, because if we 'sold frustrations' we would demonstrate that our strategy is not succeeding. But we have a duty to tell our people the truth, whether it be pleasant or unpleasant."

Last, Carlos Garaikoetxea asserted: "We have faith and hope, in view of the frustrations we have endured, that we will now be able to find solutions to the problems."

AUTHORITIES ARREST ETA MEMBERS, OTHER MILITANTS

NC031718 Paris AFP in English 1659 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Bilbao, Spain, 3 Jul (AFP)--Three out of five members of an intelligence squad of the Basque Separatist organization ETA's military wing have been arrested during the last few days in Biscay Province, police said today. The three are accused of transmitting information to military ETA leadership about Jose Maria Ryan, chief engineer of the Lemoniz nuclear plant who was assassinated on February 6 by the group.

The police added that six extreme rightist militants were arrested overnight on charges of arms trafficking. Two revolvers and a sawed-off shotgun were seized in the raid.

INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS RESUME; ENVOYS MAKE STATEMENTS

NC081820 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] The intercommunal talks resumed at the Ledra Palace Hotel this afternoon. A general exchange of views was held. The issue of adoption of practical measures by both sides will be discussed in the next meeting to be held on Friday, 24 July.

In a statement before the meeting, UN secretary general special representative in Cyprus Gobbi said that during the interval since the last meeting in the framework of the inter-Cypriot talks, he ahd had intensive consultations with Waldheim. He added that the secretary general continues, as always, to be concerned and actively interested in the Cyprus problem. He said: The secretary general tries to feed the negotiations with ideas. In answer to the question whether there are new ideas, Gobbi replied that there are no specific ideas. However, he added, the United Nations continually seeks ideas to bridge the rift. In another question on the outcome of his consultations with the secretary general, Gobbi replied that after the consulations he felt more optimistic than previously. Finally, to a question about on what he bases his optimism, Gobbi said there were certain factors he could not reveal.

The representated of the Greek Cypriot side at the talks, Ioannidhis, said that the talks were continuing in an atmosphere of uncertainty regarding their future. He added that the Greek Cypriot side repeats its positive attitude toward a substantive and constructive dialogue and, in this framework, I would like to say that we expect that the Turkish Cypriot side will respond with specific and constructive proposals on the territorial issue so that we may proceed to a fruitful dialogue. In answer to what the main obstacle to the achievement of progress in the talks is, Ioannidhis replied: The lack of specific proposals by the Turkish Cypriot side on the territorial issue.

Turkish Cypriot interlocutor Onan stated that during today's meeting a general exchange of views on the previous meetings would be held, because, as he said, both sides recently had elections. In answer to a question, Onan did not rule out the possibility of a visit to Ankara by the Turkish Cypriot leadership in the very near future for trasultations. Referring to reports that the Turkish side will submit proposals on the territorial issue, Onan said that both sides will do what they can for the achievement of a settlement that would satisfy the two communities.

Talks End, UN Statement

TA081836 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] After more than 1 month, intercommunal talks resumed today in Cyprus. Turkish and Greek Cypriot negotiators met at the UN administered Ledra Palace Hotel in Lefkosa [Nicosia]. The talks which began at 1700 were held under the chairmanship of UN special representative in Cyprus Hugo Gobbi and lasted 2 and 1/2 hours.

A statement issued by the UN Information Office in Lefkosa following the talks says that the negotiators exchanged views in general. The statement adds that the issues of practical measures aimed at increasing mutual good will and confidence and at facilitating a return to normal conditions will be discussed at the coming meeting, which is scheduled to be held at 1700 on Friday, 24 July.

O AGON DOUBTS U.S. INTENTIONS ON CYPRUS ISSUE

NC081103 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 8 Jul 81 p 1

[The "My Opinion" column by "The Observer": The Americans and the Cyprus Problem and the Embellishment of U.S. Intentions"]

[Text] Everybody now is trying to present the U.S. administration under Reagan as animated by good intentions toward Cyprus and ready to proceed with sincere efforts and actions for a just solution of the Cyprus problem.

For instance, [former San Francisco Mayor] Christopher--no more nor less--presents President Reagan as determined to impose a new arms embargo on Turkey! Christopher is a good friend, but he should learn that the Cypriot people are not stupid. How can there be talk about an embargo when Turkey is being ruled by U.S.-backed men to whom huge military aid is being granted?

On the other hand, Rolandhis says he has the impression that the Reagan administration is determined to lead the Cyprus problem toward progress if not toward solution.

We do not want to dispute the things Rolandhis has said about U.S. intentions nor the things that are being declared with fanfare regarding a U.S. intervention, plans and many other things for the Cyprus problem's settlement. Nor do we oppose a U.S. intervention for the just solution of the Cyprus problem. We pray for such an intervention, if it were to aim at a just, balanced and viable solution of the Cyprus problem, based on justice and morality, and if it were to return to the majority the possessions taken from it by Ankara's violence aided by the power of U.S. arms.

However, what is significant is not what we ask and pray for but what hard experience has taught us and the facts before us; and it is precisely these facts and experience that have caused mistrust and distrust toward U.S. activities.

What has experience taught us? It has taught us that from the creation of the Cyprus problem until today the United States has displayed a ferocious fight against the Cyprus case, reaching its zenith in 1974 when it did not react to and tolerated the coup and the invasion--if it did not actually encourage and organize it.

What do current facts say?

They say that Turkey is the U.S. gendarme in our area. The tough military people governing the country are U.S.-backed men. They came to power thanks to the help of the United States.

All kinds of U.S. aid is generously being given to Turkey, and Ankara's every wish is an order for the United States and immediately fulfilled.

Consequently, what logical conclusions can be drawn? The logical conclusion is that one should not expect U.S. pressure toward Turkey--something which is the primary and most basic factor in the pursuit of a just, reasonable and balanced solution of the Cyprus problem.

This is our forecast. This is what history teaches and this is what current facts say. Naturally, we pray that we be proven wrong, but we doubt it very much....

AUSTRIA'S PAHR HOLDS OUT HOPE FOR TALKS

NC080958 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 8 Jul 81 p 1

[Excerpt] There was a feeling that a new process was now starting that provided more room for hope of progress in the intercommunal talks, the Austrian foreign minister, Mr Willibald Pahr said yesterday.

At a press conference last night at the Hilton he confirmed what he had already stated, namely that the UN secretary general believes that for a number of reasons there is a chance of progress. That, he said, included the general situation in Turkey itself.

Mr Pahr concluded his talks with his Cypriot counterpart Mr Rolandhis and will be leaving the island today after being received by President Kiprianou and after visits to the Austrian contingent serving with UNFICYP in Cyprus.

The Austrian foreign minister expressed the hope that there would be an early end to the Cyprus problem and restoration of sovereignty and territorial integrity and an end to the presence of foreign occupation troops.

Neutral Group

Mr Pahr indicated that if no progress is made at the new round of talks with concrete proposals on territory then perhaps the four-member neutral and non-aligned group, which salvaged the Madrid Conference and managed to give it a start, could be activated in the Cyprus case.

The start of the Madrid Conference was due at least 80 percent to the document prepared by the four neutral and non-aligned countries (Cyprus, Austria, Sweden and Yugoslavia) and it was only natural that the service of the group could be considered if no progress is made on the Cyprus problem, he said.

There was a hitch when Mr Pahr visited the Austrian contingent in the north after clearance with the U.N. and the Turkish authorities. Mr Pahr had flown by helicopter to the outposts of the Austrian contingent but when he tried to come back by vehicle via one of the check-points at Ayios Nikolaos in the Famagusta district he was prevented and UN helicopters had to be provided for his return to the headquarters in Nicosia.

CYPRUS MAIL ON SOVIET-SYRIAN MANEUVERS INCIDENT

NC081800 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 8 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Cameramen working for an American television network said their charter plane came under fire from a Soviet warship as they tried to film it off the coast of Cyprus, according to a REUTER despatch from Nicosia. The CBS crew had been filing Soviet vessels assumed to be heading through the Mediterranean to take part in a joint Soviet-Syrian naval exercise.

Cameraman Paul Vittoroulis and recordist George Ioannidhis, both of Athens, were aboard a German charter flight.

"We were over the top of a Russian destroyer flying at about 800 feet when, just as we banked to the left, we saw a puff of black smoke and felt the plane shudder," Mr Vittoroulis said. "We are sure it was only a warning shot meant to frighten us away, but we did not wait to find out. It was too close for comfort."

Both the plane's crew and the camera team estimated that they were about 40 miles south of the Cypriot coast at the time.

MITSOTAKIS, AUSTRIA'S PAHR BEGIN OFFICIAL TALKS

NC081928 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] At 1800 today, Greek and Austrian delegations, headed by the foreign ministers of the two countries, began talks at the Foreign Ministry on bilateral and international issues. They discussed the question of cooperation and security in Europe, in conjunction with the developments of the Madrid Conference, as well as the Middle East issue. Concerning bilateral issues, they reviewed economic relations between the two countries and considered the possibilities of strengthening them.

Prior to the talks, Mr Mitsotakis and Mr Pahr had a private meeting at the Greek minister's office. The Austrian foreign minister will visit Prime Minister Rallis tomorrow morning.

SPAIN'S PEREZ-LLORCA COMMENTS ON RESULTS OF VISIT

PM090950 Madrid ABC in Spanish 5 Jul 81 p 15

[EFE dispatch: "Perez-Llorca's Visit to Greece Ends"]

[Excerpts] Athens--Greece promised its full support for Spain's entry into the EEC and NATO during the official visit paid to that country by Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca, EFE reports. In statements to EFE, the Spanish foreign minister expressed his satisfaction at this official visit to Greece, at both the personal and political levels.

Referring to Spain's coming entry into the EEC and its joining NATO, Perez-Llorca said that Greece "fully supports" Spain's entry into the Atlantic alliance, and that it also supports its joining the EEC for both political and economic reasons. At the political level, the minister continued, Greece, whose problems and political development are similar to those of Spain, believes that Spanish entry into the EEC will strengthen the necessary European integration.

Perez-Llorca also said that the Greek authorities believe that the similarity in agricultural output between Spain and Greece will not create competition within the Community; rather, it will accelerate the reorganization of the EEC's agricultural policy. "Spain's entry into the EEC should take place as soon as possible," Perez-Llorca also stated.

OPPOSITION PRESS CRITICIZES EXTRADITION OF TURKS

NC031426 Athens NEWS in English 3 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] The opposition press yesterday severely criticized the Greek authorities' decision to send back to Turkey two young Turks who had asked for political asylum after swimming from the Turkish mainland to the island of Kos. The two, Fehmi Uzal, 23, and Ismahel Aivaz, an army conscript, were taken to Rhodes, where the authorities took them on board the Turkish cruise ship "Gemlik" and delivered them to the captain, for return to Turkey.

An unsigned government press release last evening claimed the decision to extradite the two, which it admitted was irregular, was taken and carried out by local officials without the knowledge of the Foreign Ministry. The announcement added that stern instructions have been given to local authorities to avoid repetition of acts that are "contrary to international law."

Government Statement

NC081932 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] Public Order Minister Dhavakis made the following statement this afternoon on the question of the Turkish fugitives' extradition:

The findings of investigations into Gendarmerie Inspector Papadhimitriou were submitted to me at noon today. The investigation was ordered in connection with the refusal to grant asylum to Turkish fugitives in the Dodecanese area. From the investigation it was concluded that there were defaults concerning the procedures in handling the case of the Turkish fugitives, and established legal stipulations were not completely followed. The procedure of imposing disciplinary action has been effected against those responsible for these defaults. Lt Gen Ioannis Bratios, chief of YPEA [National Security Service], whose organs handled the issue, although recently appointed to this service, has submitted his resignation, for reasons of sensitivity, which I have accepted.

PAPANDREOU ASKED FOR ANSWERS ON FOREIGN POLICY

NC071835 Athens NEWS in English 7 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpt] Responding to charges by PASOK Chairman Papandreou, a government spokesman yesterday said that the government had made it clear time and again that the Greek side had not committed itself in any way in the Greco-American negotiations. The negotiations will be resumed from scratch after the elections.

The time has come for Mr Papandreou to stop confusing the issue, the spokesman said. Instead of replying directly to the prime minister's forthright questions, Mr Papandreou resorted to a murky interview which further obscures his positions.

We understand the difficulties Mr Papandreou has in offering straight answers, when his announced positions weaken the Greek case against Turkey, but let him answer at least one question; is PASOK foreign policy in accord with the policies of the socialist governments of France, Germany and Europe generally as regards NATO, the EEC, and the Soviet missiles?

The government awaits a straight answer, the spokesman concluded. Any double talk on Mr Papandreou's part will be positive proof that he is attempting to deceive the Greek electorate.

PRINOS OILFIELD BEGINS PUMPING OIL, GAS 5 JULY

NC061259 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] The Prinos oilfield at Thasos yesterday began pumping oil. According to a statement by Mr (Spin), director of the Northern Aegean oil company, 8,000 barrels of oil were pumped by this morning and 4,000 barrels of oil have already been stored in the tanks of Nea Karvali land installations. Oil is being pumped from one productive well. Pumping from a second well will begin this evening. The other six productive wells will be put into operation gradually.

Pumping of natural gas has also begun. For technical reasons, it will be burnt at the installations at the oil field and at Nea Karvali. Normal exploitation of natural gas will begin toward the end of the week.

By the end of July, the daily output will be 10,000 barrels, in August 15,000 barrels, in September 18,000 and by October 25,000 to 28,000 barrles. Moreover, 400 to 500 tons of sulphur will be produced daily and will be made available to fertilizer plants.

VOTCP ACCUSES U.S. OF KIDNAPPING SOVIET BALLERINA

TA090838 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] A ballerina from the Soviet Bolshoi troupe currently in our country to participate in the Istanbul festival, Galina Cursina, has been kidnapped by U.S. officials. Soviet officials held a news conference and denounced this gross U.S. provocation. They requested a meeting with the kidnapped Soviet ballerina. However, officials from the U.S. Consulate General in Istanbul rejected the Soviet request. They did not allow the Soviet officials to meet the Soviet ballerina. This attitude alone proves that the Bolshoi ballerina, Cursina, has been kidnapped as a result of the U.S. officials' provocations. The ballerina's kidnapping by U.S. officials in Istabbul is a gross provocation by the Reagan administration aimed at damaging the relations of friendship and culture between Turkey and the Soviet Union. This act is part of the Pentagon's anti-Soviet campaign.

VISITING POLISH OFFICIAL HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE

TA081505 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] The Polish under secretary of state for foreign affairs, Marian Dobrosielski, who is currently visiting Turkey as the official guest of Foreign Ministry General Secretary Ambassador Kamuran Gurun, held a news conference in Ankara today. Turkish Radio and Television correspondent Serdar Binli reports the following from the news conference:

[Begin recording] [Binlin] In his news conference, the visiting Polish under secretary said the following in connection with his talks in Ankara: [Dobrosielski--in English, fading into Turkish translation] International issues as well as bilateral relations were discussed during my talks with my colleague. We have observed no basic divergence of views in connection with foreign issues. In the field of bilateral relations, we have agreed on important steps for the future. We had no possibility to go into details regarding potential fields of cooperation, but we were able to formulate the general framework of economic, technical, scientific and cultural cooperation between our two countries. Trade between Turkey and Poland is developing at an equal pace to the benefit of both countries.

[Binli] In reply to questions on the situation in Poland and the probability of a Soviet intervention in his country Dobrosielski said:

[Dobrosielski in English fading into Turkish translation] This campaign which originated in Western countries is unfounded. Reports in Western press organs on this subject have created the impression that such a Soviet intervention is imminent. I would like to make this point clearly: The Soviet Union has expressed a great interest in our problems and has extended about $4.5 billion in aid in the form of goods, loans and grants. In addition to this, the Soviet Union has postponed for several years the payment of our existing debts.

The movement which started about a year ago in Poland is not directed against the foundations of the state, the constitution, the socialist order, or against the allies of Poland. This movement is directed toward dealing with mistakes in the implementation of socialism. This movement is a significant movement.

Some antisocialist circles have tried to exploit this movement. The campaign undertaken in Western countries to the effect that a Soviet intervention in Poland is imminent has harmed the country's stability and its social and economic life. I would like to state clearly that the administration in Poland has from the very beginning of these developments exerted efforts to solve the problems through negotiations without resorting to force. This stand is compatible with our foreign policies as well. The basis of our foreign policy is peaceful coexistence and the solution of differences through dialogue. As in the past, Poland will also now do its part for international detente, disarmament, and cooperation among the world countries. [end recording]

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 132 10 July 1981

CONTENTS

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Press Comments on Brandt Visit, Dual Decision J 1
DIE WELT Article [8 Jul] J 1
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Article [8 Jul] J 1

FRANCE

Cheysson: We Cannot Accept Military Balance Upset K 1
Assembly Gives Government Vote of Confidence K 1
Mitterrand Talks With Ivory Coast President K 1
Houphouet-Boigny Interview [Abidjan] K 1
Presidents' Comments [Abidjan] K 2
President Ready To Meet Japanese Socialist [KYODO] K 3
Officials See Central African Republic Leader K 3
LE MONDE Reports on French-Spanish Contacts [4 Jul] K 3
Newspapers View EC Session, Mitterrand Role K 4
LE MONDE Editorial [2 Jul] K 4
LE FIGARO Editorial [1 Jul] K 5
Spare Parts for Patrol Boats Sent to Iran K 6
Reportage on Foreign Minister's Tunisia Visit [cross-reference] K 6

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Senate Gives Spadolini Cabinet Vote of Confidence L 1
More on Vote L 1
Red Brigades Set Demands for Official's Release L 1
Cirillo Death Sentence L 2
Red Brigades Factions Split on Recent Killing L 2
L'UNITA on Decision Not To Attend Moscow Meeting [7 Jun] L 2
Nuclear Official Comments on Iraqi Reactor [Kuwait AL-WATAN 29 Jun] L 3

GREECE

PASOK Policy Declaration; Papandreou Statement S 1
Austrian Foreign Minister Continues Visit S 14
Meets Rallis, Averof S 14
Holds News Conference S 14

TURKEY

Press Release on Expanded Relations With Poland T 1
Government Denies Iranian Press Report on Mediation T 1
Minister Ozal Holds News Conference in Washington T 1
TERCUMAN on Political Parties in North Cyprus [6 Jul] T 2

OTHER COUNTRIES

CANADA

Prime Minister To Visit Seoul in September [KOREA TIMES 5 Jul] Z 1

SPAIN

17 GRAPO Members Join Prison Hunger Strike Z 1
GRAPO Members Sentenced for Madrid Bombing Z 1
Shooting Incidents Reported in Basque Provinces Z 2
Civil Guard Killed Z 2
Briefs: New Military Governors Z 2

PRESS COMMENTS ON BRANDT VISIT, DUAL DECISION

DIE WELT Article

DW081157 Bonn DIE WELT in German 8 Jul 81 p 2

[Article by Herbert Kremp: "From the North Cape to Gibraltar"]

[Text] Up to now, it has been the role of Finnish President Urho Kekkonen to represent the policy of a nuclear free zone in northern Europe, pursued by the Soviet Union for many years toward its Scandinavian neighbors. He has done this at regular intervals, hardly concealing the pressure exerted on him as a result of the special Finnish-Soviet relationship.

For Willy Brandt to do the same thing now, the lonesome Nordic melody takes on an orchestral sound. His mission to interpret Brezhnev's policy extends from the North Cape to Gibraltar. In Moscow, he speaks against Spain's membership of NATO, referring to his Spanish friend Gonzales. Regarding central Europe, he is trying to find reasons to avoid the modernization of the insufficient deterrent forces. As for the Scandinavians, he surprised them by indicating that Moscow will probably extend a nuclear free zone to its own area.

The geographical dimension and the unusual form of party diplomacy now raise the question as to whose mission Willy Brandt actually pursues. Is it his own mission? Is the former federal chancellor who showed unlimited naivety in the Guillaume case really so sure of the absolute will for peace of his interlocuter Brezhnev?

Strange things happen. The Scandinavians object cautiously. The chancellor keeps silent, an uneasy silence, whereas Brandt calls the West's foreign policy point by point into question.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Article

DW081110 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 8 Jul 81 p 1

[Robert Held editorial: "To Tell the Truth Despite Brandt"]

[Text] Willy Brandt's solemn handling of peace problems will extend even more the horizon of existing expectations--something must happen here "eventually," the good can be expected before Christmas if good will exists. It is now even more difficult for the Federal Government to tell the truth.

The bind it is in was not totally self-inflicted. The Germans were worried before the Americans about the Soviets setting up the SS-20 threat behind the rosy scenery of SALT I and "detente." But that did not come to the public's attention. In 1975, when the NATO decision was due as a countermove, the Federal Government handled the problem too much as an inner problem of the SPD and its party congress.

It was too busy getting over the December 1979 party congress and working for an agreement regarding the NATO decision, to be achieved a few days later, to realize that a much farther-reaching democratic mission was upcoming--at a time when the highly technical issues entail more ignorance than knowledge among the delegates making the decisions. It ignored and even refused to do the necessary (and certainly toilsome) enlightenment more as if it would be hopeless from the very beginning: defeatism of a knowing elite in view of the task of showing one's colors to the public.

Only as late as in 1981 did many wise people attempt to enlighten the compatriots, for example, in the well-composed argumentation text of the Federal Press Office. Those, however, who in the meantime have monopolized peace morality cannot be convinced that way. But as if this experience did not suffice, the Federal Government is about to paint a silver lining on the horizon which cannot stand closer scrutiny. Even without Brandt, it seems to consider the public pressure so urgent that it indicates in small but regular doses its hurry and concern regarding negotiations with Moscow in the near future.

If the Soviet peace gestures consist mainly of threats, why don't we have the stamina to discard the obliging hurry? According to the opinion of the German Government, America ought to neogitate in the near future. Behind this is the wish to be relieved of inner party pressure, as well as the factual consideration that armament leads in the meantime to chaos instead of establishing a balance. The Americans are almost untouched by all this--and the Federal Government doesn't dare tell this to the people.

The term "counterarmament" was criticized recently for its semantic weaknesses, but the famous "dual decision" is not unobjectionable either. It was coined too obviously for inner German use. The respective expression in NATO language is "double track decision" which is clearly understandable as a decision on "two tracks" where both things ought to run next to each other, preparedness to negotiate and modernization of medium-range arms. In Germany, however, one operates with interpretations suggesting the conditional priority of one or the other.

The Americans on their part clearly indicate that they do not think much of the whole term and that it has been pressed upon them by the Germans. Before Carter had lost, the decision of the new invisible U.S. majority had ripened to the effect that it would do what it deemed necessary for the defense of America. The consequence is that the U.S. Government can dispose of more money for arms expenditures, but that it so far has not established priorities or analyzed options to find out what additional action it wants to take for its defense. Therefore, we heard an American recently saying that the dual decision is for the Americans not a double track decision but a multitrack decision.

So concern for Europe is rather sporadic in the current U.S. decision system: America knows that it cannot pursue world policy without the allies, but it obviously has difficulties in articulating this. A debate on armament and arms control problems did not take place in the election campaign and, so far, this has not been made up for.

The medium-range arms discussion in the European style is almost exotic. European observers can imagine with regard to leading security policy decisionmakers that everybody has something against SALT, but that all of them together probably realize the necessity to rationalize armament.

The resulting speed does not correspond to the expectations which the Federal Government still permits to grow. In addition, the volume of SALT indicates the these talks will take many years. Even if somebody would find good reasons for the hectic handling of this issue, particularly by Brandt, it would not help much. We will have to pressure the Americans a bit, but they nevertheless will take their time. The Federal Government in time must explain this truth to the people.

CHEYSSON: WE CANNOT ACCEPT MILITARY BALANCE UPSET

LD091330 Hamburg DPA in German 1210 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Hamburg, 9 Jul (DPA)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson is of the opinion that the military balance has been upset and that "this is a fact which we cannot accept." He said it was up to the Soviets whether they want to make serious progress in disarmament. "If they (?do not withdraw), the West must respond with its own missiles," Cheysson said in an interview to appear in tomorrow's edition of the Hamburg BILD ZEITUNG.

[Words indistinct] nuclear free zone of several hundred square kilometers, the French foreign minister said with regard to the proposal by Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev. Brezhnev had suggested this during SPD Chairman Willy Brandt's visit. "I am not so sure that I can believe what I have heard so far," Cheysson said, at the same time stressing that France and the United States have always had good relations. Moreover, this will remain so, even if it does not mean "that we are always and in all spheres of the same opinion."

ASSEMBLY GIVES GOVERNMENT VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

LD092028 Paris Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Summary] The National Assembly after a 2-day debate tonight gave a vote of confidence to the Mauroy government; 302 votes for; 147 against. The entire Socialist group as well as the Communists voted in favor while the RPR and the UDF voted against.

MITTERRAND TALKS WITH IVORY COAST PRESIDENT

Houphouet-Boigny Interview

AB091355 Abidjan Domestic Service in French 1245 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] President Felix Houphouet-Boigny today was received at the Elysee palace by President Francois Mitterrand. The president is the first African head of state to be received at the Elysee since Francois Mitterrand's election as president of France. The two men have known each other for a long time. They belonged to the same French political parties and Governments. President Houphouet-Boigny recalled this friendship in an interview granted to the French daily LE MONDE, published yesterday.

The head of state said he has known Francois Mitterrand for a long time. After noting that he had been a deputy at the Palais Bourbon for 14 years, he said: I was in permanent contact with my colleagues at the National Assembly, the senate and the French Union Assembly. I served in six French Governments as a minister without interruption and I know all the French political groups, both old and new.

In the interview, President Felix Houphouet-Boigny expressed the opinion that the poverty of Third World countries is the direct consequence of the selfishness and lack of imagination of the Western countries. He said that the outside world bears the greatest part of the responsibility for Africa's instability and that both the West and East are to blame. The Soviet people are consistent in their actions, continued President Houphouet-Boigny, they know that the communist virus dies out where happiness flourishes. Therefore, they do not agree to really help the Africans overcome underdevelopment because they do not want the establishment of happiness in Africa.

The Western countries worry me more because of their thoughtlessness, emphasized the head of state. In fact, the poverty of the Third World is the direct consequence of their self-fishness and lack of imagination. Instead of making the African Continent a vast market into which they can pour their own products, the Western countries are compromising the survival of our peoples through their negative attitude.

The head of state also discussed the North-South relations and reaffirmed his support for the liberal system. After condemning the permanent dupery in the economic relations between the developed and underdeveloped countries, President Houphouet-Boigny--who said that he prefers liberalism when it respects other people's interests--stated that because of foreign speculation on the cocoa market, the Ivorian planters will see their revenues reduced by half this year. In fact, he emphasized, Ivory Coast's earnings through the exportation of cocoa have fallen from 700 to 350 billion CFA francs.

Presidents' Comments

AB092135 Abidjan Domestic Service in French 2000 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Presidents Felix Houphouet-Boigny and Francois Mitterrand today held talks for more than 3 hours at the Elysee. At the center of their talks were the various problems confronting France and the Ivory Coast. After the meeting, the French head of state said that he was impressed by Felix Houphouet-Boigny.

[Begin Mitterrand recording] I very much wanted to receive my friend, President Felix Houphouet-Boigny, and I must say that because of our long-standing friendship, I very much wanted him to be the first head of state from black Africa to visit me here at the Elysee. We were able to discuss several matters as we held a face-to-face talk which lasted more than 3 hours. We had a lot of things to say to each other, not only memories to recall. We had to discuss the future of our two countries, of Africa and Europe, of peace in the world. And on these views, it is always fortunate for a French president to be able to hear the views and advise of experience as expressed by President Felix Houpouet-Boigny. [end recording]

For President Felix Houphouet-Boigny, the entire Ivory Coast has been honored. The head of state then expressed hopes of seeing some changes with the coming to power of Francois Mitterrand as the head of France.

[Begin Houphouet-Boigny recording] President Mitterrand has, in a two-fold manner, honored my country by personally receiving me, its president, but also, as it has just been stressed, by me being the first African head of state to visit him at the beginning of his 7-year mandate. My visit is within the framework of continuing the permanent, old and extremely close relations between our two countries. President Mitterrand, if we can recall memories, was of great help to me in my political life in France. Today, my visit is to strengthen our relations and to discuss the great problems which the developed countries, particularly the Western countries, and the developing countries must approach in a constructive manner, without any harmful feelings and with wisdom and realism as well as respect for each other's interests. We had an extensive political discussion and, as the president said, I am very happy to tell you that I am satisfied about the similarity in our views concerning the various problems which we discussed. I am leaving very comforted because I was able to hear from him the hope that he has been able to nurture--and not just in your country--but we have the feeling, on leaving here, that France is full of hope.

PRESIDENT READY TO MEET JAPANESE SOCIALIST

OW100119 Tokyo KYODO in English 0054 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 9 Jul (KYODO)--French President Francois Mitterrand said Thursday he is ready to hold talks with Ichio Asukata, head of the Japan Socialist Party (JSP), if Asukata visits Paris.

Mitterrand made the remark when he met with Seiichi Katsumata, head of the JSP's Socialism Theory Center, at the presidential palace. During the meeting, Katsumata delivered a letter from Asukata, in which the JSP leader expressed his hope to make a goodwill visit to Paris prior to Mitterrand's official visit to Japan expected late this year or early next year. The JSP chairman said in the letter he also wishes to meet Mitterrand in Tokyo during his visit to Japan.

Katsumata and his party are touring the West European nations to study the present situation of European socialism and social democratic parties in Britain, France, Spain, Italy, and West Germany. He met with Willy Brandt, chairman of the Social Democratic Party of West Germany, in Strasbourg, western France, Thursday, and was briefed by Brandt on the outcome of his recent talks with Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev in Moscow.

OFFICIALS SEE CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC LEADER

AB082106 Bangui Domestic Service in French 1830 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Text] The [CAR] prime minister and head of the government, Simon Narcisse Bozanga, is still in France and talking with French officials. Last Monday, Bozanga discussed French-CAR cooperation with (?Rigout) and the Socada [as heard] problem with (Touleschou). The CAR head of government later met with the president of the Paris Chamber of Commerce. The action of French investors and revival of the CAR economy were at the center of their talks.

In the afternoon, a luncheon was given for Simon Narcisse Bozanga by the French secretary of state in charge of the interior, with whom he reviewed the political, economic and social situation in our country. The secretary of state for [word indistinct] and the transport minister also held a working session later in the afternoon at the French Cooperation Ministry.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON FRENCH-SPANISH CONTACTS

PM091442 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Better Atmosphere Between Paris and Madrid?"]

[Text] France has a duty to help Spanish democracy not only by words but by actions, Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo's entourage was saying in substance on the eve of his visit to Paris. Did the Madrid government chief find reasons for satisfaction in his talks with Francois Mitterrand, Pierre Mauroy and Claude Cheysson on Thursday, 2 July? In any case, before returning to Madrid, he said that he is leaving Paris "with hope," and that it is best to wait and see what happens over the next few weeks to make sure that this hope will not turn to "frustration."

Calvo-Sotelo came mainly to ask the French Government to give Madrid more help in its struggle against terrorism in the Basque country and to remind it of his position on the French objections to Spain's candidacy for EEC membership. On the first point, he did not leave emptyhanded. It was decided in particular that Interior Minister Gaston Defferre would visit Madrid very soon for talks with his Spanish counterpart Juan Jose Roson, while Robert Badinter, keeper of the seals, would meet in Paris with his Spanish counterpart Francisco Fernandez Ordonez. Therefore, it was decided that contact will be maintained in police and justice issues.

This is not a negligible point. The Spanish often have bitterly complained about Basque extremists all too readily finding refuge north of the border--a border which is exceptionally easy to cross and which, moreover, they do not recognize. In ETA's [Basque Fatherland and Liberty] own ranks, care has been taken not to take the battle being waged in the south into north Euskadi, at least not in the near future: The organization feels it needs a "sanctuary" free from violence (although attacks by an extreme rightwing Spanish group on refugees have troubled the calm French Basque country on several occasions) and free from a major police network. Therefore, better coordination between the police forces has long been considered necessary in Madrid.

In the legal sphere, however, Calvo-Sotelo did not manage to persuade his interlocutors to extradite 11 alleged Basque terrorists now being detained in France--an extradition which Madrid is demanding. Mauroy's remarks on France's determination to remain a "country of asylum" and the rumors now circulating in Basque nationalist circles on this side of the border even suggest that Paris will ultimately turn down the extradition application. This attitude, if it were to become the rule, would be in keeping with the reservations, not to say strong reprobation, which the notion of a European judicial area had aroused in the ranks of the French left. But it will probably pose many diplomatic problems in Paris, especially with regard to Italy.

As for Spain's entry into EEC, Cheysson reassured his visitor, although he did not deny that some obstacles remain. The external relations minister stressed that Community reforms should make it possible to lift the objections and that those reforms would be discussed as soon as possible. But France still thinks that, in the present state of affairs, Spain cannot be involved in such a debate, at least not officially.

NEWSPAPERS VIEW EC SESSION, MITTERRAND ROLE

LE MONDE Editorial

PM060946 Paris LE MONDE in French 2 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: Putting His Heart and Soul Into Europe"]

[Text] The prudence of the European Council session which ended in Luxembourg on Tuesday [30 June] illustrates how little the Ten are inclined to act in solidarity in present circumstances. Mitterrand's message inviting his partners to give Europe a resolutely social dimension is not about to be taken up.

The views put forward in Luxembourg showed that France on the one hand and Germany and the United Kingdom on the other are in disagreement on many points: on the economic policies which must be implemented internally in the attempt to find a way out of the crisis, on the actions which should possibly be taken at Community level (Thatcher and Schmidt do not favor the idea of collective consideration of reducing working hours) and even on how to talk to the Americans and the Japanese at the Ottawa summit. Economic and monetary cooperation, which took a considerable step forward in 1978 and 1979 with the establishment of the European Monetary System, once again seems at a standstill.

The debate on revising budgetary rules and on reforming the Common Agricultural Policy--a debate which will take place in the fall around the report which the Commission has just submitted to the Ten--can only emphasize the antagonisms. The British will approach it with the undisguised desire to be finished with the present system, which is unfavorable to them, once and for all.

Mitterrand insisted that this agricultural and budgetary debate should be embarked on without losing sight of the general orientations which each country would like to impose on the Community. Will he be able to "put his heart and soul into Europe"--a wish he expresses in these pages--and display within Europe the "capacity for new stimulation" which his spokesmen so ardently seek"? Hoping for it doesn't entirely amount to an act of faith.

In fact, despite the disagreements and fears to which the French Socialists' program gives rise in some respects, their partners are not unaware of the European commitment which they proclaim. Several French ministers have referred to proposals made by the Commission. Mitterrand himself has described as excellent Commission Chairman Thorn's suggestion to invite the current President of the Council to report to the Strasbourg parliament on his work. An old demand of the parliamentarians is thus satisfied--which would hardly have been conceivable only 2 months ago.

Thanks to this new way of talking, this European willingness whose sincerity is not disputed and which is rather surprising after years of critical skepticism, the French Government has earned a stock of sympathy among its partners, which serves as a useful counterweight to the concern aroused by its economic orientation.

LE FIGARO Editorial

PM072112 Paris LE FIGARO in French 1 Jul 81 p 1

[Serge Maffert editorial: "Axis Broken"]

[Text] The Paris-Bonn axis no longer exists within the European Ten. This political and economic pivot round which the European Community functioned for years has not survived Mitterrand's election.

That is the situation today following the European Council meeting in Luxembourg. This does not mean that friendship and cooperation between France and Germany are things of the past. That is certainly not true, but a specific style in bilateral relations and, more especially, the joint "control" of European meetings has disappeared.

Of course, Mrs Thatcher intends to take advantage of the situation and will strive to ensure that the United Kingdom replaces France as the FRG's partner. It is not certain that she will succeed because the three countries' respective situations are markedly less simple than they seem.

The Luxembourg discussions highlighted two opposing concepts of economic management. The first group comprises the advocates of pure, conventional free market policy combined with stringent control of public finances, giving priority to the struggle against inflation. These are essentially Britain, the FRG and The Netherlands.

The second group, whose spokesman was Mitterrand, advocated a more voluntarist policy, giving priority to the struggle against unemployment and to economic recovery through consumption. These are essentially France and Belgium, with Italy and Denmark a little behind them.

Thatcher and Schmidt regard a social Europe as a dangerous dream. As for aid for Third World development, to which France attaches fundamental importance, London and Bonn seem to view it as part of a useless utopia.

This is therefore a fundamental doctrinal difference of opinion. We must see how it evolves during the practical negotiations on Community problems.

The groupings are different on other subjects. For instance, Mrs Thatcher is isolated on the question of negotiations on limiting Euromissiles. The FRG, France, The Netherlands and Italy have, on the contrary, agreed to demand that negotiations be opened as soon as possible.

There is again France-Britain opposition with regard to the Middle East. The French president is proposing a "gradual policy" and is taking Camp David and the Israeli-Egyptian peace into account. The British prime minister is adhering to the all-embracing approach in the form adopted in Venice last year. In this affair, the FRG is again closer to Paris than to London.

However, these considerations should not disguise the essential point which should be the Ten's determination to promote the process of European building. In this respect, over and above economic theory, the two groups of states mentioned above embody two different concepts of the Community, some regarding it as open and vague, others as united and voluntarist. In short, more than ever before there are those who believe in Europe and those who do not.

SPARE PARTS FOR PATROL BOATS SENT TO IRAN

NC071850 Paris AFP in English 1813 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] Cherbourg, France, 7 Jul (AFP) Thirty-five tons of spare parts for patrol boats built for Iran were loaded on board an Iranian air lines cargo plane here today.

The parts are meant both for ships already delivered to Iran and for three other craft scheduled to leave France in the near future. The parts are non-military, according to the shipyard.

REPORTAGE ON FOREIGN MINISTER'S TUNISIA VISIT

For Tunis media and AFP coverage of Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson's 5-6 July visit to Tunisia, including accounts of his statements at a luncheon and news conference, in addition to the joint press statement issued at the end of his visit, see the Tunisia subsection of the North Africa section of the 7 and 9 July Middle East and Africa DAILY REPORT.

SENATE GIVES SPADOLINI CABINET VOTE OF CONFIDENCE

AU091537 Roma ANSA in English 1520 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Rome, 9 Jul (ANSA)--The Italian Senate today accorded a vote of confidence to the new five-party Cabinet of Premier Spadolini. Of the 306 senators voting, 182 cast ballots in favor of the government while 124 were opposed. The majority needed was 154 votes.

More on Vote

NC091412 Paris AFP in English 1403 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 9 Jul (AFP)--The Government of Italy's new Republican Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini won a vote of confidence in the Senate today by a comfortable majority of 188 to 124. Most of the opposition votes can from Italy's powerful Communist Party. The new coalition groups the four parties toppled by the P-2 Masonic lodge scandal; the Christian Democrats, the Socialists, the Social Democrats and Mr Spadolini's Republicans, plus the tiny Liberal Party, a secular centre-right formation.

Laying out his programme to the Senate on Tuesday, Mr Spadolini, who came to politics late in life after a successful career as a journalist and university professor, insisted on three top priorities. He listed these as a drive to restore morality and respect to the political world, notably by getting to the bottom of the deep-reaching P-2 scandal, a merciless fight against terrorism--using the successful technique of persuading extremists to defect and talk--and a determined battle to pull Italy out of an economic situation he described on taking office as "catastrophic".

The Communist Party, despite voting against the government in the Senate today, has voiced approval of the basic lines of the programme drawn up by Mr Spadolini, the first non-Christian Democrat premier for 35 years in a country where political issues regularly take a Catholic versus secular slant.

Luciano Barca, a prominent member of the Communist group in Parliament, wrote this week in the magazine RINASCITA (REBIRTH) that he "had no qualms about recognizing convergences between Mr Spadolini's aims and Communist Party viewpoints", notably on the reform of state institutions and the battle against "all occult powers".

Taking the floor in the Senate today, Communist Eduardo Perna threw in some approval with a critique of the new government. He told Mr Spadolini: "We want to give you credit for your intentions, despite the way you shared out ministry appointments"--seen to have still favoured the Christian Democrats. The strongest criticism was reserved for the government's three-year economic programme.

Liberal Senator Giovanni Malagodi, whose party refused to join the previous government, described Mr Spadolini's programme as "the begining of a new trend".

Mr Spadolini must now win the approval of the lower house, expected to vote on Saturday.

RED BRIGADES SET DEMANDS FOR OFFICIAL'S RELEASE

NC091329 Paris AFP in English 1304 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Naples, Italy, 9 Jul (AFP)--Local Christian Democratic leader Ciro Cirillo, kidnapped by the Red Brigades on April 27, will be executed unless two demands are met, according to a message today reputedly from the terrorist group. A journalist for the newspaper IL MATTINO said the message was found after an anonymous tip from a caller who said Mr Cirillo would be executed following a "fair proletarian trial" conducted by the Red Brigades.

The message said Mr Cirillo would die unless the government provides work for the unemployed and requisitions empty houses belonging to employers to shelter victims of the earthquake that shook southern Italy last winter. The Red Brigades accused Mr Cirillo of responsibility for the deportation of workers from this south-central coastal city.

The message on his possible excution came three days after another of the group's hostages, Giuseppe Taliercio, director of the chemicals and textile giant Montedison, was found dead. But the Red Brigades had set no conditions for sparing the executive's life.

Besides Mr Cirillo, the Red Brigades is holding Renzo Sandrucci, and executive for Alfa-Romeo, and Roberto Peci, whose brother Patrizio was a former Brigades member who later testified against his colleagues.

Cirillo Death Sentence

AU091534 Rome ANSA in English 1523 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 9 Jul (ANSA)--The Red Brigades urban guerrillas today announced they have sentenced to death Naples regional councilman Ciro Cirillo whom they kidnapped on April 27. An anonymous tip to [words indistinct] announcing the decision to kill Cirillo.

The communique said the "people's" trial against Cirillo "has ended and the death sentence against this hangman is the just sentence in this class-divided society." The communique was accompanied by a snapshot of the councilman with behind him a banner of the guerrillas' five-pointed star symbol.

The kidnappers, however, left a glimmer of hope for Cirillo's safe release. "Cirillo's fate is now up to the regime's willingness to satisfy the just demands of the alienated proletariat."

The Red Brigades demand that empty apartments in the region be requisitioned for the homeless and that the "needs" of the jobless be "satisfied."

The communique also mentioned Monday's slaying in Venice of Montedison executive Giuseppe Taliercio, whose bullet-riddled body was found in a car trunk 47 days after he was kidnapped by the Red Brigades, saying it was "the just conclusion of a proletarian trial" against the hostage. The Red Brigades also have another hostage, Alfa Romeo executive Renzo Sandrucci of Milan. The kidnappers have demanded that the automaker re-hire laid-off workers in exchange of the executive's release.

RED BRIGADES FACTIONS SPLIT ON RECENT KILLING

NC091832 Paris AFP in English 1822 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 9 Jul (AFP)--The Rome division of the Red Brigades terrorist group today denounced the killing of industrialist Giuseppe Taliercio on Monday by the Brigades' Venetian section, saying the murder did not conform with "the line of the organization." Mr Talierco was killed after being held captive for 46 days.

The Rome Red Brigades have previously disagreed with the "Walter Alassia" division in Milan, considered more hardline.

L'UNITA ON DECISION NOT TO ATTEND MOSCOW MEETING

PM091352 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 7 Jul 81 p 11

[Text] Rome--Yesterday in Moscow saw the start of a meeting organized by PRAVDA on the role of communist newspapers "in the struggle for peace and detente." The meeting, which is being attended by representatives of 67 communist press organs of the world, began with an introduction from PRAVDA editor Afanasyev and a speech by Ponomarev, who illustrated Soviet assessments and options on the international plane.

The meeting is not being attended by representatives of the press organs of several communist parties, including the Italian, French, Yugoslav, Spanish and Swedish parties.

L'UNITA decided against attending because, in the Italian Communists' view, the struggle for peace demands the development of a line capable of creating a political and cultural alignment comprising not only the various components of the workers movement, but also other peace-loving forces. This is the essential condition for achieving tangible results benefiting detente, putting an end to the arms race and achieving arms reduction based on the principle of balance at the lowest possible level. To this end, there seems to be no useful purpose in the collegial meeting underway in Moscow. Of course, independent of any outlook based on an organization that does not exist and cannot be revived, L'UNITA is still interested in and willing to conduct exchanges of experiences and relations of friendship with other communist parties' press organs.

NUCLEAR OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON IRAQI REACTOR

PM081035 Kuwait AL-WATAN in Arabic 29 Jun 81 p 5

[Interview granted by Umberto Colombo, chairman of the Italian National Nuclear Energy Committee, to Samir al-Qarvuti in Rome--date not given]

[Excerpts] AL-WATAN: Mr Chairman, what are the real objectives of the Iraqi nuclear reactor, and is it true that Iraq was preparing to manufacture an atomic bomb?

Colombo: Allow me first to give a brief introduction before we get into details. When we deal with any party, we give it our full trust because we uphold the justice of the principle of facilitating the spread of nuclear power for peaceful purposes throughout the world, provided that this is governed by international agreements and treaties and based on the international Atomic Energy Agency [AEA] regulations.

It is from precisely this angle that we look upon the Iraqi nuclear plan, which is based, first, on the establishment of research reactors and, second, on the training of technicians in the various fields that will enable them to operate "power" reactors for the production of energy when the oil runs out.

Iraq has been implementing its program for peaceful purposes, and it gave evidence of this when it signed the nuclear nonproliferation treaty and complied with all the conditions and stipulations, as well as when it agreed with us and the French on pursuing the guarantees that ensure for the two countries providing the necessary technology that there will be no change in the objectives of the sensitive technological material. Therefore, I absolutely do not believe that Iraq was preparing to produce an atomic bomb.

AL-WATAN: Israel claims that it has destroyed the Iraqi nuclear reactor completely and that it has bombed the reactor's secret tunnels, where it alleged that the Iraqis were preparing to produce an atomic bomb.

Colombo: The underground tunnels are only one of the necessary installations of a nuclear reactor where practical tests for operating the reactor are carried out. Tunnels exist in all research reactors operating in the world today. The existence of tunnels is something quite ordinary; unlike what some might think, they are not fortified bunkers but ordinary laboratories whose nuclear activity make it necessary to attach them to such complex installations in order to carry out tests. There were tunnels at the Tammuz reactor, but the distorted things that were said about their purpose and nature must be refuted. I would like to say that entry to these tunnels is quite free at all the nuclear reactors with which I am personally acquainted.

With regard to the story about destroying the nuclear reactor, matters are not quite like that. The reactor did suffer severe damage that will make it impossible to repair it immediately. That will take a very long time. I must honestly say that, if the reactor is to be rebuilt, then I would advise that it be built underground so that it cannot again be the target of a raiding plane.

AL-WATAN: Mr Chairman, excuse my insistence. Was Iraq in a position to manufacture an atomic bomb before the Israeli raid, particularly since Israeli propaganda insists on this story?

Colombo: Everyone must answer on the basis of what he knows and not on the basis of rumors. As far as I know and have actually seen, I believe that Iraq would have been able in 10 or 15 years' time to enter all the fields of nuclear know-how enabling it to produce an atomic bomb. Let us put aside the question of whether or not the Iraqis want to produce an atomic bomb. The necessary know-how is not available to them, particularly the processing of fuel and plutonium fission. The U.S. Rand Corporation's suggestion that Iraq would have been able to manufacture an atomic bomb in 6 months or at the most 1 year is wrong. I really would like to know on what material evidence the Americans base such claims.

AL-WATAN: Why do the Americans insist on waging a campaign against Iraqi-Italian cooperation in the field of nuclear energy?

Colombo: I would be very glad to know why. Why do the Americans not say a word about Israel if they are so afraid of plutonium fission? I would say that there is a possibility that Israel today is in possession of a "military nuclear device," but nobody points to or interferes in Israel's affairs. I wonder why we are all supposed to accept the principle of attacking others on the basis of some fabricated assumptions instead of dealing with the obvious fact, which is that Israel, in my view, today possesses an atomic bomb.

AL-WATAN: According to Egyptian President Anwar as-Sadat, Israel currently has 27 atomic bombs.

Colombo: I really do not know of their existence, but I would say that a country like Israel, which has taken actions to secure the necessary fuel, has refused to sign the nonproliferation treaty, refuses to accept international guarantees in this regard, and has a research reactor--a country such as this must immediately be the focus of attention, rather than countries that have signed international treaties.

Otherwise, we will be facing a kind of racism that allows one side to do what it wants and does not allow the others to do anything. We here in Italy are against any kind of racism.

AL-WATAN: Do you believe that this Israeli aggression will affect the present Iraqi-Italian cooperation and the future of Arab-Italian relations in this field in the future?

Colombo: Never. It will absolutely not affect such cooperation. I have sent a telegram to Dr al-Hashimi, deputy chairman of the Iraqi Nuclear Authority and the actual director of the nuclear program there, saying that Italy is prepared to continue cooperation between the two countries. At the same time, we must thoroughly and carefully think of the means and methods of such cooperation, first, in order to ensure the peaceful objectives of nuclear activity and, second, so that we do not allow the recurrence of the type of violent intervention which happened in early June. All precautions and clear-cut guarantees must be adopted, and the role of the IAEA must be underlined, so that we can continue bilateral cooperation with full reassurance and a clear conscience.

AL-WATAN: A few weeks before the Israeli attack on Iraq there was an intensive debate in the United States about the possibility of so-called terrorist movements' obtaining or manufacturing atomic bombs. We know that Gen Alexander Haig describes all the liberation movements and countries hostile to U.S. policy as terrorist. Is there any basis for such U.S. claims?

Colombo: It is difficult to answer this question exactly. A year ago (Imoly Lovinz) published several articles in the U.S. magazine FOREIGN AFFAIRS in an attempt to establish, based on analysis, that the publication and printing of many declassified documents relating to nuclear research permits any party to manufacture an atomic bomb if it can overcome the heavy financial expense of doing so.

I do not know how far those people engaged in the debate you mentioned have exploited these analyses and speculations. They are in fact partly correct assumptions.

Let us go back to Iraq. That country has prepared a comprehensive program for the development of nuclear research and declared that its objectives are purely peaceful and that it does not intend to manufacture an atom bomb. A confusion occurred here which, in my view, was due purely to a psychological factor. This confusion led to misunderstandings about Iraq's intention in the nuclear project. I will explain this to you more clearly:

Some time ago the French wanted to prime the Iraqi reactor with a fuel known as "caramel fuel," which is not fissionable. The Iraqis rejected this. Here some people drew the conclusion that Iraq wanted to manufacture an atomic bomb. This rumor was played up. I personally know the character and psychology of our Iraqi friends and colleagues. They, of course, felt that this was an affront to them. They felt that the real concern was not over the manufacture of an atomic bomb; rather, they saw themselves doubted and under suspicion. I would say that the Iraqi discontent over this was justifiable.

If Iraq really wanted to manufacture an atomic bomb it would have been able to do so quietly and secretly, but it declared more than once that its program was peaceful. Iraq has carried out its program under all the conditions agreed and given clear guarantees under the supervision of our Italian experts as well as the French experts.

PASOK POLICY DECLARATION; PAPANDREOU STATEMENT

NC061708 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 5 Jul 81 pp 7, 8

[PASOK declaration of government policy and statement by PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou; date not given--passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] On the occasion of the release of PASOK's declaration of government policy, the official opposition leader and PASOK chairman, Andreas Y. Papandreou, made the following statement:

"Knowing the importance of historical moments, I address myself to the Greek people to present PASOK's declaration of government policy following its approval by the movement's Central Committee.

"This declaration is based on our government program and in broad lines is the framework of the program. It constitutes a democratic proposal to the people for power, so that they may carry out change themselves with PASOK in control of the government. For us, it is a contract that is open to dialogue with social and trade union organizations.

"For this purpose, and so that it may become the people's property, in addition to publishing the full text of the declaration, it has been found advisable to publish it in installments. In this way the course we have chosen for the fulfillment of our vision, the vision that stands for the expectations of generations and generations of Greek people, will become more obvious and crystal clear.

"Today, as the first phase, we release part one, which contains our overall principles, course and goals. It includes the vision and the course of change, and it defines our identity. It constitutes an imprint of the society we are aiming for, the road which we shall follow and the forces on which we shall depend. Next come our strategic choices for NATIONAL INDEPENDENCE, PEOPLE'S SOVEREIGNTY AND DEMOCRACY AND SOCIAL LIBERATION, that is, the social transformation of our society. In these strategic choices, our goal and the principles that define our road are clearly stipulated. Next, we give in concise form our own model, our own strategy for the development of a self-supporting, self-consolidated economic and social development.

"Part one ends with a crucial chapter that analyzes the linking and the unity of steps and measures we shall take in pursuit of our strategic goals; the tempo of the course and changes and the criteria which define this tempo; and the priorities that we shall assign in the various fields and to institutional and structural changes.

"Part two, which will be published next, presents the framework of our government program with the goals and the basic measures for the specific major issues of national, political, social and cultural life of our country.

"After the declaration of government policy is published completely, the full text will be published, and then specialized programs for basic fields (such as education, health, environment and so forth) will also be published.

"This methodology in presentation is not coincidental. We really ask the people to study, step by step, our principles, goals, aims and the measures that we shall take.

"We also want to make it clear that this program, which is the result and the outcome of our experience from our struggles alongside the people, will tomorrow form the framework and the guide for their own mobilization, participation and initiative.

"This is so because, together with the people, we shall advance toward a great victory in the forthcoming elections.

"This is so because, together with the people, we shall march democratically, responsibly and resolutely toward the administration of the country and the exercise of power.

"The policy and the preferences of conservatism and reaction will be set aside. The popular forces and PASOK will advance toward great change, and they will be victorious."

Introduction: In View of the Elections and Victory; PASOK in the Government, the People in Power

The time for big change has come to our country. The people are determined to take power in their own hands and lead the country to a future that will respond to the vision of so many generations.

In the forthcoming critical elections, elections of great hope for the people and the nation, the battle will be waged between change and conservatism, between national independence and foreign dependency, between development and decline, between cultural renaissance and cultural estrangement.

This battle, the battle of democracy, will be waged by the Greek people, all the working people, farmers, workers, employees, professionals, artisans, the middle class, scientists, intellectuals, artists, youth and women. This is why there will be a crushing victory, a victory that will bring about a self-dependent government and the possibility to realize a program of change.

With PASOK in government and the people in power, the avenue leading to a nationally proud and socially just Greece will be opened wide. [And also leading] toward an independent and democratic Greece where a long and lasting peace march will lead, through the participation of all the people and the efforts of the entire nation, to social liberation and to the socialist transformation of society.

After 50 years of rightwing rule in this country, with very few lucid intervals and the people in the corner, the time has come when the people will put the rightwing aside. The present historic conjuncture is not an incidental fact. It is the result and fruit of arduous and long efforts and struggles by the people who, in recent years, have found genuine political expression in the Panhellenic Socialist Movement [PASOK].

The initiative of Andrea Y. Papandreou, the establishment of PASOK on 3 September 1974, has incarnated the aspirations and desired of the people for freedom and democracy. A democratic and militant organization has been built day by day with the people's spontaneous response.

With its crystal principles and responsible work, PASOK has, in a few years, rallied together the broadest people's classes. We have fought alongside the people at their places of work, where they live and at their places of education, in the kiln of the masses' movement.

The great change, our vision, has become the people's message and hope. The 1977 elections were a new starting point to victory. Battles have been waged both inside and outside the Chamber of Deputies to protect the people's interests, which have been affected more and more by the rightwing's policy. The regrettable inability of the rightwing governments as well as our regional and dependent economy have intensified in our country the results of the present deep crisis of world capitalism.

The working people, all underprivileged Greeks, have directly felt in their own life and fate the evils of cruel exploitation by the foreign and domestic oligarchy. They have confronted dictatorship and one-sided austerity without yielding. They have united their efforts by overcoming old prejudices.

Day by day, masses who were enclaved in the rightwing for years, without socially belonging to it, are joining the ranks of the members, friends and followers of the movement.

At the same time, fighters from the national resistance, the unyielding and the generation of the Polytechnic continue to rally in PASOK. Thus, the strategy of NATIONAL PEOPLE'S UNITY, which constitutes a necessity for the nation and our people, is clearly vindicated.

National issues, the Cyprus tragedy, the threat in the Aegean and their handling by the rightwing have clearly revealed to the people who is truly patriotic and who is exploiting the motherland. Moreover, these issues have revealed the consequences of political dependency and subjugation.

In the present difficult times for mankind, the big initiatives by PASOK for peace--in the East and the West, in the South and the North--and its all-sided international recognition have proved to the people the meaning of a multifaceted, nonaligned foreign policy and how substantive international props can be utilized tomorrow without any dependency.

The present developments on the international stage are significant. Particularly in Europe, the recent triumph of the socialist forces of change in France constitutes an additionally encouraging element for every socialist and for every democratic and progressive person. However, it also constitutes our conviction and fundamental principle that change in our country is a question of the Greek people themselves. This very conviction constitutes the main source of optimism for the success of the future PASOK government.

The feeling of responsibility is growing in the face of the critical national, economic, social and political problems we are inheriting from the rightwing. However, we are certain of success because we have ensured tomorrow's assistance and support of the people. The multifaceted people's participation is a key point. We will rely on that, and it is in that direction that we have worked all these years.

We have already laid down a responsible government strategy and a program that is the crystallization of our experiences and activities within the people. This program, with the people's participation and initiative, will be enriched and implemented with consistency and resoluteness. Today's declaration of government policy is based on this program and presents its framework in broad lines.

PART ONE: PRINCIPLES, PROGRESS AND DIRECTIONS

I. COURSE FOR CHANGE--PASOK'S IDENTITY

1. The state of national independence of peoples' sovereignty and social liberation and of socialist transformation constitute the vision for the great change.

We are striving for a Greece where the decisions will be made by the people themselves without foreign dependence, influence or intervention; for a just society where the exploitation of man and his separation from the product of his labor will cease; for a man who will be complete spiritually and culturally, who will be able to creatively develop his initiatives within a truly free society without anguish and without suppression.

This vision, as well as the course toward its fulfillment, define PASOK's ideology and physiognomy.

The great options which affect the forging of a long-term and highly inspired course toward socialist transformation are of a decisive strategic importance and in the end influence the goals themselves, the vision itself. These options provide the answer to vital questions related to the principles which define our course, related to the social forces which support the effort, related to the levels of change and with the criteria which define the priorities and the tempo of change. Our strategic differences--both in respect to goals and to course--with other organizations are very lucidly explained in this very forging of the course toward socialism.

The vision and the course are the inseparable entity that gives the movement its identity and unity and adherence to struggle.

2. We represent and we express the interests of all nonprivileged Greeks. The farmers, workers, wage-earners, professionals, artisans, small and medium-size businessmen, scientists, men of letters and artists, as well as youth and women, are objects for exploitation by the foreign and local economic oligarchy.

Our country's position on the fringes of world capitalism, now strengthened through our accession to the EEC, gives increasing strength with each passing day to large-scale foreign and local capital in its efforts to exploit ever widening classes of our people. The capitalist crisis leaves no margins for exceptions, and it no longer offers opportunities to the ruling class to cede alleged privileges and to cultivate division.

Militant unification was and remains the only recourse for our people. With PASOK as the center for unification and PASOK as the representative of change, we will forge an inseparable and equal alliance of the nonprivileged within the framework of national people's unity. With these social forces, with this cohesion and unity, with PASOK in the country's government, the people will proceed toward the realization of change.

3. The fundamental comparison of our basic directions with the policy of the rightwing and with today's stark Greek reality defines the content and tempo of change.

The political, military and economic dependence on non-Greek decisionmaking centers; the disregard or suppression of the people's political will; economic and social suppression; political undermining; the "unplanned" and irresponsible "development"--ruin--of the countryside; the asphyxiation of the cities; these are the fruits of the policy of the rightwing with its 50-year-long monocracy.

The basic goals and directions of PASOK are the following:

--National independence and defense of our territorial integrity;
--People's sovereignty and democracy;
--Self-supporting and balanced economic and social development;
--Cultural and spiritual revival;
--Revitalization of the countryside;
--Higher quality of life in the city and the village;
--Social justice and final social liberation of the worker, the woman and the nonprivileged.

4. Our course is a Greek course.

Socialist transformation, as PASOK has envisioned and forged it, does not copy alien models. The experiences of others help us utilize whatever we consider suitable to the degree that this can be adjusted to the conditions, traditions, structures and needs of our country.

Within the framework of its own nonaligned course, the movement cooperates closely and productively with the socialist and progressive forces of every country. The international radiation of PASOK definitely demonstrates that its political options have started to be used by the socialist movements of Europe and particularly by the countries whose development and position within the world economic and social structure are similar to ours.

PASOK's militant efforts on matters of national independence have made it a link which connects national liberation movements with the socialist forces of southern Europe. We thus aspire to make Greece the crossroads of cooperation and friendship among the peoples of the Balkans, the Mediterranean and Europe without interventions and dependency.

5. Our course passes through radical changes in the system of values and structures.

Many confuse, whether deliberately or not, change with arrangements that leave the supports of the rightwing untouched. For them, change means better functioning within today's structures. For us, change means that authority is transferred from foreign decisionmaking centers to the nation, from the wealthy oligarchy to the people. It means that social interest predominates every time it clashes with profit. The course of socialist transformation in addition also passes through eradication of bureaucracy and supracentralization. They are replaced by democratic planning and decentralization.

6. Our course is peaceful and democratic.

PASOK is deeply dedicated to the democratic processes. We consider them a basic prerequisite for guaranteeing and defending socialist change. Deviation from legal boundaries, resort to force and to oppression lead to the subjugation of the workers under new nobility, no matter who they may be.

In the same way that we will reach authority through peaceful and democratic means, so will we proceed democratically to its utilization for the purpose of achieving change, and we will decisively protect people's sovereignty and the democratic institutions.

II. NATIONAL INDEPENDENCE

7. Our national revival depends on the principle that our national independence is a prerequisite for the realization of popular sovereignty, democracy and social liberation. National independence is inseparable from popular sovereignty and from democracy in every facet of the country's life; simultaneously, it forms the basis for ridding society of the control of the foreign and "local" monopolistic capital. Finally, it is directly connected with our cultural course, with the resistance of the nation and the people to the erosion that has been introduced by foreigners and that threatens our people's customs, habits and traditions.

8. Our national independence cause has passed through our people's hard national liberation and defense struggles, which have achieved national liberation and integrity and the charting of our country's borders, safeguarded today by international treaties. However, not to this day has our country managed to shake off the chains of dependence. The policy of the ruling class, the policy of the rightwing, has not wanted to, and by nature could not, untie itself from its attachment to foreign centers--not even when it was common knowledge that our very territorial integrity was in jeopardy because of this policy.

9. Our country has no claims or demands over another country or over other people. However, our country itself is facing serious external dangers that must dictate the orientation of our foreign and defense policies. These dangers are so clear that, contrary to what might have happened during other eras in our history, there is no room for disregard or even a wrong assessment of our country's interests.

10. There is the concrete, guided Turkish threat against our national integrity and security. The claims, the provocations, the activities of Turkey leave no doubt as to its goals. The critical national deadlocks that have been brought about by the policy of the rightwing require a different strategy.

11. THE NATIONAL ISSUES AND THE STRATEGIC GOALS

The strategy for crucial national questions--such as Turkey's threat to the Aegean which is supported by the Atlantic alliance; the occupation of 40 percent of Cyprus by the Attila forces; the return to NATO with the simultaneous betraying of sovereign rights in the Aegean; the presence of foreign bases in our country that not only expose our country to the danger of annihilation in case of world war but also undermine national defense; the integration in the EEC which transfers the national options for economic and social development to alien decisionmaking centers--is linked with the following strategic goals:

SHAPING OF A NATIONAL DEFENSE POLICY

The defense of our national independence and territorial integrity has direct priority because, without this, there cannot be popular sovereignty or social transformation. At the same time, the defense organization and the firm stand on national sovereign rights discourages any threat and secures peace.

SHAPING OF AN INDEPENDENT, GENUINELY MULTIFACETED GREEK FOREIGN POLICY

The development of friendly relations on a worldwide scale and particularly in the Balkans, with the people of the Mediterranean, with Western and Eastern Europe and with the Arabic nation, which constitutes a dynamic factor in the world's progress.

ACTIVE CONTRIBUTION TO DETENTE, DISARMAMENT AND WORLD PEACE

The founding of a self-supporting and independent economic and social development within the framework of national democratic stresses, a development which will simultaneously support and strengthen the country's defense.

III. PEOPLE'S SOVEREIGNTY AND DEMOCRACY

12. The slogan "the people in power" prevails today in every corner of Greece. This slogan is a message, a macure people's goal as well as a top ideological-political position of PASOK.

The people's sovereignty constitutes the moving power as well as the guideline of change. At the same time, it also constitutes the quintessence of the movement's socialist content. Socialism is inconceivable without the constant strong presence of the people, without, finally, the exercise of authority by the people themselves. No decision concerning options in accomplishing strategic targets--whether about national independence or social liberation--can be promoted unless it has the people's broad consent, and cannot be realized without the people's participation and initiative.

The people in power presupposes that we will work with the people and not "in their name." This goal constitutes a decisive qualitative difference--of strategic importance--of the movement compared to a large spectrum of other parties that promise change in our era. The attainment of the people's sovereignty will constitute the first and biggest change ever to happen in our country.

13. The foundations of democracy are three: Parliament, local self-government, trade unionism.

The principle of people's sovereignty is firmly tied with the parliamentary regime and the existence of many parties; with many voices and freedom of expression. Adversities among classes and layers are not abolished with decrees or suppressed with prohibitions and blockades. The free political expression of adversities, the democratic dialogue, is a fundamental right as well as a factor for their transformation.

The peaceful shaking off of the chains that the ruling class has forged within the classes and layers of unprivileged Greeks does not mean that some other chains should be forged "in the name" of some other class or layer.

The Chamber of Deputies today is seriously degraded. PASOK considers its strengthening essential so that it may acquire a prestige that will allow it to play its role with determination.

14. Democracy is not completed with the expression of the people's desire alone, with the vote in the elections. At the same time, democracy is necessary in our everyday life. The people are participating decisively in the options over local issues in the local self-government while, at the same time, they demand and promote the solution of their problems by the trade union movement. By restricting the democratic institutions within a suffocating frame, limiting the people's initiative, and by applying partisanship in specific sectors of the state, the rightwing government has stripped democracy of its essence.

The power will become accessible to and a domain of the people by strengthening local self-government, decentralizing the state and by democratizing and raising the role of the trade union movement.

In order to complete democracy, it is also necessary that there should be a series of institutional changes and substantive measures of democratization in such basic sectors as education--which constitutes a foundation for change--justice, public administration and the mass media.

15. Within the framework of change, the place of the oppressive one-party rightwing state is assumed by a decentralized democratic state. With decentralization and democratic planning, powers are transferred from the central administration to the local organizations. The state machinery changes from an oppressor to a supporter of the people. The first essential stage of reconciliation between the people and the state passes through the implementation of equality before the law and equality of rights. Justice becomes a worthy stronghold of democracy. The democratic principle of separating the state from the ruling party and any other party is applied in a strict and resolute manner.

IV. SOCIAL LIBERATION

16. The country's democratization is a prerequisite as well as a fulfillment of people's sovereignty.

Over and above the freedom to judge and claim, and over and above the right to equal treatment and access to objectvive information, by utilizing the processes of democratic planning the people will define the direction and tempo of the country's social and economic development. In parallel with new organizations at the people's base and with cooperative organizations, the people will participate in, influence and decisively control these organizations. The democratic institutions of local self-government and the trade union movement firmly support these organizations.

At the same time, the cleansing and democratization of the public sector as well as the socialization of strategic sectors of the economy will liberate and mobilize the potential of the small and medium-size businessmen and promote the country's development in order to serve the people's needs. Planning that will originate with the people themselves, democratic planning, becomes the motivating power of the balanced development of human society, and elevates the productive process to a creative effort by the workers.

With self-administration replacing obligatory functions; with liberation and responsibility replacing force and oppression; with the activation of the human potential within the country; and with the correct utilization of resources, there will be new horizons for increasing the productivity of labor and for improving working conditions and the quality of life. People's sovereignty is inseparably connected to liberty and leads, through the steps of economic and social progress and through the redistribution of income, to social liberation and to the total social, economic and cultural liberation of man.

V. DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY

17. Our country has at its disposal both the natural resources and the human drive to improve the people's standard of living and quality of life through economic and social development without foreign dependencies.

18. With its policy, however, the rightwing has not only failed to utilize these possibilities but, on the contrary, has led our country into a deep economic crisis. This crisis is due to the structures of the system and to the model of dependent development which was imposed on our country by the ruling class. The results of the crisis multiply daily as a result of the decisions and the ineffectiveness of the rightwing governments.

"Development" in our country has been defined by the interests and goals of large-scale foreign and local capital and has been carried out contrary to the interests of the people, contrary to human rights and contrary to the dignity of the individual. The numerical increase shown on the economic indices until the crisis was overcome [as published] was achieved at a vast social and economic cost. The only goal of the course that was followed was the pursuit of profit.

The characteristics of dependent regional development are clearly evident in our country. Critical decisions affecting the productive process are dictated by foreign decisionmaking centers. There is no effective national control in the utilization of our country's resources. Education has been degraded. Research has not been developed. The thoughtless importation of foreign technology, without any possibility of choice, without any substructure for its utilization, has only increased dependence.

There has been a vast squandering of resources, a robbing exploitation of the mineral wealth, an exploitation of the labor potential and a destruction of the environment. Satisfaction of the collective social and cultural requirements has been sacrificed on the altar of profiteering. The excessive development of Athens and the ruination of the countryside have been accompanied by a disorganization of regional productive potential. Industrial development has been guided by the multinational businesses; it has been deliberately carried out without a plan and without coordination at the expense of Greek business initiative and in competition with the other sectors of the economy, especially agriculture.

The lack of an interconnection between foreign commercial relations and transactions related to domestic development has increased the gap in the balance of payments.

The inequality in the distribution of income has created an increase in the import of luxury goods sought and purchased by those with high incomes while, at the same time, the cuts for those with low incomes, who consume basic domestic products, strike at the small and medium-scale businesses. In this way, social injustice has increased and, at the same time, the foundation of productivity has been distorted.

OUR OWN STRATEGY FOR DEVELOPMENT

19. Our goal and fundamental option is self-supporting, self-consolidated development and reconstruction of our national territory.

20. This development is primarily based on the mobilization of our own forces, their rational utilization within national criteria, and on the continuous broadening of our own possibilities.

The full recording and the socially responsible exploitation of our resources and the utilization of Greek manpower, both inside and outside Greece, will be accompanied by systematic scientific research--research that will result in the sound choice and assimilation of foreign technology and create the prerequisites for the development of national technology.

Self-supporting development has no connection with "self-sufficiency" or economic isolation. The charting of our own road takes into consideration world economic conditions and the need for equal participation in international economic activities and exchanges. But, equality of relations is one thing, and subjection is another. Self-supporting development means that our economy should be freed from exploitation.

21. Development is not limited to and does not end with a quantitative increase. The element of quality constitutes a determining factor in our options. Economic goals are coordinated with and are mutually affected by social and cultural goals. From an object of exploitation, man becmomes master of his development and of his fate, within the framework of the society's possibilities.

22. Self-supporting development will promote dynamic branches of our economy. The various fields and branches should be coordinated in such a way that the results of investments will be increased. The vertical rise of production--that is, the development of industry at all levels, from raw materials to the final product--will strengthen the rate of increase in the national income and considerably increase the possibilities for employment. Production of consumer goods will be combined with and kept in step with the production of capital goods; at the same time, emphasis will be placed on those models of consumption that save foreign currency.

23. For the sake of reorganizing the regions, basic fields of the economy will be advanced in each region of the country, as far as possible, in a balanced way, with emphasis on the field with comparative advantages. A decentralized and comprehensive regional development presupposes an all-sided social and cultural development of the countryside.

24. Self-supporting development presupposes decisive participation by the working people and utilization of qualified potential. It presupposes, at the same time, the eradication of discord between those who make the decisions and those who are subjected to the consequences of the decisions.

25. Our new course will require institutional and structural changes. These changes, the long- and short-term goals, are faced with unity, consistency and continuity.

26. A basic lever for carrying out PASOK's self-supporting and equally balanced development policy will be democratic planning. Democratic planning will secure the people's decisive participation in the decisions which refer to the preparation, implementation and control over the development program--that is, in all the decisions that affect their interests and future. At the same time, popular participation means the broad decentralization of development activities which will provide the possibility for decisionmaking by the people, their representatives and their organizations at various levels.

27. The success of this effort is directly and firmly related to improving education, to strengthening the role of local self-government and decentralization, to cleansing public administration, and to advancing trade union and cooperative organizations through the creation of agricultural-industrial cooperatives and new organizations at the people's base. The socialized strategic sectors of the economy will also become levers for development. A radically different financial and credit policy will support the entire effort.

28. The course toward a self-supporting--self-centered--development is not without its problems. It is, however, the only course that can lead toward overcoming the present economic and social crisis, toward progress and social liberation, and that will assist in the establishment of national independence.

VI. UNITY, RHYTHM, PRIORITIES

29. The term of office of the first PASOK government will be particularly decisive. The start of the march and the laying of the foundations for change, for the completion of the effort, coincide with the current reality which is so full of deadends. We are, however, both determined and certain that we will overcome the great difficulties and the many-sided crisis which the rightwing is bequeathing to our country.

The international obligations and dependencies, economic and social crises, rotten structure within the state apparatus, anachronistic institutions, undermining activities, party spirit and handouts, bureaucratic structure, empty coffers and chaos in many sectors; all these are the main characteristics of the state of the rightwing.

30. On the other hand, there are the limitless powers of the people who have both the determination and the ability to proceed toward revival. By overcoming the differences that the rightwing has deliberately cultivated, and at the initiative of PASOK, a tight and closely knit equal alliance of the nonprivileged has been erected. This is national people's unity.

Despite the asphyxiating boundaries, the peoples forces have, in certain instances, advanced toward the first steps of a new organization in trade unionist activities, in local self-government, and even in the production sector. It is these efforts, and not the results--which cannot be judged under current conditions--that are another proof that the forces of the people have both the political desire and the correct course for changing the country's fate.

UNITY OF STEPS, CHANGES AND GOALS

31. With every step, all measures and intermediate options absorbed into our goals and within the general strategy. Handling the unacceptable current situation, overcoming the crisis, requires a series of responsible measures and careful steps. This, however, does not mean we will separate our actions into two phases--in other words, that we will first limit ourselves to handling the crisis better and later proceed to making structural changes.

Measures that help establish change not only fail to oppose but, on the contrary, decisively contribute toward overcoming the crisis. They are combined and coordinated, and assist the indirect measures in order to stop the downward slide. The illustrative presentation of facts which follows will demonstrate the cohesion between steps, changes and goals.

32. The policy aimed to end inflation and to help the economy come out of recession will primarily be based upon strengthening the market and productivity by bolstering the purchasing power of the people's classes. This policy will strengthen those who basically consume domestic products while at the same time it will contribute to the redistribution of income. This redistribution will limit the consumption of imported luxury products and the loss of foreign exchange, with immediate beneficial effects on the balance of foreign payments.

Over and above the need for measures on imports, the radical handling of the gap in the balance of foreign payments presupposes a strengthening and reorganization of high productivity investments which, in turn, will create new employment opportunities. The socialization of strategic sectors of the economy and particularly the first main measure, socialization of the credit system, of the banks, will liberate and open to utilization the vast potential of private initiative, the small and medium size businessmen, toward development which, at the same time, is a step which will lead toward socialist transformation.

Development of the cooperative organization will alter the relationship with production, by abolishing the isolation of the producer from the product of his labor and, at the same time, it will cut production costs; it will also abolish the middlemen, thus contributing toward easing the burden on the consumer, and will assist the anti-inflation policy. The organization at the people's base also will function for the same purpose and, at the same time, they will cut unemployment.

The companies at the people's base, particularly, will become the suitable organizations to welcome the human potential and will, simultaneously, utilize foreign exchange from emigrants and merchant seamen.

The redistribution of resources toward social consumption, toward social needs (education, health, etc) will not only elevate the standard of living but will also result in the redistribution of income.

Measures aimed at the revitalization of the countryside are a necessity for development. They will improve the lot of the farmer and his wife and will help stop emigration toward urban centers, thus stopping the further asphyxiation of the cities. The coexistence of the economic and social elements will lead to the contribution of economic measures toward progress which, in turn, will assist in the realization of social goals.

RATE OF PROGRESS AND INSTITUTIONAL CHANGES

33. Changes which have not ripened within the people's conscience not only fail to promote radical change but, to the contrary, they could lead to backsliding and disappointment. Steps toward change should be mature people's goals.

34. The pace of implementation of our goals must bear in mind the balance of power as it is developing at every given instance, the tolerance of our economy and, above all, the consent and participation of the people's forces. Untimely leaps and hasty options which do not meet the above prerequisites will lead to a dislocation of the economy and will retard the people's movement. At the same time, however, this pace will be so fast and decisive that the efforts toward socialist transformation must not go to waste.

Within the very same framework, we emphatically reject the logic rightwing supporters who want to preserve the current system of undertaking only certain "marginal changes" which do not affect the interests of the establishment and which perpetuate the exploitation and suppression of the people. The workers know that isolated measures which are aimed at embellishing the system under alleged liberal or technocratic disguises are, in the end, only aimed at deceiving the people. This is because whatever the people are given with the one hand is taken away with the other twice over, while the institutional frameworks and the organizations of the ruling class remain untouched.

35. Guaranteeing the people's consent and participation cannot and must not be exclusively based upon the government's determination and upon spontaneous initiative.

The parliament, the trade union movement and local self-government, institutions which were won by long years of struggle by the workers, must simultaneously acquire a basic content and they must truly become organizations of real power.

The development of new institutions of organization and participation will also start at the same time and it will be strengthened. These institutions--development committees, community councils, people's meetings in the villages, participation organizations at places of work and education, the cooperative movement--multiply the possibilities for expression by the people. Decentralization and local self-government are strong means and a lever for a better quality and faster rate of economic and social development.

36. In certain sectors, the effective functioning of institutional and structural changes presupposes organization, staffing and material-technical means that must be escalated both in terms of time and expenditure.

Our firm position on this critical point is that the framework and direction of these changes will be established immediately or on a short term basis while the actual content will be activated progressively by securing the necessary prerequisites. Besides, in this manner, insecurity is eliminated; impatience is limited and the positive course of the change is safeguarded.

This principle will be implemented in the radical changes that primarily concern the institutional framework of local self-government, education, health and social security as well as in socialization.

PRIORITIES--RESOURCES

37. The priorities of our program targets concern changes necessary for our national course, development policy and relief of the weaker classes.

38. First of all, there are rights that the rightwing has deproved the people of solely because it is afraid of them.

Democracy does not demand time or expenditures on a series of issues pertaining to the country's life. On those issues, we will proceed in leaps and bounds. In a short period of time, the people will certainly attain such basic goals as the abolition of the institution of personal dossiers; equality of rights and equality before the law; equality of women; recognition of the national resistance and the right of political refugees to return; democratization of the mass information media, the trade unions and cooperative movements; education; and the participation and utilization of the new generation in the towns and villages.

Cleansing of the public administration will begin immediately so that it will be transformed from an oppressor to a supporter of the citizen. Merit and honesty will be the only criteria for the evaluation of civil servants.

39. There are expenditures of absolute priority, such as expenditures for national defense. Immediate priority also will be given to expenditures for education and research. In addition to being social benefits, we consider them a foundation of our development policy as well as for health and pensions.

The revitalization of the Greek countryside and the protection of the environment demand immediate and drastic measures.

At the same time, the granting of benefits that are not estimated moneywise but vitally contribute to the improvement of the standard of living will assist in the general elevation not only of the living but also of the cultural standard of our people.

40. We also will implement a plan of "immediate action" in the economic sector that will include immediate measures for the stabilization of the economy and redistribution of national income, with the aim of consolidating and serving the prospects of self-sufficient development.

The reorientation of investments, the conversion of the public sector into a leveler of development, the direct socialization of the finance-credit system, the decisive control of large scale export and import trade will help our policy in its first phase.

The cornerstone of our policy in the countryside will be the voluntary agricultural-industrial cooperatives while immediate measures will be taken to cleanse and strengthen the cooperative movement.

41. A decisive change will be the gradual socialization of the economy's strategic sectors and the decisive participation in these sectors of the working people and social organizations. The participating of working people in the remaining sectors will be determined according to the size of the unit.

The decisive strengthening of the municipalities and communities and their support by the nomarchies in a first stage will be followed by the progressive activation of the district and regional institutions with the systematic transfer of administrative and economic jurisdictions. This radical change will contribute decisively and will constitute a guarantee for the revitalization of the countryside. At the same time, it will assist in the development and functioning of the new people-based organizations and cooperative organization as well as the development of small and medium size businesses.

Fundamental decentralization will contribute decisively to a reorganization in education, health and social care; to the reorganization of districts; to guaranteeing satisfactory housing, without imposing insurmountable economic burdens, within a human town planning environment; and, primarily, to a cultural revival.

42. National democratic planning is the unifying and guiding tool of all structural changes. It will function both within planned and in the control of the effectiveness of measures and the realization of goals.

43. The limits of our economy's resources will, naturally, be a definitive factor in the rate of implementation of our goals. These limits, however, cannot be evaluated on the measures and standards of the rightwing. The cost of maintaining and the functioning of the current system is vast. Considerable funds are being squandered to combat damage and the symptoms of collapse of the system instead of combatting the reasons for these phenomena.

For these reasons, the funds to be directed toward the goals of the new development will have a firm foundation and multiple productivity. The reason for this is that an expenditure is to be measured more on the basis of its correct direction, its quality and its social dimension and less by its amount.

The suppression of tax evasion alone, both legal and illegal, will permit us to proceed toward meeting wider social needs and to a just distribution of income in favor of the workers.

44. PASOK, however, does not confine the question of resources to a narrow economic and monetary dimension. For us, by contrast, our country's true resources are in its human potential, the well-known but to date unexploited natural wealth-giving resources, the will of the entire nation to take the cause of changes on their own shoulders.

Mobilization of the organized people's masses through the organizations for people's participation, the conscious effort toward increasing productivity, the utilization and mobilization of our scientific potential--both inside Greece and overseas--utilization of international support, with equality in transactions without dependence, activation and mobilization of all national material and human resources will liberate such a dynamic force, such a wealth that our self-supporting economic and social development will be promoted in a steady direction.

45. This dynamic government strategy cannot produce results under today's economic, political and military conditions of dependence. This is why PASOK will actively promote a genuine, proud, nonaligned and multifaceted foreign policy, with the criterion of strengthening our national independence and our defensive armament and of promoting peace on a worldwide scale. It is within this framework that it will deal with our critical national issues with clear goals of responsible steps.

OUR PROGRAM IS A COVENANT OF CONSISTENCY AND STRUGGLE WITH THE PEOPLE

46. Our course will not be easy. Miracles cannot be worked from one day to the next. Change, however, will be tangible right from the very first day. The rightwing which has been in power has not only sacrificed the future of this country but also its present for the sake of the interests of the wealthy foreign and local oligarchy.

Like others, we will not ask for sacrifices from the present generation on the altar of some future prospect. Our people have both the right and the ability to improve their lives now and they have the obligation to lay the foundation for a better democratic tomorrow for their children.

The framework of the government program that is being presented in broad lines in the declaration that follows [as published] as well as the specialized programs in basic sectors which will be published as a sequel will constitute the convenant for us which, however, will be open for discussion with social representatives and is a democratic proposal for authority by the people, so that the people can implement change by themselves. Together we will march on to a victory.

AUSTRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER CONTINUES VISIT

Meets Rallis, Averof

NC091228 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] At 1000 today, Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr called on Prime Minister Rallis at the political office and discussed bilateral and international issues with him. Mr Pahr also visited with Deputy Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Averof today and had talks with him. During these visits, the Austrian minister was accompanied by the Austrian ambassador in Athens, Mr Backes.

Holds News Conference

NC091914 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr gave a news conference this afternoon. In the beginning, he referred to his talks with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis, as well as to his meetings with President Karamanlis, Prime Minister Rallis and Deputy Prime Minister Averof. He stressed that relations between the two countries are very cordial and friendly. Since there are no bilateral problems between the two countries, he said, we dealt with worldwide issues. The talks have proved that we have parallel views on the sources of crises in the world. We have also established an identity of views on the questions that have emerged following Greece's integration into the EEC, such as the transportation of Greek products to Austria and the passing of Greek vehicles through Austrian territory.

In answer to questions, Mr Pahr said that Austria is in favor of the independence and integrity of Cyprus on the basis of the UN Charter and that Austria has manifested an active role in this direction within the UN framework.

He also said that during his talks in Athens he discussed the situation in Europe and the Middle East crisis. At the same time, he repeated the Austrian Government's invitation to Prime Minister Rallis to visit Austria. Mr Rallis has accepted the invitation for a visit after the elections. Mr Pahr added: With Deputy Prime Minister Averof we discussed general questions of economic cooperation and, in particular, the question of cooperation between the industrial firm (Stayer-Hellas) and the Austrian firm (Stayer).

In conclusion, Mr Pahr said that Mr Mitsotakis briefed him on the Greek-Turkish relations and the situation in the Aegean.

PRESS RELEASE ON EXPANDED RELATIONS WITH POLAND

TA091558 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1550 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 9 Jul (AA)--A press release issued following Turkish-Polish talks in Ankara said the sides agreed to expand economic and cultural relations. The Turkish-Polish mixed economic committee shall meet during the first half of December 1981, to study industrial, economic, trade and technical questions.

Ataturk's centenary has created a golden opportunity to further expand cultural relations the press release said.

Meanwhile restoration work on Polish poet Adam Mickiewicz's house in Istanbul is underway. A Polish expert is expected soon to supervise restoration work. Two Turkish professors have been selected to teach in Krakow and Warsaw universities.

Poland's deputy foreign minister Professor Dobrosielski has invited Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen and Secretary General Kamuran Gurun to visit Poland.

GOVERNMENT DENIES IRANIAN PRESS REPORT ON MEDIATION

TA091552 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 9 Jul (AA)--Foreign Ministry spokesman, Ambassador Oktay Iscen denied Iranian newspaper reports that Turkey has mediated between the United States and former President Bani-Sadr.

An Iranian paper TEHRAN TIMES claimed yesterday that Mr Sanjabi, then adviser to President Bani-Sadr, asked the Turkish ambassador in Iran to mediate between the United States and Iran. The paper claimed that Bani-Sadr received the Turkish ambassador in October 1980 where Sanjabi was also present and briefed the Turkish ambassador on the political and military situation in Iran and complained about Imam Khomeyni's unreasonable attitude. It further claimed that Bani-Sadr asked the Turkish envoy to arrange a meeting between one of his advisers and the United States representatives in Ankara under the guise of trade relations.

Mr Iscen termed the above mentioned news story as pure imagination.

MINISTER OZAL HOLDS NEWS CONFERENCE IN WASHINGTON

TA090545 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal is continuing his contacts in Washington. Ozal is expected to meet IMF Managing Director Jacques de Larosiere. Ozal held a news conference in Washington in connection with his contacts in Washington. He said the talks assessed the first year of the 3-year agreement with the IMF and discussed the second year situation.

Commenting on Turkey's economic situation, Ozal said that the rate of inflation has greatly diminished in the last year and that exports through June were 44 percent more than the corresponding period last year. He added that the decrease in the inflation rate and the increase in foreign currency revenues were considered as Turkey's achievements during the assessment made with IMF officials.

Ozal said the U.S. Export-Import Bank, which was considering extending a loan of $95 million for the Elbistan project, would not be able to extend it. Noting that this decision was reached following a U.S. Congress decision to cut the Bank's funds, Ozal added that, instead, a $22 million loan will be secured from the bank for the project.

TERCUMAN ON POLITICAL PARTIES IN NORTH CYPRUS

NC090912 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 6 Jul 81 p 4

["This Is the World" column by Zafer Atay: "Elections in Cyprus"]

[Excerpts] Presidential and parliamentary elections were held in an atmosphere of maturity in the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. The Turkish Cypriots have proved that they are in harmony with their democratic system which is only 5 years old. The political parties carried out their campaign without any hindrance and voting went smoothly.

The successful implementation of a democratic system in the TFSC is of utmost importance to certain decisions to be taken in the future. The Turkish Cypriots must show the world that they possess a democracy whose institutions are functioning smoothly. This is essential if a biregional federation is to be set up on the island. It will also be essential if they are left with no other alternative than to proclaim independence.

What we have so far cited are the positive aspects of democracy in the TFSC. It is a pity that the other aspect is not so bright. The election campaign was conducted in an unbelievably shocking manner. At times charges and countercharges took the form of insults and even blasphemy.

Rauf Denktas, one of the pioneers of the liberation struggle of the Turkish Cypriot community, managed to muster about 52 percent of the votes and remains president. But 5 years ago, Denktas obtained over 70 percent of the votes. Now an era of coalition is to begin in Cyprus. The Communal Liberation Party (CLP) and the Republican Turkish Party (RTP) who represent the left in the TFSC, have been proclaimed by their adversaries as "dangerous." Without seeing them at work, it is impossible for us to know for certain whether or not these parties are dangerous. But it is worth noting that their slogans chanted during the campign were strikingly similar to the words uttered in Turkey by the backward leftists and separatists before 12 September.

Also, the fact that some of the people on their lists are known to have collaborated in the past with the Greek Cypriot side provokes unavoidable suspicions.

We are of the opinion that all the political parties in the TFSC have got to make a cool-headed reappraisal of their positions.

Can it be argued that the shady business deals of some, known to be close to the president, did not affect Denktas' loss of votes? Who can say that the National Unity Party (NUP), as the ruling party, has undergone a successful test during the past 5 years.

The artificial government crises, bargainings over ministerial positions, resignations, making and then retracting concessions, breaking away from the party and party skirmishes, the touristic potential that has remained dormant, products which could not be sold, and cases of corruption in the public sector, have all contributed to the erosion of both Denktas' and the MUP's position.

As for the CLP and the RTP, everyone knows the mess Turkey was in before 12 September because of certain imported and unsympathetic intrigues which served no purpose other than to instill spitefulness among the people. If the leaders of these parties really do "have the interests of their community at heart"--a statement which they keep reiterating--they must purge the corrupt elements from their ranks, and prove in parliament that they are well-meaning leaders.

Before long, the world will begin to bring pressure to bear on both Turkey and the TFSC by saying "the elections are over. It is time to solve the Cyprus issue." To be able to stand up against these pressures and to reject faits accomplis, the TFSC will have to be particularly strong.

CANADA

PRIME MINISTER TO VISIT SEOUL IN SEPTEMBER

SK050604 Seoul THE KOREA TIMES in English 5 Jul 81 p 1

[By Kim Myong-kyu, KOREA TIMES correspondent]

[Excerpts] Toronto--Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau is to visit Korea in September to have talks with President Chon Tu-hwan on a wide range of topics involving the promotion of bilateral cooperative bonds.

Trudeau will be the first Canadian prime minister ever to visit Korea and Chon and Trudeau will record the first Korea-Canada summit meeting in the history of relations between the two countries.

According to reliable diplomatic sources here Saturday, the Seoul visit of Trudeau will be made late September on his way to Melbourne, Australia. Trudeau is scheduled to participate in the British Commonwealth prime ministers' conference slated for Sept. 30-Oct. 7 to be held in Melbourne.

The sources disclosed that Trudeau has already suggested to the Korean Government that he would like to visit Seoul for talks with Chon and that the Seoul government had shown an affirmative response. Negotiations are under way through diplomatic channels between the two countries to set the date for the Chon-Trudeau meeting, the sources disclosed, observing that the matter was likely to be decided on shortly after President Chon returned home from his 15-day ASEAN tour on July 9.

Trudeau's Seoul visit signifies the importance attached by the Canadian leader to Korea, especially with regard to the expansion of trade and economic ties, they asserted. Canada is greatly interested in exploring the market in Korea for its supply of nuclear reactors, aircraft, telecommunications technology and grains.

Canada, cognizant of the efficiency and safety of the Candu reactor system, hopes to construct more reactors in Korea. A Candu reactor system is now under construction at Wolsung, Kyongsang-Pukto, Korea, and is to be completed by mid-1982.

One of ever-growing importances in Seoul-Ottawa trade is energy. Long-term contracts have already been signed for supplies of energy resources such as uranium and coal to Korea.

SPAIN

17 GRAPO MEMBERS JOIN PRISON HUNGER STRIKE

NC061712 Paris AFP in English 1645 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Madrid, 6 Jul (AFP)--Seventeen alleged members of the 1 October Antifascist Resistance Group (GRAPO) have joined a hunger strike movement in Spanish jails in which one person died on June 19 on his 96th day on the protest, national prison authorities said here.

Meanwhile, a reliable source said that Pablo Fernandez Villalabeitia, the veteran of the protest on his 84th day without food, was transferred today from Carabanchel prison to La Paz hospital. Juan Jose Crespo died in the same hospital a week after doctors began to feed him by force.

GRAPO MEMBERS SENTENCED FOR MADRID BOMBING

NC091736 Paris AFP in English 1642 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Madrid, 9 Jul (AFP)--Two members of the First of October Antifascist Resistance Group (GRAPO) have each received a prison sentence of 270 years for blowing up a Madrid cafeteria on May 26, 1979.

The bombing took place in the "California 47," supposed to be a Madrid hangout for extreme right wing militants, and resulted in nine deaths and 59 wounded.

Jose Maria Sanchez Casas and Alfonso Rodriguez, Garcia, known as the head and hands of the job, will spend at least 30 years in prison. They are also to pay the equivalent of 8.5 million dollars in damages and interest. Of two other accused persons, Juan Manuel Perez Hernandez got an eight year sentence, while Mercedes Herranz Arcones was acquitted. All four denied taking part in the bombing. The trial revealed that the perpetrators had warned the cafeteria staff about a bomb 30 minutes before it went off, but that the cafeteria had not been evacuated.

SHOOTING INCIDENTS REPORTED IN BASQUE PROVINCES

NC050929 Paris AFP in English 0920 GMT 5 Jul 81

[Text] Bilbao, northwest Spain, 5 Jul (AFP)--An off-duty army lieutenant and a civil guard were shot dead in two separate incidents today in two Basque provinces, informed sources daid.

Lieutenant Magin Fernandez Ferrero, 44, was shot by two unidentified assailants at Baracaldo, in Vizcaya Province, as he went to buy a newspaper. Earlier, in the Basque town of Oyarzun, near the French frontier, a civil guard was shot dead and another badly wounded when two police vehicles were ambushed.

Civil Guard Killed

NC100904 Paris AFP in English 0858 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Text] Bilbao, northern Spain, 10 Jul (AFP)--A retired civil guard died today in a hail of automatic weapons fire while waiting for a train at Basauri, in the Basque province of Vizcaya, a reliable source said. One of the attackers was later wounded in a shootout with police and arrested, the source said. Two bystanders were wounded as well.

With the death of the civil guard, 59-year-old Joaquim Gorjon Gonzalez, 40 people including 14 policemen and 10 soldiers have been killed in Spain this year.

BRIEFS

NEW MILITARY GOVERNORS--Four royal decrees from the Defense Ministry, published today in the OFFICIAL STATE GAZETTE, announce the appointments of military governors: Las Palmas--Maj Gen Ricardo Rivas Nadal; Valladolid--Maj Gen Manuel Engo Morgado; Cordoba--Infantry Brig Gen Jose Ramos Pefias; Badajoz--Infantry Big Gen Antonio Sanz Ririurjo. [Text] [Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0900 GMT 8 Jul 81 LD]

Friday
10 July 1981
Vol VII No 132
Annex No 075

Annex

Daily Report

WESTERN EUROPE

The information printed on these Annex pages preceding and following the standard Daily Report cover bears the caveat FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY. Users may detach the outer pages and treat the Daily Report as unclassified and unrestricted.

FBIS FOREIGN BROADCAST INFORMATION SERVICE

ANNEX CONTENTS

FRANCE

Mitterrand Interviewed on Armaments, Nationalization [Hamburg STERN 9 Jul] 2

UNITED KINGDOM

TIMES on Carrington's Afghan Initiative [9 Jul] 6
FINANCIAL TIMES: U.S. Trade Policy 'Challenge, Threat' [9 Jul] 7

- 0 -

FRANCE

MITTERRAND INTERVIEWED ON ARMAMENT, NATIONALIZATION

DW090920 Hamburg STERN in German 9 Jul 81 pp 80-84--FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY

[Correspondents Monica Cossardt and Lutz Bindernagel interview with French President Francois Mitterrand in the Elysee Palace, Paris; date not given]

[Text] STERN: Mr President, you are coming to Bonn this Sunday for your first German-French consultations. Prior to being elected you stressed that there is no longer any such thing as a Paris-Bonn axis.

Mitterrand: Everyone in France now tells me that there never actually was a Paris-Bonn asix, but rather a special kind of friendship. I agree with that...

STERN: ...you mean friendship between two politicians?

Mitterrand: No, between two countries. If good personal relations exist between the politicians as well, all the better. I hope that this will continue to be the case in future. The great mission of postwar Europe was German-French reconciliation. The fact that we managed to overcome our antagonism was one of the most important prerequisites for setting up the European Community. This is the basic idea that will dominate my policy. As early as 1948 I participated in the first European congress in The Hague and worked for French-German reconciliation. I will remain loyal to this task. There is no need to talk of a Paris-Bonn axis.

STERN: At the recent European summit in Luxembourg there was no traditional German-French tete-a-tete. You invited Mrs Thatcher for breakfast instead...

Mitterrand: I received Federal Chancellor Schmidt immediately after having been elected, when he came to Paris on his way back from Washington in late May. We had a long and productive talk on this occasion. We will meet frequently in the coming weeks and months, and I hope that we will also hold frequent private meetings. But I did not know Mrs Thatcher at all when she expressed the wish to meet me in Luxembourg. I agreed immediately, and our breakfast resulted. German-French friendship does not depend on a cup of tea.

STERN: Anti-German feelings can still be found among the French leftists. Members of your Socialist Party consider the Federal Republic to be a police state. Do you share this opinion?

Mitterrand: Let us not exaggerate. The French Socialists respect the democrats very much--particularly the Social Democrats, who have made Germany what it is today. I have at times certainly criticized discrimination against communists working in the public sector in the Federal Republic. Is this what you were driving at? But believe me, I know very well the historical background of the development and security needs of your state.

STERN: Fear of the communists is widespread in the Federal Republic. You have installed communists in your government, although your own Socialist Party has an absolute majority. Do you consider your four communist ministers as guarantors of social peace?

Mitterrand: I will tell you now what I have told my compatriots: in view of the problem resulting from our crisis, I need all Frenchmen. The fact that I have enlarged my parliamentary basis beyond the absolute majority of the Socialists indicates that I want to rally all those behind me on whom I have been calling for 15 years to develop unity among the people. It was most important for me that this merger come about along the political line I outlined. Social peace is naturally a necessary prerequisite for France's recovery. But this depends more on the enormous spirit that has taken possession of the country since my election victory on 10 May than on the decisions of a party.

STERN: In its government agreement with the socialists, the Communist Party promises "unlimited solidarity" reaching as far as into the factories. Would you oust the Communist ministers if the communist-managed trade union CGT were to plot social unrest?

Mitterrand: I will rule out those who rule out themselves, in other words, those who do not abide by my political ideas. That applies to all ministers, no matter which party they belong to.

STERN: Do you think that by signing the government agreement the PCF distanced itself from Moscow, and adopted a Eurocommunist line? Do the PCF leaders really seem credible to you if they suddenly accept the demand for a Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan and noninterference in Poland?

Mitterrand: I do not try to examine intentions. I am only interested in facts. The French Government unequivocally condemns Soviet aggression in Afghanistan just as it would condemn all foreign interference in Poland. That is all.

STERN: Are there issues you would not discuss in the presence of Communist ministers? Issues such as, for example, defense problems?

Mitterrand: I do not answer this kind of question. I respect these people after all. I find it rather shocking for a foreign publication to ask me such a question.

STERN: Have French-American relations normalized in the meantime? The U.S. State Department stated at first that your relations were jeopardized by the appointment of communist ministers.

Mitterrand: I act for France in the name of France and in line with my interpretation of its interests. I understand that the Americans have questions about this, and I do not hold this against them. However, the French must be allowed their own policy to settle affairs. France is and will remain a loyal ally.

STERN: Do you think that the considerable losses by the PCF in the last elections confirm the assertion of American President Reagan that the final chapter of communism is currently being written?

Mitterrand: I believe the setback of the PCF is based on internal French reasons. By the way, communism is nurtured largely by the wrong assessments and political errors of the West. The fewer mistakes the West makes regarding the workers as well as the Third World, the more the decline of international communism will accelerate.

STERN: But hasn't the communist model already lost much of its appeal?

Mitterrand: It has, because for the first time the Soviet Union has risked an expansionist operation against a Third World country, which in addition is Islamic. Thus it contradicts a policy of 60 years which was to make people believe that the Soviet Union is the natural protector of these nations. This happens at a time when the Leninist models of thought are being questioned almost everywhere. But don't ever forget that the Soviet Union is a great nation and the Russians a great people. There should be no confusion here.

STERN: Do you believe that the triumph of the left in France will set an example for other Western countries, or is France merely making up for a development which took place a long time ago in some of its neighbors?

Mitterrand: The success of French Socialism has come late compared to that of Social Democracy in the Scandinavian countries and Germany or that of the labour movement in Britain. But this allows us to profit from the experiences of the others and analyze what they have often stumbled over. Therefore, we owe them a lot. However, for its part French Socialism will certainly serve many European countries as an example following its 1981 victory. The power of ideas is infectious, as proven by the history of the past century.

STERN: The experiences of other countries have also shown that nationalization has not always been economically feasible. Aren't the nationalizations you plan rather of an ideological and symbolic value? What concrete benefit do you anticipate from this measure?

Mitterrand: Ideology or not, we simply believe that it is right to nationalize enterprises which have become monopolies, which have strangled their competitors in key fields of the economy or which produce goods that are necessary for the country's life and security. In 1945 General de Gaulle nationalized the large banks and insurance companies, the gas and electricity works, the coal mines, Renault and so forth, although he was by no means a socialist ideologist: today it is the nationalized enterprises which are advancing our economy, which are investing and exporting, and which constitute the spearhead of our industry. So we have very practical reasons to nationalize. In addition, a broad public sector will allow us to improve and modernize the structure of our industry which will thus again become more competitive on the French market. To this end we will nationalize the remaining banks and 11 industrial enterprises. Then 17 percent instead of the present 12 percent of our production will be controlled by the state. Our problem now is nationalization without bureaucratization.

STERN: In some cases--the steel industry for example--won't you just be nationalizing losses?

Mitterrand: This danger exists, if we don't move quickly. It is true that the private steel enterprises are about to ruin this industry in France. But the arms and chemical industries, and the banks and data processing enterprises are by no means in a weak position. As you know, in the capitalist system the losses are societized and the profits always go to private enterprise. We have observed this for 30 years now.

STERN: So you want to proceed with the nationalizations as quickly as possible?

Mitterrand: This fall.

STERN: What will happen to the subsidiaries of these enterprises and the enterprises that are controlled by the bank?

Mitterrand: The banks have in fact brought many industries under their control, and we have no intention of also nationalizing these. By the way, it is typical for banking capitalism to have absorbed industrial capitalism to such a large extent. The concentration of big capital is the opposite of liberalism. We will study each individual case and leave all those enterprises in private hands, which according to our criteria need not be nationalized.

STERN: How do you plan to proceed with foreign holdings in the enterprises that are to be nationalized--with the 58 percent share Hoechst has in the Roussel-Uclaf pharmaceutical enterprise, for instance?

Mitterrand: We will not rob anyone. The foreigners will be compensated like the French. What is more, the government will certainly be anxious to handle foreign investments in France carefully. The Roussel-Uclaf case is remarkable indeed; the very people who in 1974 blamed us for intending to nationalize this enterprise have subsequently internationalized it.

STERN: At the Luxembourg European summit you suggested to the other Community members the creation of a European social sphere. What is this supposed to be like?

[Annex to be continued on back pages of report]

Mitterrand: I presented not only this one, but four proposals. By a "European social sphere" I mean that social legislation within the EC is to be increasingly united in accordance with the practice of the member states which is the most progressive in this field and that the struggle against unemployment is to be coordinated. But I also suggested an investment plan for the European industry which is to be financed by common loans raised by the EC countries on the international money market. These sums are to be made available primarily to research and key industries such as data processing, electrical communication and the development of alternative energy supplies. In addition, I demanded that negotiations be resumed on the reduction of working hours. This is a realistic plan which is bound to become reality.

STERN: Federal Chancellor Schmidt thinks that combatting inflation is of priority importance.

Mitterrand: Everybody has his priorities. The Germans can pursue their policy at home as they wish. But I would be very much surprised if a Social Democrat were against the "European social sphere." It is not normal to speak of Europe and the great European enterprises such as the airbus and the Ariane rocket, but not of a Europe of the workers. I am rather positive that we will achieve this.

STERN: Is France prepared to increase its contribution to the European Community in the future?

Mitterrand: We do not say that we want a social Europe for which the others should pay. You have a strange image of the French.

STERN: The European heads of state pointed out in Luxembourg their concern regarding the continuing occupation of Afghanistan by Soviet troops. What, do you think, should the West and France do if the Soviets also march into Poland?

Mitterrand: We should not forget that it is the Poles and the independent Polish trade unions--and not we--who are risking something. Let us beware of interference which would be immediately exploited. Anyway, we should not pretend and talk as though the Russian Army had already marched in.

STERN: Wouldn't it be better if we indicated to the Soviets beforehand what the consequences of such a step would be?

Mitterrand: The Soviet Union must know that if it did this, it would freeze every opportunity for negotiations on detente, disarmament and collective security. That would not be particularly good for peace.

STERN: You recently stressed your will to fight neutralism. In this connection how do you assess the pacifist movement in the Federal Republic, which is aimed particularly at the deployment of American medium-range missiles like the Pershing-2?

Mitterrand: Germany does not have the right to possess nuclear arms, but at the same time it is becoming the battlefield for others. In view of that, we can understand the mood of the populace. I condemn neutralism because I believe that peace depends on a balance of forces in the world. The Soviet SS-20 missiles and the Backfire Bomber destroy this balance in Europe. I cannot accept that, and I admit that there must be counterarmament to reestablish the balance. From that point on negotiations should take place. I am afraid of two weaknesses: neutralism and blind aggressiveness.

STERN: So the Americans are right in saying that the Soviets have an advantage?

Mitterrand: I would like to know exactly what the real state of forces in both camps is, and I will do everything to find out. I believe, however, that the Soviet Union has supremacy in Europe, and I consider it a real danger. However, the United States has the means to restore the balance of power, and France will not hesitate to complete its deterrent arsenal.

STERN: During Willy Brandt's recent visit to Moscow, the Soviets mentioned a possible pause in the deployment of further SS-20 missiles, but not a withdrawal of these missiles, as you have demanded.

Mitterrand: This is, after all, the beginning of a discussion. The Soviets are practicing an elastic fallback in this matter. They have already abandoned their starting position. It is a fight for millimeters where every weakness must be ruled out, where one must know when to arm and when to negotiate.

STERN: Do you consider the arms supplies to China, which were announced by the United States, as necessary?

Mitterrand: Everything depends on the type of arms. France, at any rate, would be most careful with regard to that point.

STERN: The new French Government has announced that it does not want to become militarily active in Africa--active as the preceding government...

Mitterrand: Your question is ambiguous. We will indeed not become active in the--often most objectable--way of the former government, but we will respect France's commitments in Africa. We became active once before to save 1,000 to 1,500 people who were involved in a conflict along the border between Cameroon and Gabon--we did this with the agreement of both governments. We will continue to be present in Africa, and nobody will replace us in the role granted to us by our African friends. Whoever wants to form an alliance with us or seeks our help, will receive it after joint negotiations on the conditions, but we will not mistake such action for interference in the internal affairs of African states.

STERN: Do you see other than military options for protecting the independence of young African states?

Mitterrand: Naturally. Cooperation is not an empty word. Some large-scale North-South policy would serve peace better than the detachment of a commando unit. Conflict often emanates from misery and uncertainty.

STERN: You assumed power 7 weeks ago. You have assumed grave responsibility in the midst of critical times. Have you already detected some aspects of power which are different from what you expected? Are there moments when you would prefer to be an author rather than a state president?

Mitterrand: I campaigned for this office to become elected. Now I have been elected. I will fully assume the functions of a state president, leaving it to others without a grudge to write the history I will make.

UNITED KINGDOM

TIMES ON CARRINGTON'S AFGHAN INITIATIVE

PM091113 London THE TIMES in English 9 Jul 81 p 17--FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY

[Editorial: "Carrington's Each-Way Bet"]

[Text] It is disappointing but not surprising that the European Community's initiative on Afghanistan has received a dusty answer in Moscow. There was never a chance that the Russians would show any signs of serious interest at this stage. It is not in their nature to grasp warmly at proposals from the West. They circle warily, sniffing suspiciously for hidden traps, turning over their own slow thoughts on the matter, and meanwhile stalling on all fronts. Therefore their answer so far tells us nothing about whether there are any prospects for progress.

Perhaps they really are looking for a way out of Afghanistan. Their occupation of that country is, after all, expensive and damaging to their relations with the West and the Third World. But perhaps they feel the price is worth paying, so nothing whatever will make them even think of leaving. This is just as likely. Nobody in the West can be sure. In these circumstances, was Lord Carrington's journey useful, or does he return with egg on his face?

It is easy to argue that he and the Ten have suffered a rebuff which could have been avoided. Perhaps more time should have been given to preparation. It would certainly have been better if the initiative had come from the Western alliance as a whole, but American policy is too paralysed for that. It would have been better if the West had had more sticks at its disposal to balance the carrot, but it has allowed many of the sanctions imposed after the Soviet invasion to wither away. Mr Reagan lifted the grain embargo for domestic reasons, which made nonsense of his stated views on foreign policy. The Community lifted restrictions on food sales to the Soviet Union three months ago. There remain some restrictions on trade and credits and a general shadow over Soviet relations with many parts of the world, but much of the sting has, unfortunately, gone out of the Western reaction.

The point of departure is therefore unsatisfactory. But this does not mean that Lord Carrington's trip was valueless. He wins something either way. If the Russians eventually come round to a more positive response he has set in motion a process which could eventually get them out of Afghanistan. If they remain negative he has achieved a number of other things. He has demonstrated that Afghanistan remains on the international agenda, that the Soviet occupationis not forgotten, and that East-West relations will be adversely affected as long as it continues. (Mr Heath was right to say that there should be no direct linkage with negotiations on arms control but there are bound to be indirect affects.) He has also shown that the European Community is capable of taking diplomatic initiatives.

More important, if no progress is made, he will have shown up the dishonesty behind the Soviet Union's claim that its troops are in Afghanistan because of outside interference. This is important because the Soviet propaganda machine is adept at spreading myths of this sort. It is particularly important now that there is a growing movement in Europe which lends a sympathetic ear to the Soviet case against the modernization of the West's nuclear forces in Europe.

The sight of the Soviet Union conspicuously rejecting a perfectly reasonable and tactful proposal for withdrawing its troops without too much loss of face from a country which was and ought again to be non-aligned must have a salutary effect on those eager to put the most generous interpretation on Soviet actions.

If Lord Carrington had gone to Moscow with naive hopes of instant results he would now be looking silly. In fact he had no such hopes. He was not expecting to negotiate. He was making a diplomatic move on behalf of the Community in the absence of any coherent Western policy on the subject.

One of the aims was to put the Russians on the spot by offering them a realistic way out of Afghanistan. It was a modest move, but it has done no harm and may do some good, even if it merely serves to embarrass the Russians.

FINANCIAL TIMES: U.S. TRADE POLICY 'CHALLENGE, THREAT'

PM091114 London FINANCIAL TIMES in English 9 Jul 81 p 22--FOR OFFICIAL USE ONLY

[Editorial: "The Challenge of Free Trade"]

[Text] The Reagan administration's outline of a free trade policy is both a challenge and a threat. In principle it commits the U.S. to the principles of freer trade; it also makes clear that America's trading partners are expected to obey the same principles--or else.

A so-called White Paper presented to Congress yesterday by Mr William Brock, President Reagan's special trade representative, goes to the heart of the matter where it says that U.S. industry will have to upgrade its capabilities or move to other activities in those cases where other nations have a "natural competitive advantage."

Dumping

The operative word is "natural." The White Paper gives notice to America's trading partners that Washington will strictly enforce U.S. legislation against dumping, subsidies and similar practices capable of distorting trade patterns.

Since the document goes into few details, practice alone will show whether the promise or the threat must be taken more seriously.

In the past, the American record has been mixed. The trigger mechanism has proved an effective protective device against much imported steel and Washington intends, if anything, to tighten the procedure. The "voluntary restraint demanded of Japanese car exporters is protection with a fig leaf. On the other hand, quotas on certain Third World imports of clothing and foot-wear have been lifted.

In part that was a gesture towards Washington's friends in South Korea and Taiwan. None the less the step was in the right direction, above all because the Third World has a justified case for special consideration. It is to the developed countries that the challenge must be directed not to create artificial competitive advantages for themselves.

Subsidised export credit is a subject that has particularly rankled with the Americans. It has not so far been possible to come to an international agreement limiting the practice to genuine aid for poor countries instead of using it as a competitive weapon. The U.S. itself is not immune to questioning, since the Export-Import Bank can lend below market rates. President Reagan wanted to reduce its funds for fiscal rather than commercial reasons, but the Congress may not accept his cuts.

Mr Brock's document, in condemning "trade distoring interventions," points an accusing finger at other devices, such as the practice, by no means confined to Third World countries, of not allowing foreign manufacturing investment unless it makes a specified contribution to exports. The White Paper also complains that many countries erect barriers behind which they try to develop their own high-technology industries.

Yet distortions to normal commercial patterns are not unknown even in the U.S. The competitive bidding of some of the individual states, which are not subject to Washington's control, for several foreign investments plums is a case in point.

On the other side of the ledger, the U.S. has complied with some key recommendations of the last round in the GATT. Countervailing duties may no longer be imposed merely if the foreign exporter is suspected of being subsidised: instead the GATT formula has been adopted which requires proof of damage to domestic producers.

Integration

Taking the overall view, the White Paper shows that the days are over when the U.S. looked with relative indifference on its exports. It is not merely government policy, but the result of changing trade patterns. Japan and Europe have made deep inroads into U.S. markets. That can now be seen as part of the increasing integration of world markets, and the American counterattack is in full swing.

It is a clear implication of the Brock White Paper that the administration intends the increase of American exports to continue, and, if necessary, to use its political powers to ensure that America's trading partners do not put up the shutters. That will give other industrialised nations no excuse for complaints, provided that the Americans apply the test of "free, but fair trade" to themselves as well as to others.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 133 13 July 1981

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Chancellor Kreisky Comments on CSSR Emigre Case E 1
VOLKSSTIMME Questions Defense Ministry on Missile [9 Jul] E 1

BENELUX

NETHERLANDS

Parties Remove Obstacles to Van Agt Premiership F 1
Labor Party Ends Opposition F 1
Democrats '66 Agree [DE VOLKSKRANT 7 Jul] F 1
Paper Finds U.S. Foreign Policy 'Worrying' [NRC HANDELSBLAD 29 Jun] F 2
Government Denies Entry to Pakistan Hijack Figures F 3

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

38th German-French Consultations Open in Bonn J 1
Mitterrand on Arms Talks J 1
Schmidt Interview J 2
Carstens-Mitterrand Meeting J 2
Genscher-Cheysson Talks J 2
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Comment [13 Jul] J 3
Defense Minister Comments on U.S. Missile Policy J 3
FRG Consortium, Brazil Agree To Build Submarines J 3
Strauss Reelected Christian Social Union Head J 4
Newspaper Views U.S.-European Cooperation J 4
[FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 10 Jul]

FRANCE

Minister Hernu Comments on Defense Policy K 1
French Troops To Stay in Central African Republic K 1
Ship Contract With Argentina To Be Honored [LE MONDE 21-22 Jun] K 2
Poll Shows Public Opinion Favors Premier Mauroy K 2

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Chamber of Deputies Accepts Spadolini Government L 1
Fire Bombs Thrown at UK Consul's House in Trieste L 1
Colombo Urges 'More Balanced' U.S. Economic Policy L 1
Magistrates Accused in Masonic Lodge Scandal L 2
Gas Pipeline Negotiators Return From Moscow L 3

SPAIN

Foreign Minister Discusses Meeting With Reagan N 1
Report on Interview N 1
Major Charged With Training Commando for Coup N 2
Briefs: Toxic Pneumonia Deaths N 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Soviet Naval Exercise Reported Off Danish Coast [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 9 Jul] P 1

FINLAND

Social Democratic Party Receives CPSU Letter P 1
Government Grants $3.5 Million Loan to Poland P 1

UNITED KINGDOM

Paper Cites Douglas Hurd News Conference on PLO [ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT 8 Jul] Q 1
Carrington on EEC Initiative on Afghanistan [Abu Dhabi AL-ITTIHAD 12 Jul] Q 2

CYPRUS

Lebanese Helicopter Refused Landing in Larnaca [O FILELEVTHEROS 10 Jul] R 1
Phalangist Leader Turned Back [CYPRUS MAIL 11 Jul] R 1
Protest to Lebanon R 1
Zyyi BBC Relay Station To Hold Strike 13 July [CYPRUS MAIL 12 Jul] R 2
Missing Persons Committee Cancels Meeting R 2
Greek Cypriots' Absence [Bayrak Radio] R 2
Government, Greece Disagree on Basic Issues [I DHILINI 9 Jul] R 2
Greek Embassy Comments R 3
Kiprianou Comments on Turkish Cypriot Proposals R 3
O AGON Remarks [10 Jul] R 4
O AGON Claims Officials' Contact With As-Sadat Kin [12 Jul] R 4
Turkish Cypriot Alleges U.S., Turkish Pressures [SOZ 8 Jul] R 4
Denktas Servility Asserted [I ELEVTHEROTIPIA 10 Jul] R 5

GREECE

Austrian Foreign Minister Ends Visit, Departs S 1
Ministers Open Economic Talks With Bulgaria S 1
Government Criticized Over Turks' Extradition [I KATHIMERINI 11 Jul] S 1
Security Chief's Resignation [I KATHIMERINI 10 Jul] S 2
Rallis Honors Security Chief S 2
Papandreou Returns From FRG Official Visit S 2
Statement on Return S 3
Papandreou Positions Criticized [RIZOSPASTIS 11 Jul] S 3

TURKEY

NSC Enacts Bill on Assembly; Candidates Sought T 1
Turkmen Speaks on Ties With West, Islamic States T 2
Polish Deputy Foreign Minister Concludes Visit T 2
Talks With Turkmen Reported [Warsaw] T 2
YANKI Criticizes Outgoing U.S. Ambassador [YANKI MAGAZINE 6-12 Jul] T 3
Editorial Blames Anti-Americanism on Monetary Policy [MILLIYET 9 Jul] T 4

CHANCELLOR KREISKY COMMENTS ON CSSR EMIGRE CASE

AU091307 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1000 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Markus Sommersacher report on news conference with Chancellor Kreisky after 7 July Austrian cabinet meeting-recorded]

[Excerpt] Chancellor Kreisky deems the mysterious disappearance of former CSSR emigre--and many believe agent-Josef Hodic not so much as a specific measure but as the beginning of a general stiffening and freeze of the climate within the Eastern bloc. Kreisky's explanation as to how he arrived at this conclusion:

[Begin recording] I cannot put certain things together. For example, why a secret service feels the urgent need to expose agents who are otherwise disguised and under cover. I cannot properly explain to myself either why here--or why a strange parallel exists with another case, that is, the Bohumil Lauschmann case. Lauschmann was a Social Democratic leader who emigrated and voluntarily returned and made himself available for a news conference in Prague and who, as a matter of fact, died soon afterward. Hence, I do not grasp many things with the exception of one--and this is a possibility which I do not want to exclude, even though I do not want to maintain that it is the only explanation: It could be possible that certain quarters in Czechoslovakia feel the need to cast suspicion on the dissidents altogether, that is, the opponents of the regime, as potential agents of the Czech secret service. And this is where I warn and ask for caution. [end recording]

That was Kreisky's assessment of Hodic's disappearance. Kreisky is afraid that things in the CSSR could start now, so to speak.

[Begin Kreisky recording] I do not exclude the possibility that an attempt is being made here to cast suspicion on the dissidents altogether, that is, the opponents of the Czechoslovak regime who are living abroad. And this is where I warn of joining this game of the Czechoslovak secret service. Should it turn out that a genuine agent was involved, and we know that he was one, then this argument does not become void as matters stand either but one then must judge the person differently. [end recording]

Do you personally now expect a wave of dissidents trials in the CSSR?

[Begin Kreisky recording] I expect a stiffening of the domestic climate in all communist states because of the Polish development. And this event also must be seen in that context. Hence, it is not so much a question of relations between Austria and Czechoslovakia as a domestic policy matter. [end recording]

VOLKSSTIMME QUESTIONS DEFENSE MINISTRY ON MISSILE

AU091140 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 9 Jul 81 p 2

[Excerpt] After the crash [of a Hungarian military MiG-21 in Austria on 7 July], the Austrian Federal Army dispatched two SAAB 105 fighter bombers to the location. As was announced yesterday, one of these planes lost a missile on the return flight to the Graz-Thalerhof airport. The training missile, which probably had not been properly secured, was discovered by a glider pilot who was surprised by this strange discovery. It became public once more in connection with this incident that each SAAB 105 plane of the Federal Army carries under its wings four training missiles of about one meter in length and 7 kilograms. None of the missiles carry warheads or detonators, it is said; they are intended for forward launching. They are located in berths which allegedly make loss during flight impossible. It happens, however, that a missile could drop off on landing if the catch is not intact. Be that as it may: Missiles are in any event prohibited for the Federal Army by the state treaty. How does the Defense Ministry explain the fact that the SAAB is equipped with missiles?

NETHERLANDS

PARTIES REMOVE OBSTACLES TO VAN AGT PREMIERSHIP

Labor Party Ends Opposition

NC072100 Paris AFP in English 2031 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] The Hague, 7 Jul (AFP)--The Dutch Labor Party today reversed its opposition to outgoing Christian Democratic Prime Minister Andreas van Agt as head of the next government. The head of the Labor Party, Joop den Uyl, Mr van Agt's political rival who claimed the top government post for himself, said the decision was made to break the impasse since legislative elections were held on May 26.

The Labor Party ceded to Mr van Agt in exchange for demands that the next government be more progressive than that hoped for by the Christian Democrats, the country's largest party, in negotiations during the past few weeks, Mr den Uyl said.

The negotiations, led by two Christian Democrat "informants" appointed by Queen Beatrix, have aimed to form a coalition of Christian Democrats, Labor members and members of the neo-liberal Democrats '66 Party.

Mr den Uyl said Labor reversed its stand after extensive deliberations by the party's members of parliament.

Political sources here said the decision will allow the queen to ask Mr van Agt to form the next government, but that the progressive program demanded by Labor will undoubtedly lead to more lengthy negotiations.

Democrats '66 Agree

PM091341 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 7 Jul 81 p 1

["Own correspondent" report: "Terlouw now finds Van Agt acceptable"]

[Excerpt] The Hague--The Democrats '66 (D'66) are now prepared to accept Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) leader van Agt as prime minister in a CDA-D'66-Labor Party (PVDA) cabinet. With the unanimous support of his parliamentary party, D'66 negotiator Terlouw will today inform negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning that D'66 are willing to continue the negotiations toward a policy package, leading to the contemplated cabinet under the leadership of the present outgoing prime minister.

On Monday evening Terlouw called an emergency meeting of his parliamentary party after Van Agt earlier in the day had once again confirmed his candidacy on behalf of the CDA. According to Terlouw, the D'66 parliamentary party will accept Van Agt as prime minister on the condition that the policy contribution of D'66 to a possible new cabinet is "clearly visible and recognizable to D'66 voters." "We will also have to make very sure that we can identify with the ministerial posts we are given."

The room for maneuver which the D'66 negotiator has created meant that Lubbers' and De Koning's efforts did not reach an impasse on Monday. Terlouw thought that it would be undesirable if the negotiation leaders' attempt to form a center-left cabinet foundered on the vexed question of the premiership. Talks on this issue will continue today.

The D'66 leader said over the weekend that he has never wanted to block Van Agt as new prime minister, but that a political discussion of the premiership with Van Agt must be made possible. Van Agt should have a real desire for a CDA-D'66-PVDA cabinet. He must give proof of his willingness to lead such a cabinet, Terlouw said.

PAPER FINDS U.S. FOREIGN POLICY 'WORRYING'

PM061551 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 29 Jun 81 p 7

[Editorial: "Worrying"]

[Text] At the beginning of June, U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig made an attempt to sketch his government's foreign policy. His vision seemed coherent. On the basis of international law and the mores of modern civilization, Washington wanted to strive for a relationship with Moscow based on restraint and reciprocity. In addition, the United States would bring new life to its alliances such as NATO, ANZUS and so on, develop a just and responsible relationship with the Third World and finally once again achieve a productive economy at home which would make the resumption of the traditional U.S. leading role in the world possible.

The U.S, people, Congress and administration are agreed that we must roll up our sleeves, must return to our international role of former times and that we must acquire the military means necessary for this, Haig said in his powerful speech.

But Haig's coherent-sounding story is not much more than rhetoric. U.S. foreign policy is still in chaos. Clumsy, worrying, mutually contradictory statements and actions are causing more and more heads around the world to shake. Carter's foreign policy drifted unclearly and was far from effective, but at the present moment Reagan's diplomacy is not one iota better.

On the contrary, the President has himself given the impression of not knowing chalk from cheese. He has not even had the sense to conceal his ignorance and trailblazing anticommunism. His staff spend a large part of their time clearing up matters which they themselves have complicated.

The person who can find rhyme and reason in all the statements and actions of members of the U.S. administration in recent months will have to be a talented poet. On the one side, President Reagan sees Soviet communism on its way to its undoing, future disarmament negotiator Rostow does not expect negotiations with Moscow on arms limitation for at least another 9 months, and China is put in a position to arm itself against the Soviet threat with U.S. arms.

On the other hand, Assistant Secretary Eagleburger comes to tell the Europeans that the United States wants to start negotiations with the Russians soon, wants to encourage mutual understanding and avoid Soviet isolation. This sounds like an echo of the occasions when Secretary of State Haig has indicated that he sees no alternatives to normal relations with Moscow. There had been a similar echo when Washington--no matter what the motives were--lifted the grain embargo on the Soviet Union.

Seen from the European viewpoint, there is nothing to applaud. Haig may well say that he wants to cultivate the U S. alliances, but the opposite seems to be happening. A number of blunt cold war statements in recent months have at any rate not done transatlantic relations any good. They have rather been grist to the ever busier mills of resistance to the nuclear arms modernization program in the Benelux countries and West Germany.

Even though Eugene Rostow's explanations of the complicated nature of nuclear arms limitation, the difficulties of gaining a grasp of the problems and the long time needed to arrive at serious negotiations are in themselves based on a realistic approach, such statements nevertheless bear witness to a total lack of understanding of or consideration for the political situation in a number of allied nations.

And even though Washington sees reasons for tightening relations with Beijing (which after Reagan's Taiwan statements during the election campaign come as something of a relief), it remains an important question whether the Soviet Union needs at the present time to be shown the red rag of military cooperation between the United States and China.

Neither U.S. allies nor the ASEAN nations were informed of this. The reports came as a shock, especially after U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger had said such a military line would only be thrown to China if the Russians invaded Poland. This they have not done, but with their China policy and the icy wind they are directing at the Soviet Union, the Americans are bound to have reduced the price for such an intervention.

For the countries in West Europe there is no alternative to the Atlantic alliance. And the United States is the most important power as far as our security is concerned. This is why the mixture of clumsiness and primitivism Washington is now radiating is so worrying.

The European allies would do well to consider how they could impress these worries, which are apparent in various capitals, on their American ally.

GOVERNMENT DENIES ENTRY TO PAKISTAN HIJACK FIGURES

NC0720[illegible]2 Paris AFP in English 2007 GMT 7 Jul 81

[Text] The Hague, 7 Jul (AFP)--The Dutch Government has refused entry into the country to 10 Pakistanis freed from prison following the March hijacking of a Pakistani plane to Damascus.

Holland had been asked to take the ten by the UN High Commissioner For Refugees, a Dutch Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

They are among the 54 prisoners--some of them Pakistani opposition leaders--freed by Pakistani authoroties in exchange for the release of the passengers aboard the hijacked plane.

The spokesman said that Holland was rejecting entry of the ten for three reasons: 1) Because Holland was not the first country to accept them--this was Syria. 2) They were not under threat of being returned to Pakistan and, 3) Holland did not wish to give support to the consequences of a terrorist act.

38TH GERMAN-FRENCH CONSULTATIONS OPEN IN BONN

LD121523 Hamburg DPA in German 1436 GMT 12 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 12 Jul (DPA)--The first German-French summit talks since the government takeover by the Socialists in France began in Bonn on Sunday afternoon and were marked by a demonstration of unity on important international questions. Central topics of the 1-day consultations for which President Francois Mitterrand, accompanied by eight cabinet members, came to Bonn, are the coordination of views for the impending economic summit by the seven leading Western industrial nations, the international situation with special regard to East-West relations, relations with the Third World and questions of bilateral cooperation.

Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and Mitterrand, who have already met twice since the election of the new French president, today launched the 38th German-French summit meeting since the concluding of the friendship treaty with an exchange of views which lasted nearly 2 hours. The next item on the agenda was a separate meeting between the chancellor and Premier Pierre Mauroy. Concurrently, the French ministers, including Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson, Economy Minister Jacques Delors and Defense Minister Charles Hernu conferred with their German counterparts.

Piror to this summit meeting in Bonn, various statements made in Paris showed that Mitterrand holds the same views on important international questions as his predecessor Valery Giscard d'Estaing with whom Schmidt had particularly friendly relations. This is true above all for East-West relations and the establishment of military equilibrium. In the economic sphere, Mitterrand and Schmidt stress the urgent need for measures to fight unemployment and share the concern about the continuing U.S. high interest rate policy which increasingly strengthens the American dollar.

Mitterrand on Arms Talks

LD122126 Hamburg DPA German 1939 GMT 12 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 12 Jul (DPA)--France is in favor of early talks with Moscow on limiting medium-range nuclear weapons, but wants the West to achieve an adequate measure of military strength before the opening of such negotiations. President Francois Mitterrand confirmed this stand of his government at a meeting today with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

French Government spokesman Michel Vauzelle said that during his 2-your comprehensive exchange of views with the chancellor, Mitterrand called for a close alignment between the two governments in this field. With his repeated demands for Western arming, Mitterrand goes further than the other NATO countries--including the Federal Republic--which, in the so-called dual decision, make the extent to which the West will match the Soviet Union in medium-range weapons contingent on the result of the proposed U.S.-Soviet talks.

At the start of the 38th German-French consultations, the first since the change of government in Paris, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt conferred for 2 hours each with President Mitterrand and Premier Pierre Mauroy. Covernment spokesmen Kurt Becker and Vauzelle tonight stressed the extraordinarily friendly tone of the meeting.

Schmidt Interview

DW130953 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2100 GMT 12 Jul 81

[Reporter Friedrich Nowottny interview with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Bonn; date not given--recorded]

[Text] Question] How was your first meeting with the French delegation on this first working day?
[Answer] It was very productive and very friendly, I might add.
[Question] Friendly even when the issues were critical?
[Answer] Oh, yes, but the issues were not that critical.
[Question] What was the main point covered the first day?
[Answer] If I view it correctly, there were several main points. The state president and I mainly discussed foreign and world politics, while the premier and I mainly discussed economic issues. At dinner, we all discussed Ottawa.
[Question] Did you develop a course that can be considered as agreed on?
[Answer] Yes, a very far-reaching agreement on Ottawa.
[Question] Are the French as irritated by the high interest rate policy as the Germans?
[Answer] It irritates the French more than the Germans.
[Question] Why?
[Answer] Because France suffers more from it. The interest rate, the discount rate, has reached more than 22 percent.
[Question] What is on tomorrow's agenda?
[Answer] Tomorrow we will listen to and then discuss the reports of individual ministers.
[Question] A personal question: Was some rapprochement achieved between Mr Schmidt and Mr Mitterrand?
[Answer] Yes and vice versa. But that could be felt already in Paris, at the Elysee Palace 3 months ago, and also recently in Luxembourg. We will cooperate well.

Carstens-Mitterrand Meeting

LD130824 Hamburg DPA in German 0713 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jul (DPA)--The French head of state, Francois Mitterrand, began the second day of the German-French consultations in Bonn by visiting Federal President Karl Carstens today. Meanwhile, French Premier Pierre Mauroy received Bonn's finance minister, Hans Matthoefer, for talks on the economic situations in both countries.

Genscher-Cheysson Talks

LD131120 Hamburg DPA in German 1035 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher praised the clear position of the Mitterrand government toward the Western alliance and its decisions regarding security policy, following his second meeting with his colleague, Claude Cheysson, which took place today. The talks between the two foreign ministers resulted in "solid agreement by both governments on all basic questions of foreign policy," according to the Foreign Ministry, especially in their assessment of East-West relations, relationships with the Third World and of security policy.

Both ministers agreed that the coming conference of the seven leading Western industrial nations in Ottawa is of "great significance as a demonstration of unity of the Western camp." This is true from an economic as well as from a political point of view. Both sides expect "leading-the-way" decisions from the planned North-South summit in Cancun (Mexico).

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Comment

DW130906 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 13 Jul 81 p 8

[Commentary signed K.A.O.: "Mitterrand in Bonn"]

[Text] So many things must be handled at the 38th German-French consultation meeting, for which Mitterrand has come to Bonn, that hardly any time will be left for details. This makes it easier for the governments which have to become accustomed to each other to find temporary forms of agreement. Independent of the question of who is ruling in Paris and Bonn, the list of common interests of both countries is pleasantly long. Important foreign political issues are involved particularly relations with America, the approach to its high interest rate policy, and with Russia, its armament lead and its threat to Poland. Mitterrand's short time in office demonstrates, however, that new Paris approaches could curtail the firm stock of things in common, particularly with regard to the European Community. The fact that quiet agreement between Bonn and Paris, which was viewed with mistrust by other European states, will be replaced by talks between all European member states, may make some things more cumbersome for Bonn, but it can serve the cohesion of all. Negative, however, is the uncertainty as to where Mitterrand will steer his ship of state in matters of economy and social policy. The Germans are warned by their own experience with the well meant but not thought through reform avalanche of the late 1960's.

DEFENSE MINISTER COMMENTS ON U.S. MISSILE POLICY

LD111534 Hamburg DPA in German 1359 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Hamburg, 11 Jul (DPA)--Defense Minister Hans Apel expressed skepticism about reflections by Eastern and Western military experts according to which a tactical nuclear war could be limited and that initial strikes would bring the two sides to their senses, leading to suspension of hostilities. "As far as I am concerned," Apel said in an interview for the news magazine DER SPIEGEL, "nuclear arms, of whatever kind, are political weapons which are meant to deter." And the introduction of new arms systems will not change that.

Asked about U.S. policy, Apel said that there can be no doubt as to the credibility of the American alliance partner. The alliance agreed on the strategy of flexible reaction in 1967. At the heart of that strategy is the reaction with those means which have been used in the attack. Hence, a reply to Soviet SS-20 missiles is not to start with an intercontinental missile but the Pershing 11 and cruise missiles. Once the Soviet Union stops its advance arming then there will be no need for the West's counter-arming.

Apel said further that every time the Americans decide to use nuclear arms they will immediately lay themselves open to the nuclear risk. The Soviets have repeatedly stated clearly that they have no intention of limiting initial nuclear attacks to Europe. "Let no one believe that war is going to break out in Europe while the Americans are watching it via NBC in color."

FRG CONSORTIUM, BRAZIL AGREE TO BUILD SUBMARINES

PY090341 Paris AFP in Spanish 1643 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 3 Jul (AFP)--A consortium of FRG enterprises, headed by the firm Ferrostaal, has decided to establish a cooperation agreement with Brazil for the construction of submarines, a reliable source reported today. This project was mentioned during Brazilian President Joao Baptista Figueiredo's visit last May to the FRG, the source added.

STRAUSS REELECTED CHRISTIAN SOCIAL UNION HEAD

LD111535 Hamburg DPA in German 1140 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Munich, 11 Jul (DPA)--Franz Josef Strauss was reelected by a large majority as party chairman at the Christian Social Union party congress in Munich today. Strauss received 844 of the 873 valid votes cast; 23 ballots were invalid, 29 were cast for someone else; 896 delegates took part in the election. Strauss received 96.7 percent of the valid votes, which is slightly less than 2 years ago, when he won 99 percent of the valid votes.

NEWSPAPER VIEWS U.S.-EUROPEAN COOPERATION

DW101040 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 10 Jul 81 p 3

[Commentary by Washington correspondent signed "Ter": "Curiosity and Mistrust"]

[Text] For at least 2 years, the following scene has been taking place regularly in Washington: U.S. Government officials complain about the lack of cooperation on the part of the European alliance partners, particularly the Federal Republic, be it in the case of sanctions against the Soviet Union after the Afghanistan invasion or in connection with the Tehran hostage affair. There is now a new great source of U.S.-European irritations--the TNF modernization problem, that is, the problem of deploying U.S. nuclear medium-range missiles in West Europe.

Suspicion again exists. It is said that the Europeans, particularly the Germans, cannot be relied on (while one can forget completely about the Netherlands). They want to abandon an adopted decision, the so-called NATO dual decision. Washington's nightmare bears the names pacifism and neutralism. A visit such as SPD Chairman Willy Brandt's to Moscow is understandably being viewed with greatest mistrust.

Yet the signals coming in this case from the Ronald Reagan government are not unambiguous at all. Horst Ehmke, who presently is making an information tour of Washington's government offices, indicated that Brandt left a number of precise factual questions in Moscow. It cannot be answered at the moment, however, on whose commission and order this has taken place. It could very well have been the U.S. Government.

In such a case, however, the strong U.S. interest in Brandt's visit would not have been motivated only by mistrust toward the West Europeans, but by sincere curiosity regarding the intentions of the Soviet Union. If this is true, the disarmament dialogue has, so to speak, gotten underway.

MINISTER HERNU COMMENTS ON DEFENSE POLICY

NC101802 Paris AFP in English 1735 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 10 Jul (AFP)--France intends to develop its nuclear dissuasion force and believes that world disarmament should start with the superpowers, French Defence Minister Charles Hernu said in an interview published today.

In the interview with the Paris daily LE MONDE, Mr Hernu also defended France's right to maintain a capability for foreign intervention and to export arms, and said it would continue its research on a neutron bomb.

Mr Hernu said France must retain its independence in defence decisions so that it is not automatically involved in conflicts that it would not wish to be drawn into. But he said France would "respect and deepen" ties with the North Atlantic alliance. It is not a member of the alliance's unified military command.

France's defence policy is based on President Francois Mitterrand's campaign promises, Mr Hernu said, and involves development and not simply maintenance of the country's nuclear capability. He said France supported international disarmament, but first among the superpowers. On arms exports, he said Paris must fulfill its contracts "because France's word must be respected."

Reforms planned in the armed forces would not affect France's capacity for external intervention and the principle of disarmament would be pursued without jeopardizing France's security, Mr Hernu said.

He said that France's intervention forces were necessary due to threats to security not only in Europe but in Africa, where Paris intends to respect its military accords with several African states. "This means that France must possess the means for intervention," he said, adding that Paris would take such a step only "on the urging and with the express consent of leaders of these countries." He said France would not interfere in the affairs of another state.

FRENCH TROOPS TO STAY IN CENTRAL AFRICAN REPUBLIC

NC121722 Paris AFP in English 1717 GMT 12 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Jul (AFP)--French troops will remain in the Central African Republic for the time being with the essential task of training a new Central African Army, Central African Prime Minister Simon Narcisse Bozanga said today at the end of a ten-day visit to France.

His statement cleared up the question mark over the future of the 1,400 men of the Barracuda strike force sent in by former French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing to help overthrow Central African Emperor Jean-Bedel Bokassa two years ago.

Mr Bozanga also said that the French Government, which recognised the "legality" of Bokassa's successor, Central African President David Dacko and his government, had expressed the desire to deal with Bangui from now on "as state to state, government to government, beyond any personal relationship."

These remarks, plus the language of the official communique, which talked of building relations on "new bases" in a spirit of "mutual respect," was seen as a criticism of the policy of Mr Giscard d'Estaing, who had close personal ties with Bokassa before the emperor's behaviour made him a liability.

The cooperation agreements, concluded when Central Africa became independent in 1960, must be revised "to suit the present needs" of the country better, Mr Bozanga said.

During his stay Mr Bozanga also stressed to French officials the "disastrous" economic situation of his country, in which, he said, there was high unemployment and a total absence of investment or job creation for four years.

The joint communique said that Mr Bozanga had reported to the French side on "results of efforts undertaken to re-balance the budget and to get the economy moving."

In return "French officials said they hoped that the pursuit of these actions would end up by creating conditions for an economic revival, to which France will make its contribution at the appropriate time," the communique added.

Mr Bozanga also informed Justice Minister Robert Badinta of a decision by a Bangui court that all property of Bokassa in French territory should be seized, and asked for help in training Central African magistrates.

SHIP CONTRACT WITH ARGENTINA TO BE HONORED

PM130814 Paris LE MONDE in French 21-22 Jun 81 p 26

[Text] The sloop temporarily named Granville and ordered by Argentina will be handed over to an Argentine crew by the Lorient shipyard on 22 June. This 1,170-ton ship, made especially for antisubmarine warfare in coastal waters, is being tested and is to be delivered in keeping with an agreement dating from 1978.

On 13 May, following Mitterrand's election as president, the office of the premier, who was then Raymond Barre, indicated that some deliveries of French arms to foreign countries were temporarily suspended. This note issued by the Hotel Matignon related in particular to Argentina, which had received two sloops from France a long time ago and was awaiting delivery of a third vessel.

Pierre Mauroy's government has stated several times that France's international commitments will be respected regarding armaments ordered long in advance and whose delivery had been promised. Two countries, however, have been subjected to an embargo--South Africa and Chile, which were engaged in preliminary discussions on the purchase of equipment for internal repression.

POLL SHOWS PUBLIC OPINION FAVORS PREMIER MAUROY

NC121833 Paris AFP in English 1823 GMT 12 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 12 Jul (AFP)--French public opinion favours Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy more than President Francois Mitterrand after their first seven weeks in power according to a poll to be published tomorrow. The poll, appearing in the QUOTIDIEN of Paris newspaper, showed that 72 per cent of those questioned had a "good opinion" of Mr Mauroy, the former mayor of the northern industrial city of Lille, to 66 per cent for Mr Mitterrand.

Among opposition figures, former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing headed the list with 42 per cent, followed by 35 per cent for ex-Premier Raymond Barre and 31 per cent for Gaullist leader and Paris Mayor Jacques Chirac.

Meanwhile a poll in the JOURNAL DE DIMANCHE today showed that 56 per cent of the French are satisfied with the economic and political policies--notably concerning nationalisation--put to parliament by Mr Mauroy last week. A total of 51 per cent of those questioned were in favour of nationalisation while 62 per cent believed that state-ownership would create more jobs and 60 per cent thought that it would improve living standards for workers. However 57 per cent believed that nationalisation could increase the level of bureaucracy in the French economy.

CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES ACCEPTS SPADOLINI GOVERNMENT

NC111513 Paris AFP in English 1441 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 11 Jul (AFP)--Italy's newly-formed government headed by Giovanni Spadolini today was invested in Parliament after deputies voted by 360 to 247 to accept the coalition. The Senate had expressed its confidence in the government on Thursday by a vote of 188 to 124.

Mr Spadolini, 56, leader of the small Republican Party, is Italy's first non-Christian Democrat to serve as premier since 1945. He was sworn in on Tuesday. His cabinet is dominated by Christian Democrats, but also includes Socialists, Social Democrats, Republicans and Liberals.

The government of Arnaldo Forlani resigned over the so-called P-2 Masonic lodge scandal and a fierce debate over the scandal preceded today's vote.

FIRE BOMBS THROWN AT UK CONSUL'S HOUSE IN TRIESTE

NC110954 Paris AFP in English 0947 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Trieste, northeast Italy, 11 Jul (AFP)--Two small fire bombs were thrown at the home of British Consul Norman John Lister here early today, a police source said. One made a small hole in the roof and the other, also thrown at the roof, fell to the ground and went out. Mr Lister told police he had recently found the words "Freedom for Ireland" scrawled on a wall of his house.

COLOMBO URGES 'MORE BALANCED' U.S. ECONOMIC POLICY

AU111955 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 11 Jul (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo urged the Reagan administration to adopt "more balanced" economic policies rather than relying solely on monetary measures in the battle against inflation in an interview to be published tomorrow by the Milanese daily, IL GIORNO.

According to Colombo, "rather than basing itself exclusively on monetary measures, the battle against inflation in the United States would be just as effective for America, and less harmful for the European countries, if it rested on a dosage of more balanced policies". In the interview, Colombo added that this is what the European countries, will tell the Americans at the coming Ottawa summit of the West's seven most industrialized nations as they voice "their concern for the continuous rise of the dollar".

According to Colombo, the other major economic theme which will be discussed in Ottawa on July 20-21 is trade policy, which is of particular importance for EEC-Japanese relations. According to the Italian Government, he said, Japan must accept agreements giving the European industries more breathing-space so that they can complete a delicate phase of re-structuring. In any case, Colombo said, it is important that the EEC's Executive Commission should handle the negotiations, given the now consolidated economic interdependence between the Community's member states.

On more precisely political problems, Colombo said that the installation of a leftwing government in France had enlarged the "play of relations within the EEC".

On Poland, he said that the coming congress of the Polish Communist Party would be "crucial" for future developments in the East European state. But he also cited Soviet Foreign Minister Andrey Gromyko's recent visit to Warsaw as indicating, "at least for the moment", a prevalence in Moscow of an "orientation for negotiation, rather than the intimidation that seems to have inspired (Moscow) so far".

"Overall," the Italian diplomatic chief said, "I think factors have intervened which induce, if not optimism, at least less pessimism". He cited the factors as including the "support given by Romania to the Polish leadership, and the proofs of realism offered hitherto".

"On the other hand, Colombo asserted, "the Soviet Union well knows the high price it would have to pay if it sought to close the crisis in, let's say, a violent way."

MAGISTRATES ACCUSED IN MASONIC LODGE SCANDAL

AU111609 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 11 Jul (ANSA)--The Italian magistrature now seems to be the focus of fire in the secret P-2 Masonic lodge scandal led by Venerable Master Licio Gelli as Roman judges seek to unravel the significance of documents found when Gelli's daughter, Maria Grazia, was detained on entering Italy a week ago.

The first targets for the fire are the Milanese magistrates investigation the affairs of Sicilian Financier Michele Sindona, now serving 25 years in a New York penitentiary for his role in the bankruptcy of the Franklin National Bank. It was these magistrates who, last March decided to search Gelli's home and office in Arezzo, Tuscany, a move that turned up the documents on which the P-2 scandal is based. Some newspapers have now started accusing the magistrates of pursuing a "witchhunt" or of acting as instruments in a hidden war between the powers-that-be of Italian economic and political life. Part of these accusations are based on allegations that the magistrates are corrupt, a charge which also emerges from the documents seized from Maria Grazia Gelli and is apparently as unfounded as the insinuations in the press. The precise accusation is that the judges hold illegal bank accounts in Switzerland under false names where they were receiving money to place their enquiries on a well-defined trail. Even though there seems to be absolutely no basis for the accusations, the Social Democrats, Socialists, and Christian Democrats, among the Italian parties, have been most critical so far of the judges' work, while the judges reject these criticisms, asking for "guarantees" in order to avoid "external pressures and instrumentalizations".

In another aspect of the whole affair, there is a conflict of competence between the Rome and Milan magistrates over who should handle the P-2 scandal, conjuring up further charges of "political deviation" in the magistrature and fears that the whole case may be quietly buried.

The most obvious echo of the P-2 tempest was in the lower house yesterday when both Social Democrat Party Secretary Pietro Longo and his Socialist counterpart, Bettino Craxi, urged the government of which their parties form a part to "bring order" to Italian justice, in particular by redefining the role and limits on the action of the public prosecutor. Significantly, observers noted, both party secretaries spoke in harshly worded terms to Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini, laying down what seemed to be an ultimatum in a debate that was seen originally as an easy swim to finally voting confidence in the new administration. Longo even charged Spadolini with going back on pledges taken during the talks that led to the formation of the government by failing to include the proposed limitations on the Public Prosecutor's Office in the government program.

On the same topic, Craxi tied in the demand for reining in the public prosecutors to the collapse of the Italian stock market following the trial against banker Roberto Calvi and other leading financial figures on charges of illicit currency deals and illegally exporting capital. According to Craxi, "if you put handcuffs on financiers representing half the board (of listed shares) without using the caution the law foresees, it is difficult not to foresee uncontrollable psychological reactions".

Calvi, who is president of the Milanese Banco Ambrosiano and the Centrale Financial Institute, and who also owns forty percent of the Rizzoli publishing empire, including The CORRIERE DELLA SERA daily, is alleged to have broken the currency laws in finagling involving the Toro insurance giant and a leading bank, Credito Varesino. In a gesture subject to varying interpretations, three days ago, the banker attempted suicide in jail by swallowing ninety or so sleeping pills. He is now in a hospital near Milan.

Last Monday, Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta suspended all dealings in shares on the Italian stock exchanges after losses of 30-35 percent were registered in about a month.

The scene then is a gordian knot of political sorties, demands for cleaning up public life, charges and counter-charges and, hovering between background and foreground, the storm blown up by Gelli and his P-2. Putting all those who have been attacking the magistrature under one umbrella, Milanese Judge Antonio Amati, head of the Milan courts' investigatory office, yesterday called on head-of-state Sandro Pertini to impose silence on "certain frogs croaking the mire".

As for Craxi, his speech complained of what he alleged was a "McCarthy-style campaign" of suspicion which, so he said, had already taken the lives of "gentlemen", including finance guards Colonel Luciano Rossi, who committed suicide apparently because he came under heavy pressure in connection with testimony he filed with the Milan magistrates.

In this general climate of tension, everyone is now waiting for the next move from Gelli, who once described himself in an interview with journalist Maurizio Costanzo, a P-2 member who is now on extended leave from the Rizzoli group, as the "grand puppet-master" of Italian men of power and the country's power-centers. Most people expect some counter-move over his daughter, accused, like him, of belonging to a criminal association, political conspiracy, slander and espionage, the slander charge deriving from their apparent attempts to implicate magistrates in corruption charges. The espionage charge derives, among other things, from the fact that Maria Grazia Gelli's luggage contained a CIA report marked top secret in which the American secret service describes an international plot underway, or to be put underway, in an unidentified Western country.

GAS PIPELINE NEGOTIATORS RETURN FROM MOSCOW

AU111945 Rome ANSA in English 1911 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Moscow, 11 Jul (ANSA)--A high-ranking delegation of Italian officials flew back home from Moscow today after two days of what they described as "constructive talks" on the massive gasline project planned to bring Western Europe about forty billion cubic meters of Soviet natural gas each. Sources close to the delegation said that the talks were devoted to a "deeping" of the problems being discussed. The consultations started in Rome in May and will continue in coming months.

The delegation included high-ranking officials from the Italian Foreign and Industry Ministries, as well as the Bank of Italy. Also in the delegation was Giuseppe Ratti, head of international relations for Italy's state-run fuels group, ENI, one of the firms most deeply involved in building the gasline.

The major topic now being studied is the financial aspects of the deal, particularly the interest rates to govern the credits which the Soviet Union is seeking in order to build the line. The gasline should cover more than 4,5000 kilometers from the natural gas fields in Siberia to West Germany, where branches will be run off to Italy, France, Belgium, Holland and Austria.

The project has come in for heavy fire from the United States. [Word indistinct] seeing Western Europe increase its dependence on Soviet energy sources. The total cost is put at 12-15 billion dollars.

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES MEETING WITH REAGAN

LD101128 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0600 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Unidentified correspondent's interview with Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca at Madrid's Barajas Airport on 10 July on his return from an official visit to the United States--live]

[Excerpts] [Question] Mr Minister, to what extent was President Reagan interested in Spanish democracy during the meeting which you and he had some hours ago?

[Answer] I found President Reagan and our interlocutors as a whole greatly interested in the consolidation and stability of the democratic system in Spain. President Reagan said that it is the most important thing they could look for in bilateral relations; the preservation of democracy is highly important, according to the President.

[Question] Mr Minister, apparently some problems exist with regard to the signing of a new Spanish-U.S. treaty by 21 September and, it seems, there are some problems particularly with regard to the military question. Will you study the signing of a (?new) treaty parallel to Spanish entry into NATO?

[Answer] With regard to the signing of the agreement, the timing depends on the successful outcome of the negotiations in progress. The subject of the Atlantic alliance depends on a decision by the government, a decision which it will have to make when, in the light of the reports which it receives, it considers the time is appropriate for the interests of Spain, because it will be a decision which is absolutely favorable from all points of view to the well-being and security of Spaniards and one which does not entail any difficulties other than those which might already result from being a Western country.

[Question] Hello, Prado del Rey [Madrid radio headquarters and studios]. We have just heard a late piece of news about a terrorist attack. Could you confirm this report?

We will take advantage of the fact that we have the minister live here in the VIP lounge at Barajas Airport and ask him if in his meetings in the United States he discussed the subject of terrorism in Spain?

[Answer] It was discussed and there is a very important and direct predisposition on the part of the U.S. administration to give the Spanish Government any help which may be necessary to eradicate the plague of terrorism. The new U.S. administration has made the struggle against terrorism in all parts of the world a priority and this priority consideration has, of course, been offered to us.

Report on Interview

LD101544 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1130 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Correspondent Hector Arenas report on interview with Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez-Llorca at Madrid's Barajas Airport on 10 July on his return from an official visit to the United States]

[Excerpts] Spanish Foreign Minister Perez-Llorca said that President Reagan told him during the course of their meeting in Washington that the United States is concerned about continued democracy in Spain. Perez-Llorca, who this morning returned to Madrid, said that he clearly informed the U.S. authorities that from now on Spain wants relations as a new member of Europe, overcoming the old belief that the Spanish peninsula is just another military strategic territory on the continent. On this point, the minister said:

[Begin recording] What do they have to look for now in Spain as an active partner commensurate with its size. (?Ours) is not the size of one of the big powers. (?We are not) a large country, but we are of an important size in European terms. An active partner has to look for the active cooperation of a partner in the Western community--a country which wants to assert itself within the Western community as a member of the European Community and at the appropriate time become a member of the Atlantic alliance and, therefore, does not want to be a [word indistinct] territory [words indistinct] much more important. [end recording]

The Spanish foreign minister then said that, in the new treaty with the United States, they have asked for industrial aid for better economic development and military technology for the modernization of the armed forces. Then in answer to a question, he said that no closure of the military bases in Spain is on the immediate horizon, either Torrejon in Madrid or the one in Zaragoze, although he did say that restructuring of these bases is raised in the new treaty.

Finally, Foreign Minister Perez-Llorca said that the king and queen of Spain probably will pay an official visit to the United States next October.

MAJOR CHARGED WITH TRAINING COMMANDO FOR COUP

NC101154 Paris AFP in English 1154 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Text] Madrid, 10 Jul (AFP)--An army major has been charged with training a 50-strong commando in order to stage a coup d'etat, EL PAIS newspaper reported today, claiming to have seen documents to this effect.

EL PAIS said that Major Ricardo Saenz de Ynestrillas, arrested on June 23, was accused of "conspiracy in view of military rebellion" under Spain's anti-terrorist laws. The report said that the plot was masterminded by an unidentified army general.

BRIEFS

TOXIC PNEUMONIA DEATHS--Another death occurred today in Madrid as a result of toxic pneumonia. This means that two people have died today in Spain as a result of the epidemic. Sources at the Health Ministry said that the total number of people hospitalized in Spain is (?1,294), 906 of whom are in Madrid where there have been 60 admissions and 34 people have been discharged. In the provinces, there have been 43 admissions and 31 people have been discharged. [Text] [Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1400 GMT 11 Jul 81 LD]

DENMARK

SOVIET NAVAL EXERCISE REPORTED OFF DANISH COAST

PM101500 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 9 Jul 81 Part 1 p 7

["Auni" report]

[Text] An extremely powerful Russian naval force is now operating in the Skagerrak after leaving the Baltic through the great belt.

The force includes a 17,000-ton cruiser of the so-called Sverdlov class and 2 Krivak class missile destroyers, each of 4,000 tons. In Aalbaek Bugt the ships met a 4,500-ton missile destroyer of the Krishin class and a naval tanker. The force remained for a time outside Danish waters in Aalbaek Bugt and then continued out into the Skagerrak.

Danish defense sources said that it is quite rare for such a Soviet naval force to operate together in these waters. All the ships, with the exception of the tanker, can carry nuclear arms. The force is expected to return to the Baltic soon in the role of an "enemy force" and, on its way, will be attacked by submarines, destroyers, torpedo boats and aircraft from the Soviet Union, Poland and East Germany.

FINLAND

SOCIAL DEMOCRATIC PARTY RECEIVES CPSU LETTER

LD061110 Helsinki International Service in English 0830 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] The Finnish Social Democratic Party has received a letter from the Soviet Communist Party requesting the Finnish Social Democratic Party's stand on the disarmament problem. At the same time the Soviet Communist Party has asked which practical measures the Finnish SDP would be ready for in order to secure international peace. In its answer the Finnish Social Democratic Party says that it is ready to continue any further constructive discussion concerning disarmament. The Finnish Social Democratic Party has decided not to publish its detailed answer.

All European social democratic parties have during this spring received the same kind of letter from the Soviet Communist Party. The text of the letter was published on Saturday by the newspaper of the Italian Socialist Party.

GOVERNMENT GRANTS $3.5 MILLION LOAN TO POLAND

LD061038 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0930 GMT 6 Jul 81

[Text] Finland granted Poland a loan of $3.5 million or about FM15.4 million. The loan will be used to finance exports from Finland to Poland. The exports primarily cover refined products, according to Post Bank General Manager Heikki Tuominen. The Post Bank was instrumental in arranging the loan. Finland also signed an agreement with Polish authorities concerning the consolidation of Finnish receivables. According to this agreement, Poland is to pay receivables amounting to about $15 million or about FM66 million, by the beginning of July 1989. The new loan to Poland has been guaranteed by the state. The new credit for financing exports is to stimulate Finnish exports to Poland. Trade between the two countries recently has shown a considerable deficit for Finland.

PAPER CITES DOUGLAS HURD NEWS CONFERENCE ON PLO

PM091356 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 8 Jul 81 p 2

[Mahir 'Uthman report: "Hurd Tells PLO: 'Time Factor Is Important but Haste, Like Procrastination, Is Harmful'"]

[Text] London, ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT--British Minister of State for Foreign Affairs Douglas Hurd has called on the PLO to alter its present attitude toward Israel. At a news conference he held at the Foreign Office, attended by a large number of Arab newspapers' and agencies' representatives, Hurd said: "We are not asking the PLO to make unilateral concessions without a move from the other side. We suggest that the PLO issue a conditional statement--and I emphasize the word conditional--stipulating that, should Israel accept the Palestinians' right to self-determination, the PLO would in such circumstances accept Israel's right to live in security."

The British minister, who is charged with special responsibilities related to Middle East affairs, added: "We are not asking the PLO to play the recognition card but to brandish it. We believe this could make a change for the better with regard to the prospects of peace and the prospects of self-determination for the Palestinians."

In the course of his reply to scores of detailed questions, Hurd recognized the "limitations" of the European effort to contribute to a settlement of the Palestine issue, and of the scope beyond which these efforts cannot go.

ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT asked the British minister of state for foreign affairs to give his opinion on the Israels' attitude which says that Europe has nothing to offer Israel and nothing to conceal from it, and the Arab attitude which says that the European effort on the Middle East is so far tantamount to a tranquilizer that has benefited the Western states economically and commercially without exerting real efforts to influence their big ally, the United States. Hurd commented on this by saying: "The U.S. contribution is a basic factor for achieving a solution. We have given the Americans our viewpoints and expressed our views to them in Washington in recent months. I agree that this is an important part of our contribution, but there is another important part, namely, the ideas and the principles we have come up with to contribute toward a settlement of the problem."

Hurd went on to say: "I understand that people lose patience and ask why no results have been achieved, but these people must also ask: What other alternative do we have? What is the Arab strategy for solving this problem. What is the PLO's strategy for solving the problem?

Replying to a question to the effect that the PLO cannot burn its only card--the card of recognition--without guaranteeing positive results in the interest of the Palestinians and without Europe's contribution to creating conditions that would make Israel make meaningful concessions, Hurd said: "Reciprocal concessions are tacit in the European statement. We have proposed to some Arab states that the PLO issue a statement to the effect I have already mentioned. We have also expressed this in the news media. Meanwhile, we will continue to urge Israel's friends that it is necessary to bring about a change in Israeli policy."

ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT asked the British minister how important the Europeans feel the time factor is on an issue in which Israel is daily imposing a new "reality" by building more Jewish settlements. He replied: "We have talked with the Americans about this. Prime Minister Thatcher also raised this question in Washington last February. We know that one cannot sit comfortably forever talking about the need to find a solution while time passes by. However, haste for the sake of haste, like procrastination, is wrong because it will not produce the required results. Our view on the settlements is clear. I agree that the matter is serious, but making hasty proposals that are bound to be rejected is useless."

CARRINGTON ON EEC INITIATIVE ON AFGHANISTAN

GF121907 Abu Dhabi AL-ITTIHAD in Arabic 12 Jul 81 p 6

[Apparent text of interview granted by Lord Carrington, British secretary of state for foreign and commonwealth affairs and current chairman of the EEC Council, to Kenneth Richardson, EEC affairs correspondent for the SUNDAY TIMES and AL-ITTIHAD, in London; date not given]

[Text] [Question] In your view, what has been accomplished regarding the European initiative on Afghanistan. Considering the fact that you have returned from Moscow with an almost "categorical rejection," do you consider this another example of "Europe's strong words" that will not be combined with anything practical?

[Answer] The issues of foreign affairs are not as simple as that. If you want to effect continuous development, it will probably require time, in conjunction with practical activity. Now, if some people imagined that I would go to Moscow for a few hours talk with Mr Gromyko that would result in my getting his approval on the initiative, these people do not know how things work. All we are doing is laying the groundwork on which a possible settlement may be established in the future. For example, some time before you came, I was talking with Habib Chatti, the secretary general of the Islamic Conference organization. Mr Chatti said: "Well, so far, it is a good start and we have to begin with that." No one can predict that 1 evening's work will result in the acceptance of an initiative of this kind. One must build on things that have been established. Furthermore, there is a positive gain in keeping this issue before public opinion where we can eliminate the possibility of it falling into oblivion. There is no possibility of accepting a de facto situation such as what happened in Czechoslovakia. We are proposing reasonable ideas and I hope we will finally be able to bring the Soviets to the negotiating table.

[Question] But Gromyko has described the initiative as "unfeasible." Do you believe this to be a sound reaction?

[Answer] I believe Gromyko could not find basic faults with the initiative. I returned with the impression that Gromyko's argument was not convincing and I believe that the visit has been successful. I still hope that we will be able to try once more to win approval for our proposals.

[Question] Don't you believe that the initiative would have had a better chance if it had been proposed in another way?

[Answer] I do not believe this is true. We accurately prepared the initiative proposals. You have to be careful in taking the chance of telling Gromyko all you want to say instead of risking the cancellation of the meeting before you've arrived.

[Question] Didn't former Chancellor Willy Brandt receive a warmer welcome than you during his visit to Moscow 1 week prior to your visit?

[Answer] Well, if you don't have any initiative to propose, you are not representing a government.

[Question] Have we talked about the EEC countries? The British are striving to effect changes in the EEC budget and agricultural policy. What will happen if the rest of the Community rejects this? Is there any danger of differences and disputes similar to what happened last year?

[Answer] I do not predict this will happen because, as you see, they have accepted out viewpoint. They accepted it on 30 May 1980 despite the fact it was not a permanent acceptance, which would have turned an accepted theory in to a practical experience.

LEBANESE HELICOPTER REFUSED LANDING IN LARNACA

NC100840 Nicosia O FILELEVTHEROS in Greek 10 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Larnaca, 9 Jul--The republic's authorities refused to allow the landing of a Phalangist cadre which arrived at the Larnaca airport yesterday in a Lebanese helicopter. Following this refusal, the helicopter took off and returned to its base in Lebanon.

Relevant reports mention that: The Lebanese Government had asked permission from the competent Cyprus authorities to land the helicopter at Larnaca and that the permit was granted. Naturally, the permit was granted without knowing the identity the passengers in the helicopter or their purpose.

However, when it was ascertained that the Lebanese helicopter had a Phalangist leader on board, who was later to board a plane for Europe, the Cyprus authorities--to avoid involving the Cyprus Republic in the Lebanese problem, with its broader ramifications--told the helicopter crew not to land.

The competent authorities gave an explanation to the Lebanese diplomatic representative. Many times in the past, government representatives have declared that Cyprus has its own serious political problem and requested the Arab countries not to involve it in their differences.

Phalangist Leader Turned Back

NC110938 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 11 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government has refused to allow the Lebanese Phalangist leader Pierre al-Jumayyil to use Cyprus as a transit to another destination, the government spokesman revealed yesterday. The spokesman confirmed that on Thursday the Lebanese Embassy had sought a permit from the government for the flight of a helicopter from Beirut to Cyprus on a "training flight".

The permit was given, but when the helicopter landed at Larnaca it was ascertained that one of the passengers was Phalangist leader al-Jumayyil who intended to proceed to another destination. In the circumstances, the spokesman said, [the Cyprus Government] pointed out that it could not agree and that Mr al-Jumayyil ought to return to the helicopter which brought him to Larnaca and this was eventually done.

It is recalled that the government had earlier denied reports that it was considering an application by Phalangists for a helicopter air link between Larnaca and the Phalangist-controlled Juniyah in Lebanon.

The Cyprus Government said it did receive a request for such a link but this came from the Lebanese embassy though a "note verbale", and that no Phalangist request had been received nor could it be considered.

Protest to Lebanon

NC111612 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1530 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Today, Foreign Minister Rolandhis called in the Lebanese charge d'affaires (?Ammun) and lodged an oral protest related to the recent arrival of a helicopter without the submission of detailed information on the flight.

Rolandhis stated that as a result of this incident he cannot give further consideration to the request of the Lebanese Government for helicopter flights between Lebanon and Larnaca.

ZYYI BBC RELAY STATION TO HOLD STRIKE 13 JULY

NC121044 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 12 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Employees of the British radio relay station at Zyyi are to hold a 24-hour token strike tomorrow, Monday, the employees' union said yesterday. The strike was to have been held yesterday but has been deferred to allow employers to give final proposals for settlement of the dispute--about renewal of a collective agreement.

The union blamed the employers for delaying tactics, and said the management asked for a 15 days' delay without any firm indication that the workers' claims will be satisfied. The strike will affect BBC broadcasts to several countries in Europe, Asia and Africa.

MISSING PERSONS COMMITTEE CANCELS MEETING

NC091154 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] An official statement reports that the first meeting of the investigatory committee on missing persons, slated for this morning at the Ledra Palace Hotel [in Nicosia] was not held because of difficulties connected with certain procedural issues that are still in abeyance. It is hoped, the statement adds, that these outstanding issues will soon be settled to enable the committee to proceed with its work without further delay.

Greek Cypriots' Absence

TA091137 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] The first meeting of the joint missing persons committee, which was to be held today, did not take place because the Greek Cypriot side failed to attend it. Latife Birgen, who is representing the Turkish Cypriot side on the joint committee, and (Claus Hew), a former official of the International Red Cross appointed as representative to the committee by the UN secretary general, arrived at the Ledra Palace Hotel at the time the meeting was supposed to begin. They waited for 30 minutes, but Mikhailidhis, who is representing the Greek Cypriot side, did not arrive. The United Nations issued a short statement at 1030 saying that the meeting could not be held due to the absence of the Greek Cypriot representative. No information was given about when the next meeting would be held or about (?who) will be appointed to attend it.

According to information received, the Greek Cypriot side failed to attend today's meeting as a result of a dispute between the Greek Cypriot administration and the Greek Cypriot missing persons committee. The Greek Cypriot missing persons committee also wanted its representative to attend the meeting. The Greek Cypriot representative did not attend the meeting as a result of the subsequent dispute.

GOVERNMENT, GREECE DISAGREE ON BASIC ISSUES

NC091100 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 9 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] There are disagreements, especially on substantive issues of the Cyprus problem, between the Greek Government, Greek political parties and the Cyprus Government. These disagreements primarily concern ways of handling the national issue which is passing through a very critical state.

This was stressed yesterday to I DHILINI by well-informed sources commenting on President Kiprianou's statements on 7 July in Athens and Nicosia. His statement in Athens refuted the Nicosia one. The sources also noted that the government spokesman's statement yesterday tried to play down the difference between the premier's statements that had suprised political circles.

As is well known, shortly before departing, Kiprianou stated in Athens that "there had been pervasive unanimity on support to Cyprus both in the Greek Government and the "opposition parties," but on arrival at Larnaca he said that "there are disagreements and shades of opinion regarding the ways of handling the Cyprus problem."

Yesterday, when the government spokesman was asked to comment on President Kiprianou's conflicting statements, he tried to play down the difference, saying: "There are no differences between the Cyprus and Greek Governments. The statement on differences concerns details and not substantive issues, as can be seen from the statements that were made by political leaders in Greece. In any case, everybody fully supports the Cyprus Government's aims."

Replying to an observation by reporters that the president had clearly spoken of "disagreements and shades of opinion on ways of handling the Cyprus problem," the spokesman confined himself to stating: "The disagreements concern details and tactical issues."

However, well-informed sources have stated to I DHILINI that the disagreements concern substantive issues, and especially the way the Cyprus problem is viewed as a national issue. The same sources mentioned that disagreements between the Cyprus and Greek Governments mainly concern the way in which Nicosia acts on basic issues that are directly connected with achieving progress in the Cyprus problem.

In addition, the Cyprus Government's disagreements with the opposition parties and especially with PASOK principally concern the way the Cyprus problem is viewed as a national issue. Specifically, PASOK disagrees with the doctrine "Cyprus decides and Greece advises or supports."

The same sources observe that it is easy to draw the conclusion that when there are disagreements on issues of handling--and there are disagreements-then these disagreements are substantive. To prove the substance of the difference, the authoritative sources asked the question: "What will happen in the event Cyprus decides on war and President Kiprianou persists in his formula 'Cyprus decides and Greece supports,' a formula which Rallis and the Greek Government generally adopt, but PASOK rejects?"

Greek Embassy Comments

NC091140 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Because of a report published yesterday in a Cypriot newspaper, which alleged displeasure by the Greek Government during President of the Cyprus Republic Kiprianou's recent stay in Athens, the Greek Embassy has issued a statement that it has been authorized to note that the Greek Government's views have been reflected in the statements made by Prime Minister Rallis and Foreign Minister Mitsotakis during and after the conclusion of President Kiprianou's visit to Athens.

KIPRIANOU COMMENTS ON TURKISH CYPRIOT PROPOSALS

NC091709 Nicosia Domestic Television Service in Greek 1530 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] President Kiprianou has stated that explicit promises were given by the Turkish side that proposals will be submitted on the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem, within the framework of a federation. The submitting of these proposals, he added, is of great importance for the dialogue to survive. President Kiprianou expressed the hope that the promises that were given and the obligations that were adopted will be kept so that a constructive dialogue may continue.

In his speech, at a regional visit in Eylanja, President Kiprianou reiterated also that if the dialogue fails the Turkish side will be totally responsible.

O AGON Remarks

NC100855 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 10 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Already the Turks have begun stalling, and they have succeeded in postponing the date for the submission of their proposals on the territorial aspect, claiming that "because of the recent elections they are not ready to discuss the territorial aspect."

In justifying this new delaying tactic, the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor requested and achieved a postponement of the date for the discussion of the territorial aspect from 29 July to 5 August on the grounds that "he is not ready to discuss the territorial aspect." The government accepted the postponement of the meeting.

O AGON CLAIMS OFFICIALS' CONTACT WITH AS-SADAT KIN

NC120809 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 12 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The brother of Egyptian President as-Sadat came to Cyprus last Monday, and after having contacts with Cypriot Government members, left for Cairo the day before yesterday, Friday. Mr as-Sadat's arrival, departure and contacts were kept secret by the Cypriot Government, probably to prevent reaction from foreign countries.

Immediately on his arrival in Cyprus, Mr as-Sadat was received by officials and was taken to an unknown location in Nicosia. Mystery covers the reasons for Mr as-Sadat's arrival in Cyprus, the officials that he met and what he discussed with them.

Mr as-Sadat's departure was treated as secretly as his arrival. Certain unconfirmed reports say that during Mr as-Sadat's contacts with Cypriot officials, the issue of reestablishing Cyprus-Egyptian relations was discussed.

TURKISH CYPRIOT ALLEGES U.S., TURKISH PRESSURES

NC100832 Nicosia SOZ in Turkish 8 Jul 81 p 1

[Interview granted by Arif H. Tahsin, president of the Turkish Cypriot Teachers Syndicate in Nicosia; date not given]

[Text] Question: Has your syndicate evaluated the election results, and if it has not, what is your own personal evaluation?

Answer: Our syndicate has not yet attempted an evaluation. At this stage, I can only express my own personal view. The election results show that the workers have scored a definite success.

Question: How have you come to this conclusion?

Answer: The reduction of the capitalist party, the National Unity Party [NUP], to a minority status despite all the state facilities and outside support is not an achievement that can be belittled. The toppling of a capitalist party's government by labor is a rare development in the world.

Question: Does this outcome open the door of power to labor?

Answer: It opens the door to forming a government, but not to power.

Question: Why to government but not to power?

Answer: Because the three parties that constitute the majority are not as prepared to assume power as the workers are. Had they been prepared, the success would have manifested itself in much more definite figures. The present success has been obtained from the resolute stand of the workers, not of the parties.

Question: If the government to be formed outside the NUP won't be a labor government, what sort of a government will it be?
Answer: This government can only be a pro-labor government.
Question: Can such a government be formed?
Answer: Nothing can remain a secret in this country. Events taking place behind the scenes become known in no time. It is obvious that efforts have been made, both before and after the elections, to keep the capitalist party, the NUP, alive, despite the will of the people. For some time now these efforts have taken the form of pressure. If the three parties that constitute the majority can withstand this pressure, they can form a government.
Question: From where does this pressure emanate?
Answer: The U.S. Embassy representatives, on the one hand, and the Turkish Embassy representatives, on the other, have been observed to be making suggestions and even being engaged in behavior that surpasses suggestions.

Question Do you think there are reasons that would justify suggestions originating from Turkey in particular?

Answer: No, there aren't. The accusations levelled against the Communal Liberation Party in connection with the Turkish troops may probably be shown as a reason. However, this is a unjustifiable reason, because the Turkish troops are in Cyprus on the strength of an agreement. This agreement, like all others, cannot be repealed unilaterally.

In any case, our people's problem has nothing to do with the Turkish troops on the island. The main problem facing our people is the British base, which expose us as a target of nuclear weapons. If we look at the matter from a realistic point of view, efforts to keep the NUP alive are in fact efforts to keep capitalism alive. All other reasons are intended to divert attention. In fact, the initiative is in the hands of the people and not of the parties, and the reasons shown for the purpose of diverting attention run counter to the wishes of the people.

Question: Do you believe that at this stage forming a government without the NUP would be the healthiest approach?

Answer: At this stage my personal view and even those of the political parties are meaningless. What is important is the people's will, decision and wish. Since the people wish the formation of a government excluding the NUP, I believe we should not shy away from it. Undoubtedly, people may commit mistakes, but they must live their own experiences.

Denktas' Servility Asserted

NC100834 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 10 Jul 81 p 5

[From the "I ELEVTHEROTIPIA" column: "Denktas Is Being Imposed"]

[Text] Denktas' protectors, the United States and Ankara, have embarked on a desperate effort to keep him in "power." The pertinent reports publicized by the Turkish Cypriot press speak for themselves. The Turkish Cypriot leader's protectors want to keep him in "power" in the occupied part of Cyprus at any cost and for this reason have begun exercising all kinds of pressures. In fact, such are these pressures that a great segment of Turkish Cypriots have become indignant, so indignant that SOZ has stated: "Let them send us a Turkish provincial governor to end this affair!"

It is understood that all means will be used to keep Denktas in "power" because, as the developments that are taking place in the Turkish Cypriot community have proven, Denktas remains Ankara's faithful servant, and this is something that we must seriously take into consideration.

AUSTRIAN FOREIGN MINISTER ENDS VISIT, DEPARTS

NC101907 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1830 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Text] Austrian Foreign Minister Pahr concluded a 3-day visit to Greece and left for his home country. In Athens he had talks with members of the government on bilateral and international issues.

Before his departure from Ellinikon airport, the Austrian minister stated to a station correspondent that he is absolutely satisfied with the talks he had in Athens and stressed that there was an identity of views on the matters discussed. Foreign Minister Mitsotakis saw Mr Pahr off at the airport.

MINISTERS OPEN ECONOMIC TALKS WITH BULGARIA

NC101944 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Text] Greek-Bulgarian economic talks commenced at noon today at the Ministry of North Greece. On the Greek side, the talks were attended by Agriculture Minister Kanellopoulos, Commerce Minister Kalantzakos, Minister of North Greece Martis and other officials. The Bulgarian side was represented by Lukanov, deputy chairman of the Ministerial Council; Foreign Trade Minister Khristov; Deputy Agriculture Minister (?Uspekov); Bulgarian Ambassador to Athens Todorov; and directors general of Bulgarian state organizations.

Kanellopoulos and Lukanov spoke to representatives of the press on behalf of the two delegations. They stressed that thanks to the efforts of the two leaders, Zhivkov and Karamanlis, Greece and Bulgaria have restored very friendly relations and are continuing the systematic efforts toward development, not only involving commercial and economic relations, but also cultural relations as well as all other opportunities which provide conditions for the establishment of peace and cooperation in the Balkans.

Lukanov, among other things, also stressed the following: I believe that at this meeting today we will find the best ways to carry out the instructions passed on to us by the two presidents. The further development of Greek-Bulgarian relations will be to the benefit of the two nations. Such a friendship is a great factor for peace and cooperation in the Balkans. If today there is stability in the Balkans, in comparison to other areas of the world, this is, I believe, to a great extent due to Greek-Bulgarian relations.

Kanellopoulos gave a luncheon in honor of the Bulgarian delegation during which warm toasts were exchanged. A communique on the talks will be issued tomorrow. Late in the afternoon the Bulgarian officials departed for the Khalkidhiki Peninsula. They will return to Thessaloniki late Sunday afternoon before departing for Bulgaria.

GOVERNMENT CRITICIZED OVER TURKS' EXTRADITION

NC111939 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 11 Jul 81 p 5

[Editorial: "A Purge Is Necessary"]

[Excerpts] This matter concerning the handing over of the Turkish fugitives to the "authorities" of the Turkish junta--we shudder to think of the treatment that was reserved for these unfortunate persons by the "authorities"--must not and should not be allowed to remain without a purge and expiation. This was a criminal act, not an honest one. It violated the written rules of international law, morality and mankind. It exposed our country, as we have repeatedly stressed, to the eyes of the freedom-loving and civilized people of the world. This unlawful and immoral act is also antinational because it causes harm to our country.

What is of paramount importance is the background of these persons and not this unlawful act; namely, their character and mentality. It is evident what this act proves. They handed over the fugitives because they wanted to do so, because they most probably have select connections with every junta and with tyrrany.

Such elements that are clearly not law-abiding and are possessed by such a mentality should not have positions in the security corps--even less in sensitive state machinery like the YPEA [National Security Service]. This is also dangerous for our national security.

This matter should not and must not be allowed to pass with some "disciplinary sanctions," which would be "a ruse" and would leave persons and matters as they were. The boil that has come to light must be dealt with so that it will not be repeated in the future, which might be worse....

And something as a postscript: We confess that the public order minister's statement that "once he studies the report" and the rest, "he will point out those that are responsible and will impose the necessary sanctions"...has astonished us. What took him so long to study the report and why hasn't he yet pointed out those who are responsible?

Security Chief's Resignation

NC111540 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 10 Jul 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Answering a question on the issue of the Turkish fugitives who were extradited from our country and the fixing of responsibilities, based upon the investigation conducted by Gendarmerie first deputy chief, Lt Gen A. Papadhimitriou, Public Order Minister D. Dhavakis made the following statement. "After studying the report submitted to me by Lt Gen Papadhimitriou, I will identify those responsible and I will enforce the necessary sanctions."

Answering another question related to the names of those responsible, Dhavakis refused to name them, stating it is not proper to announce names before exhaustively studying the case. On the resignation of Bratsos [Lt Gen, Chief of YPEA, the National Security Service], the minister of public order emphatically stated that this is exclusively due to reasons of sensitivity and honor. He added that this act honors the general.

Rallis Honors Security Chief

NC111553 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 10 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Prime Minister G. Rallis sent a letter honoring retired Lt Gen I Bratsos who, the day before yesterday, submitted his resignation for reasons of sensitivity and honor from the position of chief of YPEA [National Security Service] following the serious issue created over the matter of the Turkish fugitives. The prime minister thanked Bratsos for his services and congratulated him for his morals, honor and courage as well as for all that he has offered to the democratic regime.

Ioannis Bratsos was involved in anti-dictatorical action during the dictatorship and was dismissed from the armed forces. He was reinstated after July 1974.

PAPANDREOU RETURNS FROM FRG OFFICIAL VISIT

NC111831 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] The leader of the officials opposition party, Papandreou, returned from West Germany this afternoon. He concluded a 10-day official visit at the invitation of the chairman of the Social Democratic Party, Willy Brandt.

Statement on Return

NC120614 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] The leader of the official opposition party, PASOK Chairman Papandreou, returned from West Germany at 1615 where he had talks with Chancellor Schmidt, Chairman of the Socialist Democratic Party Brandt, the leadership of the German trade unions and other officials. After these meetings, the PASOK chairman remained in West Germany on a private visit for a few days.

In a statement, Mr Papandreou expressed his satisfaction with the talks in Bonn and stressed that the problems that particularly occupy Europeans are the installation in Europe of the SS-20, Pershing and cruise missiles, the Polish situation and the international economic crisis. PASOK cadres received Papandreou in Greece.

Papandreou Positions Criticized

NC111713 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 11 Jul 81 p 9

[Text] "We will not proceed to thoughtless and hasty decisions" on the question of NATO, stated PASOK Chairman A. Papandreou in an interview granted to the newspaper VORWARTS of the West German Socialist Party. He did not, however, explain what these "thoughtless" or "hasty" actions might be, but he connected the withdrawal of Greece from NATO with the "balance of power" in the area and the sources (NATO sources to date) from which the armed forces get their arms.

Answering a question from VORWARTS, Papandreou stated, "With respect to NATO, there is a situation which is unique for the alliance which, however, affects Greece. All NATO member-states are members of an alliance that is a counter to the Warsaw Pact. Greece is the only country which, as a member of the alliance, is being threatened by another member-state--Turkey." He then added, "basically PASOK supports withdrawal from NATO, but as a government, we must bear in mind that the arms supplied to our armed forces are provided by NATO. We plan to move within the framework of international reality and the balance of power--a necessity--particularly in vital areas such as ours. In our negotiations with NATO we will make it clear to all our allies what our Greek national interests are.

These new positions of Papandreou create, to say the least, understandable questions about the true meaning they might conceal, particularly in reference to the "criteria" under which Greece will or will not withdraw from NATO.

It is also underlined that the first portion of PASOK's "declaration of the government program, which was recently published, avoids any undertaking of an obligation about our country's withdrawal from NATO.

Similar thoughts are created by Papandreou's position, in the same interview, on the question of Greek relations with the EEC. PASOK's chairman reiterated his well-known position on the signing of a "special agreement with the EEC" which, however, he described as "a sort of contracted agreement for closer attachment." He then added, "for the Greek farmers, the repercussions of Greece's accession to the EEC are negative. As a government we will strive for a plebiscite. The Greek people must decide for themselves. Since, however, under the constitution, a plebiscite can only be held with the approval of the president of the republic, the holding of such a plebiscite will depend upon President Karamanlis. In case of a negative development we will then negotiate from within the EEC on the national interests of our people. The Greek Government proceeded to accession after hasty negotiations without first having fully briefed Greek public opinion on the repercussions of this accession."

NSC ENACTS BILL ON ASSEMBLY; CANDIDATES SOUGHT

TA110621 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Resolution No 53 by the National Security Council on the bill for the establishment of the Consultative Assembly]

[Text] The bill regarding the establishment of the Consultative Assembly No 2485 and dated 30 June 1981 was published in the Official Gazette today and went into effect.

According to the bill, the Consultative Assembly will have a total of 160 members composed of 120 provincial representatives to be appointed by the National Security Council [NSC] from among candidates to be suggested by the governors of the provinces as well as 40 other members to be directly appointed by the NSC.

Requirements to be a candidate to the Consultative Assembly will be as follows:

A) To be a Turkish citizen;
B) To be more than 30 years old;
C) To have higher education;
D) Not to be banned by law from carrying out public service and holding public office;
E) To have completed military service or to be exempt from it.
F) Not to have been sentenced to more than 1 year in prison or to have been convicted from dishonorable crimes like irregularities, robberies, embezzlement, receiving favors, misusing one's office, or fraudulent bankruptcy.
G) Not to have been a member of any political party on 11 September 1980.

Consultative Assembly members to be directly appointed by the NSC will not have to be a graduate of higher education.

Candidates from the provinces that comply with the previously mentioned conditions will present their petitions between 15 July and 15 August 1981 in provinces in which they have completed primary school, high school or a school of higher learning or in which they have lived for 5 years intermittently, or for 3 years continuously, or for the last 2 years they must present the documents necessary for application as well as a biography that should not exceed one page as well as three photographs.

These applications--three times more than the number allocated to each province for this purpose--will be forwarded to the NSC not later than 15 September 1981 after the governors have consulted with the judicial, security and other relevant institutions and organizations within the province to ensure that the candidates are people known and respected in the province.

Those willing to be a candidate for being directly elected by the NSC to the Consultative Assembly will have to submit their petition with all necessary documents to the Office of the Secretary General of the Council between 15 July and 15 August 1981.

Documents found to be missing in the petitions submitted by the candidates can be completed during the period allotted for applications.

The names and professions of candidates elected by the NSC to the Consultative Assembly will be published in the Official Gazette and will be publicly announced on Turkish Radio and Television.

The Consultative Assembly will convene on 23 October 1981 at 1000 in the Turkish Grand National Assembly under the chairmanship of the eldest member.

TURKMEN SPEAKS ON TIES WITH WEST, ISLAMIC STATES

TA101525 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said that Turkey is in the process of taking two leaps forward, one being economic unity with West Europe and the other developing relations with Islamic countries in the Middle East.

Addressing a meeting organized at the Izmir Chamber of Commerce, Turkmen gave information on the economic dimensions of Turkish foreign policy. Recalling that Turkey is preparing to apply for full membership in the EEC, Turkmen said that economic as well as political reasons played a role in making such a decision. Noting that another direction to which diplomacy and the business world is turning in the Middle East countries, Turkmen said that developing relations with both the West and the East is not contradictory but rather complementary. He continued: This state of being complementary is valid both from the economic and political viewpoint. As a matter of fact, Turkey will gain importance for the West in proportion to the strength of its relations with Islamic countries in that it will become a factor of stability in the Middle East. As a member of the EEC and as a voice in the West, Turkey will become more important for the Islamic world.

Turkmen noted that developing commercial relations with African countries is significant from the viewpoint of Turkey's interests and that activities in the field have been intensified. Other speakers at the meeting explained difficulties encountered in exports and measures they believed would solve these difficulties.

POLISH DEPUTY FOREIGN MINISTER CONCLUDES VISIT

TA111515 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Istanbul, 11 Jul (AA)--Deputy Foreign Minister of Poland Marian Dobrosielski wound up an official visit to Turkey at the invitation of Foreign Ministry Secretary General Kamuran Gurun and flew home today. Following his official talks in Ankara, Dobrosielski had come to Istanbul for two days of sightseeing and a tour of historical sites.

Talks With Turkmen Reported

LD091828 Warsaw Domestic Service in Polish 1700 GMT 9 Jul 81

[Text] Bilateral relations and international issues were discussed in a friendly and cordial atmosphere during talks in Ankara between Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs Marian Dobrosielski, and Turkish Minister of Foreign Affairs Ilter Turkmen and [name indistinct] secretary general of the Turkish Foreign Ministry. The possibilities of considerably developing cooperation in the economic, cultural and scientific spheres were explored. Specific undertakings have been agreed upon in order to expand economic cooperation. It has been established that a meeting of experts will take place in the near future which will discuss the whole range of payments issues. Discussed in detail were, among other things; questions connected with the development of passenger traffic between the two countries, in particular matters pertaining to the legal protection of Polish tourists in Turkey.

The need was stressed to intensify efforts in the international arena to overcome crisis situations and tensions hampering the processes of detente and peaceful cooperation. Support was voiced for closer cooperation between the two countries in international organizations and at multilateral meetings, in particular at the Madrid meeting where Poland and Turkey are very active.

YANKI CRITICIZES OUTGOING U.S. AMBASSADOR

NC101250 Ankara YANKI MAGAZINE in Turkish 6-12 Jul 81 p 10

[Unattributed article: "Goodbye Mr Spain... Goodbye..."]

[Text] A U.S. ambassador who failed to understand Turkey and all the basic characteristics of the Turkish people and to grasp its main problems and who during his term in office in Turkey chose to use "double standards" has been recalled to his country and is going back. We wish him farewell.

Under the present world conditions, Turkey and the United States are two countries which must closely cooperate within the same alliance. They are members of the Western community which is considered the standard bearer of the freedom loving democracy which is based on human rights. This fundamental principle need not be discussed. We must approach the matter by learning from the recent history of the relations between the two countries.

Turkey today is being governed by a military administration due to prevailing conditions prior to 11 September. While the commanders in charge of the administration never miss a chance to stress untiringly that their aim is not to abandon democracy based on human rights, but to make it operable, at the same time, saying that this strong, legitimate objective forms the basis of the administration, speeches by the U.S. ambassador that the United States does not attach importance to human rights in Turkey [as published] constitute one of the most unfortunate events in Mr Spain's short ambassadorial term.

There are several points which U.S. organizations in Turkey should get right. The most important one is the devotion to democracy of the present military rulers and of the vast majority of the Turkish people. Another equally important fact is that no matter how strong and unlimited the powers of the National Security Council may appear Turkey is by no means being ruled "arbitrarily," as is seen elsewhere.

These two points are equally important. Any mistakes to be made in evaluating these points could lead the U.S.-Turkish relations on a wrong course. Such mistakes could lead the United States to have unrealistic expectations from Turkey. Such a state of affairs neither serves the interests of Turkey nor of the United States, which has assumed leadership in the free Western world.

Certain U.S. organizations during Mr Spain's appointment to Turkey have been unable to grasp the fact that a state with long standing traditions is governed largely by intuition which requires delicate and careful handling. As a result, during Spain's term in office, efforts were made to push Turkey into the atmosphere of the "cold war" period. Though totally unnecessary, the question of Turkey's contribution to the rapid deployment force, which the United States is planning to deploy in the Persian Gulf, was brought up time and again; though totally unecessary, efforts were made to get Turkey to disclose the foreign sources of terrorism in Turkey and, in doing so, incriminate some of its neighbors.

It was a mistake to believe that Turkish-U.S. relations could be harnessed within a very narrow framework. The Americans, therefore, failed to understand that Turkey is greatly different from "the shah's Iran," from many backward countries and from what they themselves term "a banana republic."

The misfortune of making this erroneous evaluation may have reached its peak during Mr Spain's term in office, but it did not manifest itself only during this period. Also earlier, the United States made several wrong evaluations. Those difficult to forget are evaluations made in connection with Cyprus and the military embargo. Again, it was from Ankara that the impression was conveyed to Washington that, through the embargo, Turkey could be brought to its knees.

U.S. organizations in Turkey for years kept sending reports to Washington, arguing that Cyprus was not considered a national cause by the Turkish people. The United States is as much an important ally today as it was in the past. Relations between the two countries must be sincere, realistic and based on mutual respect and interest. For this strong foundation to be established in these relations, U.S. organizations and the U.S. ambassador to Turkey must correctly determine the true tendencies in Turkey. Mr Spain and his staff have failed to do this. It is hoped that Mr Robert Strausz-Hupe--whose name has won respect among both the diplomats and various university circles--and his staff will succeed where Spain has failed.

EDITORIAL BLAMES ANTI-AMERICANISM ON MONETARY POLICY

NC130650 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 9 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial by Mehmet Barlas: "The Dollar Danger'"]

[Text] A new anti-Americanism wind is blowing from the Atlantic to the Urals... Europe is angry as never before, not since the days of the Vietnam war... For instance, EEC Chairman Gaston Thorn says: "The Americans must understand that it is not possible for Europe to do things the way Americans do. European politicians do not differentiate between military, political and economic matters."

The French chairman of the IMF, Jacques de Larosiere, is reported to have criticized, if only in cautious terms, the high interest rates and the tight monetary policy being implemented by the United States.

On the other hand, we see that the Europeans at the EEC summit conference in Luxembourg are trying to draft an "Afghan peace project" independent of the United States. The neo anti-Americanism has become so obvious that German Chancellor Schmidt is rumored to have quarreled with President Reagan during his recent visit to the United States.

What is the reason for this new wave of anti-Americanism? In fact, we can understand the reason by looking at the latest position of the Turkish economy. The economic measures launched on 24 January 1980 have successfully attained their initial objectives: The rate of inflation has been reduced, the double prices in the market have been eliminated, the Central Bank has begun transferring [foreign exchange] and lively activity has been observed in exports.

But, the sacrifices we have made as a nation to reach this stage can be clearly seen. The Turkish lira has been devalued in enormous proportions. The limitation of demand has led to stagnation and the domestic price increases have not been matched with wage increases.

Unfortunately, the current monetary policies being implemented by the United States have affected our "24 January measures" as adversely as they have affected the Germans and the French. These policies are bringing pressure to bear on us in the negative direction. The parity between the German mark and the Turkish lira has been around 45-46 liras in 1 year, whereas the U.S. dollar has risen from 70 to 110 Turkish lira during the same period. Consequently, as we have to pay in dollars for the petrol we buy, this situation results in domestic price increases.

The increase in the value of the dollar also negatively affects our exports to regions outside the dollar area. For instance, with the amount of marks we obtain from our workers [in Germany], we get less petrol than previously. Since inflation is rising at the rate of 6 percent in Germany, but 40 percent in Turkey, the Turkish lira continues to maintain its high value. The result is that Turkish goods are expensive, exports to regions outside the dollar area are disrupted and foreign capital outside the dollar area does not come to Turkey. In a way, the dollar affects Europe in the same way it affects Turkey. This is one of the reasons for the neo anti-Americanism.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

14 July 1981

Vol VII No 134

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Hodic Case Sparks CSSR 'Threats' Against Austria [KURIER 13 Jul] E 1
Briefs: Trade With Albania; Libyan Delegation; SED Delegation Visit E 1

BENELUX

BELGIUM

Eyskens Moves To Curb Former Zairian Leader [LE SOIR 4 Jul] F 1
Gunman Fires at Yugoslav Embassy, Wounds Diplomat F 2

NETHERLANDS

PVDA Shifts Stance on Van Agt Premiership Option [DE VOLKSKRANT 9 Jul] F 2

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Reportage on 38th German-French Consultations J 1
Joint News Conference J 1
Talks Results J 1
Mauroy Comment J 2
Matthoeffer Comment J 3
Mitterrand Interview J 3
Newspaper Commentary [SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG 14 Jul] J 6

FRANCE

Mitterrand Message to Opening of National Assembly [LE MONDE 10 Jul] K 1
Cheysson Discusses Lebanon, Palestinians, Israel [Beirut AN-NAHAR 5 Jul] K 2
PCF's Gremetz Meets With CPSU, PCI Officials K 10
Meeting With Zagladin [LE MONDE 12-13 Jul] K 10
Talks With Italians [L'HUMANITE 2 Jul] K 10

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Stock Exchanges Remain Closed for Third Day L 1
Colombo Exchanges Briefings With Romania's Andrei L 1
L'UNITA on Berlinguer-Carrillo News Conference [1 Jul] L 2
PCI's Natta on Election Results, Ties With PSI [L'UNITA 26 Jun] L 5

CYPRUS

House Hosts Indian Parliament President's Visit R 1
Statement on Arrival R 1
2-Day Visit Concludes R 1
Government Confirms As-Sadat Kin's Private Visit [O AGON 14 Jul] R 2
Newspapers Comment on Phalangist Copter Incident R 2
TA NEA Reaction [12 Jul] R 2
KHARAVYI Column [12 Jul] R 2
Government Unaware of U.S. Plan for Settlement [O AGON 14 Jul] R 3
North Government in Postelection Changeover R 3
Cagatay Resignation [Bayrak Radio] R 3
Denktas, Assembly Take Office [Ankara] R 3
New Cagatay Cabinet [Bayrak Radio] R 3
Denktas Discusses Refugee, Territorial Issue [Bayrak Radio] R 4

TURKEY

Minister Ozal Concludes IMF Talks in Washington T 1
Committee Signs Protocol on Joint Dam With USSR T 1
Military Prosecutors Demand Death Sentences T 1

OTHER COUNTRIES

FINLAND

Government Announces Ministerial Appointments [HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 2 Jul] Z 1

ICELAND

New Cuban Ambassador Presents Credentials [Havana] Z 1

PORTUGAL

Supreme Court Annuls Leftist Militants' Trials Z 1

SWITZERLAND

PLO's Faruq Qaddumi Arrives for Official Visit Z 1

HODIC CASE SPARKS CSSR 'THREATS' AGAINST AUSTRIA

AU131652 Vienna KURIER in German 13 Jul 81 p 2

[Erich Grolig report]

[Text] A stiff diplomatic duel, which has degenerated into CSSR threats against Austria, has now developed between Vienna and Prague in connection with the case of secret service agent Hodic. The Prague Foreign Ministry rejected the massive protest of Ballhaus Square [seat of the Austrian Foreign Ministry] against the spy's machinations on Austrian territory and announced that Austria will be included in the revelations that are being prepared about the CSSR emigres in the West in case the Austrian media exploits the Hodic case for an anti-Czechoslovak campaign.

As reported in Vienna, the Austrian ambassador in Prague was told that Josef Hodic's secret service assignment only involved the activities of prominent emigres in the West--but not Austria itself. But this position could change--according to the CSSR officials--if Austria launches political attacks against Prague. In that case, the CSSR would also publish those materials which Hodic collected about Austria.

After receipt of Prague's answer to the Austrian protest, the Czechoslovak charge d'affaires in Vienna--in absence of Ambassador Milan Kadnar--was told by the Austrian Foreign Ministry that Austria regards the CSSR's position as absolutely unsatisfactory. At the same time, the federal government's protest was repeated to the charge d'affaires.

In the meantime, it was possible to clarify the question about the motives of the surprisingly rapid naturalization of CSSR spy Hodic. The office of the Vienna provincial government had in due course addressed to the Interior Ministry a "special request" for investigation of the applicant in consideration of the past of the Prague military historian and officer. But for unknown reasons, the ministry did not treat the inquiry as a "special request" but only noted by way of routine processing that Hodic was not in the records. Thus, a special investigation of his past, as requested by the Vienna provincial government, was omitted.

BRIEFS

TRADE WITH ALBANIA--Expanding bilateral commodity exchange is a main target of the protocol signed recently on the occasion of the visit to Vienna of Albanian Foreign Trade Minister Nedin Hoxha. Albania is offering as main export goods fresh vegetables, tobacco, chromium and nickel ore, bitumen and textiles. In 1980, Austrian imports from Albania totaled 86.9 million schillings and Austrian exports in the same year reached a value of 87.4 million schillings, with milk powder, oil products, paper goods, steel and iron being the main exports. In addition, Albania offered electric power exports to Austria and Austrian participation in the development of Albanian water power and in the building of ore processing plants also was discussed. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 1 Jul 81 p 15 AU]

LIBYAN DELEGATION--Petrochemical industry and fertilizer and chemical food industry projects as well as communal and structural problems were the subjects of talks conducted by a Libyan delegation with representatives of the Voest Corporation in Linz. [Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 27-28 Jun 81 p 10 AU]

SED DELEGATION VISIT--In conclusion of its visit, the delegation for organizational-political studies of the SED Central Committee under the leadership of Central Committee member Werner Eberlein was received by Franz Muhri, chairman of the Austrian Communist Party. The reception also was attended by delegation members Ruth Mueller, Konrad Gurke and Werner Knoeller and by GDR Ambassador to Austria Gerhard Schramm and, on the side of the Austrian Communist Party, by Karl Reiter, member of the Politburo and Central Committee secretary, and by Secretariat members Hans Steiner and Karl Schaetzl. [Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 28 Jun 81 p 4 AU]

BELGIUM

EYSKENS MOVES TO CURB FORMER ZAIRIAN LEADER

PM130910 Brussels LE SOIR in French 4 Jul 81 pp 1, 2

[Text] At a cabinet meeting on Friday morning, the Belgian Government discussed the Nguza Karl i Bond affair and the problems which the recent statements made by the former Zairian prime minister, who has taken refuge in our country, have caused for Belgium, for Kinshasa and President Mobutu.

Prime Minister Marc Eyskens revealed his government's viewpoint. In short, it seems that Belgium wishes to prevent the recurrence of such incidents and hence to prevent Zairian refugees from persisting in their activities in our country.

Indeed, the Belgian Government "condemns such statements because, in some cases, they might be interpreted as calls for violence and subversion. Hence, they constitute an abuse of the traditional hospitality which Belgium offers to citizens of other countries."

It should be noted that Karl i Bond was reprimanded by the Justice Ministry; but it does not seem that he promised to completely moderate his tone and to keep silent.

Eyskens read a statement, on the government's behalf, which is, in fact, a "clarification" following the statements made by some Zairian nationals, which have sparked off a diplomatic incident between Belgium and Zaire. Zairian nationals living in Belgium have made repeated public statements on the situation in Zaire over the past few weeks.

The Belgian Government never makes judgments on the internal policy of another country. Nonetheless, it condemns these statements, which in some cases, might be interpreted as calls for violence and subversion and, hence, constitute an abuse of the traditional hospitality which Belgium offers to the citizens of all countries. These statements are damaging to Belgian-Zairian relations. The Belgian Government is absolutely determined to ensure that its laws are respected. It has asked the justice minister to remind the Zairian nationals behind this campaign of the provisions of our law and the government's intention to apply them. It has asked the foreign minister, who is due to visit Zaire soon for the annual meeting of the Belgian-Zairian grand commission, to give the Zairian authorities a detailed explanation of the legal provisions in force in Belgium, relating to foreign nationals living in our country. It asked him to confirm the Belgian Government's intention to ensure that that legislation is respected.

While understanding that some of these statements may have upset the Zairian Government, the Belgian Government reaffirms that it wishes to maintain normal relations with Zaire and the Zairian Government with mutual respect for the two countries' sovereignty and legal systems and noninterference.

Eyskens concluded: "I would like to add that I will receive Zairian Ambassador Kengo this afternoon to explain to him this statement and the context in which it should be placed."

On Thursday, Karl i Bond was summoned to the Justice Ministry and received by Brozens. The minister's principal private secretary reminded his interlocutor of the content of the law on foreigners, notably Article 20 on freedom of speech, specifying that Belgium cannot tolerate a foreign head of state being insulted or military actions against a foreign country being planned on Belgian territory.

According to Belang van Limburg, Nguza replied that he was "only telling the truth, even if it is painful to Mobutu and he did not intend to insult anybody." Regarding the planning of military operations, Nguza apparently stated that he did "not have the money to hire the services of mercenaries and that, in any case, he was certainly not contemplating such actions." Finally, he stated: "There is no need to organize resistance in Belgium since it will arise spontaneously in Zaire itself."

The Justice Ministry denies that the former Zairian prime minister refused to moderate his statements in any way at all and says that, on the contrary, his replies were much more subtle.

GUNMAN FIRES AT YUGOSLAV EMBASSY, WOUNDS DIPLOMAT

NC140959 Paris AFP in English 0950 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] Brussels, 14 Jul (AFP)--A gunman opened fire on a diplomat in the Yugoslav Embassy here today and shot down a security official giving chase, police said. First reports said he fired several shots inside the embassy, wounding the diplomat in the arm. A security guard who gave chase was hit in the chest 15 yards (metres) from the building. The gunman made off in a car.

NETHERLANDS

PVDA SHIFTS STANCE ON VAN AGT PREMIERSHIP OPTION

PM131019 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 9 Jul 81 p 1

[Own correspondent report: "PVDA Wants Van Thijn as Third Negotiation Leader"]

[Excerpt] The Hague--The Labor Party (PVDA) does not accept that the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) has no other candidate for the premiership of a CDA-PVDA-Democrats '66 (D'66) cabinet than CDA leader Van Agt. On Wednesday [8 July], PVDA negotiator Den Uyl proposed that in addition to CDA negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning, a PVDA negotiator be appointed--Dr Ed van Thijn, deputy chairman of the PVDA parliamentary group. In the PVDA view, this trio would then investigate whether the CDA really had no other candidate.

If the three conclude that the CDA cannot supply any other prime minister for a center-left coalition then work could begin on the formation of a cabinet under Van Agt. The PVDA would then demand important concessions on the question of the distribution of ministerial posts in the cabinet and in the area of government policy.

The PVDA second chamber faction decided on this strategy on Tuesday [7 July]. When he announced the proposal, PVDA negotiator Den Uyl gave the impression that his party would accept Van Agt on the understanding that concessions would be made, in imitation of D'66. But the 5-point declaration also said that the PVDA is of the opinion that "there has not been sufficient investigation into the possibility of a cabinet in which the CDA, PVDA and D'66 parliamentary leaders would all be ministers under the leadership of a CDA prime minister other than Van Agt."

According to Den Uyl, he did not stress this point enough in the past. "It must have been a blind spot," he said. He added that the PVDA parliamentary group nevertheless "made a dramatic decision by accepting Van Agt as a possible prime minister." But the PVDA would have to be completely convinced--and this would only be possible if a PVDA negotiation leader were added to the present team--that there were absolutely no possibilities other than Van Agt.

REPORTAGE ON 38TH GERMAN-FRENCH CONSULTATIONS

Joint News Conference

LD131230 Hamburg DPA in German 1152 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jul (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and French President Francois Mitterrand on Monday at the close of the 2-day German-French consultations in Bonn announced their intention to further the close cooperation between both countries.

At a joint news conference, Federal Chancellor Schmidt said that he feels his view has been confirmed in the talks with Mitterrand and the French Government and "that also in the coming years German-French cooperation will be extremely close." The chancellor quoted the opening passage from the German-French treaty of friendship, as he did in the preceeding closing meeting of both delegations, on the close solidarity which unites both peoples regarding security and economic and cultural development. He said he is extremely grateful especially to Mitterrand, but also to Premier Pierre Mauroy, for the spirit of cooperation during the talks.

Mitterrand said that his Bonn visit is of great significance for cooperation and German-French solidarity at a bilateral level, in the European Community and for international politics. Mitterrand said that he is extremely pleased with the talks. The cooperation of both countries is to be continued, it is to be deepened. The president repeated his concept of a "privileged friendship" which was a cornerstone, a supporting pillar, not only for the joint life of the European Community, but also has increasingly decisive significance for international politics.

Talk Results

LD131455 Hamburg DPA in German 1347 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Bonn, 13 Jul (DPA)--The FRG and France want to press for a [word indistinct] of the dollar course at the Western economic summit in Ottawa, to look for a common approach to the coming negotiations on the European Community's budget and agricultural reform and to retain the European currency system. Broad agreement exists between Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and President Francois Mitterrand in the assessment of important questions of global significance and in their assessment of an arms balance between East and West.

At the consultation, East-West relations, including attempts for a limitation on medium-range missiles, and North-South relations were prominent, in addition to the search for a common approach to Ottawa. At the subsequent explanation, Mitterrand expressed his support in principle of negotiations between Moscow and Washington, but also demanded the creation of clear foundations for the starting positions. The president pointed to Soviet superiority in medium-range missiles, but said on the other hand that it is not desirable for the United States to reach a dominating position by means of continuing to arm.

During the discussion of a broad spectrum of world political, economic and bilateral questions, both sides covered a comprehensive range of subjects, according to observers. Government spokesmen Kurt Becker and Michel Vauzelle stressed to journalists the high degree of agreement achieved by the individual cabinet members in their talks. The French delegation, led by Mitterrand, included seven ministers as well as Premier Pierre Mauroy. According to the two sides, the results of the consultations are:

Ottawa economic summit: The meeting of the seven major industrial countries should demonstrate the West's unity in political and economic affairs. Bonn and Paris concur in their concern for the continuing U.S. high interest rate policy and the fluctuation in the dollar exchange rate, but do not want any confrontation with the United States. What they are aiming at is a deep and thorough discussion with the goal of resisting the temptations of a "National egoistic" trade, currency and credit policy.

East-West relations: The EEC initiative on Afghanistan should be developed further and, if necessary, discussed again with Moscow; both sides agree that the Soviet Union did not definitively reject this advance. The CSCE should draw up a mandate for a European disarmament conference. Federal Chancellor Schmidt stressed that in view of the situation in Poland, the "inhibitive threshhold" for the Soviets should not be lowered.

European Community: France desires an intensified social policy and increased consideration for the interests of the working population. This should be reflected in the planned EEC reforms. Both governments stick to the view that the present contribution rate of 1 percent of value-added tax to the Community treasury should not be exceeded. The European Monetary System should be kept.

Bilateral relations: Paris promises to take into account the interests of foreign friends with regard to planned nationalization schemes. Where German firms are affected by nationalization, "parallel contacts at government level" would be agreed. Federal Chancellor Schmidt expressed understanding for the priority (?placed) by Paris on the economic policy of combatting unemployment, but pointed out that as far as Bonn is concerned, the fight against inflation has first priority. Paris will fulfill the agreements with German power firms for reprocessing nuclear material from nuclear power stations. With regard to arms cooperation, the project of a joint combat tank is to be examined further. Both sides will intensify cultural cooperation.

It was learned from statements by the French side that the new Socialist government in Paris wants to extend its social concerns beyond the national and European framework to encompass the North-South dialogue. The Federal Government stressed, for its part, that social and economic stability is the prerequisite for the West's defense capability.

At a luncheon afterward, which also was attended by SPD Chairman Willy Brandt, Mitterrand today described with great satisfaction, during his first summit talks, how very much German-French cooperation is anchored in concrete terms and is geared to subjects which are decisive for the future of our industrial civilization. He hoped that this cooperation would also be directed at new social conditions in firms and society. Federal President Karl Carstens stressed in his speech that the reality of German-French friendship today is "firmly anchored in our peoples, regardless of the respective government." The talks in Bonn demonstrated the depth, permanency and vitality of these relations.

Mauroy Comment

DW140945 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Reporter Schaaft interview with French Premier Pierre Mauroy in Bonn; date not given; answers in French with superimposed German translation--recorded]

[Text] [Question] What will you tell the Americans regarding the exchange rate of the dollar and the high interest rates?

[Answer] We will tell them that our alliance doesn't just have a military side. It also means economic and social cooperation. It does not help to develop the alliance in the military field and to decrease it in the economic and social sectors. Unemployment is the scourge of society. One must, therefore, fight it with all means. That is what we intend to do in France, that is the intention of the federal chancellor in Germany. And we will make this absolutely clear to the U.S. President.

Matthoeffer Comment

DW140933 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Excerpts from Reporter Schaaf interview with Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer in Bonn; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The new French Government recently has more strongly condemned the U.S. high interest rate policy than the Federal Government. Will you act together with the French in Ottawa with regard to this matter?

[Answer] I am not under the impression that these are condemnations. Particularly, my friends Jacques Delors hasn't condemned anything. Both of us have the opinion that the Americans must fight their internal inflation. But the Americans ought to consider the effect it has abroad. An ally cannot solve his internal problems without consideration of the other allies. We will discuss that with the Americans with full understanding for their efforts in the fight against inflation.

Mitterrand Interview

DW131407 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2115 GMT 12 Jul 81

[Reporter Heiko Engelkes interview with French President Francois Mitterrand in Bonn; date not given, answers in French with superimposed German translation--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Relations between France and Germany were very friendly under your predecessor. Sometimes there was even talk of a Paris-Bonn axis. Do you plan to continue this close cooperation which was sometimes viewed a bit less positively by other Europeans?

[Answer] Let me first tell you how happy I am to be received by the leaders of the Federal Republic and to be on German soil and with the German people, whom I greet. I want to express to them my feeling of friendship and cooperation. I know their qualities, virtues and abilities. I want the Germans to know that. It is somewhat exaggerated, however, to conclude that there is a Bonn-Paris axis. It would create the impression that two countries form some sort of a government for Europe and this would rightly create a negative impression with the other countries. It would be a most justified reaction.

On the other hand, one can ignore neither history nor geography. We must admit that France and Germany have basically shaped Europe, not only through their conflicts, but also through their agreement and cooperation, their culture, their production potential and their outstanding creative personalities. They are thus two countries carrying particular weight. If they don't get on well with each other, Europe is in poor shape and stagnates. But if they do get along, Europe will develop further, and I support this.

I was a soldier in the last war and know what war is like. Besides the battle, I had an opportunity to become acquainted with and appreciate the German people. All my actions will be guided by this. I hope the ties between our two countries will strengthen, thus maintaining what I call a privileged friendship which does not, however, represent a dominating axis.

[Question] The problem remains whether this will work. The impression was given after the Luxembourg summit that two policies will be pursued now in Europe: France will fight unemployment while Germany emphasizes the fight against inflation. Are there any differences?

[Answer] Naturally, these are somewhat theoretical approaches because the problems of France and Germany cannot be reduced to inflation or unemployment. One must consider the positions of France and Germany in Europe, the positions they hold in the world, the balance of power in the world, the threats to peace and thus the danger of war.

Moreover, we must consider relations between industrial states and the so-called Third World countries, preparations for the world economic summit in Ottawa and preparations for the North-South summit conference in Mexico. So it seems to me that trying to reduce the problems of France and Germany to the concept of their domestic economic policies would mean viewing matters in a somewhat petty way.

I do not doubt the existence of differences in assessing matters, by appointing a new president and a new government, France probably was showing that it considered the earlier policy to be unbearable because there was no such thing as an upswing in the country or the elimination of misery and inequality. I do not mean misery in general, but the daily deteriorating social inequality and the unemployment of almost 2 million Frenchmen, mostly women and young people. All these problems created so much tension that the political change took place almost by itself.

Why should we continue in this way? We will try to embark on a new path. The path we have followed so far has led us into a dead end street. We are trying, therefore, to embark on another path to bypass the obstacles. But we do not want to export this because it applies to France. However, I am convinced that solid mutual support will take place between France and Germany in the social field, in promoting the development of workers and in good mutual relations. Our different approaches, which must be clarified more sharply, will not hinder our cooperation.

[Question] In the framework of international policy, he Germans are particularly concerned by the security problem. Do you believe that the Soviets presently have genuine superiority in medium-range missiles?

[Answer] That is the whole problem. Since peace depends on the balance of power in the world, we must ask whether this balance exists. One generally speaks of a balance when one wants to complain about the strength of the others. Yet, I believe that a certain strategic balance exits in the world. Soviet Russia and the United States are not at war with each other with missiles flying over the Atlantic. One can probably assume that they don't feel like waging war against each other. Both peoples have suffered so much from war that you would have to believe their political leaders are very careless--which they are not--if you wanted to assume that they are on their way to a new war.

Regarding Europe, however, I really believe that the recent steps and initiatives of the Soviet Union, especially the deployment of the SS-20 missiles and the Backfire bombers, are an indication of further Soviet superiority which can be added to an already existing superiority in conventional armed forces. I know very well that the Soviets say exactly the opposite and I have nothing against listening to their arguments. But since I assess the situation as I do, I belive that security is threatened the moment we determine that this inequality exists. I speak quite frankly about these matters because this problem is faced by NATO to which France does not belong. Questions of war or peace, however, naturally also involve France.

[Question] You do belong to Europe?

[Answer] We belong to Europe. Regarding the French Armed Forces, you know that they are formed mainly around the strategic nuclear force. I intend to continue my country's military efforts as long as I have not received far-reaching guarantees regarding a balance in Europe.

[Question] How do you assess NATO's decision to react immediately?

[Answer] If I may repeat, I would like to say that it is not up to me to make a judgment and become involved more than necessary. On the other hand, I have certainly told you enough to make my standpoint clear.

[Question] A certain neutralism can be observed in Germany. Does that seem somewhat strange to you?

[Answer] I don't know whether the word neutralism applies here. You used it. Germany, however, is in a very specific situation because it is a country that does not have and cannot have nuclear arms. However, the greatest number of nuclear arms are concentrated there. A nation like yours, a great nation that cannot have these means and that is subordinated to the decisions of others, will automatically show a number of understandable political and psychological reactions.

It makes it difficult to assess, on the one hand, what must be done to point out that we want to have a balance of power while to see to it, on the other, that every side has its equal share of this balance so that no side will go farther than the other. Everybody must be certain of his security based on the balance in which he is involved. On the other hand, the striving for a balance must not go as far as making the other side feel insecure. You must, therefore, stress your will for defense while maintaining your availability for a dialogue.

[Question] May I ask you one question about French domestic policy, Mr President. You have come this time without Communist ministers, but they will come later. Could you explain to the Germans why you took Communist ministers into your government although you had an absolute majority?

[Answer] Because we have known each other for a long time, let me tell you in a most friendly way and with all respect for the German spectators, that this is none of your business. That decision is simply France's business. The life of democracy in France is our business. But since we are friends and because it is absolutely normal for the German people to be very close by and interested in developments in neighbor country, I do not want to close my mind to this discussion. I can say just this much: France must rally all productive forces so as to control the crisis that involves us as well as others as part of the worldwide crisis of capitalism which has resulted from the sudden and unfortunately continuous explosion of raw material prices. We must handle all these problems. Our country, which was fully hit by this crisis, while suffering very much from inequality at present and in the past, simply needs the common efforts of as many segments of its populace as possible, particularly the productive forces. Moreover, my political work as well as the work of my political friends is based on the unification of the popular forces. We want to push the conservative forces back. Now that a majority of the French has confirmed our policy, the influence of all other parties has declined, including the Communist Party. This is the first time in the history of the French Republic that we as a political party have an absolute majority. Now you can object by saying: And at that moment of all moments, you give the Communists an opportunity to join the government. I would like to remind you that this is the second time this has happened. France experienced it before, namely, when General de Gaulle had Communists in the government in 1944-45. That was during Stalin's time, during war time and during a time of great domestic political disorder in France. We don't live in such disorder today. I assume that General de Gaulle decided to take this step because he wanted to rally all the French together after the war for the reconstruction of France. I must also rebuild France in a crisis. This is a long story but I am certain that I have handled it extensively enough. It is the business of the French.

[Question] Yes, but I thank you anyway for this explanation. Would you permit a rather personal question? How is cooperation working between the Social Democrat Helmut Schmidt and the Socialist Francois Mitterrand?

[Answer] Well, the difference between a Social Democrat and a socialist is probably smaller than that between a social Democrat and a conservation or between a socialist and a Communist. Actually, it should be easy for us to find a common language.

This is not the first time that I have met with a Social Democrat. I am a member of the Socialist Internationale myself and I have had friendly and personal relations with Willy Brandt for a long time. I know many other German politicians and I met your federal chancellor when I was still a member of the French opposition. He received me in the same room of the chancellor's office in Bonn. I met him not so long ago in Paris, just a few weeks after his return from Washington. So it was not for the first time and we simply continued our talk. I would like to summarize this talk by saying that we have the same basic goals and mostly common methods with which to achieve our aims. On the other hand, it is natural for some adaptation to take place since France is not Germany and vice versa. We can very well have different interests, but on the international scene, we will continue to march in step.

Newspaper Commentary

DW140815 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 14 Jul 81 p 4

[Commentary signed Schr.: "Supporting Fire From Mitterrand"]

[Text] Shortly before meeting Mitterrand for the first time in Paris, Federal Chancellor Schmidt asked French experts: "Can the president count?" He may have found out himself in the meantime how far Mitterrand can count or at least that the latter counts missiles in the same way as Schmidt himself. That is not a bad basis for a solid relationship between the two. He could not expect that much backing from his "friend" Giscard d'Estaing. Mitterrand's supporting fire is the more welcome for Schmidt because he has his "friend" Willy Brandt on his side in this matter, giving the impression that he tried to win Mitterrand's understanding for early negotiations with the Soviets on medium-range missiles in Europe.

Mitterrand is certainly not a "hawk." His defense policy action seems to be mainly dictated by his own interests. Since French is not militarily integrated into NATO--thus being neither involved in the deployment nor financing of the counterarmament contingent--he can simply welcome the strengthening of the defense line on his eastern border. Mitterrand also could soon face the problem of whether he can increase France's defense expenditures as generously as his predecessors if he wants to implement his social program. He could sleep more easily, knowing that the watch on the Rhine will be strengthened (this time naturally in the opposite direction).

His reform policy, however, could create difficulties for him where he and Schmidt "should actually find it easy to speak a common language," as he put it. Schmidt reckons every social reform with the additional inflation percents and the exchange rate decline. This is why both could not agree on common action against the U.S. high interest rate policy.

MITTERRAND MESSAGE TO OPENING OF NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

PM131340 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Jul 81 p 3

[Text of French President Francois Mitterrand's message to the opening session of the National Assembly on 8 July]

[Text] The following is the text of the president's message to parliament, which was read in the National Assembly by Louis Mermaz and in the senate by Alain Poher.

As I am authorized to do by Article 18 of the Constitution, I send my good wishes to parliament at the beginning of this parliamentary term and I express to each one of you, irrespective of his personal choices, my wishes for a mandate whose grandeur and constraints I appreciate, having sat among you for so long.

I dedicate these wishes to the members of the opposition as well as to those men and women who gave me their help and support in my action. All represent the people on an equal footing. Together they form the picture of France in its diversity and unity. The republic does not belong to anybody.

The change which I proposed to the country during the presidential campaign, which the French people approved and which the majority of the National Assembly has adopted, henceforth requires our efforts.

I attach particular importance to this observation since parliament's role of voting laws and controlling the executive is to be extended not only because practice must be in line with the law but also because I expect all the institutions to take part in the task of national recovery.

I have said on several occasions that my promises constituted the charter for the government's action. Since universal suffrage has given its verdict a second time, I would like to add that they have become the charter for your legislative action. You know these promises and I will not go over them again. The government already has started to implement them within the limits of its powers.

This afternoon the premier will ask you to give him the means which the national representatives have to ensure that the contract which has bound us to the French people since 10 May and 21 June is faithfully honored.

Since I am mentioning the notion of contract here, I would like to point out that, if it were one day necessary to go further than the promises made, that could only be done after the people had been consulted again and had given their final word.

Indeed, at a time when you are preparing to debate and decide on the numerous reforms which the French people want, the need to make the contract the foundation of our democracy emerges more than ever. That is why, in keeping with the line laid down by the assembly elected in 1936 and by the Leon Blum government, the contract will be used broadly today whether it be in reducing the working week, organizing leisure time, applying national solidarity or in any other sphere of national life.

As far as is possible, the law should not replace dialogue but ratify it.

We will succeed all the more if we establish a balance of powers in keeping with the constitution, eigher by restoring to the assemblies their rightful role in a parliamentary system or by providing the vital guarantees for the independence of the judiciary--the guardian of individual rights. But although it is necessary for the state to set the example in democratic administration, it should not be forgotten that modern life and the citizens' aspirations call for balance in other spheres.

This is true of a free media released from the many different kinds of pressure which seek to influence it. This is true of the workers' rights in the enterprise, of the organization of associations, of the harmony between man and nature and the plan for decentralization which will be submitted to you as soon as possible.

Deputies, it goes without saying that the other sphere in which the contractual relations I have mentioned must be developed is Europe, the European Community, Europe in its East-West division and Europe as the hinge between North and South.

Although progress has been made in the Community--progress which is still incomplete--in the sphere of coal, steel, agriculture or technology, the European social area still has to be created--an area in which the workers of our countries can live differently and in unity.

This great ambition implies that the Europeans, who do not speak the same language, should at least speak the same language on the international scene. This is a necessity which everybody feels and which will be confirmed by the forthcoming summit conference in Ottawa.

It is in this spirit that I will lead France's action--a France open to the world which bases its security both on its own defense system, on its alliances and on free international cooperation.

I am convinced that France will take up the challenge and will overcome unemployment and inflation if the French people feel closely involved in the action we take. National unity will be all the stronger if everybody feels both responsible for and a beneficiary of the collective effort asked of the country.

As I address myself to parliament, I appeal to the determination of all, to the spirit of responsibility, the civic feeling and the imagination of our people who have always faced the trials of their history each time trust has seen placed in them.

Long live the republic! Long live France!

CHEYSSON DISCUSSES LEBANON, PALESTINIANS, ISRAEL

PM081500 Beirut AN-NAHAR in Arabic 5 Jul 81 pp 1, 13

[Interview given to Bisharah Albun by French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson in Paris; date not given]

[Excerpt] Paris--[Question] Do you believe that the Lebanese issue can be resolved before the Middle East problem is solved and how?

[Answer] I do not believe that it is up to foreign forces, however concerned they may be, to answer such a question. These matters must be resolved by the principal responsible bodies--the states of the area. We would like to contribute in any way imaginable to ending the present surrerings of the Lebanese people and especially to enabling Lebanon to regain its sovereignty and integrity under the government of its own choice. Regrettably, however, it is not for foreigners to tackle this problem.

You ask for my opinion. I believe--and I have to be honest, I am afraid--that Lebanon has no hope of saving itself from any threat unless a comprehensive solution is achieved in the Middle East. This is imperative. However, this doesn't mean that the situation should not be improved and the Lebanese Government's authority fully restored. You are well aware, however, that unless the Middle East problem is solved, Lebanon remains exposed to threats. This is inevitable and very obvious, bearing in mind that the basis of the Middle East problem is the problem of the Palestinians.

As long as this people remains without a future, without a homeland and without international status, how can you expect peace to be established in the Middle East? That is not possible. A sizable people cannot be imprisoned in camps, without a future, without hope and without being able to express themselves naturally and to attain peace. That is unimaginable. Lebanon is a direct victim of this situation.

What can be done in the meantime? It isn't enough to recall on every occasion that Lebanon is a state and therefore it should be respected and safeguarded and should live under the democratic conditions it has chosen, but we must also see how we can in some way buttress the Lebanese authorities--the president and the government in Beirut--the institutions which you have chosen for yourselves.

You are perhaps aware that talks are currently underway between the Lebanese and the French Governments on what contribution we can make in this connection. I understand that your authorities are now giving priority to improving the quality of your general forces--I mean the army and the various means of intervention and of expressing sovereignty.

On this level, it appears that the negotiations with the French are progressing. They involve giving you spare parts for your equipment and possibly weapons and, naturally, training. I believe that every contribution we can make to bolster these armed forces is important.

[Question] You have said that it is up to the area's states to shoulder the responsibility for solving the Lebanese issue. Does this mean that you conceive of no solution other than the Arab solution?

[Answer] What do you mean by the Arab solution?

[Question] You French and Europeans have declared your full support for the quadripartite followup committee. Can it, therefore, be deduced that a solution on the European or international level is not possible?

[Answer] Lebanon's affairs are primarily the concern of the Lebanese. The Lebanese should know what they want. They must be given the opportunity to express themselves. We understand that your government attaches great importance to this quadripartite conference, in which it feels it is well represented and has found the framework to express its legitimate demands and to obtain the required outside support, especially from the two Gulf states (Saudi Arabia and Kuwait) which are friendly toward you. For this reason, we have expressed our appreciation for this quadripartite conference.

We are all prepared--and we have said this as Europeans and particularly as Frenchmen and I repeat it now in my capacity as a responsible French minister--to make our contribution. We are not the people who will devise the solution. You Lebanese, together with your neighbors, must tackle the situation in the way you choose. You have said that the quadripartite conference appears to you to be an important framework for progress.

Meanwhile, we are prepared to make our contribution to Lebanon directly--and I have already talked to you about bolstering your army and general forces--and on the level of a solution between you and your neighbors or within an Arab framework and an Arab solution.

We can extend our contribution, our guarantee, or support, our aid and our presence in other ways.

We have a presence in the UN interim forces in Lebanon. We might be prepared to consider any formula proposed by the Lebanese--not by us--or perhaps by an Arab froup which the Lebanese regard as appropriate. However, no foreign country, however friendly, has the right to propose a plan for Lebanon.

In this respect, our attitude is different from that adopted by the previous government which suddenly presented a French initiative on Lebanon. I'm sorry, I do not believe in this. Should there be a Lebanese initiative, we would be prepared to support it and we might be prepared, should your government wish it, to discuss a future Lebanese initiative before it is made public, an initiative by the quadripartite conference or any formula which you deem appropriate. But we have no right to produce in Paris a plan for Lebanon. What applies to Paris also applies to any other place. The plan for Lebanon must come from the Lebanese. You are responsible for your country and we respect that. I don't believe in initiatives such as I have seen quite often in the past--when Paris suddenly produces from its pocket a rabbit and says: "This is the rabbit for Lebanon." I don't believe in that. Nor do I believe in it for the Central African Republic or for Southeast Asia.

Lebanese Will

[Question] But the Lebanese will and freedom of action are paralyzed as a result of armed coercion and the simultaneous Israeli, Palestinian and Syrian military presences. How do you view the future of this tripartite presence in Lebanon?

[Answer] As a matter of principle, we are always against a foreign presence in any country. This is the general view. It's bad for the only answer to a certain problem to be interference by foreign forces. In principle, it is bad. But in certain cases, it is necessary, provided that it is requested by the country itself. If Lebanon considers the presence of certain people to be necessary, we, of course, accept this. And if at a certain time Lebanon believes with these people in the need for a French or other presence, we would accept this with much sympathy. But the Lebanese must decide.

You tell me that in certain cases your freedom of expression is restricted because of local pressures. I can understand this. Not everything should necessarily be said publicly from the outset. You are not alone in the area; you have Arab brothers with whom you sometimes can discuss issues and, together with them, come to certain common conclusions which then can be expressed jointly, even if this is done secretly. In certain cases, you can do the same with others--I mean Europeans, Americans or other elements from the United Nations. But we don't believe that it should be possible for any country in the world to devise a plan for a certain country from outside that country. We consider that unacceptable and we will not do it.

But we can participate, with you and other Arabs you may choose, in the process of reflection. Things must be discussed secretly and not publicly for a long time. But it is up to you to decide.

As I already said, we presently contribute to strengthening your armed forces. This is not a matter to be discussed publicly and there is no need for me to add anything. But discussion is taking place because you wanted it. It is not up to us to tell you that you need tanks or boats. It is up to you to know what you want; we are at your disposal to discuss the matter.

Talks With Saudis

[Question] In the talks you had with Saudi officials, did you sense a certain Saudi plan to find a settlement for the various outstanding issues relating to the Lebanese problem, including the missile crisis?

[Answer] We did not discuss with Saudi Arabia the situation in neighboring countries because neither France nor Saudi Arabia has the right to say what should be done in Lebanon. The Lebanese themselves must know their policies and determine what they want. Bear in mind that the talks were at the level of the French president and the king of Saudi Arabia. The talks did not deal with such subjects as the missiles in al-Biqa', for example. What we made quite clear is what we believe to be fundamental for the area. And here we emphasized what we consider to fundamental, namely, recognition of the right of every state to live in security within borders recognized by the world community. This, of course, applies to Lebanon, within the borders recognized by the world community, not outside these borders, which cannot be altered unilaterally either de facto or de jure--by which I mean Israel.

We also emphasized the right of all peoples to express themselves naturally and to have a home and an international entity. This applies to the Lebanese people just as it applies to the Israeli and Palestinian peoples. We discussed principles in this regard.

The only problem we discussed as an international problem was that of the holy places in eastern Jerusalem. It is well known that there is a UN resolution, issued in 1947, defining the position of this part of the city, which is a matter of concern to three different cultures, to one of which we belong--namely the Christian culture. We have an immediate interest and indeed an immediate right to talk about it, which does not apply when it comes to a sovereign state or people in the area.

[Question] You have spoken about French participation in guarantees. Does the idea of a European-Arab force fit into this context and what is your opinion of it?

[Answer] This idea is worthy of consideration, in my view, but I don't think that it has any chance of success unless it is proposed by the Arabs. If it is proposed by the Europeans, it will certainly fail, as has often happened before. It is up to the Arabs or to some of them to come forward with such a proposal; it is not up to us to propose such a force. I would recall that France made such a proposal twice in the past but because it was France that made the proposal, there was an immediate stalemate. That is natural. Every state must be sovereign, and if it lacks complete control over its territories, it must be helped to regain such control. In any case, every state must make its desires known, even if this is done secretly at the beginning because it is feared that a public announcement might be harmful or dangerous. But I repeat that initiatives in this regard must not be alien to the area.

[Question] Is Socialist France prepared to take a practical part in such a force?

[Answer] If I answer that, it will immediately be interpreted as France making a proposal. France will propose nothing in this regard. But France, like the rest of the EC and other countries, must be ready to take a positive view of proposals of this kind. France has units in the UN forces and another EEC country--namely Ireland--participates in these forces. This shows that we are ready to send our men. It is inconceivable that, after we displayed a clear view regarding the question of UN forces, our new attitude would be inflexible toward another idea of the same sort but coming from a different source. But I repeat, the idea cannot come from us.

Future of the Palestinians

[Question] You have stressed the need for the Palestinians to have a future and a homeland. Where would you see this homeland and how would you define it geographically?

[Answer] Look at the map and the answer is obvious. We should not belittle the importance of the Palestinian problem. A few years ago I asked a leading Israeli, who was asking me about matters concerning the Palestinians and the PLO, the following question: Suppose your son had been born in a camp, had received a good education and had reached the age of 25 without having any future other than the camp or any identity except that of an alien....Interrupting me, he said: He would certainly be discontented.

I have visited one of the Palestinian camps in your country. How can you expect an ordinary man who experienced such a childhood and adolescence to be other than discontented with the absence of a future? Unless the Palestine problem is solved by giving this people a homeland and statehood, it is natural that they should be discontented. As for the question of assimilating the Palestinians in the communities in which they live, that is up to the host country. I understand that this situation in certain states constitutes a very serious problem.

[Question] Is it to be understood that giving the Palestinians a homeland must be one of the essential priorities for a solution and that recognition of this right must come before everything else?

[Answer] I believe that, if we try to set a timetable in a particular way, we will be faced with a series of difficulties because Israel says that its security must be guaranteed before any negotiations can be accepted. I also understand the Palestinian people, who consider their right to exist and to have a state as a recognized natural and fundamental right which must therefore be implemented before anything else. I believe that there is a host of issues relating to natural rights which must be discussed simultaneously: withdrawal from the occupied territories, security guarantees and the position of Jerusalem. Is it possible to discuss some of these issues before others? Perhaps. Many questions arise. Can bridges be built between these different elements, that is, can a gradual withdrawal take place in proportion to the guarantees given by the other side or vice versa?

[Question] The new [French] administration has reiterated its desire to maintain continuity in its Middle Eastern policy, but signs of changing attitudes began to emerge with President Francois Mitterrand's recent statements about a step-by-step policy which reminds Arabs of Kissinger.

[Answer] I believe it's not right to stop at a battle of words and terminologies. There are many historical terms that lose their meaning in the current situation. The term "small steps" has lost its meaning because Kissinger used it. But this doesn't mean that all we have said does not fit within the framework of small steps or rather the framework of a policy of the possible, as I call it.

The objective is a comprehensive solution and until this is achieved, nothing will be accomplished. This should not prevent us from doing something here or there. If it is possible to do it, it should be done.

All we have talked about so far is the possibility of achieving progress in Lebanon. When we talk about progress in Lebanon, this concerns the Palestinians because they are there. It also concerns the Syrians because at present they constitute the Arab deterrent force. It concerns the Israelis because they occupy part of your territories in the south. The first part of our talk was about the possibility of finding a means to achieve this progress without waiting for a comprehensive solution. I don't call that a policy of small steps. We are now in the realm of a policy of the real and the tangible. If there is anything that can be done anywhere, it must be done, but with a view to a comprehensive solution.

But what possible progress can we visualize? One important aspect of this progress must relate to Lebanon, within the framework of developing the task of the deterrent forces. From this viewpoint, the major task of the followup committee was to restore Lebanese authority. Nobody would condemn the actions of this committee, which is seeking to achieve the first steps toward progress. The thinking of the followup committee itself leads to a quest for further progress in Lebanon. This progress can be achieved through the Security Council or some other body.

The basic objective remains a comprehensive solution. In accordance with the Venice declaration, we are in full agreement in this regard with all that the previous council chairmen said.

Palestine Concerned

[Question] President Mitterrand is an advocate of direct dialogue between the Palestinians and the Israelis. Who are these Palestinians, in your opinion, and what form can self-determination take, in the view of the new [French] administration?

[Answer] There must be a dialogue between the Palestinians and the Israelis. Without a dialogue, we cannot obtain peace. The basic issue in the Middle East at present is the Palestinian issue. The Israelis are occupying territories which they have no right to occupy. They also have a formidable military power. Therefore, we cannot conceive of any solution without the Palestinians or the Israelis. Since the two sides are there, they must talk. Unless they talk, I don't see how we can advance. Talks by proxy can take place for a time but eventually the two parties must talk directly. As far as the Israelis are concerned, this is easy. They have a government and elections. But as far as the Palestinians are concerned, they must choose their authority when the time comes. I hope that this choice will be made under democratic conditions. However, in the meantime, there are Palestinians who are representative. There is the PLO which we have recognized as a representative of the Palestinian people. There is no doubt that the mayors in the occupied territories constitute another representative element. The best illustration of this is the fact that we in France, in the European Community and in the United States, are called upon to work more and deal more with the mayors. When the mayors leave the occupied territories, we receive them as representatives of the Palestinian people. At the same time, there are other representative elements which I do not know. But the point is: Who will eventually be the representative of the Palestinian people as a whole? This is a matter which the Palestinians themselves must decide.

[Question] But the mayors have chosen the PLO as the sole legitimate representative of the Palestinian people.

[Answer] That is your interpretation. It could be right, but I am not sure. At present, there are territories under occupation and, therefore, there can be no democratic and natural expression. We are not saying that the mayors and all the Palestinian people will not eventually choose the PLO but that, at the present time, there has been no opportunity for the PLO to be democratically chosen by all the Palestinian people. We recognize the PLO as a representative and when there is an occasion to meet Faruq Qaddumi or anyone else, I will do so because they represent the Palestinian people--but they are not the only representative.

Israeli Elections

[Question] Do you believe that a change in the Israeli Government's prime ministership would facilitate things?

[Answer] If a change occurs in the leadership of the Israeli people, that is their wish. We recognize this, but can any change make negotiations easier? It can. I would add that a government with a few years in office ahead of it can discuss matters on a medium and long term basis, whereas on the eve of elections, it can discuss matters only on a short term basis.

As far as I am concerned, the important thing is to see if the recent Israeli elections produce a government that is so confident of itself and so sure of its future that it will speak not only for the present but also for the future and debate before the Security Council.

[Question] France, through its president, has expressed its sympathy with and support for Shim'on Peres. What would Paris' reaction be if Menahem Begin returns to the prime ministership and do you think that dealing with him would be more difficult?

[Answer] No matter which government is in Israel, we will deal with it. We want to maintain the capacity for open and constant dialogue. We believe that the mistakes made in the past were those of confining dialogue to one party, to the exclusion of the other. There will be no peace in the Middle East without the Israelis and no solution can be found without the Palestinians. Therefore, it is necessary to talk to the two parties concerned.

The fact is that my comrades know Mr Peres and his comrades better than they do Mr Begin for the very simple reason that the Socialist Party was in opposition and did not have the chance to meet with government officials. It was, however, in touch with comrades in the Socialist International and several meetings were held between the French comrades and Mr Peres and his comrades because the Labor Party is a member of the Socialist International. Thus, there is a personal relationship which facilitates dialogue. However, the dialogue will continue with whichever Israeli Government the Knesset elects.

[Question] Would the Labor Party's assumption of power have facilitated your task of setting up a dialogue?

[Answer] Not as far as I personally am concerned. I was in a position which allowed me to be in touch with the Israeli Government. I met with Foreign Minister Shamir several times, but for my comrades the situation was different. It would certainly be quicker to hold dialogue with socialist comrades in the Labor Party.

I would like to refer here to President Mitterrand's interview with the Washington POST and say that not only were the circumstances under which the Israeli aggression was committed against Tammuz (the nuclear reactor) unacceptable under international law, but the matter was also harmful to us and indeed injurious.

[Question] Paris has stressed its intention to step up the precautions and conditions relating to cooperation with Iraq in the nuclear field, though the International Atomic Energy Agency [IAEA] confirmed that the precautions already taken were adequate and effective. What is the future of the nuclear cooperation between you and Iraq?

[Answer] I would like first to say that cooperation with Iraq has certainly not stopped. We are in constant contact with Iraq and are having continuous talks regarding various subjects. The Osirak reactor was only one part of this cooperation. In response to your specific question, I would say that Iraq so far has not suggested anything or asked for anything. It is impossible to predict situations. It would also be inappropriate to give the impression through a statement to an important newspaper in the area that we are offering the Iraqis a commercial proposition for a new reactor. I say a new reactor because it appears that the small reactor was not hit, though the big reactor suffered serious damage and seems to have been finally put out of action. But I am not certain because so far we have been unable to determine the extent of the damage because of Iraqi security, which we well understand. Any new talks will have to deal with a new reactor and, therefore, a new contract must be concluded. We will have to see if Iraq wants to obtain a new reactor or a reactor of a different type because there has been progress in technical development since then. But so far there have been no talks with the Iraqis on building a new reactor.

[Question] Did you, for your part, set certain conditions before the Iraqis can make a new request?

[Answer] We will disregard the name of Iraq because our stand is the same toward all countries that want to obtain a research reactor. What we say about Iraq applies to Algeria, Mexico or any other country in the world.

In our view, every country has a right to research and progress in science technology. We uphold this right. I would add without embarrassment that France possesses advanced technology and wishes to offer this technology to the world. We have begun to sell satellite launchers, following the success of the Ariane rocket.

In the nuclear field, we believe in and reaffirm the need to take every precaution to prevent a switch from peaceful civilian to military use. These precautions include a means of international control, namely the IAEA. But we also believe that there are additional means to prevent a switch from civilian to military use. If a country wishes to obtain a reactor for research purposes, then we are ready to conclude a contract with it. This applies to Iraq as well as to any other country.

[Question] What are the additional means of control that you would adopt, in addition to carrying out contracts?

[Answer] The nature of the project is in itself a real guarantee. There is also the IAEA, which checks and controls so as to ensure that the project is carried out in accordance with the originally agreed terms. A small reactor does not involve any significant danger. But a big reactor with a major potential, as was the case with Osirak, should--in the present situation in particular--involve several intrinsic guarantees. If Iraq wants to enter negotiations with us, we will adopt with it the same method we adopt with any Third World country.

[Question] Do you have any particular view regarding the policy you will pursue in arms sales to the Middle East?

[Answer] As far as we are concerned, there are two stages. First, we have a number of previously signed and current contracts. We have decided to adhere to the principle of honoring and respecting France's signature. All the contracts already signed will be honored. The second stage involves looking into new deals. There are countries that are a field of conflict and other countries that have oppressive and totalitarian regimes to which we can never give arms for they might be used for repression. As for the Middle East region, the first factor alone matters. On the other hand, we will not arm countries that are in a state of conflict and could be pursuing a dangerous policy in the area. We will not give arms to Israel. Once we are away from the field of conflict, we have no restrictions to impose on our talks regarding arms, whether with respect to the Gulf, or Iraq or relatively distant countries such as Egypt and North Africa.

Europe's Absence

[Question] In the light of the hostile feelings some Arab states entertain toward the United States and in the absence of Europe, aren't you afraid that the Soviet Union will take the opportunity to reinforce and expand its political and military presence in the area?

[Answer] I believe that the absence of peace and the tragedies which some peoples in the area are suffering create an excellent opportunity for the big powers to come into the area to play their game there. Peace will come through Israel's security and through the Palestinians having a future in a homeland and statehood. If these issues are solved, the big powers would be mere clients like everybody else, though they might be unhappy at times. The continuation of war and tension, not Europe's absence, is what provides the big powers with the opportunity. Europe is determined to play a part in the lives of these states in view of its commercial, cultural and political relations with them. Disturbances in the Near East could be contagious. You are undoubtedly worried by the support which the Soviet Union is giving to one of your neighbors, but it can also be said that Soviet influence has receded and diminished in the past 20 years. There are no Soviets in Egypt any more and Iraq maintains a highly advanced cooperation with the Western states.

[Question] The Arabs are blaming Europe for pursuing a policy that is completely subservient to U.S. policy and for not playing an independent role in the Near East.

[Answer] That there is independent thinking is indubitable. The best example of this is the U.S. reaction to the Venice declaration and how this declaration was interpreted as a condemnation of the Camp David accords. Therefore, there is European independent thinking, but completely independent action cannot be envisaged. Let us be realistic. There will be no peace in the Near East unless the Americans participate in it. That is a fact. I saw this fact at close quarters during my tour of a number of Arab states when I was a member of the European Commission.

PCF'S GREMETZ MEETS WITH CPSU, PCI OFFICIALS

Meeting With Zagladin

PM131213 Paris LE MONDE in French 12-13 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] PCF Central Committee Secretariat member Maxime Gremetz and Vadim Zagladin, deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Department, had "a warm and friendly meeting" at PCF headquarters on 9 July, according to a PCF communique issued on Friday. They carried out a "broad exchange of views on the situation in the two countries," the communique states, adding: "Mr Zagladin described the development of the situation in the USSR since the 26th CPSU Congress. Mr Gremetz described the situation in France following the left's victory and the entry of Communist ministers into the government.

"The discussion also related to some aspects of the international situation and, especially, to questions of peace and disarmament. They stressed the need to work actively for these objectives, to open immediate negotiations on all nuclear arms in Europe and in the world with a view to reducing them. Finally, the common desire to pursue the development of relations and the cooperation between the two parties was reaffirmed."

Talks With Italians

PM131142 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 2 Jul 81 p 7

[Text] In the context of existing relations between the two parties, a PCI delegation comprising Comrades Antonio Rubbi, Central Committee member and chief of the international section, and Rodolpho Mechini, deputy chief of the international section, had a meeting with Comrades Maxime Gremetz, Central Committee secretary, and Roger Trugnan, PCF Central Committee foreign policy section coworker.

The talks took place in a fraternal and cordial atmosphere. They provided an opportunity for a detailed exchange of views on the new situation created in France after the left's victory and the inclusion of Communist ministers in the government and on recent developments in the situation in Italy. They also related to some aspects of the international situation and especially to the need to develop all efforts for the immediate opening of negotiations on the balanced reduction of nuclear armaments in Europe. The meeting provided an opportunity to reaffirm the relations of friendship between the two parties and their desire to strengthen their cooperation.

STOCK EXCHANGES REMAIN CLOSED FOR THIRD DAY

AU100854 Rome ANSA in English 0830 GMT Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 10 July (ANSA)--The Italian stock exchanges are shut down for the third straight day today following the decision announced Wednesday morning by Treasury Minister Beniamino Andreatta to stop trading to put a halt to the plunge in share prices.

The first such closure of the nation's markets since 1917, after the Italian Army was routed by the Austrians in the Battle of Caporetto, may be extended beyond Monday, the date originally set for resuming trading. Official sources, however, have refused to name a day for reopening the exchanges.

In the meantime, a heavy schedule of consultations is going forward to diagnose and cure the ills of the exchanges. At the end of one encounter in the Bank of Italy Thursday, it was learned that there are no insurmountable problems connected to the positions of the shares quoted on the major exchanges, in Rome and Milan. The meeting of the Central Bank governor, Carlo Azeglio Champi, and representatives from the twelve biggest Italian banking institutions included a survey of the securities held by the credit institutions. The Contango [as received] contracts placed through the banks were reassuringly few, it was reported.

In the evening, the market situation was discussed in a meeting between the treasury minster and a delegation from Confindustria, the industrialists association, and earlier in the day consultations were held by the board of directors of Assobancaria, the Italian commercial banking association, chaired by Silvio Golzio.

The Assobancaria board members, in response to accusations that the banking system failed to defend the quotations of securities during the forty-percent slide of these prices since early June, argued that a heavier presence of the banks on the floors of the exchanges must "necessarily be coordinated with a broader project for market policy".

Also recalled were recent statements released by the association chairman to the effect that the number of shares quoted must be elevated and the financial markets must undergo thorough revisions in procedure and structure. The Assobancaria executives decided to forward to the Securities and Exchange Commission [Consob] a set of technical recommendations agreed to by the commercial banks for the future application of the Consob measure requiring mandatory deposit for trading operations.

COLOMBO EXCHANGES BRIEFINGS WITH ROMANIA'S ANDREI

AU131535 Rome ANSA in English 1528 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 13 Jul (ANSA)--Italian Foreign Minister Emilio Colombo and his Romanian counterpart Stefan Andrei met briefly in Rome today and exchanged views on a range of international issues.

Colombo and Andrei discussed the ongoing Madrid Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe and urged that the stalemate in the talks be overcome.

The Romanian foreign minister, who arrived from a visit to Luanda, briefed Colombo on the situation in Angola and in Nambia.

For his part, Colombo briefed Andrei on the recent European Economic Community proposal for an international conference on Afghanistan and the EEC position on the Middle East situation.

L'UNITA ON BERLINGUER-CARRILLO NEWS CONFERENCE

PM101410 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 1 Jul 81 pp 1, 12

[Ennio Polito Report: "Berlinguer and Carrillo Relaunch Eurocommunism"]

[Text] In the new situation created by the left's victory in France and by the formation of a government with the PCF's participation, the PCI and the PCE are planning, in agreement with the PCF, a general resumption of contacts, extending also to other West European communist parties, with a view to joint initiatives. The issues of the defense of peace and of the struggle against the arms race and against the economic crisis cited in the final communique on the talks between Berlinguer and Carrillo are those which are deemed to be most urgent. But others could be suggested by the parties concerned within the framework of consultations.

This is how the PCI and PCE secretaries general expressed themselves at a crowded news conference at PCI headquarters centering on Eurocommunism and its relations with the new French experience and with the Polish crisis on the one hand, and with the Italian and Spanish situations and their prospects on the other hand.

The exchange began in fact with a question about this topic. Marchais, the journalist asserted, has distanced himself from Eurocommunism and has entered the government, while you have distanced yourselves from Moscow and remained in opposition; what is wrong?

Carrillo could see "no sense" in this way of posing the question, as far as Spain is concerned. "The Spanish situation cannot be compared with the French situation. The reasons why the Spanish Communists are not in the government have nothing to do with France." For his part, Berlinguer commented that "the reasons why a governmwnt with communist participation has not yet been formed in Italy have nothing to do with our international stances and our stances in the international communist movement." The essential reason is "the resistance of conservative and r actionary forces, which are aware that PCI participation would entail a radical renewal ot the country."

What conclusions, a Hungarian journalist asked, did you draw from your examination of the French leftwing forces' government program on the European plane, and with regard to your own parties' activities? We regard that program as "very positive, both in itself and in its substance," Berlinguer said. Carrillo fully shared this view: "In the French program," he said, "I see reproduced a policy that is the same as ours. I could ratify every one of the ideas contained in it."

A representative of television newsreel said: Eurocommunism can assert itself through the communist parties' participation in various governments. In France, the Communists joined a government "carried by the Socialists." What about in Italy and Spain?

"The French Communists," Berlinguer explained, "joined the government primarily because they made a decisive contribution to the leftwing forces' victory in both the presidential and the general elections, and also because Mitterrand wishes to remain loyal to his plan to rally the leftwing and democratic forces, without discrimination. We Italian Communists are fighting for a democratic alternative that can bring the PCI and PSI into government, together with other forces. However, the Eurocommunist outlook is not so strictly dependent on communist parties' government participation. The various parties' strategies are suited to differing situations. A contribution can be made to asserting Eurocommunism both in government and in opposition."

Still on the subject of Eurocommunism, one journalist asked whether it is not a demonstration of "opportunism" to impart a new thrust to it coinciding with the PCF's entry into government, without taking into account its "failure." Carrillo replied by pointing out that when Mitterrand stood for the presidency many people forecast his failure. The fact that Eurocommunism has not triumphed at once, therefore, does not mean that it is doomed to failure. Those who speak in terms of opportunism are forgetting that the PCI and PCE have continued to meet and to pursue this path without any interruption of continuity, even when the PCF was far from government. The Rome meeting, Berlinguer added, was planned a long time ago. As far as Eurocommunism is concerned, the PCI secretary general also explained, the concept embraces not only communist parties' activity but also dialogue and understanding with the other forces of the workers movement, primarily with socialists and social democrats.

But did not Marchais "deny himself" by signing the agreement? Is it right to abandon your own positions just so as to join the government? Neither Berlinguer nor Carrillo wanted to "interfere in the PCF's internal affairs." What is important is the positive fact of government participation and the positive substance of the program on which it is based. In any case, Berlinguer pointed out, it is normal, when opportunities for unity appear, for efforts to be made to take them.

Next a LE MONDE correspondent asked a question about the possibility of joint initiatives. "We have continued to maintain contacts with the PCF," Berlinguer replied, "even despite divergences. One instance of this was by Falini's visit to Paris following the presidential elections. Other contacts are planned. We intend, as do the Spanish and French Communists, to establish contacts with other Western communist parties too, for joint initiatives that we believe should not be restricted to our three parties."

"As far as the PCE is concerned," Carrillo added, "people are acquainted with the differences that have emerged with the PCF, not only on the ideological plane but also, for instance, with regard to Spain's EC membership. There has never been any rupture, however. We want relations to develop normally. We are also in favor of initiatives with other communist parties. Our concern is to encourage a development of cooperation among the progressive forces in view of the grave economic crisis afflicting Europe and the threats to peace."

Someone else asked: "Will the joint initiatives mentioned concern the Polish situation too?" "Other parties' positions on this issue," Berlinguer replied, "are not the same as the ones we presented in our communique."

"What will the topics be, then? We Italian and Spanish Communists," Berlinguer said, "have placed the emphasis on the problems of peace, disarmament and the economic crisis. But we cannot be the ones to decide. The substance of the initiatives must be agreed with others."

Still on the subject of Poland, somebody asked: Do Carrillo and Berlinguer plan to attend the scheduled congress? The reply was that neither party has yet received an invitation and it is not known whether one will be forthcoming, since it is an extraordinary congress. Carrillo pointed out that as far as he is concerned, he could not go in any case, since he will be involved in preparations for his own party congress. There are no plans for Berlinguer to attend.

The next topic was the Spanish situation. It is known that the PCE's line is challenged from various sides in an extremely vigorous manner. Could one not speak in terms of a "crisis?" How is the PCE approaching its congress? Carrillo acknowledged the divergences and stressed their legitimacy in a democratic and non-monolithic party. His forecast is that the congress will form a "Eurocommunist synthesis" of the stances, confirming a strategy supported by the vast majority and consolidating both the regeneration process and unity.

Carrillo replied to one journalist, who asked how "the largest West European communist party" can help Spanish democracy against the putschist threat and against terrorism, that the Spanish Communists "are concerned, as are all other democrats, about these threats," "But," he added, "we have not requested any specific solidarity from the PCI, just as we are not requested any specific solidarity from the PCI, just as we are not requesting it from anyone else, because we believe that it is the Spanish democratic forces that must bar the way to those threats and that if they cannot, no solidarity can save Spanish democracy."

Are there any differences compared to the situation in Allende's Chile before the coup? Certainly--and "very major" ones too. "In Chile there was a socialist government that was planning and implementing radical changes. In Spain, there is a conservative government and a monarchy. The motivations claimed by the Chilean putschists would not make sense in Spain. Therefore, the success of a coup is more difficult. Spanish society is more developed than Chilean society and the putschists' motivations are an incredible anachronism (you will all have seen the scene with Tejero on television). Therefore the chances are much slimmer than in Chile."

The other dominant topic of the discussion was the peace struggle. Both Carrillo and Berlinguer expressed, in reply to a question, their interest in and positive verdict on Brandt's initiative vis-a-vis Brezhnev. "We hope," the PCI secretary general said, "that it can help unfreeze the arms negotiations, especially on the Euromissiles, so as to secure the abandonment of their deployment and a reduction of military balances." The answer to another question was that negotiations are the way to establish whether or not an imbalance exists between the two sides' missile strength.

One journalist saw a contradiction between what he described as the PCI's "act of faith" in NATO and the part of the communique which describes Spain's possible future membership of the alliance as something that would upset the balance between the blocs. "Our position in favor of maintaining membership of the Atlantic pact and the obligations deriving from it," Berlinguer said, "is no act of faith, but an act of political realism which takes into account the fact that balance has been created between the blocs and that any unilateral alteration could upset it. This applies equally to the possibility of a country leaving the alliances and to the possibility of a country joining it. Therefore, we Italian Communists are not in favor of Spain's entry either."

The journalist also asked whether Spain's entry would, in Berlinguer's opinion, pose a threat to Yugoslavia. "Yugoslavia," the PCI secretary general replied, "is a nonaligned country and wishes to remain so. If the balance is altered, many things could happen. Therefore, Yugoslavia is in favor of the balance being maintained and opposed to Spain's entry into NATO."

Carrillo added "other important reasons." "While Italy took part in both world wars, Spain remained neutral. The United States and other countries now belonging to NATO had a role in liberating Italy. In Spain's case, not only did this not happen, but if anything, those countries did their utmost to prevent change. Spain's ties with NATO would be of a different kind. This is why opinion polls in Spain now indicate a majority against membership. The PCI respects the positions of the Spanish left. We reciprocate. Also, there is a similarity in the quest for the elimination of blocs."

The last topic was the new thrust to the European institutions and the Luxembourg summit. Berlinguer maintained that at the summit a clear determination was apparent--especially on Mitterrand's part--to withstand the dollar offensive and to coordinate in the monetary field. The PCI "will try to play its part" in this direction. Carrillo stressed the "grave threats" of the U.S. monetary policy, which are acknowledged even in conservative economic circles in Spain. "There must be," he said, "a European policy that will protect the economies as a whole and tackle the threat of increased unemployment. I believe that everything that can be done in this direction and to prevent a destabilization is of fundamental importance."

PCI'S NATTA ON ELECTION RESULTS, TIES WITH PSI

PM131125 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 26 Jun 81 p 1, 16

[Giorgio Frasca Polara report: "Natta Tells Journalists About PCI Directorate Meeting on Elections and Political Outlook"]

[Excerpts] Rome--The PCI Directorate met all day yesterday for a careful examination of the election results and an assessment of the political outlook, partly in relation to the formation of the new government. Following an introduction by Enrico Berlinguer, who took stock of the government crisis, came a broad analysis by Alessandro Natta of last Sunday's election results and their implications. A document will be published today. Meanwhile, yesterday afternoon, while the proceedings were still underway, Comrade Natta himself gave journalists a full report on the meeting and answered their questions.

Election results--The Directorate debate, Natta stressed, made it possible to establish that there is a fairly united assessment of the election results and of two aspects in particular; the clear signs of a confirmation of a decline by the DC ("not only of the preamble policy, but of its power system") especially in the major cities, starting with Rome and Genoa, and the undoubted leftward shift which, though its most significant expression was in the general improvements made by the PSI, is based also on the confirmation of the PCI's strength. "The possibility of a change in an alternative direction from the DC found not only a confirmation but also new conditions in Sunday's vote."

Negative Factors--Natta confirmed that particular attention was devoted (as it will be at the coming Central Committee meeting) to the negative factors for our party; the unsatisfactory result in Sicily, the even more worrying results in Puglia and other southern municipalities (including in Campania,) "which reveal an exacerbation of the gulf between the center and north and the south of the country." "It is not," Natta added, "a matter of making heads roll or of lack of individual ability, though in certain situations there is a problem regarding the adequacy of the party leadership groups and cadres administering local government."

PCI-PSI Relations--"I hope that in Bari, where the PSI has become the largest force within the left and where, as Craxi says, the numerical conditions exist for it, the Socialist comrades will take a Mitterrand-type option," Natta said, indicating that "the delicate and questionable point is the Socialist thesis on altering the balance of forces within the left."

Mitterrand, Natta added, has never made his policy of unity and of an alternative subject to such a change in the balance of forces, nor has he ever set any ideological or political preconditions. This does not imply any failure to acknowledge the legitimacy of rivalry between the two parties and each one's desire to grow, "but the quest for a different balance of forces at all costs could be dangerous and could prove to be a distraction, a wait-and-see attitude, and could imply missed opportunities for the left." In this connection, Natta recalled that both in Rome and in Genoa not only the new municipal councils but also the solution of the crises in the Latium and Liguria regional governments are at stake.

HOUSE HOSTS INDIAN PARLIAMENT PRESIDENT'S VISIT

Statements on Arrival

NC111803 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] The president of the Indian Parliament, Bal Ram Jakhar, arrived in Cyprus today on an official 2-day visit as guest of the House of Representatives.

In a statement on his arrival at Larnaca Airport, Jakhar referred to the joint ideals upon which cooperation between India and Cyprus was always based and to the close rapprochement on problems on the basis of the principles of nonintervention of one country in the affairs of another and the resort to talks instead of confrontation. India, he said, believes there must be no outside influences and that peoples must be allowed to decide for themselves what they want and how to solve their problems.

The Indian official expressed the belief that only through peace it is possible to achieve progress and prosperity for all peoples. He reasserted the dedication of his country to the ideals of the leaders of India and Cyprus, who established the Nonaligned Movement. The principles of this movement, he added, are the only ones with which the world can use to cope with the provocations arising before it. The president of the Indian Parliament also expressed the belief that the talks he will have in Cyprus will be fruitful.

Chairman of the House of Representatives Ladhas, in welcoming his Indian counterpart, referred to the ties of friendship which connect the two countries and which are based upon their joint faith in the principles of liberty, peace and justice. Ladhas recalled that both countries belong to the nonaligned group, which was established by their late presidents, Nehru and Makarios, together with the late Presidents Tito of Yugoslavia and Nasir of Egypt.

Ladhas expressed gratitude for India's support for the cause of Cyprus, saying that India always stood on the side of Cyprus in its struggle for a just and logical solution to the Cyprus issue. He also expressed the hope that the visit of the Indian official will be useful and pleasant.

2-Day Visit Concludes

NC132213 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] The speaker of the Indian Parliament, Bal Ram Jakhar, completed his contacts in Cyprus and departed this afternoon, returning to his country. This morning Jakhar was received by President of the Republic Kiprianou and had a meeting with President of the House of Representatives Ladhas.

Jakhar also met Foreign Minister Rolandhis, who briefed him on the latest developments of the Cyprus problem. The Indian Parliament's speaker also attended a conference at the House of Representatives with leaders and representatives of parties. The conference, chaired by Ladhas, was also attended by the secretary general of AKEL, Papaioannou, Chairman of the Democratic Rally Kliridhis, Chairman of EDEK Lissaridhis and the Democratic Party's parliamentary representative Galanos. During the conference, a reciprocal briefing took place on the two parliaments as well as an exchange of views on the Cyprus problem and other international issues.

In a statement before departing, Jakhar stressed that Cyprus has a friend on whom it can rely in the Indian people. He also mentioned that he is leaving Cyprus with a feeling of friendship and a message of good will. I hope, he added, that Cyprus may achieve its goals for its reunification. The Indian Parliament's speaker also stressed that the people of the developing countries can be proud of Cyprus' achievements.

Replying to Jakhar, President of the House of Representatives Ladhas expressed the certainty that, sooner or later, Cyprus will be reunited into an independent, federated state because it has the support of people like the Indian people and other nonaligned and liberal people of the world.

GOVERNMENT CONFIRMS AS-SADAT KIN'S PRIVATE VISIT

NC140752 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 14 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The government spokesman has confirmed a report in the 12 July issue of O AGON that the brother of Egyptian President as-Sadat has visited Cyprus. The spokesman emphasized that the Egyptian president's brother visited Cyprus in a private capacity and had no contact whatsoever with officials of the Cyprus Government.

NEWSPAPERS COMMENT ON PHALANGIST COPTER INCIDENT

TA NEA Reaction

NC120934 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 12 Jul 81 p 5

[From the "Positions" column: "Cyprus and Lebanon"]

[Text] Cyprus fosters deep and sincere friendly sentiments toward Lebanon. It suffers with it and stands by it in its ordeal. It offers all its support to the Lebanese Government for the country's unity and territorial integrity. It wants Lebanon to be united and in peace with its people, its sovereignty intact, and mobilized in support of the holy cause of the Palestinians. It opposes Lebanon's enemies and the foreign-controlled racist forces that cooperate with and serve Zionism and imperialism in trying to partition the country. These stances are very clear. Nevertheless, some corroded machinations of the Lebanese Government have treacherously tried to use Cyprus to consolidate their partitioning intrigues. It is fortunate that the treachery was discovered accidentally. It is unfortunate that Al-Jumayyil was not led to court to be tried for entering Cyprus illegally.

Moreover, the Al-Jumayyil helicopter incident must teach the Lebanese Government that it must remain vigilant to stop the poisoning of Cypriot-Lebanese relations. The incident must also teach the Cypriot Government that it must, without delay, reject applications that are evidently suspicious, like the application to link the rebel Phalangist-controlled Juniyah airport with Larnaca airport.

KHARAVYI Column

NC120841 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 12 Jul 81 p 3

[From the "Views and Comment" column: "No to the Phalangists"]

[Text] The Lebanese Phalangists have tried through treacherous means to deceive the Cypriot Government and blatantly change Cyprus into a transit stop for them. Fortunately, and in good time, the authorities realized the deceitful act and drastically moved by closing the way to the renowned Phalangist leader, Al-Jumayyil. Thus Cyprus' prestige with the friendly Arab forces and states was saved.

Nevertheless, we must point out that the Phalangists' daring insistence on using Cyprus emanates from the Cypriot Government's indecisiveness in not immediately and categorically rejecting certain of their "official" claims. What happened at the airport justifies our warnings and leaves no margin for thought on the Phalangist request to link Juniyah with Larnaca. The government must clearly stipulate that in no event will it concede the smallest facility to the Phalangists and, moreover, will it allow its territory to become a Phalangist base.

It must be stressed explicitly in all directions that Cyprus will never become an accomplice to the plans of the Lebanese fascists and the Israeli Zionists to partition and destroy Lebanon. Cyprus does not intend to be responsible for undermining the friendly relations with the PLO, Syria and the progressive Arab world by accepting the Phalangist use of it as a bridge against their just struggle. Any concession to the Phalangists would have stained our prestige as a democratic, freedom-loving country and would have harmed our cause.

GOVERNMENT UNAWARE OF U.S. PLAN FOR SETTLEMENT

NC140800 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 14 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The Cyprus Government is not aware of any new U.S. plan for the Cyprus issue nor has Foreign Minister Rolandhis been briefed by anyone on a U.S. plan for a Cyprus solution.

This statement was made by the government spokesman when asked whether the government was aware or informed of a new U.S. plan for the Cyprus issue. The report had been carried by the Istanbul paper HURRIYET.

NORTH GOVERNMENT IN POSTELECTION CHANGEOVER

Cagatay Resignation

TA131046 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] On 28 June, Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay submitted his government's resignation in writing to the president today in accordance with the procedure in the 86th article of the constitution for the period following general elections. The president accepted the resignation, but asked the Cagatay government to remain in power until a new government is established. The Cagatay government has been in power since 12 December 1978.

Denktas, Assembly Take Office

TA131148 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] This morning, the Turkish Cypriot Legislative Assembly held its first session after the general elections of 28 June. President Rauf Denktas and the members of the assembly were sworn in at today's session. The 40-man assembly is composed of 18 deputies from the National Unity Party, 13 deputies from the Communal Liberation Party, 6 deputies from the Republican Turkish Party, 2 deputies from the Democratic People's Party and 1 deputy from the Turkish Unity Party.

New Cagatay Cabinet

TA140908 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has asked Mustafa Cagatay, the outgoing prime minister of the Turkish Cypriot Government, to form the new cabinet. An announcement by the office of the presidency says that Cagatay, the leader of the National Unity Party, has already begun consultations within his party for this purpose.

DENKTAS DISCUSSES REFUGEE, TERRITORIAL ISSUE

TA131304 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has said that the territory of northern Cyprus is barely enough for the Turkish Cypriot community to live as human beings. Denktas made this statement today in reply to questions by correspondents on speculative Greek Cypriot press reports on the territorial issue.

Commenting on a Greek Cypriot press report to the effect that Turkey agreed to holding 28 percent of Cypriot territory, Denktas said that he had no such information and added that this was Greek Cypriot wishful thinking. Denktas continued: I am convinced that Turkey would not take a one-sided decision and commit itself on an issue which so closely concerns the Turkish Cypriot community's security of life and property without consulting us. Percentages of Turkish Cypriot territory were also raised now and then at the time of Archbishop Makarios. However, the territorial issue is not an issue that can be solved through percentages. The territory of northern Cyprus is barely enough to meet the needs of the Turkish Cypriot community.

We have, in the past, brought up the issue of border adjustments. In 1975 and 1976 some of the border villages were uninhabited. We offered them to the Greek Cypriots and told them to come and live in them. They rejected our offer. We warned them that in the event members of our community settled in these villages we would not agree to transform those persons into refugees once more. They did not react.

Today, border adjustments must be compatible with realities. Our people cannot be forced to move out. Our motherland would never ask us to do so, since it is well aware of the damage this would cause us.

Replying to another Greek Cypriot allegation that border adjustments in Cyprus would allow the return to their home of some 110,000 to 130,000 Greek Cypriot refugees, Denktas noted that this number represented all the Greek Cypriot refugees. Recalling that the number of refugees to return home through border adjustments was put at 10,000 to 12,000 by Archbishop Makarios, Denktas said that the figures being brought up by the present Greek Cypriot officials did not concern the Turkish Cypriot side. Stating that the 95,000 Turkish Cypriots were not ready to move once more from their places, Denktas said if this fact is acknowledged then the solution of the Cyprus problem would be easier.

In answer to Greek Cypriot press reports that the Guzelyurt [Morphou] region, Yesilirmak [Limnitis], the road between Larnaka [Larnaca] and Lefkosa [Nicosia] and the Yeni Magosa [New Famagusta] road would be returned to the Greek Cypriot side, Denktas said: To imagine such arrangements is one thing and to reach an agreement on this issue is another. There is not a person on the Turkish side that would endorse such an agreement. The territory of northern Cyprus is barely enough for the Turkish Cypriot community to live as human beings. This community cannot be forced to move once more.

On Greek Cypriot allegations to the effect that he had impeded the meeting of the committee on missing persons, the president recalled that the Red Crescent representative at the meeting was a witness to what happened, and said that the Greek Cypriots had rejected the provisions of the written procedural agreement. Pointing out that the Greek Cypriot objective was to make political propaganda, Denktas concluded his statement as follows: The Greek Cypriots are exerting efforts in a bid to keep the Cyprus issue on the agenda and to jeopardize the solution of the problem on a bizonal and bicommunal basis. Unfortunately, they want to use the meeting of the missing persons committee as a tool for this end.

MINISTER OZAL CONCLUDES IMF TALKS IN WASHINGTON

TA110927 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal has concluded his talks with the IMF, the World Bank and other financial organization officials. In a statement in connection with his visit to Washington, Ozal said the IMF asked that Turkey take the necessary effective measures in order to prevent the burden of the state economic enterprises on the Turkish economy. Recalling that his government has already taken and will continue to take the necessary decisive measures in connection with the state economic enterprises, Ozal said that he told IMF officials that this problem could be solved in a medium-term period.

In his statement to the newsmen, Ozal pointed out that Turkey would receive a $226 million loan from the IMF during September and October in accordance with existing standby agreements. He added that the IMF gave the necessary assurances to certain banks in order to provide Turkey with additional loans. Ozal, who completed his talks in Washington, will depart for New York tomorrow for further talks with officials of certain commercial banks. He is expected to leave the United States on Monday, 13 July.

COMMITTEE SIGNS PROTOCOL ON JOINT DAM WITH USSR

TA110623 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0430 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] The joint Turkish-Soviet border committee completed its sixth round of talks. The committee conducted work connected with the Arpacay dam being built jointly by Turkey and the Soviet Union as well as the delineation of the border over the dam lake. The supplementary protocol prepared by the committee which started work in Moscow on 11 June, was signed by Ambassador Asaf Inal, the head of the Turkish delegation participating in the meeting and by Ambassador Kuznetsov, the head of the Soviet delegation. The joint Turkish-Soviet border committee will reconvene in Ankara in December.

MILITARY PROSECUTORS DEMAND DEATH SENTENCES

TA081925 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 8 Jul 81

[Statement by the office of military prosector for the 3d Army and Martial Law Command]

[Text] A) The trial of suspects belonging to the Revolutionary Path [Dev Yol], Liberation [kurtulus] and an extreme rightist organization active in the province of Unye began at the second court of the 3d Army Martial Law Command. The military prosecutor asked the death sentence for 13 Revolutionary Path members, 1 Liberation organization member and 16 extreme rightist organization members and various prison sentences for 42 other militants belonging to these organizations.

B) In another trial the 3d Army military court prosecutor asked the death sentence for 51 Revolutionary Path members, for 15 Revolutionary Left [Dev Sol] members, for 5 Liberation organization members and for 16 extreme rightwing organization members as well as various prison sentences for 208 other suspects belonging to these organizations active in Aybasti Province.

C) The Third Military Court of the 3d Army has begun the trial of 69 arms' smugglers captured in the Suluova district of Amasya. The military prosecutor asked for sentences up to 30 years in prison.

D) The Second Military Court of the 3d Army has undertaken the trial of 112 persons belonging to the Revolutionary Path organization active in the Golkoy district of Ordu. The military prosecutor asked the death sentence for 17 of the suspects and various prison sentences for the rest.

FINLAND

GOVERNMENT ANNOUNCES MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENTS

PM131131 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 2 Jul 81 p 9

[Excerpt] The government gained a new minister on Wednesday when Social Democrat Mauno Forsman, second finance minister, swore his oath of office. Forsman succeeds Pirkko Tyoelaejaervi, who has taken over the post of commerce and industry minister after Ulf Sundqvist. The former social democratic party secretary, Ulf Sundqvist, has withdrawn from active political life to become chief of the Workers' Savings Bank.

ICELAND

NEW CUBAN AMBASSADOR PRESENTS CREDENTIALS

FL031835 Havana Domestic Television Service in Spanish 1700 GMT 3 Jul 81

[Text] Iceland's President Vigdis Finnbogadottir has received the credentials of the new Cuban Ambassador to that country, Quintin Pino Machado. After the cermony the new Cuban ambassador was given a reception attended by political and economic leaders of that country.

PORTUGAL

SUPREME COURT ANNULS LEFTIST MILITANTS' TRIALS

NC132201 Paris AFP in English 2148 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Lisbon, 13 Jul (AFP)--Portugal's Supreme Court today annulled the trials of 24 leftist militants serving jail sentences of up to 17 years, official sources said. The prisoners were members of the Proletariat Revolutionary Party (PRP).

The decision followed a 20-day hunger strike by one of the party leaders, Carlos Antunes, to force authorities to annul his colleagues' trials and release them under the 1979 amnesty law.

Late last month Portugal's Revolutionary Council ruled unconstitutional a law allowing witnesses to send written testimony to trials rather than appear in person. The PRP militants, accused of staging armed attackes against banks in the north in 1976 and 1977, were sent to prison mainly on the basis of written testimony. Their lawyer tonight said he would seek the immediate release of all 24 men from prison.

SWITZERLAND

PLO'S FARUQ QADDUMI ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

NC131755 Paris AFP in English 1726 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Geneva, 13 Jul (AFP)--Faruq Qaddumi, head of the Palestine Liberation Organisation's Political Department, arrived here today for a previously unannounced official visit to Switzerland, the first by a ranking PLO official.

Mr Qaddumi, who is expected to hold talks in Bern tomorrow with members of the Swiss Government, was met at Geneva airport by Swiss Ambassador to the United Nations Francois Charles-Pistet and by PLO resident representative Dawud Barakat.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 135 15 July 1981

CONTENTS

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Lord Carrington Explains Mideast Objectives [Paris AN-NAHAR AL-'ARABI WA AD-DUWALI 13-19 Jul] B 1

BENELUX

NETHERLANDS

Committee Urges Acceptance of Cruise Missiles [DE VOLKSKRANT 25 Jun] F 1
Van Thijn Appointed Third Negotiation Leader [NRC HANDELSBLAD 10 Jul] F 2

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Apel Discusses Counterarming, U.S. Missiles Policy [DER SPIEGEL 13 Jul] J 1
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Views Defense Cuts [10 Jul] J 8

FRANCE

Hernu Comments on Arms Sales to Arab Countries [Riyadh AR-RIYAD 12 Jul] K 1
Cheysson Views Relations With Arab League [London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT 8 Jul] K 2
Finance Minister Outlines Socialist Plans [DER SPIEGEL 13 Jul] K 3
Predicts 3 Percent Growth [LE MONDE 3 Jul] K 7
Gas Talks Resumed With USSR, Stalled With Algeria [LE MONDE 9 Jul] K 8
Envoy in Moscow Does Not Make National Day Speech K 8
Bill Submitted To Abolish State Security Court [LE MONDE 9 Jul] K 8
PCF's Gremetz Talks With PLO Director Qaddumi [L'HUMANITE 7 Jul] K 9
PS Officials Receive Chilean, Salvadorans K 9
Jospin-Sule Meeting [LE MONDE 5-6 Jul] K 9
Neiertz-FDR Members [LE MONDE 5-6 Jul] K 9

CYPRUS

Committee on Missing Persons Begins Meetings R 1
Bayrak Radio Report R 1
Government Denounces Denktas Intransigence R 1
AKEL Alleges U.S. Negotiating Bases in North [KHARAVYI 15 Jul] R 2
AKEL Marks 1974 Coup, Invasion Anniversary [DHIMOKRATIA 13 Jul] R 2

GREECE

Government, Papandreou Exchange Statements [ELEVTHEROTIPIA 14 Jul] S 1

TURKEY

Turkmen on Application to EEC, Greek Relations T 1
UN Ambassador Addresses Economic Council T 1
Two Romanian Technicians Jump Ship, Seek Asylum T 1
Industry Minister Discusses Exports at Exhibition T 1
Foreign Nationals Sentenced For Propagandizing T 2
Security Forces Capture 185 Leftist Militants T 2
Prosecutor Demands Death Sentence for 40 Leftists T 2
VOTCP Discusses Heightened Oppression of Workers T 3

OTHER COUNTRIES

IRELAND

FitzGerald Sees Hope in Tripartite Ulster Talks [Paris LE MATIN 2 Jul] Z 1

SWITZERLAND

Foreign Minister Talks With PLO's Qaddumi [Voice of Palestine] Z 2

LORD CARRINGTON EXPLAINS MIDEAST OBJECTIVES

PM141244 Paris AN-NAHAR AL-'ARABI WA AD-DUWALI in Arabic 13-19 Jul 81 p 26

[Bishara al-Bun interview with British Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington in Luxembourg--date not given]

[Excerpt] [Question] What do you intend to do and what are your plans with regard to the European initiative on the Middle East during your chairmanship of the European Council of Ministers in the coming 6 months?

[Answer] We will certainly continue to play our role in accordance with the concept of the Venice Declaration. Naturally, we will consider the outcome of the Israeli elections and any developments in U.S. policy. It is, therefore, difficult to say now in detail how we will push ahead with the European peace efforts and endeavors. We have no magic solutions but I would imagine and believe that our view, which is based on the balanced principles of the Venice Declaration, is correct and right and that we have a role to play in the negotiations to reach a settlement. What we should do is to establish trust on both the Arab and Israeli sides by convincing them that the other side has legitimate rights as well that must be respected. We will discuss ways and means to progress toward this goal but this will necessarily depend on the political will of the parties themselves.

[Question] What is your attitude toward a Palestinian state?

[Answer] We support the Palestinian people's legitimate right but it is not up to us to say if this leads to the establishment of a Palestinian state.

[Question] Do you intend to meet Mr 'Arafat and, if so, where and when?

[Answer] I have no plan or proposal now to meet Mr 'Arafat but I will be prepared to so if such a meeting would help and play a positive role in progress toward a peaceful settlement.

[Question] Will the European Council recognize the PLO as the sole representative of the Palestinian people as the Arabs are demanding?

[Answer] Obviously, the PLO enjoys wide support from the Palestinians and, for this reason, we believe that it should be involved in the negotiations.

[Question] Has the European Community any specific plans to help solve the Lebanese crisis?

[Answer] As the European Council has declared on several occasions, Lebanon's independence, territorial integrity and sovereignty must be respected. The Lebanese Government is urgently demanding a peaceful settlement to the present crisis. We believe that the European Community's role must be one of supporting the government and preserving the powers of the legitimate authority.

[Question] Can the European Community make any move in the Middle East without the support of the United States and the backing of the Soviet Union?

[Answer] We have no intention of impeding the peaceful efforts which the United States is exerting but we believe that Camp David is not enough. We believe that there is a role which Europe can play in helping in the progress toward a settlement to be negotiated by the parties in the manner they deem suitable. My objective during my chairmanship of the Council will be to do all I can to bring this settlement nearer.

NETHERLANDS

COMMITTEE URGES ACCEPTANCE OF CRUISE MISSILES

PM141050 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 25 Jun 81 p 8

[Jos Klaassen report: "Nuclear Arms Advice Fairly Shaky"]

[Text] Amsterdam--The advisory committee on questions of disarmament and international security and peace--called the Alting von Geusau Committee after its chairman--is of the opinion that in December this year the Netherlands must agree to the deployment of 48 cruise missiles on Netherlands soil. According to a majority of the committee, such a decision offers "the best guarantee for serious arms limitation talks" about the so-called Eurostrategic nuclear arms--the SS-20's on the Soviet side and the Pershing II and Cruise missile in the West.

The Alting van Geusau Committee's interim report is directly connected with the advice given by the same committee to the government at the end of 1979 on the modernization of West Europe's nuclear arms. The advice covered two questions: Have the relative military strengths of the East and West so changed that nuclear arms modernization is necessary? and: Can a new arms race be averted by negotiating with the Soviet Union about limitations on both sides?

The committee answered the first question with an unequivocal "yes," and with regard to the second question, the committee advocated an "active negotiation strategy," which should be understood to include "concrete negotiations on quantitative reciprocal limitations and reductions." Here the committee noted that the success of such negotiations would depend on the "political context," in other words, the political climate.

In its report published Tuesday, the committee stressed the deterioration in the international climate, the fall of the shah of Iran and the Russian invasion of Afghanistan. It pointed to the threat to oil supplies to the West from the Persian Gulf. The committee then went on to underline the effects of a possible Soviet invasion of Poland.

Washington's nonratification of the SALT II treaty was, however, partially excused with reference to "Afghanistan." At any rate, the current discussion in the Netherlands whether the ratification or otherwise of the SALT II treaty should be a condition for nuclear arms modernization was quickly left aside. However, moderates such as Mr M. van der Stoel of the Labor Party, among others, chose to support such a strategy.

The so-called "zero option" which is being pursued in the Netherlands--no nuclear arms modernization in Western Europe and the dismantling of the Soviet Union's SS-20's--is rejected by the majority of the committee because the balance of relative military strengths between East and West has shifted in favor of the Soviet Union. At any rate, according to the committee, a "zero option" is now even less of an option than it was in December 1979, when the NATO modernization resolution was adopted.

According to the committee, the "zero option" would have a detrimental effect on NATO's political cohesion, and it would also have a detrimental effect on the role the Netherlands would be able to play within the alliance. The committee fears that the larger nations in NATO would then be able to make decisions "excluding the smaller allies" more than had been the case in the past.

A further postponement of the deployment decision, as had been advocated by one of the committee members--Dr J.H. Leurdijk (he considers that negotiations have hardly had a chance to produce any results)--is out of the question in the committee's majority view.

It could accept a possible "partial deployment" of the 48 cruise missiles, that is, the deployment of only 32 of them. There are military reasons for this number. The Netherlands would then be able to decide on the 16 "postponed" missiles at a later stage.

Here the committee seems to weaken its own forceful pleading for the immediate deployment of 48 cruise missiles. The necessity of 48 cruise missiles becomes unclear, but the committee even undermines its own arguments for the deployment of that number of missiles. The disadvantages with "partial deployment" are considered by the committee to be an appearance of Netherlands indecisiveness, the postponement of the discussion of the deployment of the remaining missiles for a future cabinet, and a weakening of NATO's negotiating position vis-a-vis the Soviet Union.

The advisory committee is probably trying to vie with the oracle at Delphi in its final recommendations: A Netherlands Government's nuclear arms decision must be one which "wins both sufficient support from the people's representatives and the approval of NATO." As things now stand, these two elements seem to exclude one another. But on one point the committee is right--what is needed from the Netherlands Government is an active approach to the issue. The lack of such an approach has probably done more damage to the Netherlands position in NATO than all its criticism of and objections to modern nuclear arms.

VAN THIJN APPOINTED THIRD NEGOTIATION LEADER

PM141431 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 10 Jul 81 p 1

["Own correspondent" report: "Queen Appoints Van Thijn as Third Negotiation Leader"]

[Text] The Hague, 10 Jul--This morning Queen Beatrix appointed Labor Party (PVDA) Deputy Chairman Dr E. van Thijn as a third negotiation leader. According to the instructions given to him, Van Thijn is to attempt "with due regard to what has already been established in the negotiations led by Mr Lubbers and Mr de Koning to resolve the remaining problems."

On 30 May, Lubbers and De Koning were given the task of "investigating the possibilities of forming a cabinet with the broadest possible support among the people's representatives." These instructions mean that in the event of a failure in the attempts to form a Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA)-PVDA-Democrats '66 (D'66) cabinet, they should also investigate the possibility of a cabinet with a different composition.

The CDA, PVDA and D'66 negotiators continued their talks this morning with the three negotiation leaders and discussed what are seen as "remaining problems." Beginning tomorrow, the three negotiation leaders will discuss what further proposals they should make on the subject of the policy program of a new cabinet and the allocation of ministerial posts. The negotiations themselves will be postponed until next Thursday, because outgoing Prime Minister van Agt has announced that he will be going to watch the Tour de France [cycle race] at the beginning of next week.

APEL DISCUSSES COUNTERARMING, U.S. MISSILE POLICY

DW140645 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 13 Jul 81 pp 33-41

[Interview with Hans Apel, FRG defense minister, in his office at the Defense Ministry in Bonn; date not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Once again something surprising comes from your building, Mr Minister. Hardthoehe [location of FRG Defense Ministry] told CDU Deputy Juergen Todenhoefer that the Soviet Union has eight times the number of nuclear warheads on medium-range missiles than NATO. Doesn't this--to put it politely--grossly mislead the public? Do you want to frighten the Germans?

Apel: Mr Todenhoefer's questions were answered exactly as they were asked.

SPIEGEL: They were answered in a military-technocratic manner. If you want to draw a correct picture, then you cannot count only missiles, but must also count the number of nuclear warheads the West has mounted on aircraft and ships.

Apel: Comparisons of figures are surely not enough in themselves to arrive at a security-policy assessment in comparing strength, but this does not change anything with regard to the fact that there is a clear and increasing Soviet superiority in medium-range weapons.

SPIEGEL: In the latest "military posture" of the U.S. chiefs of staff and in State Department reports of the past few years, figures are given for medium-range weapons--weapons with a range of more than 1,000 km--which show that the West is not that weak. We have been able to determine that NATO, including France, possesses 1,202 nuclear warheads, if you count not only missiles, but also bombers, submarines and the A-6 and A-7 planes on aircraft carriers in the Mediterranean and North Sea.

Apel: In this respect, too, it is decisive to ask which systems are to be included. I don't want to forestall the first step of negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States. After all, there cannot be any arms limitation agreements without clarifying terms.

SPIEGEL: During his latest visit to Moscow, the federal chancellor conceded to the Soviet Union that the forward-based systems, the U.S. forward-based nuclear weapons in Europe, could be included in the negotiations on medium-range weapons. SPD Chairman Willy Brandt was asked about this in Moscow.

Apel: Nothing can be said against this. I understand this desire of the Soviet Union and I also am aware of its justified security interests. But hopefully, the Soviet Union also will understand our interests and our desire to talk about comparable weapons systems of the Warsaw Pact, such as the Backfire bomber.

SPIEGEL: General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev repeated to Willy Brandt the offer to stop any further rearming in medium-range weapons as soon as negotiations are started; he is even prepared to scrap such weapons. The Federal Government rejected earlier offers of this kind. Don't you think that the Federal Government's credibility will be harmed if it only says "no" to any proposals made by Moscow?

Apel: The cabinet has thoroughly discussed all the proposals and concluded that if one side has made as much headway in the medium-range armament as the Soviet Union, then a freeze at this level would mean nothing but firmly establishing the imbalance.

SPIEGEL: Why is this? We should actually be pleased if the Russians say: We will not deploy any additional missiles once negotiations are started. The Pershing II and cruise missiles which are planned for Europe are to be deployed only by the end of 1983. Why does moratorium have the meaning of freezing for you? It was the chancellor himself who quite some time ago proposed a moratorium.

Apel: The moratorium of several years ago and the moratorium of today--there is quite a difference. In the meantime, Moscow's concept has presumably developed further. We in the West must not ignore this; we must examine it thoroughly and take it into account in our preparations for the negotiations. On the other hand, however, the Soviet Union has stepped up considerably the deployment of its SS-20 missiles. More than 50 of these systems were installed last year. At present, 220 launching pads are operational, with two-thirds of them targeted against Europe.

SPIEGEL: This speaks rather in favor of a moratorium; the Russians first stop deploying their SS-20 missiles and the West gains a breathing spell for the negotiations. Nothing is actually going to happen in West Europe until 1983.

Apel: What is important is for negotiations on medium-range missiles to be held as soon as possible with the aim of arms limitation. The SPD's federal congress commented on this in detail. I was one of the coauthors of this resolution and voted for it. What matters is that we not do anything that might reduce the pressure on the pace of the negotiations, in the West as well as in the East.

SPIEGEL: You could still say: moratorium yes, but with a deadline of 3-4 years. Preparations for the deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles in West Europe do not take much time and we would not lag behind very much.

Apel: It was precisely in this connection that Willy Brandt expressed views and provided information in his SPIEGEL interview last week. What he said certainly was interesting and must be examined thoroughly. But one thing must also be emphasized: Since December 1979, when we approved NATO's dual decision, nothing has changed in the military-political field that would give us any reason to question the decision again.

SPIEGEL: Quite a lot has changed, Mr Minister. The U.S. President's name no longer is Jimmy Carter, but Ronald Reagan. Carter wanted to achieve an agreement with Moscow on the limitation of strategic weapons. Reagan rejects the SALT II agreement. How serious is Reagan actually in his readiness for negotiations?

Apel: I want to make a preliminary remark. Seen from the military angle--also from that of the United States itself--a ratification of SALT II would, in my view, be advantageous rather than disadvantageous. But sovereign states have to decide for themselves what they want to achieve in foreign policy. Thus, I take notice of the fact that the Soviet Union and the United States will continue the SALT process only as early as in the spring of next year.

But one thing must be absolutely clear: There is no direct connection between negotiations on medium-range weapons and SALT II, though they will form part of the SALT process. NATO decided to hold negotiations with the goal of achieving results. If this is not possible, then counterarming is required. The Americans have confirmed this. By the way, in talking about changes in the international situation, then certainly one must not keep silent about the Soviet Union's invasion of Afghanistan.

SPIEGEL: The chancellor said it and Hans Apel says it: The United States is ready for negotiations. The U.S. President stated--one week after his talk with the federal chancellor--at West Point military academy: "If discussions are to be held, then they must be related to the choice of arms systems but not to a possible renunciation of armament for the sake of treaties or agreements."

Apel: I don't comment on the speeches of politicians of friendly countries. I stand by the decisions of NATO committees, which are unequivocal. In Rome, as well as in Brussels this spring, the United States fully agreed with the line supported by the Federal Government, that is, negotiations on this subject as soon as possible.

SPIEGEL: Nevertheless, no negotiating concept on the part of the Americans is evident as yet. Only a gigantic rearmament program is recognizable--$1.5 trillion within a 6-year period.

Apel: NATO is an alliance of sovereign states and this alliance comprises the political volition of completely different interests and policies. On 5 October, the Federal Republic decided to continue the policy pursued hitherto.

SPIEGEL: Exactly.

Apel: Time and again, we have said quite plainly that we can neither accept a condition of inferiority nor participate in any striving for military superiority. We will push for a negotiating concept in the alliance which orients itself along the basic lines of NATO's dual decision.

SPIEGEL: But President Reagan and his aides are striving for military superiority. The United States wants to be number one in the world. Whether you like it or not, the Federal Government must participate in this, isn't this so?

Apel: We are an independent sovereign state. We also have made it quite clear already in the NATO committees that we will not allow ourselves to be forced to choose between national defense or social security. Security policy is much more comprehensive for me than for many politicians at home and abroad. It embraces social peace as well as our development aid.

SPIEGEL: Your Hamburg foundling Klaus von Dohnanyi says that "certain forces" in the West are endeavoring "to define balance time and again as de facto Western superiority."

Apel: I share Von Dohnanyi's view. But the decisive question is what will be valid policy in the long run. I want to differentiate quite distinctly between verbal muscle flexing and realistic politics. Securing military balance and pursuing detente policy on this basis are the important things.

SPIEGEL: If you are in agreement with Dohnanyi, then whom does he actually mean by "certain forces?"

Apel: Whoever questions either the two parts of NATO's dual decision--negotiating and counterarming, if need be--destroys the decision as a whole and he does even more. He drives NATO into a political crisis and lessens the chance for arms control.

SPIEGEL: Have you stated this clearly to your American colleague Caspar Weinberger?

Apel: We have had very vivid debates in all NATO meetings until now...

SPIEGEL: Is he able to learn?

Apel: I believe that our message was understood.

SPIEGEL: Nonetheless, time and again, he says farewell to a policy of balance: "In case deterrence fails then we must be able to win so as to survive."

Apel: I said before that it is not my business to comment on statements by other politicians.

SPIEGEL: What do you think of the theory that through the counterarming decision, the Americans want us to become embedded in their new global strategy of strength. Here is an example: Suppose a conflict breaks out in the Gulf area and the Americans intervene with their rapid deployment force. They get into trouble and must open a second front in Europe by threatening with the new highly accurate Pershing II and cruise missiles.

Apel: One must remember once again the origin of the decision so as to make it plain that your question is not correct as stated. Since the mid-1970's, the Soviets have been, consistently and with no concern for SALT, building up a new potential with SS-20 mobile medium-range missiles. In October 1977, the federal chancellor made it clear to them that this must not go on. A similar statement is contained in the May 1979 Bonn declaration--signed by Schmidt and Brezhnev. But the process continues.

SPIEGEL: But the dismantling of the obsolete SS-4 and SS-5 also begins. The Russians are modernizing.

Apel: There are still 380 SS-4's and SS-5's on the Soviet side. This is why I am not willing to take this argument quite seriously. But even if somebody gets rid of a muzzle loader and acquires a machinegun instead, then this is a qualitative leap ahead.

SPIEGEL: All armed forces are modernizing, with the weapons becoming more and more accurate and expensive. This you know best.

Apel: I want to finish my reasoning. NATO, with some difficulty, arrived at the dual decision in 1979--long before the confrontation arose at all between the two superpowers in the Persian Gulf area. This is why your story has nothing at all to do with the other one.

SPIEGEL: This is no proof.

Apel: But I would agree with you on one point: the danger increases that confrontation of the superpowers outside of Europe--and this not only through proxy wars, but also through direct confrontation--might spread to where these two superpowers dispose of the highest military potential. One need not think of medium-range missiles at all in this respect. The other military potential existing over here in central Europe is already sufficient...

SPIEGEL: Thus war has become more likely...

Apel: ...the compelling conclusion for me is that peace in the world is becoming increasingly indivisible and that Europeans must no longer be under the delusion tnat events in the Middle East--or elsewhere in the world--are of no interest to them. Detente policy and peace policy have a worldwide effect. And it must be added here: What I can see that has to be done by us to secure peace outside NATO above all is to increase our development aid. This includes the readiness of our diplomacy to take seriously the self-determination right of the peoples in the Third World.

SPIEGEL: Do the Americans know this?

Apel: We must continue to discuss this thoroughly with our Western allies. I do not believe in classifying Third World countries as friends and enemies and granting development aid accordingly. In this, one easily gets on the wrong track.

SPIEGEL: But this already has become a principle of the new U.S. policy. The Americans want to return to the policy of "containment." U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig traveled to China and promised arms deliveries there. This must trigger actual concern in the Kremlin.

Apel: If there exists fear of encirclement in the Kremlin, then the Soviet leaders must enter talks with us here in central Europe, which are aimed at arms control and limitation.

SPIEGEL: We feel that it is wrong to pronounce them guilty. For right now, it is the Soviet Union--see the Brandt-Brezhnev talk- which wants to negotiate whereas the Americans say: We are not yet ready.

Apel: We cannot overtrain ourselves. We can bring only a limited influence to bear on the relationship between the two superpowers. But there where we form part of the arms control process, namely in medium-range weapons--we will see to it that negotiations will be entered in the fall. I do not doubt the Americans' readiness for negotiations.

SPIEGEL: Would you accept a bet on this!

Apel: Yes and I will win.

SPIEGEL: But what matters after all as well is how the negotiations will be led.

Apel: I believe that I must observe something on principle: If one wants to bring influence to bear on a friend, on a policy he develops now, then one certainly does not do this by kicking him in his shinbone or exposing him in public, but by seeking a business-like talk with him. This must be our policy. Verbal acts or stunts do not make any sense vis-a-vis neither Moscow nor Washington. Both sides know that we belong to the Western alliance and that our national interests require genuine negotiations on arms control.

SPIEGEL: Let us proceed from the premise that Pershing II and cruise missiles will be deployed over here--because no results were achieved in the negotiations. Do you share the view of a large number of experts that war in Europe becomes more thinkable and possible than hitherto? Jochen Vogel says: "A universal apocalypse appears no longer unimaginable."

Apel: Your argumentation is not to my taste. In preparation of the church congress, I have done some thorough reading. Today's debate reminds one of the 1950's. At the time, the North-South subject played hardly any role. What matters today, too, is the question: Are we allowed to spend that many billions for arms while millions of people are starving? This pressing question is justified.

I don't feel that war will become more likely--if new medium-range weapons come to Europe. Besides, it is quite decisively up to the Soviet Union to bring influence to bear on the stationing of the new systems or even to render them superfluous through a result achieved in time in negotiations with the United States.

SPIEGEL: Weinberger, on whom you do not want to comment at all, says: Tactical atomic war--that is the difference with regard to the 1950's--could be confined. And he certainly means confined to Europe.

Apel: Military strategists of the two alliance systems are of the view that an exchange of nuclear strikes will bring the two sides to reason--and thereby result in the suspension of fighting. I am skeptical regarding such considerations. For me, atomic weapons--of whatever kind--are political weapons which are supposed to deter. Nothing must change in this respect also through the introduction of new arms systems.

But what must be added under all circumstances--and in this we certainly are in delay--is: First, we really must act more energetically than up to now to arrive at the limitation of arms with regard to all conventional nuclear weapons because the stockpiling of arms does not result in more security. Second, the process of confidence-building--the knowing of one another, the relying upon one another--is advancing too slowly in my view.

SPIEGEL: For you to say that deterrence is no longer credible after the SS-20's have been deployed means that you have lost confidence in the Americans. If the Russians bomb us back into the stone age with their medium-range nuclear missiles, the Americans will not be prepared to threaten to use intercontinental ballistic missiles and thus risk the devastation of the United States.

Apel: The credibility of our U.S. alliance partner cannot be doubted at all. But in 1967, the alliance agreed on the strategy of flexible response. The essence of this strategy is the option of responding with the same means with which one is attacked. Therefore, the response to the SS-20 is not an intercontinental ballistic missile but the Pershing II and cruise missiles. If the Soviet Union renounces its arms lead, the West can also renounce its counterarmament.

But with every decision on the use of nuclear weapons, the Americans themselves naturally are immediately exposed to the nuclear risk. The Soviets have always said very clearly that they do not consider limiting such a nuclear exchange to Europe. So nobody should believe that when war breaks out in Europe the Americans will merely watch it over television at home.

SPIEGEL: How much is enough? What is a balance?

Apel: A balance means that NATO needs to have enough weapons to inflict so many losses on the enemy in case of war that he renounces the use of military means.

SPIEGEL: In the theory of the balance, data must be discussed.

Apel: I don't mind. But more important is thinking in options. The option must be to respond to the threat on the same level on which it is presented. One must not immediately resort to the ultimate options which lastly are not credible anyway because nobody believes that the other side will initiate worldwide suicide.

SPIEGEL: If both big powers hold this view, they could try their conflicts in Europe. We will not know who will be the winner because we will be dead.

Apel: Whenever a war broke out, politics had failed. I am convinced that this will not happen. If a nuclear war were to break out, the Soviet Union will carry the conflict to the place where the political decision on the use of nuclear arms was made, that is to say, Washington. We have clear information that this is the Soviet strategy.

SPIEGEL: Perhaps it would be better for the Europeans to station the new medium-range missiles on ships. The Americans are considering stationing their new MX missiles on ships.

Apel: The U.S. Government is well aware--and it told them, too--that such a decision would immediately cause NATO to call for the stationing of the medium-range missiles on ships as well.

SPIEGEL: Call for or demand?

Apel: Demand. However, seen strategically, almost nothing would change as a result. The Soviet Union has said this clearly. It is wrong to believe that with sea-based missiles Europe can wait and see further developments calmly because then the SS-20's naturally would not be targeted on submarines and ships but on West Europe, as before.

SPIEGEL: Do you think the zero option the SPD hoped for when it made its decision in 1979 and hopes for now again after Brandt's visit to Moscow is possible? No new systems in the Federal Republic? Reduction of the SS-20's?

Apel: I don't consider it invalid. It fully and absolutely depends on the negotiations and on the willingness of the Soviet Union. This is the declared position of the Federal Government.

SPIEGEL: The NATO dual decision meanwhile has become a domestic and foreign political explosive. The debate no longer is about what is militarily necessary and feasible, but only about the coalition and the alliance being in danger.

Apel: Let us begin with the domestic political debate. I have no doubt that it would be totally different if this NATO dual decision disappeared mysteriously. Several thousand nuclear warheads are already stationed in the FRG. Nothing new will be added, at least with regard to the quantity and explosive force, because if an additional quantity of weapons were to be added, the same quantity would have to be dismantled. So we will not increase the nuclear potential stored in the FRG.

Those who today propagate the slogan "living without arms" are discussing things far beyond the counterarmament decision. For example, they are discussing the question of whether, according to the principles of the Sermon on the Mount, we are to renounce every type of self-defense. This means that although NATO's dual decision is a domestic political explosive, it is but a part of the problem of whether we need to have weapons at all.

SPIEGEL: And in foreign policy terms?

Apel: In foreign policy terms, you are undoubtedly right. For us to demand that the U.S. Government fully implement both parts of the counterarmament decision also applies to us as well. The same coalition, the same government, the same figures. A government which is in its own continuity just cannot tell people that some thing or another just was an April fool's joke.

SPIEGEL: Social Democrat Hans Apel who formerly demonstrated against nuclear death himself has turned into a bogeyman within his party. The convinced Christian Hans Apel was unable at the church congress to make his point clear to the audience. How do you feel?

Apel: It is true that I became a member of the SPD 26 years ago to oppose rearmament of the Federal Republic. By the way, this was a very honorable position at the time. It is also a very honorable position today--to be a pacifist. But meanwhile, many things have happened. Very early I came to the conclusion that without a balance of forces there can be no detente policy, no peace, no freedom and no right of self-determination for our people.

Our policy has safeguarded peace. Our peace policy has advanced on the basis of an approximate balance. Sixty million Federal Germans do not dodge their political responsibility and do not want to run the risk of others making politics on their behalf--politics that we don't accept and that could indeed jeopardize peace.

SPIEGEL: It's hard to believe that everything leaves you so cool. Hans Apel is more vulnerable than he admits.

Apel: Maybe, but I must do my duty and I do it as long as I have to.

SPIEGEL: Doesn't the discussion at the church congress, the discussion on defense and arms, affect you at all?

Apel: It affects me very much, not because they shout at me, but because evidently we are about to accept intolerance and impatience in debates. Whatever I can do to avoid this I will do.

SPIEGEL: It has become a standing phrase of all politicians that we must try to have a dialogue with this restless young generation. But every attempt that has been made to this effect has shown that it is not possible anymore.

Apel: That's true. The dialogue very often resembles a dialogue of deaf people. This is the real problem. Such a dialogue is an exchange of preconceived positions. The willingness to listen to each other is limited. But in this respect, one thing must be taken into account, please. The defense minister cannot argue as he likes.

SPIEGEL: Why not?

Apel: Because questions of external security are more delicate than other questions. So nobody bearing responsibility can talk at random. This may limit the ability to hold dialogues with young people. But they are entitled to be informed of the plain facts. Chumming up doesn't help the debate. But those who conclude from this that we don't do everything in our power to safeguard peace--and our success of the past decades is self-explanatory--are unable to hold a dialogue themselves.

SPIEGEL: Mr Minister, we thank you for this talk.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE VIEWS DEFENSE CUTS

DW101327 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 10 Jul 81 p 1

[Karl Feldmeyer editorial: "The Bundeswehr Is Short of Necessities"]

[Text] The Bundeswehr is in bad shape. Shortcomings, doubts and fears have deprived it of its glamour. Fiscal planning broke down over the Tornado and what was left fell victim to the finance minister's red pencil. The public is now used to adverse news from Hardthoehe such as that from closed meetings on the form of statements before the investigating committee on the clarification of the Tornado debacle.

The Bundeswehr presently is short of necessities. The air force has taken roughly 100 aircraft out of service and its combat pilots have had to drastically reduce their training flights and are in the air less than the pilots of any other NATO air force. The army is short of gasoline which it needs to properly train its soldiers. Only through a last minute additional financial appropriation could the fall maneuvers take place. Equipment maintenance is inadequate and repairs are delayed. Much has to wait and be postponed until next year because of a backlog of requirements and obligations.

But it is already clear that even less means to cover the financial requirements will be available then. It is difficult to conceive of a worse situation for the satisfaction of military requirements than growing unemployment and the inevitable necessity of reducing performance standards. Nonetheless, the Defense Ministry has announced that in 1982 it will need roughly DM3 billion more than the DM42 billion it received this year, against the resistance of the finance minister. Given a 5 percent rate of inflation, DM3 billion more for 1982 will not quite reach the 3 percent increase in the defense budget the chancellor promised NATO and experts see only a slim chance that this demand will be met.

What will happen if DM3 billion more cannot be raised? What consequences are the government and the coalition ready to accept in such a case? Should they reduce the current procurements and annul valid contracts? The investigations made with regard to the recent financial calamities have shown that this would hardly ease the financial situation because the losses of the respective firms which would have to be borne by the government would absorb a considerable portion of the sum set free as a result of the cancellation of the orders. The way out of these difficulties--selling weapons intended for the Bundeswehr abroad, to Saudi Arabia, for instance--is blocked for well-known reasons.

What possibilities to cover the deficit are left? Only the quantitative reduction of the Bundeswehr and the limitation of its presence. For important Bonn politicians to consider the possibility of setting up so-called cadres shows how serious the situation is. But it still may be assumed that they assess the financial consequences of such a decision too optimistically.

The Federal Republic is interested more than any other NATO state in making it clear, through the military presence of all important allies on its territory, that an attack on it would mean a conflict with the entire alliance. Americans, Canadians, British and Netherlanders contribute their share to this presence. But the Netherlands has stationed only one brigade instead of the agreed corps. The Belgian contingent also falls short of its nominal strength. The Americans and British are still present with strong, large units.

But is it understandable for Britain, which is sacrificing part of its fleet to finance the modernization of its armed forces, to leave the Rhine Army essentially untouched? If Bonn were to set the signal for a unilateral troop reduction, its partners would need to hesitate no longer to consider reductions. After all, they too have financial difficulties. This holds true not only for the Europeans; Haig's under secretary of state, Eagleburger, warned in Bonn recently that it would not be possible to convince the Americans that they should be more concerned about Europe's security and do more for it than the Europeans are prepared to do. Therefore, a reduction of the Bundeswehr presence could raise questions affecting not only the bases of the coalition but also the bases of German security.

So this, too, is no way out of the conflict between financial needs and security-political necessities. This hard clash at least has the advantage that the government is forced to make decisions now. The talk about what can be "reasonably" demanded as a gauge of what must be done for security must be stopped. A defense budget of DM45 billion is both "reasonable" and necessary. The government will have to say this if it wants to be convincing and come out on top. This would also be an important signal to the Bundeswehr and would indicate the esteem it enjoys with its own government.

HERNU COMMENTS ON ARMS SALES TO ARAB COUNTRIES

PM140837 Riyadh AR-RIYAD in Arabic 12 Jul 81 p 15

[Mustafa al-Yahyawi interview with French Defense Minister Charles Hernu in Paris; date not given]

[Excerpt] AR-RIYADH: Will France in the future pursue a new policy of military cooperation with the Arab countries, particularly Saudi Arabia?

The minister: The question of arms sales and military cooperation is both a complicated and important matter. It is natural that the new French administration should in the first few weeks of being in power carry out a serious study of all sorts of activities having diplomatic, economic and military effects. But I can assure you right now that France will respect all its previous undertakings and also maintain military cooperation with the countries that have ties with us, especially the Arab countries. The cooperation will continue actively although the method of carrying out such cooperation might change here and there in comparison with what it used to be in the past.

AR-RIYAD: What is the future of French-Saudi military cooperation?

The minister: French-Saudi military cooperation is regarded as one of most important elements on which the close relations between the two countries are founded. On its part, the French Government is quite ready to continue the policy of military cooperation with the Saudi Arabian Kingdom for the benefit of both countries.

AR-RIYAD: France, as is known, contributes to the development of the Saudi Navy and some of the ground military units. What will cooperation between the two countries in this field be like in the future?

The minister: The Defense Ministry in collaboration with the Saudi Government will continue to contribute to developing and equipping ground and naval armed forces in the Saudi Arabian Kingdom. We believe that it is useful that we should expand the military cooperation between our countries to include the air force as well.

AR-RIYAD: In a desire to diversify their arms sources, the Arab countries have purchased French arms. There are several contracts that are either under consideration or being implemented. Will France, under the new regime, continue to supply the Arabs with the arms they demand?

The minister: France will respect all the arms contracts concluded with the Arab countries and consider its commitments sacred. We also hope that in the future we will conclude new agreements and contracts between France and the Arab countries while respecting every country's national sovereignty and international law.

AR-RIYAD: Will France continue its cooperation with other countries in the same way it is now cooperating with Iraq?

The minister: France is a founding member of the International Atomic Energy Agency and therefore respects the right of all states to use atomic energy for peaceful purposes. France, like the great majority of countries, strives for the utilization of atomic energy for peaceful purposes without discrimination and in conditions that do not allow the proliferation of the use of the atom for military purposes.

CHEYSSON VIEWS RELATIONS WITH ARAB LEAGUE

PM141432 London ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT in Arabic 8 Jul 81 p 1

[Interview given to 'Abd al-Jalil Damaq by French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson in Tunis; date not given]

[Text] Tunis--Following the talks at the Arab League palace in Tunis between Arab League Secretary General Chedli Klibi and French External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson, ASH-SHARQ AL-AWSAT asked the French minister:

[Question] How do you view France's relations with the Arab League?

[Answer] The existence of the Arab League is extremely fundamental as far as we are concerned because it is our interlocutor in the Arab-European dialogue. We believe that the time will come when this dialogue is really important. It represents an effort by the Arab states to form a united front. This is a mode of action in which we sincerely believe. At any rate, we established the European Community for this same purpose. We believe that it is useful to hold a collective and this represents a common denominator among countries which might have different stances on different matters.

The French minister went on to say: There is nothing the Middle East needs more at present than Arab unity because the Middle East issue is a very serious threat to world peace and means unbearable suffering for those who are bombed, like the Lebanese, and those who have been destined to feel despair, like the Palestinians. The French minister emphasized that progress in the march toward solving the Middle East crisis requires Arab unity. We French are fully convinced of this.

[Question] What about your visit with the secretary general?

[Answer] It was the first time that a member of the new French government met with the Arab League secretary general. My visit with him was prompted by thankful analysis and I attach great importance to it.

[Question] Some believe that the stance of the new French Government could influence the European initiative. What is your opinion on this?

[Answer] The new factor is that France is now more stable because the president will remain in office for 7 whole years. This is in addition to a parliamentary majority which will not change for 5 years. Consequently, France is now a capable and reliable party and must play a bigger role. But we do not imagine for a single moment that it can play a different role from that which our Common Market colleagues are contemplating. We are strongly committed to the decision adopted by the members of the European Community, especially as a result of the mission they recently carried out in the Middle East region. We also are committed to the principles which have been approved for a solution of the problem. One question remains which can now be asked, namely, irrespective of this, can France play a better role by virtue of its special relations with the two sides? The answer is that this is possible. Peace will not be decided in Paris or New York but definitely in the area itself. It remains for France to help, support and provide guarantees.

[Question] Can we expect an initiative from France concerning Arab-European dialogue?

[Answer] In view of the subjects that will be raised in this context, we believe that the Arab-European dialogue is the best method of cooperation, especially as the Arab League is a body qualified to speak on behalf of all Arabs, irrespective of any disagreements that might occur among them. Regarding the most important problem--the solution of the Middle East issue and particularly the Palestinian issue--I do not think that the necessary answers will be found within the spheres of the Arab-European dialogue.

[Question] May we learn more details about the French stance? Is France formulating a plan for a solution?

[Answer] It is not our duty to prescribe any solution and I believe that Chedli Klibi also would be embarrassed by that question since he is directly responsible for a solution, not us.

FINANCE MINISTER OUTLINES SOCIALIST PLANS

DW141105 Hamburg DER SPIEGEL in German 13 Jul 81 pp 86-88

[Editor Helmut Sorge and SPIEGEL associate Gustave Stern interview with French Economy and Finance Minister Jacques Delors in his Paris office; date not given]

[Text] SPIEGEL: Mr Minister, you are a representative of the moderate wing in the Mauroy cabinet. Does your appointment as economy and finance minister mean that the French Socialist Government wants to pursue a social democratic policy of a German pattern? Or have you just been appointed to the cabinet to appease the citizens?

Delors: Several doctrines exist in our party. That is normal, it is our strength. Personally, I am not less of a socialist than all the others. Two elementary principles, however, are more important to me than that: one cannot ignore facts; a society cannot be changed by decrees.

SPIEGEL: The Socialists promised the French to cut down unemployment, to reduce the imbalance with regard to income and to end injustices vis-a-vis the workers. Social democratic governments of other countries seem to have reached the limits of the social state. How do you want to implement your program in times of worldwide recession?

Delors: We are greatly lagging behind countries where socialists were or are in power. We want to make up for that lagging behind. We do not face the same probelms as our social democratic friends elsewhere, who must deal with too high budget deficits, high taxes and social contributions which are in addition considered by the society as unimputable. Had we reached that point, we would have suggested another policy.

SPIEGEL: Can't you learn a lesson from the experiences of the social democrats in Bonn or the former Labor government in England?

Delors: I do not at all share the pessimistic prognoses carried by the French press regarding the Federal Republic. I am instead much convinced that the German economic miracle has not come to an end. Your country still has many trump cards to play....

SPIEGEL: ...Chancellor Schmidt will be happy about this assessment...

Delors: ...the Federal Republic is a typical example of a country that has achieved a lot and is now confronted with some disadvantages to its achievements. Historically that's always been the case.

SPIEGEL: In contrast to the German Social Democrats, Labor failed in England.

Delors: The British problem is a social and not a party problem. Neither the Conservatives nor the Socialists succeeded in solving these problems.

SPIEGEL: France's Socialists face another dilemma. On the one hand, they must appear to be generous in the social field to justify the hopes linked with their coming to power. On the other, they must face realities such as increasing inflation and unemployment figures.

Delors: Not we, but our predecessors are responsible for inflation and unemployment. The Barre government concentrated for 56 months on the fight against inflation. And what is the result? Although it was not particularly fought by workers and trade unions at that time...

SPIEGEL: ...it has been replaced in the elections when the inflation rate reached about 13 percent.

Delors: Even if one says that the upswing of the dollar is tantamount to a third oil price increase, figuring 3 points for it, there is still an inflation rate of 10 percent. A figure that is smaller to the one we had 5 years ago. I ask myself: why so many unemployed, why the waste of time?

SPIEGEL: You must administer the conservative heritage anyway. Among the seven greatest Western industrial countries, France holds second position behind Italy with an inflation rate of 12.7 percent in the past 12 months.

Delors: We fight on two fronts. We must not allow in the near future, in view of strong social imbalances, a moderate support of economic growth and the absolutely necessary social reforms to deteriorate our inflation position any further. In the long run, however, we want to fight the structural reasons of inflation to gradually decrease the inflation difference between the Federal Republic and France.

SPIEGEL: The increase of minimum wages, ordered by Mitterrand shortly after his taking over, could lead to the strengthening of inflationist tendencies.

Delors: An increase of 5 percent was planned also under Giscard, if he had won. We decided to have a 10 percent increase. But this additional increase had no influence on production costs because the state has offset it.

SPIEGEL: The work force increases in France by 100,000 to 130,000 people annually. Economic growth would have to increase 3.5 percent annually to avoid an increase in unemployed beyond the current 7 percent. How do you plan to avoid increased unemployment in view of this development?

Delors: We do not expect any tangible results in the next 18 months. But we will create new jobs wherever it will be necessary, for example, in public servece. France has to make up in this field for lagging behind most other countries. We must continue to accent investments in those industrial branches that are indispensable for the creation of a restored and dynamic industry and that are the bases of progress. In contrast to certain prognoses made some 15 years ago, we are today not in a postindustrial society. The current technological revolution demonstrates that industry as before is the motor of success.

SPIEGEL: It seems rather doubtful to us that you will be able to dampen inflation with this policy.

Delors: We do not reckon with a considerable decrease of the price increase in the near future. We just want to avoid even more deterioration and, simultaneously, we want to decrease unemployment.

SPIEGEL: And how do you plan to eliminate social injustice? Solely with tax reforms?

Delors: Naturally not. We must deal with the fiscal system. This system has created inequalities through tax evasion as well as through the tax law itself. But one can make just gradual progress there. I will not make a turn of 180 degrees, particularly not with regard to laws involving savings and investments. One must be careful there. Some of our planned reforms will be hard to implement without agreement with our European partners.

SPIEGEL: The introduction of the 35-hour-work week is the declared aim of your government. President Mitterrand tried in Luxembourg to create some enthusiasm from his European Community partners in this respect. But Helmut Schmidt did not seem to be enthusiastic regarding the French plans.

Delors: These were first talks and nothing more. In the talks I had with the European finance ministers, my ideas met much approval. I do not think that I am exaggerating. The ideas I developed were not utopian. I just requested the EEC Council of Ministers to examine the many suggestions worked out by the EEC Commission for a change of working conditions.

SPIEGEL: The fact still remains that Helmut Schmidt is not the only skeptic in the Federal Republic.

Delors: How else can it be if one wants to achieve rapprochement in a single talk on an issue that is the subject of scientific and theoretical controversies?

SPIEGEL: One question usually remains unanswered in these controversies: Is it possible to introduce the 35-hour-work week without a wage cut?

Delors: You cannot have your cake and eat it too.

SPIEGEL: What do you mean by that?

Delors: We can only achieve our aim under four conditions: First, productivity must be increased through better work organization. Second, the development of wages and labor costs must be compatible with the achievements of the plants. Third, new jobs must be created. Fourth, priority must be given to working hour cuts in the industry and particularly for those working under unfavorable conditions.

SPIEGEL: Such as?

Delors: I have shift work in mind.

SPIEGEL: Some of your other plans also meet with resistance. Your critics believe that the nationalization of 11 industrial groups and of banks corresponds rather to ideological than economic demands. Don't you fear that your measures will entail more flight of capital and the refusal of entrepreneuers to make investments?

Delors: We are the Government of France and we have the right to alter the limits between public and private sectors. We have always stressed and practically demonstrated that we fully comply with our commitments. When I was taking measures against speculation threatening the franc since February, for example, I did not issue any decree curtailing the activities of foreigners in France. In his Wednesday government statement given to parliament, Premier Pierre Mauroy made a clear differentiation between the interests of the French and those of foreigners.

SPIEGEL: Three firms slated for nationalization, namely CII-Honeywell-Bull, ITT France and the Hoechst branch Roussel-Ulcan, all firms with foreign capital, will not be listed in the nationalization bill to be adopted by parliament in the fall.

Delors: Yes, prior to taking over, there will be negotiations with our foreign friends, with the governments as well as the involved firms. I confirmed that expicitly to a member of the German Government.

SPIEGEL: When will you deal with the involved firms?

Delors: These discussions need time. In any case, we will keep to the international laws and we want to develop our economic relations with other countries.

SPIEGEL: Now you defend the nationalization policy, but according to our information, you were not too happy about it.

Delors: I gave my opinion freely in the government without being exposed to insinuations. One listened to me, a discussion ensued and one made decisions.

SPIEGEL: What does the Socialist-Communist government expect from nationalization?

Delors: There is a simple answer to that question. Had the French entrepreneurs shown the same openmindedness toward the workers movement in history...

SPIEGEL: ...as the entrepreneurs in other countries...

Delors: ...the Socialists would never have thought of the necessity to nationalize to change the course of events. Unfortunately, however, history shows that the entrepreneurs always say no when they are in a position of strength and they grumble if they are a minority. That is a typically French pattern.

SPIEGEL: Instead of social consensus between employees and employers, there is sometimes a civil warlike atmosphere.

Delors: An end must be made to that. Our entrepreneurs have not used the repeatedly offered chance in the past 20 years to offer the principles of a social compromise to the working class. Therefore, the workers had to aim for a political change because they could not achieve results through negotiations.

SPIEGEL: The economic difficulties with which you are confronted are currently being increased through the high interest rates. Europeans seem to agree that this is the fault of the Americans.

Delors: We should not make the Americans the scapegoats for our own difficulties. We should instead mind our own business. I did not and I do not want to interfere in U.S. policy. I intend, however, to direct attention to the fatal consequences of the American practice for the Free World.

SPIEGEL: So the French and the Germans will fight together against the Americans at the Ottawa world economic summit meeting this month?

Delors: I think so.

SPIEGEL: Aside from the high U.S. interest rate policy, the French franc shows considerable weakness. Banks and money dealers agree that your currency must be devalued in the European Monetary System.

Delors: Those who say that ought to take the responsibility for their own statements. When I belonged to the opposition, I was very careful not to say anything negative against our currency. As the finance minister, I will not act differently. I can say that the violent bleeding of our currency reserves has been completely stopped.

SPIEGEL: What chance to survive do you give the European Monetary System in view of the considerable inflation rate differences?

Delors: Naturally, it would be better if we had less different inflation rates. The last 2 stormy years demonstrated the stability of this system as well as the possibility to make adaptations calmly. Compared with the earlier period, it is an extraordinary innovation. I have always defended that system, but I wished that this system were accompanied by some economic and financial measures strengthening cooperation between the Federal Government and France.

SPIEGEL: Mr Minister, you have an absolute majority in parliament. It seems that your government is firmly established for 5 years and your president for 7 years. What could make the Socialist program fail?

Delors: I have traveled much. I have read much--the correspondence of several personalities of prewar times, such as Lord Keynes, the economic scientist. I realized that the Western world is as inconsistent and shortsighted as it was in the early 1930's during the great economic crisis. It if goes on like that, if the appeals to form a common attitude are not heard, not just France will be condemned to failure, but the entire Western world would slide into an even more dramatic crisis.

SPIEGEL: Mr Minister, we thank you for this talk.

Predicts 3 Percent Growth

PM141322 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Jul 81 p 27

[Text] Jacques Delors, economy and finance minister, addressed the Senate Finance Committee under the chairmanship of Edouard Bonnefous (Democratic Left, Yvelines) on Wednesday, 1 July. The minister first replied to questions from the president of the committee. "France," he said, "is experiencing a new shock connected with the brutal increase in interest rates and the dollar. This phenomenon is virtually equivalent to a third oil shock for our country and prolongs the recession."

To tackle this situation, the government has decided on a policy of support for the economy--a policy which, however, comes up against another obstacle: the growth of national inflation.

"The elements of an economic revival," Delors said,"appear nonetheless to be present, whether it is a question of purchasing power, stocks or propensity to invest. Thus, in the last 3 days, the cost of money destined for enterprises has been slightly eased. Taking account of these elements, the French economy ought to experience in 1982 a growth in gross internal production in the order of 3 percent."

After general keynote speaker Maurie Blin (Centrist Union, Ardennes) expressed reservations about the precursory signs of a revival of activity, the minister explained that "since 21 May, France has not spent a single dollar to support the franc. During the same period, credit loans totaling FR26 billion have been granted to enterprises."

In reply to other questions, Delors recalled his opposition to the freezing of industrial prices, while asserting that the productivity gains often found in the productive sector are not always passed on to the consumer by the distribution sector." He indicated that "the budget deficit for 1981 will have to remain between 56 and 70 billion with 30 billion or so remaining to be financed." One of the minister's essential worries is to improve enterprises' access to innovation and risk capital. "Recalling the main trends of savings policy, Jacques Delors," the communique published at the end of this hearing states, "confirmed the government's refusal to upset any of the finacial and fiscal mechanisms in force. A commission to be set up in the near future will consider this new policy and notably the development of risk capital, whose spectacular drop continues to be disturbing.... He recalled that all fiscal reform should be gradual because of its probable cost to the state. The 10 percent investment allowance does not seem to the minister to be the best formula but it will be maintained in 1982. As for fiscal assets, the commission will examine the expediency of maintaining them."

GAS TALKS RESUMED WITH USSR, STALLED WITH ALGERIA

PM150821 Paris LE MONDE in French 9 Jul 81 p 32

["B.D." report: "Gas Dependence on USSR Does Not Worry the French Authorities"]

[Text] The negotiations between Gaz de France and the Soviet Union on the purchase of Siberian gas have been resumed in Paris [LE FIGARO on 4-5 July, page 5, identifies the Soviet delegation head as Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Nikolay Osipov]. The fear which some members of Barre's government had expressed--in view of the U.S. Government--about excessive energy dependency on the USSR is no longer encouraged. Gaz de France has, therefore, reiterated its intention to buy an additional 10 billion cubic meters of gas per year from the USSR. The Soviets stated that they are prepared to start exporting this gas in the second half of 1984. Two 70 mm [as published] gas pipelines will be constructed in the coming years covering a distance of 5,800 km. The Soviets also asked that the price of gas supplied to France under an initial contract (4 billion cubic meters in 1980) be reassessed. Finally, it should be stressed that the interest rates in use on the financial market are complicating the financial arrangements, which proved an obstacle in these negotiations on the "Russia No 6" contract in January.

Although Gaz de France's discussions with the Soviets have been resumed, they are still in deadlock with Algeria. "There is no longer any contact," according to Gaz de France. Since 1 July, Algerian gas prices have increased, simply by the operation of the indexing system, from $3.75 to $4.27 per million British thermal units. But the deadlock in negotiations on reviewing the existing contracts on the calculation of the price is preventing the third contract between Gaz de France and SONATRACH [Algerian National Company for the Transportation and Marketing of Hydrocarbons] from coming into force. The first methane tankers were to arrive at the Montoir-de-Bretagne terminal, which has been finished since February, in the first quarter of the year. Although the Algerians are maintaining a high level of supply on the first two contracts (around 120 percent of the quantities specified in the contracts), they are not allowing Gaz de France to unload part of the gas at Montoir. This unused installation is placing a considerable burden on Gaz de France's operating results.

ENVOY IN MOSCOW DOES NOT MAKE NATIONAL DAY SPEECH

LD141653 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] The Kremlin this year did not invite the French ambassador in Moscow to make the traditional televised speech on the occasion of the French national day, 14 July. As for the French ambassador, he made no representation to address the Soviet people. It must, in fact, be remembered that last year the Soviet authorities, informed in advance of the text of the speech, asked the ambassador to remove a sentence referring to Afghanistan. Because of the ambassador's refusal, the speech was not broadcast.

BILL SUBMITTED TO ABOLISH STATE SECURITY COURT

PM150827 Paris LE MONDE in French 9 Jul 81 p 34

[Text] The bill to abolish the State Security Court was submitted to the 8 July cabinet meeting. It provides for crimes and offenses against state security to be examined and judged by common law courts in peace time.

However, the modified Article 698 of the penal procedure code should include the following explanations. "When the case constitutes a crime of treason, espionage or other attack on the national defense system, the court of appeal's general prosecutor can, according to the rules laid down in Article 662 (paragraphs 3 and 4) ask the criminal court to declare the examining magistrate or judge incompetent or refer the affair to the same kind and level of legal body in the territorially competent armed forces, which proceeds under the conditions and according to the methods laid down by the military justice code. In this case, the military judges called upon to form the panel of judges are all officers."

Under the statutory rules applicable to them, the magistrates attached to the State Security Court will be reintegrated, as supernumeraries if necessary, and given a post at the same level on the scale.

When the law comes into force, the cases with which the State Security court presently is dealing will be transfered to the competent common law court and, in cases where several courts are competent for the same offense, the question will be settled in keeping with Articles 658 to 661 of the penal procedure code.

PCF'S GREMETZ TALKS WITH PLO DIRECTOR QADDUMI

PM140915 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 7 Jul 81 p 7

[Text] Faruq Qaddumi, director of the PLO Politburo, who is visiting France, met yesterday with Maxime Gremetz, PCF Central Committee secretary in charge of international questions.

During this meeting, Faruq Qaddumi thanked the PCF for its solidarity and stressed the dangers contained in the Near East situation. The PLO leader also conveyed Yasir 'Arafat's regards to Georges Marchais.

For his part, Maxime Gremetz recalled the PCF's support for the Palestinian people's national rights, including the right to build their own independent state. He reaffirmed the PCF's support for the PLO, the Palestinian people's sole authentic representative.

Ibrahim Sus, PLO representative in Paris, and Serge Boucheny and Alain Gresch were present at this warm and friendly meeting.

PS OFFICIALS RECEIVE CHILEAN, SALVADORANS

Jospin-Sule Meeting

PM141335 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] Lionel Jospin, PS first secretary, received Anselmo Sule, Chilean Radical Party chairman and Socialist International vicepresident, on 26 June. The two "stressed the need for help for the democratic and progressive forces struggling against the military dictatorship in Chile" and decided on "the principle of a meeting between the Socialist International Latin America Committee and the PS to analyze the situation in the region and to draw up a program of joint action."

Neiertz-FDR Members

PM141338 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] Veronique Neiertz received Salvador Samayda and Rafael Menjiva, members of the political-diplomatic community of the El Salvador Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR). The PS national secretary in charge of international relations reaffirmed total PS support for the Salvadoran people's struggle and for the FDR and the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front," Samayoa reported on "recent increased threats and a stepping up of U.S. intervention after the troops specially trained by the United States had suffered a setback in the field."

COMMITTEE ON MISSING PERSONS BEGINS MEETINGS

NC141057 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] The committee formed for the missing persons issue began its work at the Ledra Palace Hotel today. A UN statement says that during the meeting the committee was briefed on its terms of reference and each member made a general statement. The dates for future meetings of the committee will be set in due course. The committee consists of Mr Claude Pilloud, representative of the UN secretary general; Fricos Mikhailidhis, Justice Ministry director general and representative of the Greek Cypriot side; and Miss Latife Birgen, representative of the Turkish Cypriot side.

The committee will not have a chairman but members will chair the meetings alternately for 1 month. Today's meeting was presided over by Mr Pilloud.

Bayrak Radio Report

TA141002 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] The first meeting of the joint missing persons committee is being held today at the Ledra Palace Hotel in Lefkosa [Nicosia]. The Turkish Cypriot side is represented at the meeting by the foreign affairs adviser to the presidency, Dr Latife Birgen, and the Greek Cypriot side by Mikhailidhis from the Justice Ministry.

The northern Cyprus news agency [TAK] reports that procedural work will be discussed today in connection with the meetings of the joint committee. The meetings were initiated through the efforts of the UN special representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi.

GOVERNMENT DENOUNCES DENKTAS INTRANSIGENCE

NC142154 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] Replying to a question connected with a statement made yesterday by Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas, the government spokesman made the following statement:

Even after the so-called Turkish Cypriot elections, Denktas continues to make intransigent statements connected with the Cyprus problem. Specifically, his unacceptable positions yesterday regarding the Cyprus problem's territorial aspect will lead the talks into a deadlock if repeated during the dialogue. In addition, Denktas' statement, the spokesman said, is entirely contrary to the promises that have been given to various parties concerning the submission of substantive and constructive proposals on the territorial issue.

The Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side, the spokesman added, are exerting every possible effort in the pursuit of a just and permanent solution to the Cyprus problem. But such a solution presupposes a corresponding will and effort by the Turkish Cypriot side. Unfortunately, with his statement yesterday, Denktas has once again struck at the inter-Cypriot dialogue. Nevertheless, the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side, concluded the government spokesman, will await the specified date for the submission of proposals on the territorial issue by the Turkish Cypriot side and will define their stance in accordance with the Turkish Cypriot position.

AKEL ALLEGES U.S. NEGOTIATING BASES IN NORTH

NC150707 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 15 Jul 81 pp 1,3

[Speech by AKEL Secretary General Ezekias Papaioannou at the 14 July Nicosia rally to mark the 1974 coup, invasion anniversary]

[Excerpts] The anniversary of the treacherous junta-fascist coup d'etat and the Turkish invasion once again finds the Cyprus problem unsolved--one-third of the Cypriot population still being refugees in their own homeland and the whereabouts of some 2,000 missing persons untraced.

This dark anniversary of the dual crime against Cyprus finds our martyred people fighting for the removal of the Turkish occupation troops and all other foreign troops from Cypriot territory.

Today, more than at any other time, the international reactionary imperialist forces, headed by President Reagan and the U.S. Pentagon, are developing intensive bellicose activity in the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East. They have even reached the inadmissible, infuriating point of negotiating with their puppet, the Turkish junta, for securing bases in the Turkish-occupied part of Cyprus for the U.S. aggressive, imperialist military "rapid deployment" force.

The cowboys of U.S. imperialism behave toward Cyprus as if it were their own ranch. Those who are the true inspirers, organizers and financiers of the double aggression against our homeland are now feasting on their victim.

Also, Thatcher, confederate and accomplice of U.S. imperialism, instead of finding means to solve the unemployment of almost 3 million people in Britain today, is contributing to the aims of the bellicose U.S. Pentagon.

AKEL MARKS 1974 COUP, INVASION ANNIVERSARY

NC130840 Nicosia DHIMOKRATIA in Greek 13 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The text of the AKEL Central Committee declaration on the dark coup anniversary and tomorrow's rallies is as follows:

"Patriotic Cypriot people :

"In 3 days, 7 whole years will have elapsed since the treacherous, juntist-fascist coup d'etat that has brought Attila to us on 40 percent of the Cypriot territory, thousands of dead, 2,000 missing persons, about one-third of the Cypriot population refugees in their own homeland, enclaved people and so many other evils.

"There is not the slightest doubt that this twin crime against the Cypriot people is the work of imperialism, having as its executive organs the Greek junta, EOKA-B, Ankara chauvinists, and TMT [Turkish Resistance Organization]. After 7 whole years, during which no provision of the UN resolutions has been implemented, imperialism is plotting and climaxing its pressures to give its own partitionist, imperialist solution to the Cyprus problem.

"In order to serve its more general expansionist aims, imperialism is pursuing the dissolution of the independent Cyprus state, the partition of Cyprus, and its conversion into the strongest imperialist military bridghead in the eastern Mediterranean and the Middle East.

"The betrayed, but unsubjugated Cypriot people will never accept an imperialist, partitionist solution to their problem. They will never accept the faits accomplis of the Turkish, NATOite invasion and occupation. They will never accept a Camp David type solution.

"The only solution that the indomitable Cypriot people accept is a solution based on the UN resolutions and the summit agreements concerning the internal aspect of the problem and an international conference within the UN framework for the solution of the problem's foreign aspect.

"This means an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, federal, nonaligned and a demilitarized Cyprus.

"It means the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops and all the other foreign troops from Cypriot territory, the return of refugees to their homes and property under conditions of safety as provided by the relevant resolutions and the establishment of the fate of all missing persons. It means that the British bases must be dissolved and all foreign troops, without exception, withdrawn from Cypriot territory.

"Cypriot patriots:

"Imperialism and its stooges are trying to convince the Cypriot people that they are alone and have no hope of success in the struggle they are waging. This is a lie; it is a deceit that aims at bending our people's heroic resistance.

"The outstanding Cypriot people are not alone in the hard and complicated liberation struggle they are waging. They have with them both the democratic forces of the Turkish Cypriots--who have won a remarkable victory in the recent elections in the occupied areas--and the fraternal people of Greece, as well as the progressive, democratic forces in Turkey. The Cypriot people have with them the freedom-loving and peace-loving people in the world, the nonaligned and socialist countries and, particularly, the all-powerful Soviet Union that has been standing and continues to stand firmly and resolutely by our side.

"On the occasion of the seventh anniversary of the criminal juntist-fascist coup that opened the doors to the Turkish invasion and occupation, the AKEL Central Committee calls on the entire patriotic, democratic people to participate en masse in the district rallies to be held on 14 July in Nicosia, Limassol and Larnaca and in the Paphos rally to be held on 15 July, and declare their firm and irrevocable determination to struggle for the:

"--withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops and all foreign troops from Cyprus!
"--realization of purge in the leadership of the treacherous coup!
"--opening of the dossier on the treason against Cyprus!
"--solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements!
"--holding an international conference to solve the foreign aspect of the Cyprus issue!
"--dissolution of the bases and demilitarization of Cyprus!

"Patriots, democrats:

"Militantly attend the rallies so that we all shout out together:
"--No to NATO!
"--No to imperialism and fascism!
"--Cyprus for the Cypriots!
"--Rapprochement of Greek and Turkish Cypriots!
"--Unity and inseparable front of all the patriotic, democratic forces of the Cypriot people based on a minimum program.
"--The leaders of the monstrous crime against Cyprus must receive an exemplary punishment.
"--Long live the indomitable, invincible Cypriot people!
"--Long live unitary and independent Cyprus!"

[Signed] the Central Committee of AKEL.

GOVERNMENT, PAPANDREOU EXCHANGE STATEMENTS

NC142149 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 14 Jul 81 pp 1, 13

[Excerpts] The leader of the official opposition, Andreas Papandreou, yesterday asked Prime Minister G. Rallis to return to a milder tone after Rallis adopted the "tough Averof line" in an interview, declaring a sacred struggle against PASOK with the protection of the regime as its slogan. Papandreou described as "disappointing the fact that even the 'mild' representatives of the policy of the right, among whom Rallis wants to be considered, have not learned anything from the nation's recent adventures."

PASOK Chairman Andreas Papandreou replied to G. Rallis as follows:

"It is indeed sad that the prime minister deliberately resorts, through methods that are incompatible with his lofty position, to the shameless distortion of PASOK's policy positions. He does this precisely at a time when PASOK has published its position for an open democratic, constructive dialogue with the people, their politicians, and their social agents.

"Of course we understand the New Democracy leader's difficulty in dealing with the creative PASOK program for change. His inability to formulate other positions in order to deal with the multifaceted impasse--national, economic, cultural--into which his party has led the country during the past 7 postdictatorial years, is certainly to blame for his irresponsible interviews with an evening government newspaper.

"It is indeed disappointing that even the 'mild' representatives of the policy of the right--among whom Rallis wishes to be considered--have not learned anything from the nation's recent adventures. It seems that even Rallis has not understood that in a democratic regime the people are sovereign and that democracy is not identified with the right's autocracy.

"We inform Rallis that soon the Greek people will compel him and his colleagues in New Democracy to serve their time in the opposition. It is precisely this, the upcoming electoral crush, that is leading Rallis and his colleagues to the complete loss of their composure, their despair and finally their antiparliamentary behavior."

The government spokesman replyed to Papandreou's statement as follows:

"In order to evaluate PASOK's positions, the government relies on PASOK's texts. Specifically, the prime minister relied on a book by Papandreou in 1979 which its writer has yet to renounce. If he renounces it, we promise to stop citing it. In any case, public opinion is surprised by the persistence with which Papandreou avoids clarifying his policy on some capital issues.

"Mitterrrand--whose victory PASOK has celebrated so much--clearly supports the Atlantic alliance and Europe's arming with defensive missiles. The same positions are supported by the German socialists--whom the PASOK chairman recently visited--and all the other European socialist parties with which PASOK has recently been trying to convince the Greek people that it allegedly agrees with.

"The question, therefore, arises: For what reason, by disagreeing with all the other socialist parties, does PASOK support our withdrawal from NATO? The question is also asked: If we withdraw from NATO won't Turkey's positions become more advantageous and won't we find it difficult to cover our arms needs?"

In reply, the PASOK press office made the following comment: "The PASOK chairman addressed his statement to the country's prime minister. It was his duty to reply himself; he did not do so. He is being asked, at the very least, to read the PASOK program, which has been made public, so that at least he may know what he is talking about. However, of course, New Democracy will not be judged by the people on the basis of any of its declarations. It will be judged by its work."

TURKMEN ON APPLICATION TO EEC, GREEK RELATIONS

TA131614 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Izmir, 13 Jul (AA)--Minister of Foreign Affairs Ilter Turkmen, who recently gave a conference on "Reflections on Foreign Policy and Economy" at the Izmir Chamber of Industry, told a local newspaper that Turkey did not intend to apply for full EEC membership immediately. Preparations were underway and application for full membership would be possible only after restoration of parliamentary democracy, Turkmen said.

In reply to a question, Turkmen said, Greek entry to EEC poses certain advantages as well as certain problems for Turkey. All of the problems between Turkey and Greece had not been resolved yet though there were certain activities in the field of tourism and resumption of commercial flights between the capitals of the two countries, he stressed, expressing hope that development of Turkish-Greek relations on the political plane would lead to a similar development on the economic plane, "though it is still too early to expect development of economic relations on a large scale."

UN AMBASSADOR ADDRESSES ECONOMIC COUNCIL

TA141432 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1415 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 14 Jul (AA)--The Turkish representative at the United Nations told a United Nations economic and social council meeting in Geneva that Turkey was prepared to develop her economic relations with all of her neighbours beginning with socialist countries. Speaking during debates on international economic and social [words indistinct] regional and sectoral development, Ambassador Coskun Kirca said there was nothing surprising about Turkey's aiming at becoming a full member of the EEC.

"Developing countries like Turkey face the need to fight against the current economic crisis in addition to their development problem. The main point is how development can be achieved in the present conditions of economic crisis. Since Turkey had faced the same problem 60 years ago during the worldwide economic depression, she is experienced on this point," Kirca said, adding that Turkey was determined to break the vicious circle of being underdeveloped while maintaining respect for the human rights.

Turkey was strongly supporting global discussions and believed all major economic topics should be included in them, Kirca said, stressing that the Turkish Government was in favor of multilateral and bilateral aid to developing countries from the international community.

TWO ROMANIAN TECHNICIANS JUMP SHIP, SEEK ASYLUM

TA141438 Ankara ANATOLIA in Turkish 1405 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Canakkale, 14 Jul (AA)--Two Romanian electrical technicians jumped overboard from a foreign vessel in the Canakkale Strait and sought asylum with Turkish authorities. It has been learned that the two Romanians, (Walicsek Antomin) and (Ismore Soneler), boarded the West German ship Victor in the port of Constanta. They jumped overboard in the Canakkale Strait last night. They were found by fishermen.

INDUSTRY MINISTER DISCUSSES EXPORTS AT EXHIBITION

TA141644 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Excerpt] An exhibition of agricultural equipment, agricultural chemicals and chemical industry products, the fourth of the export exhibitions organized on occasion of the Ataturk centennary, was opened in Ankara today.

Industry and Technology Minister Sahap Kocatopcu, who spoke at the opening ceremony, said that the increase in production would soon bring exports to a level beyond the plan target. Kocatopcu said: [Begin recording] We have said this several times before but I will say it again. Exports in 1980 totalled $2.9 billion, of which industrial exports were $1.05 billion. The plan envisaged a ratio of 31.9 percent for industrial exports to total exports. The actual figure was 36 percent, however. As a result of the economic measures taken in 1980, the export figure which was $1.13 billion during the first 5 months of last year reached $1.63 billion in the corresponding period this year. The increase is 44 percent. The most noteworthy aspect in this increase is the fact that agricultural exports increased by 21 percent while industrial exports rose by 89 percent. This is a most important development for our industrial sector. We are pleased and grateful to our industrial companies which have attached importance to the issue of exports. I would like to point out once again that our ministry is always ready to help them.

During the first 5 months of 1980, industrial exports constituted 33.7 percent of total exports. This year, the figure for the corresponding period rose to 44.5 percent--to $721 million. During this period, electricity consumption in the industrial sector rose by 35 percent. This shows that the industrial sector functioned more fruitfully than last year. [end recording]

FOREIGN NATIONALS SENTENCED FOR PROPAGANDIZING

TA111513 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1455 GMT 11 Jul 81

[Text] Diyarbakir, 11 Jul (AA)--Southeastern Turkey: Four foreign nationals, namely, Dr Luc Devingne (French) nurse (Maria Annick), Shar Chamal (Lebanese) and Mustafa Kemal Davudi (Iranian) were given prison sentences Friday by a martial law court of five months and 10 days each for making Kurdish propaganda in eastern Turkey. During the trial, Devigne and Annick had said they were members of "Medicine Sans Frontiers" organization in France distributing to poor Turkish peasants drugs; and Chamal and Davudi, students in France, denied charges that they were acting as guides to the two French nationals.

Pharmaceutical products worth over two million liras, leaflets in Kurdish, a Kurdish-French dictionary and a Kurdistan map which showed several Turkish provinces as Kurdish territory had been found in the possession of the four convicts.

SECURITY FORCES CAPTURE 185 LEFTIST MILITANTS

TA101842 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Summary] The press and public relations office of the Army Corps and martial law command has issued a statement saying that 185 Revolutionary Path members, accused of murdering 14 persons at various dates, have been captured by security forces following a series of operations in Icel's Tarsus district. The militants are also accused of extortion and of writing ideological slogans on walls.

PROSECUTOR DEMANDS DEATH SENTENCE FOR 40 LEFTISTS

TA101212 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 10 Jul 81

[Excerpt] The Istanbul Martial Law Command military prosecutor has filed a suit against 178 militants suspected of 20 murders and members of the illegal Turkish Communist Party Marxist-Leninist [TCP-MLO] organization and of three factions attached to this organization on charges of carrying out activities to change by force the constitutional order. The prosecutor is demanding death sentences for 40 of the militants.

The first part of indictment, which was prepared by the military prosecutor, gives information about the TCP-MLO, its armed striking force, TIKKO [Turkish Workers Peasants Liberation Army], and about its two other factions which carry out its youth activities, the Marxist-Leninist Youth Union and the Turkish Communist Party Marxist-Leninist temporary coordination committee.

The indictment explains that the organization aims at destroying the existing constitutional order by means of an armed revolution and replacing it with a Marxist-Leninist order. It adds that the militants belonging to these organizations murdered 20 persons in Istanbul, Adapazari, Bolu, Izmit, Bursa and Zonguldak at various times, were involved in a large number of murder attempts, armed robberies, explosions, firings at security forces' vehicles, kidnapping persons from prison, hanging booby-trapped posters and resistance to the police.

VOTCP DISCUSSES HEIGHTENED OPPRESSION OF WORKERS

TA140915 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Station commentary: "Intensified Pressures on the Working Class"]

[Text] Dear listeners: As will be recalled, the Ankara, Izmir and Diyarbakir branches of the Turkish State Highway Workers Union [Yol-Is] were recently closed for insignificant reasons in a bid to intimidate the union officials. This now has been followed with the detention of 12 officials of the Antalya branch of the Turkish Power Production Workers Union [Enerji-Is]. These arrests are a new link in the unending chain of pressures on the unionist movement.

What are the reasons behind these increasing pressures and what is their aim? We can briefly and explicitly say that they are aimed at suppressing the growing unrest among the ranks of the working class. This feeling of discontent has been further intensified by the trampling of union rights and freedoms, by the low wages determined by the all-powerful High Arbitration Council, which condemns workers to conditions of hunger, as well as by the spreading unemployment caused by the firing of the workers. As a result, the working class and the toiling people are living under grave conditions.

The workers are reacting to the heavy-handed stand of the bosses who, depending on the junta and in a bid to increase production, threatens the workers with dismissal. It is to suppress such reactions and to prevent the smallest agitation among the ranks of the working class that the junta is relentlessly continuing its oppression.

No chance is being missed to weaken the union movement, which has already been heavily damaged. Charges completely without foundation are being cited to label the workers as criminals. In a move which amazed the world, the trial of the Confederation of Revolutionary Worker Unions [DISK] officials was blown out of proportion and death sentences have been requested for persons who had no connection with terror. Under pressure from the monopolies, the gains of the working class were cut down one after another. This process is still continuing.

In brief, pressures on the working class, the union movement and democratic trade union officials are being intensified. What should be done under the circumstances? Experience has proved the following: Tyranny will never retreat by itself. On the contrary, when restraint is used in a bid to prevent the intensification of oppression, tyranny grows. The ways and means to resist and fight tyranny and oppression have always been found by the ingenious working class. All nationalist democratic forces should raise their voice against oppressive measures forced on the working class and should support the just reaction of the working class against tyranny.

IRELAND

FITZGERALD SEES HOPE IN TRIPARTITE ULSTER TALKS

PM140914 Paris LE MATIN in French 2 Jul 81 p 12

[Richard and Deutsch interview with Irish Prime Minister Garret FitzGerald in Dublin; date not given]

[Text] LE MATIN: Will you attend another British-Irish summit meeting?

Garret FitzGerald: Certainly, I would like it to take place as soon as possible. I know Margaret Thatcher well; I have met her many times. I am quite willing to continue any talks which fall within the framework of the proposals made by my party in February 1979--the problem of Northern Ireland must be resolved in the context of the British Isles. The emotional link which exists between the majority in Ulster and Great Britain is a fact which cannot be ignored....While continuing these discussions, I want to openly announce the subjects discussed in order to dispel the fears of the Northern Irish. We recognize that any link between the north and the south must be determined by the inhabitants of both parts of Ireland through their elected representatives. With this end in view, we obviously would prefer to see in Northern Ireland some kind of political institution with which we could negotiate instead of dealing with several political parties...but this concerns the future!

LE MATIN: Does this mean that any solution which you may envisage will be a tripartite one?

Garret FitzGerald: It must be tripartite. We are faced with a number of complexities which present several anomalies which must be taken into account--both the fact that Irish nationals have voting rights in Great Britain and the fact that, according to our laws, almost all the inhabitants of Northern Ireland are Irish nationals. This means that we almost have a case of de facto dual nationality--an island politically divided but with a single trade union organization and a single sports organization. And this also applies to the churches and banks!

LE MATIN: Could you envisage a confederation?

Garret FitzGerald: For instance, at present, Northern Ireland has no real voice within the Common Market. This would not be the case if such a new Irish institution were set up. Northern Ireland would be better represented and its interests would be more effectively championed than they have been hitherto. And, finally, security forces taking their orders from a federal government would be able to operate throughout the island instead of having to stop at the border.

LE MATIN: Does this mean that it would then be possible to militarily defeat the IRA?

Garret FitzGerald: If the IRA were to continue its activities after such a solution were adopted, seeking to impose a military dictatorship on Ireland, we would certainly crush it. Ours is a democratic regime and we will not let ourselves be dominated by a handful of people who have never been able to secure more than 1.5 percent of the votes in southern Ireland.

LE MATIN: What are you going to do to resolve the problem of the hunger strikers in the Maze prison?

Garret FitzGerald: We will immediately ask why the European Human Rights Commission in Strasbourg has not continued its inquiry into this question. So far, it has concluded that no reason exists for the detainees to be granted political status, but it has noted that the prison administration in Northern Ireland lacks flexibility.

The British prime minister has stated that she is favorably disposed to a visit to the prison by commission representatives.

I believe that, if they were to find that some additional measures should be taken to ensure a humane administration, the British Government would take those measures. I hope--but I am not certain--that if the commission recommends no additional improvements in prison conditions, the IRA will accept its verdict. The only way to resolve this crisis is to invite the European Commission--an impartial organization which has jurisdiction over this country and which is supposed to safeguard human rights--to intervene.

LE MATIN: Will you grant political status to prisoners in the Republic of Ireland?

Garret FitzGerald: No--we have never done that. For 60 years, the IRA has sought to overthrow our state, refusing to recognize our government and institutions. We do not believe that someone who kills for political reasons deserves special status.

LE MATIN: Will you strengthen the police and the army?

Garret FitzGerald: Both the previous government and ourselves have already strengthened them considerably. We cannot allow anyone in Northern Ireland to be killed as a result of lack of vigilance in southern Ireland. Nor can we allow the security forces in Northern Ireland to be attacked by people coming from the south.

LE MATIN: What are your views on the suggestion by the British Labour Party's Tony Benn that UN troops be sent to Ulster?

Garret FitzGerald: Tony Benn doesn't know much about Ireland and many other British politicians don't know much about it either... A possible role could be envisaged for a European international force If [all capitals as published] a solution were found beforehand. I believe, however, that no foreign intervention force in Ireland would be able to gain control over the present violent situation and that none would be accepted.

LE MATIN: Would you give up your neutrality if a confederation were formed?

Garret FitzGerald: Not necessarily. At present, Northern Ireland is a member of NATO, whereas we are not. That situation could be preserved. In any case, Common Market members greatly appreciate our neutrality.

SWITZERLAND

FOREIGN MINISTER TALKS WITH PLO'S QADDUMI

JN141632 (Clandestine) Voice of Palestine in English 1445 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Excerpt] PLO Political Department head Faruq Qaddumi this afternoon met with the Swiss Minister of Foreign Affairs Pierre Aubert in Bern for 3 hours to discuss the Palestinian situation, developments in the Arab region and the Swiss stand in relation to the Palestine cause.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 136 16 July 1981

AUSTRIA

Kreisky Comments on Brandt's USSR Visit, Detente E 1
Communist Party Greets Ninth PZPR Congress [VOLKSSTIMME 15 Jul] E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Genscher Discusses German-French Relations J 1

FRANCE

France Lifts Libyan Arms Deliveries Suspension K 1
Chevsson Pays Tribute to Irish Hunger Strikers K 1
Comments on Mauroy's General Policy Statement K 2
PCF's Lajoine [L'HUMANITE 10 Jul] K 2
LE FIGARO Editorial [9 Jul] K 4
French-Hungarian Talks Center on CSCE, Disarmament [LE FIGARO 8 Jul] K 5
Mitterrand, Austrian Chancellor Exchange Views [KURIER 13 Jul] K 5
Agriculture Minister Meets With Austria's Haiden [WIENER ZEITUNG 11 Jul] K 6
LE MONDE Views Extradition Policy; Cites Cheysson [5-6 Jul] K 6

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Communist Group Claims Bombs Planted in Resort Area L 1
Government Protests Intrusion of Tehran Embassy L 1
PCI Sends Support Message to Polish Party L 1

PORTUGAL

PCP's Cunhal Addresses Rally, Discusses PCF [AVANTE! 2 Jul] M 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Kjeld Olesen Views Brezhnev's 'Vague' Statements [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 6 Jul] P 1
Poland's Solidarity Official Requests Medical Aid P 1
Medicine Airlift Arranged [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 13 Jul] P 1
Paper Reports Status of Defense Settlement Talks [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 8 Jul] P 2

FINLAND

Shipyards Exceeding Delivery Quotas to USSR [HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 9 Jul] P 3

NORWAY

Delegation: USSR Invested in Nuclear-Free Zone [Helsinki] P 3
Government, Party Leaders Discuss Security Issues P 4
Prime Minister Brundtland [AFTENPOSTEN 25 Jun] P 4
Foreign Minister Frydenlund [AFTENPOSTEN 27 Jun] P 5
Defense Minister Stoltenberg [ARBEIDERBLADET 22 Jun] P 6
Centrist Leader Jakobsen [AFTENPOSTEN 29 Jun] P 6
Leaders Briefed on Arms Talks by FRG's Bahr [AFTENPOSTEN 29 Jun] P 7

SWEDEN

Defense Committee Group Proposes Staff Cuts [SVENSKA DAGBLADET 26 Jun] P 8

CYPRUS

DISI Statement on National Council Participation R 1
House Observes 1974 Coup, Invasion Anniversary R 1
AKEL Sends Greetings to Ninth Polish Party Congress [KHARAVYI 16 Jun] R 2

GREECE

Hungary's Lazar Ends Visit; Joint Communique Issued S 1
Rallis, Averof, Evert Attack PASOK Policies [I KATHIMERINI 14 Jul] S 2
Part Two of PASOK Government Policy Declaration [TO VIMA 12 Jul] S 4
AKROPOLIS Comments on PASOK Declaration [14 Jul] S 16

TURKEY

Candidates Start To Apply for Consultative Assembly T 1
Minister Ozal Returns From U.S., FRG Visits T 1
Greek Cultural Delegation Arrives for Visit T 1
Bulgarian Energy Minister Begins Official Visit T 2
Ends Ankara Contacts T 2
Military Prosecutors Ask for More Death Sentences T 3
Ankara Court T 3
Diyarbakir Court T 3
Government Downgrades Relations With Afghanistan [VOTCP] T 3

KREISKY COMMENTS ON BRANDT'S USSR VISIT, DETENTE

DW160837 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Reporter Ellgaard interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Kreisky] I consider Willy Brandt's visit to Moscow to have been extremely useful, particularly because it is important for us to use every opportunity to secure and preserve the policy of detente and to examine the prerequisites for new negotiations between the West and the East. Brandt's visit to Moscow has served this purpose beyond a doubt.

[Question] Do you believe that the Soviet position has changed compared with what it was before?

[Answer] Yes, this is undoubtedly true. The Soviets said previously that there would be no negotiations. It turned out, however, that they are very willing to negotiate at the moment.

[Question] In other words, you assess the readiness of both big powers as positive?

[Answer] It is hard to say at the moment whether both are ready. Let us say that at the moment a certain preparedness exists on the Soviet side. There seems to be some mistrust, however, on the American side. Considerable clarification is still required.

COMMUNIST PARTY GREETS NINTH PZPR CONGRESS

AU151430 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 15 Jul 81 p 2

[Report on greetings telegram from the Austrian Communist Party (KPOE) to the Ninth PZPR Congress]

[Text] Vienna--A greetings telegram from the KPOE [Austrian Communist Party] Ninth PZPR Congress says in part:

The KPOE Central Committee conveys to the delegates of the Ninth PZPR Extraordinary Congress, and through them to all communists of the Polish People's Republic, fraternal greetings from the Austrian communists.

Our party, which since its establishment has been linked with your party by close fraternal ties, manifests its full solidarity with the hard and complicated struggle that is being waged by your country's communists to overcome the present economic and political difficulties, for mobilizing and closing the ranks of the PZPR on the basis of the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

We wish the deliberations of your party congress success and hope that it will contribute toward a constructive solution of the pending great problems, to an intensified struggle against the domestic and foreign opponents and enemies of socialism. We regard that as an essential prerequisite for successfully correcting the mistakes that have been made, for a new upswing of economic life, for a development of socialist democracy. Such a positive way out is not only in the interest of the Polish People's Republic but also in the interest of the struggle for peace, democracy and socialism throughout the world.

Long live the solidary affinity between the KPOE and the PZPR.

Long live the friendship between the Polish and the Austrian people.

GENSCHER DISCUSSES GERMAN-FRENCH RELATIONS

DW151303 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0515 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Reporter Elsner telephone interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Prior to the consultations between the German and French Governments, which ended yesterday, there was much speculation on how the German-French relationship would continue following the change of government in Paris. The outcome of the talks reportedly is maximum harmony of views. How do you judge this statement and on what basis has this broad agreement been reached?

[Answer] It is not merely a statement, it is a fact. Germany and France are aware that their close cooperation is not only in the interests of the French and Germans, but is also important for Europe. The German-French cooperation and friendship which have developed over the past decade have such a firm and solid basis that it would be wrong to assume that this would change as soon as a new government takes over in either country. In addition, the new French president is pursuing a clear and pro-European policy, is a proponent of solid Western cooperation and, in his own words, wants to have a privileged friendship with Germany. All this explains why it was said yesterday in a very business-like statement that we have good and excellent relations. And I think this will also be of utmost importance for all our partners. One of the lessons European history has taught us is that if Germany and France oppose each other, this is bad for Europe. And if they work together and for each other, this is also an advantage for all other European countries and means more security and peace for Europe.

[Question] Regarding security and security policy, outsiders have noted with some amazement that President Mitterrand is actually more pro-NATO than some NATO members themselves. In short, on NATO's dual decision, he advocated the formula of rearmament first and negotiations later.

[Answer] He didn't quite say it like that, but those who have studied Mitterrand's statements in recent years know that a man was elected French president who assesses the state of affairs soberly and without any illusions. He is aware that the Soviet Union has gained superiority in medium-range weapons which threaten Europe, including France. On the basis of this analysis, he considers counterarmament necessary, but like us, he also wants to have negotiations. I think this is a very important aspect of French policy, which should be fully recognized in our country. This French Government will do everything in its power to prevent the balance from being jeopardized through an illusionary policy and to prevent peace in Europe from being endangered as a result of the balance being jeopardized.

This is important for us because the Federal Government shares the French stance on this policy, that is, the Federal Government advocates a balance, possibly on a low level of armament; but to achieve this, the Soviet Union must be prepared not to increase but to reduce its missile threat. I hope that many of those, including some politicians, who in recent months have increasingly criticized the alliance's security policy will become aware of the fact that they would totally isolate our country from the West if their views were to prevail. Thus far, the impression has been given that it is only an American matter, although everyone knows that we consider NATO's dual decision necessary and in our own interests. Also if their views prevailed, it is clear that we would also stand in opposition to France which is our most important and closest partner and neighbor. I hope that this will make them reconsider their position.

[Question] You just quoted Mitterrand as using the term privileged friendship. Could it be that the EC partners, above all the smaller ones, have been watching this meeting thoughtfully and even extremely critically because it has obviously turned into a meeting of two strong EC partners who possibly will give new impulses to the EC?

[Answer] On the contrary, I do not see this danger because, being a pragmatic man, the president also made it quite clear that he doesn't want to have a directorate of the big in Europe. Instead he considers German-French friendship to be an important prerequisite for the policy of European unity and, like the Federal Government, he starts on the premise of the equality of all European Community members. I believe that this very correct assessment of the situation is known to the smaller countries.

The French president is for Europe, as we are. He is also aware that the Western alliance is the basis for our security. Therefore, we must warn those in our country who believe they can make policy with cheap anti-Americanism that France will not participate in such a policy. This French Government represents European and French interests with self-confidence and it does so fully aware that this cannot be done against, but only together with the United States. This means that it is a very solid partner in the European Community and the Western alliance. I think this should encourage all those in our country who still have a sober outlook.

[Question] There has been a wide range of reaction in France regarding the Communist members of the French cabinet remaining at home. But they will appear in Bonn in the near future to take part in the consultations of experts. Will this occur without complications?

[Answer] The president and the government members who have visited us represent the common policy of the French Government. I have, therefore, no doubt at all that those members of the French Government who do not belong to the Socialist Party but to the Communist Party of France will represent the policy of the government.

[Question] Different possibilities for implementing social policies exist in both countries. Hasn't that point been discussed?

[Answer] I believe that we must simply realize that the system of social services is different in both countries and that the sphere of economic codetermination is handled differently. It is, therefore, understandable that the steps the French Government wants to take cannot be the same as those in our country. We either have long standing regulations which correspond to our economic and political systems and our historic traditions or there are things which are considered correct in France but not in our country.

I believe that it is more important to achieve full agreement regarding economic strategies and aims. We have found very positive points in our discussion, going as far as energy policy. Anyone who knows the central importance of energy policy for economic development also knows that this is very encouraging.

In other words, we will continue to discuss all current problems with our French friends, doing this in the awareness that we have common ideas regarding great political aims, such as preservation of internal and external peace, European unification and the will to try soberly and realistically to come to terms with the East. This will make it possible to solve still unsettled problems, which is quite natural if a party such as the French Socialist Party, which hasn't governed for such a long time, now begins to shape France according to its ideas.

FRANCE LIFTS LIBYAN ARMS DELIVERIES SUSPENSION

NC151934 Paris AFP in English 1411 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 15 Jul (AFP)--France's Socialist government has decided to fulfill all contracts signed with Libya, thus lifting the four-month suspension of arms deliveries to Tripoli, a Foreign Ministry spokesman said today.

But he added that all new arms supply negotiations would be suspended until Libya had withdrawn its estimated 10,000 troops from Chad.

The suspension on existing contracts was imposed after the Libyans moved into Chad in December. It affected the delivery of 10 fast patrol boats, two of which are complete, 30 Mirage jet fighters and a number of helicopters.

An oil-exploration contract between Libya and the French state oil company ELF-Aquitaine should now be able to go ahead, the spokesman said. He said the decision was communicated by Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot last Thursday to a Mr Afiana, who is secretary of the People's Committee of the Libyan People's Bureau in Paris--effectively the ambassador.

"The French Government wishes to have normal relations with Libya in the economic and commercial fields, and France will execute contracts signed and in force in all areas," the Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

"As for political affairs, France is ready to develop normal inter-state relations with Libya, but they can only be developed when the French Embassy in Tripoli has been repaired in accordance with undertakings given by Libya," the spokesman said. The embassy was sacked and damaged in February, 1980, by a Libyan mob.

Mr Cot insisted to Mr Afiana that the Libyan troops must leave Chad "as soon as the Chadian authorities requested it," linking any new arms negotiations to the withdrawal.

The suspension of already-contracted arms deliveries to Libya became public at the end of February, while former President Valery Giscard d'Estaing was still in office.

Today's Foreign Ministry statement was the first definitive declaration on France's Libya policy since Socialist Francois Mitterrand defeated Mr Giscard d'Estaing in the presidential election in May.

CHEYSSON PAYS TRIBUTE TO IRISH HUNGER STRIKERS

NC151805 Paris AFP in English 1756 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 15 Jul (AFP)--French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson today joined the international pressure on the British Government with a tribute to the "sacrifice" of the Northern Ireland hunger strikers.

Mr Cheysson, speaking to the National Assembly here, said the efforts of the Irish Government in Dublin "to break the infernal cycle of hatred and violence" in Northern Ireland should be supported by "the French people, its parliament and if the diplomatic opportunity arises by its government."

Alluding to the death of six Irish Republican hunger strikers who were pressing for political prisoner status, Mr Cheysson expressed "the profound emotion of the government and French people at the sacrifices and mourning" in Northern Ireland.

France must join in the search for a solution to the Ulster problem, Mr Cheysson said, adding that "it is only through a broad international movement that the situation can evolve." But he said that an official government statement at this time "would only complicate matters."

COMMENTS ON MAUROY'S GENERAL POLICY STATEMENT

PCF's Lajoine

PM151319 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 10 Jul 81 p 3

[Report on PCF National Assembly Group Chairman Andre Lajoine's speech in the debate on Premier Mauroy's general policy statement on 9 July: "Communist Deputies Advocate Constructive and Vigilant Action"]

[Excerpts] The debate on the general policy statement presented by the premier ended with an overwhelming vote of confidence. The text was adopted by 302 votes to 147 with 453 people voting.

Speaking on behalf of the Communist group, Andre Lajoine stressed the two-fold significance of the presidential and parliamentary elections: a condemnation of the policy pursued in the previous 7-year term and the desire for change.

"The presence of four Communist ministers in the government corresponds to the wish clearly and democratically expressed by the French people." Turning to the general policy statement presented by the premier the previous day, Andre Lajoine welcomed the fact that it represented a break with the authoritarian practices of the past.

"An unfair election system has deprived the Communist group of a representation in keeping with its real influence in the country. The use of proportional representation would not only have given our party fair representation, it would have confirmed--contrary to what its critics claim--that this voting system could produce a strong majority in the National Assembly in keeping with the French people's voting intentions."

"We think," Andre Lajoine added, "that each country must find its own path toward greater democracy, progress and justice. Progressing toward democratic and self-managing socialism means bringing new answers suited to the problems posed in France, the path to socialism is a peaceful, democratic, majority and pluralist path."

"We envisage the march toward socialism as a process of democratic advances with the rate of change being freely and sovereignly decided by the French people by means of struggle and universal suffrage. This is the guiding line of our 22d and 23d congresses. During the elections which took place, our people expressed their wishes on a rate of change. We will respect that choice. We will work within the National Assembly in the framework of a majority which we want to be constructive and lasting in order to bring about the changes the country wants."

Record Is Serious

The root of the crisis, Andre Lajoine stressed, should first be sought in the race to accumulate capitalist profits and in the support given to it by the Giscardian government. Thus, austerity "by reducing popular consumption," encouraged economic stagnation, unemployment, job insecurity and accentuated the rural exodus and the erosion of peasants' incomes. At the same time, "the big employers and a government serving them exclusively encouraged the redeployment of multinational firms toward the highest sources of profit, destroying major production capabilities in France." The employers and the previous governments stimulated inflation to swell profits; they have left "a structural overseas trade deficit, an increased budget deficit, a weakened currency and domestic production in a state of recession."

"These are real problems," and yet France has decisive trump cards in the industrial, scientific and agricultural spheres. "On the negative side, there are the consequences of a policy. However complex it may be, it is not something inevitable which should continue to burden those who have already had to support all the burden of the austerity policy. It is France's trump cards which can provide a gradual solution to the various kinds of social problems facing the workers and their families, giving priority to the employment problem."

Turning to the initial government measures, Andre Lajoine added: "It is possible and desirable to go further. The workers know from experience that big bourgeoisie never willingly abandons its domination and the maintenance of its privileges. It uses every possible means to preserve them and to call into question the rights won by the workers."

Stressing that "The employers must understand that it is time to accept a considerable reduction of social inequalities and excessive profits," Andre Lajoine added: "The French economy must make full employment a major objective. Ensuring security in life means giving priority to the right to work, guaranteeing employment for all those men and women who want to work."

Means of Change

"To revive economic growth, it is necessary to increase the purchasing power of workers and families, to resolutely combat inflation and the price increases which threaten to destroy any revival of popular consumption. We cannot conceal the fact that the initial measures to increase purchasing power are likely to be thwarted by price and public service charge increases which are causing anxiety and do not favor economic activity."

The extension of the enterprise committee's role, guranteeing peasants' incomes and the promotion of public housing all constitute trump cards for change. Simultaneously, "a tough policy against speculation and the exodus of capital" must be accompanied by providing public enterprises with the means they need. "The extension and democratization of the public sector should make it possible to give new impetus to economic and social life in keeping with the lines of the democratic plan."

"Everybody knows that we would have wished to go further in the nationalization program to establish better control over the maj r areas of economic activity. But in this matter, as in others, we respect the French people's choice and we intend to progress toward the necessary reforms by implementing the nationalizations announced by the government.

"We share the idea that nationalizations must not amount to state control. They should make it possible to give new rights to the workers and enable their representatives to occupy important positions of responsibility at all levels. Another priority dimension of the new policy is the guarantee and extension of the workers' rights and democratic freedoms to enable them to play a more effective part in the choices and decisions made in the various spheres of social life.

"Society cannot become more just and humane unless democracy enters the enterprise and economic life. The Communist deputies want the priorities of the new policy to include the democratization of the state and the decentralization of powers with, in particular, the introduction of proportional representation in all elections and the creation of a regional authority equipped with an assembly directly elected by universal suffrage.

"In its external relations, a sovereign France with the means of guaranteeing its security must wage the vital struggle for peace and disarmament and especially for the rapid opening of international negotiations on the limitation and reduction of armaments in Europe relating especially to the presence of the Soviet missiles and to the decision to deploy U.S. missiles; it is vital to us that priority be given to reduction rather than augmentation in the search to balance these forces."

"France must contribute to solving the world's great problems by the broadest cooperation in the framework of independence and international solidarity, just as France's alliances should not be one-way alliances. The United States, for instance, should realize that its present interest rate policy constitutes a very serious hindrance to the development of the European economies, especially the French economy. Our country should play its part in organizing a new economic order and world policy in the fight against underdevelopment and in eliminating hunger in the world and France should take action to ensure respect for peoples' right to decide their own futures, for the sovereignty of states, noninterference in internal affairs and each country's right to security."

Extending the Amnesty to Labor Conflicts

"In no circumstances must a leftwing rubber-stamp chamber replace a rightwing ratification chamber." This remark referred to the forthcoming amnesty bill which Andre Lajoine said should include "the lifting of penalties imposed on staff representatives and trade unionists who had been unfairly dismissed. If the amnesty bill doesn't contain such provisions, we will put forward an amendment to the assembly, restoring the rights of workers penalized for their action to promote change." The premier then interrupted Andre Lajoine and promised that the amnesty law would be extended to trade union representatives prosecuted for labor conflicts.

Recalling that Communist deputies have been excluded from the major decisions of parliamentary life for 23 years, Andre Lajoine concluded: "The Communist deputies resolutely place their constructive action in the framework of the new leftwing majority and, at the same time, they will be vigilant in ensuring that the promises made to the electorate are kept. The French people will see themselves that the Communists deserve their confidence despite the caricature of them which has so long been presented. It is with the sincere desire to serve France's interests as well as they can that the Communist deputies will vote for the government's general policy statement."

LE FIGARO Editorial

PM140912 Paris LE FIGARO in French 9 Jul 81 p 1

[Max Clos editorial: "Doing the Accounts"]

[Text] Mauroy's general policy statement is very much like a ManuFrance [large French company] catalogue. In the catalogue, you find a well-presented collection of articles which you buy on credit. Ultimately, bankruptcy. In the statement, there is a list of problems which will be solved without difficulty: women, immigrants, the Third World, the young, tenants and so forth. And ultimately, what? A question scarcely touched on is how to pay for it all. On social security financing, the prime minister explained in a mealy-mouthed way: "There are no limits other than those which the national community gives itself." It is true that he is alluding to citizens' "contributive faculty," that is, to the taxes which are going to wipe out the incomes of those who, under various headings, form the nation's framework.

The art of government consists first in distinguishing the possible from the impossible and that which restores social justice from that which ruins a country. Mauroy exclaimed: "No to the language of figures!" Disturbing words from the mouth of the man who has taken charge of France's affairs. Because, sooner or later, some accounting will have to be done. Because, a business manager or an ordinary housewife who applied these principles would quickly end up in prison for debt. This country, that is, you and I also will, indeed, be obliged one day to pay for the debts.

Of course, any general policy statement is more or less a jumble. The disturbing thing is that, in this regime, words do not just translate good intentions, they mask beneath the verbalization a firm and deliberate will to shatter--immediately and, if possible, forever--our society's structures. Mitterrand's team has an end and a means. The end is to replace a society founded on competitiveness by an assisted society and to substantiate individual initiative by a system of collective thinking and decision. The means is the destruction of the hierarchical principle.

One could have believed once that the disorders noted here and there were isolated actions, accidents along the way. It is now clear that it has all been willed and corresponds to an overall plan.

People imagined that the new regime--like the others--intended replacing those loyal to the old regime in responsible posts by their own men. In reality, things are quite different. The Socialist plan does not consist in changing officeholders, it is to shatter the hierarchy so as to confer the reality of power on the base.

The process began in the information media, particularly in television and radio, with the clear support of a member of government. It extends to teaching where there is a demand for the suppression of vice chancellors. It is soon going to attack private business where the manifest idea is to withdraw the manager's decision making power so as to entrust it to works committees and trade union sections.

Never, at any time and in any place, has a society functioned without rules or frameworks. Behind Mauroy's words one senses a belief to the contrary. We shall see.

FRENCH-HUNGARIAN TALKS CENTER ON CSCE, DISARMAMENT

PM151428 Paris LE FIGARO in French 8 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] The CSCE which is still in deadlock in Madrid and the plan for a conference on disarmament in Europe were at the center of the talks which Hungarian Deputy Foreign Minister Karoly Szarka had in Paris yesterday.

Szarka, who arrived on Monday for a 2-day working visit, had talks in the morning with Bertrand Dufoucq who is director for European affairs at the Quai d'Orsay and who later gave a lunch in his honor. In the afternoon, he met with Gabriel Robin, director for political affairs.

In addition to the CSCE and the conference on disarmament in Europe, the senior Hungarian and French officials reviewed the international situation and discussed bilateral questions. The talks formed part of the regular political consultations between the two countries.

MITTERRAND, AUSTRIAN CHANCELLOR EXCHANGE VIEWS

AU131628 Vienna KURIER in German 13 Jul 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The new French president, Francois Mitterrand, is seeking to establish political harmony with the European socialist leaders who sometimes dissociated themselves from him in the past. On Saturday, Mitterrand was visited by Austrian Chancellor Kreisky in the Elysee Palace. On Sunday, the Frenchman, accompanied by eight ministers, left by air for extensive consultations in Bonn.

Kreisky detailed the Austrian economic structure to which Mitterrand had repeatedly paid tribute in the election cmapaign. Mitterrand in turn explained to the chancellor the reasons for admitting Communist ministers into the French Government, something for which Kreisky says he now shows "understanding." The French president will officially visit Austria early next year.

AGRICULTURE MINISTER MEETS WITH AUSTRIA'S HAIDEN

AU131630 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 11 Jul 81 p 7

[Text] On Thursday evening, Minister Engineer Haiden conducted his first working session with the new French minister of agriculture, Edith Cresson, in Paris. Mrs Cresson explained to Minister Haiden the principles of the new French Government's agricultural policy and Haiden explained the principles of Austria's agricultural policy. According to information from the Austrian Embassy, Mrs Cresson showed particular interest in the efforts of the Austrian Federal Government to improve the incomes of the rural population. Mrs Cresson noted her interest in deepening contacts between those people in Austria and France who are responsible for agriculture and accepted an invitation from Minister Haiden to visit Austria.

LE MONDE VIEWS EXTRADITION POLICY; CITES CHEYSSON

PM151516 Paris LE MONDE in French 5-6 Jul 81 p 3

["M.D." report]

[Text] Not all applications for the extradition of terrorists will be systematically rejected. The government will judge each case on the basis of the evidence to establish whether the crimes are political or whether they come under common law. In the former case, extradition applications will be rejected and in the latter, granted. This is the conclusion which can be drawn from the statements made on 3 July by the external relations minister to the British-American press and from the commentaries and explanations which followed.

After pointing out that the French courts had ruled in favor of extraditing Basques for whom an international warrant had been issued, Cheysson stated: "It is now up to the French Government to give its verdict.... We will not extradite Linasa (one of the Basque terrorists--LE MONDE note) if he is recognized as a political refugee. We will make our decision after examining the evidence. We will not extradite any political refugee or any political prisoner whatever his nationality.... We are fully conscious of the fact that terrorism is a serious and possibly fatal threat to Spanish democracy per se and through the understandable reactions it might spark off in the Spanish Army. We are as determined as the Spanish to combat terrorism.... We categorically promise that there will be no chance of foreign terrorists, Spanish terrorists today and possibly a different nationality in the future, finding refuge in France."

"However," the minister continued, "we must act through our own means, our own legal system, our own police and intelligence services. They must be mobilized on Basque territory. The Basque terrorists should have no illusions; the fact that we might refuse to extradite some terrorists does not mean that we are going to be soft with them... and with a larger number of those for whom international warrants have been issued."

However, Cheysson indicated that the struggle against terrorism is "only one aspect of Spain's general problem and that even if the Spanish succeed in capturing 15 of 50 more terrorists tomorrow that will not solve the problem. This is a very difficult problem inherited from the previous period...."

These public statements and other indications show that, without saying so officially and without prejudging the decisions to be taken by Badinter, keeper of the seals, Cheysson thinks that several Basque cases relate to common law and will result in extraditions. However, following agency dispatches to this effect, the Quai d'Orsay issued this explanation between Friday night and Saturday morning: "Mr Cheysson confirmed that each time the French authorities are handed an extradition application they will examine the case to see whether the facts on which it is based constitute a political or common law crime. In the case of a political crime, extradition will not be granted."

COMMUNIST GROUP CLAIMS BOMBS PLANTED IN RESORT AREA

NC150738 Paris AFP in English 0720 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Como, Northern Italy, 15 Jul (AFP)--A police bomb disposal expert was killed while trying to defuse one of six bombs planted in this fashionable alpine resort during the night. Responsibility was later claimed by the "Workers Brigades for Communism." The bomb had been left outside a butcher's shop. The five other devices, also left outside shops, blew up without causing injuries.

The recently formed "Workers Brigades" claimed the blasts in leaflets left nearby, in which they said they had prepared a "night of fire" to punish shopkeepers who wanted the death penalty. The bombs were also intended to punish Swiss who came to spend their money, the leaflets said. Como is close to the southern Swiss border. The "Brigades" group was responsible for several similar incidents in the town last month.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS INTRUSION OF TEHRAN EMBASSY

LD152103 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 2030 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] The Italian Embassy in Tehran has formally protested to the Iranian authorities about the trespass of government militiamen into the embassy buildings on the night of Saturday-Sunday, 11-12 July.

The militiamen, believing that an opponent of the regime had found refuge in the diplomatic offices, ordered the warden to open up, and searched the quarters of the service staff.

PCI SENDS SUPPORT MESSAGE TO POLISH PARTY

AU131520 Rome ANSA in English 1513 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 13 Jul (ANSA)--The Italian Communist Party (PCI) today voiced the conviction that the Polish people will know how "to resolve by themselves through political means" the complex problems which emerged after the serious crisis which exploded last year, "on the basis of socialist conquests, national independence and the nation's international position." This view was expressed in a message the PCI sent to the Polish United Workers Party (Communist) on the eve of the extraordinary congress opening in Warsaw tomorrow.

The PCI message said that Italian Communists "have always expressed their trust and conviction that the communists, workers and people of Poland will handle on their own the task facing them to resolve through political means the complicated problems triggered by the serious crisis which began last August. "We express the hope that the... renewal trend will be given a specific direction and a new stimulus by the congress, so that the party can work effectively to overcome the country's current difficulties and give new force and vigor to socialism with the responsible cooperation of the other fundamental components of Polish society."

PCP'S CUNHAL ADDRESSES RALLY, DISCUSSES PCF

PM151615 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 2 Jul 81 pp 8-9

[Speech by PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal at the "Festival of Freedom" in Os Olivais on 28 June: "It Is the Portuguese People's Struggle Which Will Decide Their Future"]

[Excerpt] It Is Time for PS To Review Its Alliances

Some socialists have told us that understanding between communists and socialists would be easier if we did not criticize the Socialist Party [PS]. But how could we fail to criticize the PS, or at least certain PS leaders, if the PS stubbornly persists in a crude anti-communism, if it systematically and blatantly rejects any understanding with the PCP and yet systematically reaches agreement with the reactionary parties?

How could we fail to criticize the PS, if the characteristic feature of the PS policy of alliances over the last few years has been alliance with the reactionary parties and systematic rejection of any alliance with the PCP?

We will not delve into history here today. But in the past, to mention only a few milestones, there was the policy of the packages [of economic measures], the Barreto law, the law against the nationalization measures, the law on compensation and then that unnatural antidemocratic and suicidal alliance for the PS which was the PS/Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] government coalition.

Can anybody doubt today that with that policy the PS provided the steppingstone over which reaction crossed to completely take over the government and the assembly?

And at present? At present, there is, at least on the part of the PS secretary general, the rejection of a rapprochment and an understanding with the PCP, the blunt statement that he does not even wish to examine the prospects of such an agreement and, at the same time, the active negotiation of understandings, agreements and commitments with the reactionary parties.

It's not just a matter of regrettable "convergences" of viewpoints on essential political issues. It is quite clearly a matter of very specific alliances and agreements in areas of prime importance in Portuguese economic, social and political life.

Alliances and agreements on splittist activity in the trade union movement, in which the scab trade unions and the puppet trade union federation, the General Workers Union, are the joint work of the PS, the Popular Democratic Party [PPD] [former name of Social Democratic Party (PSD)] and the CDS.

Alliances and agreements on activity in many local authorities where the PCP and the United People Alliance [APU] hold a majority, and in which PS and "Democratic Alliance" councillors are working together, sometimes in close cooperation, to sabotage and thwart the councils' achievements, provoke crises and seek to overthrow democratic administration.

Alliances and agreements in gestation, indicated by many facts, for a PS/PSD agreement for the local elections, whose basic aim (as they assert) is to deprive the PCP and the APU of the majority which they hold through the people's will in many local authorities.

We all recall the proposal to that end made some time ago to the PS by the PSD secretary general.

We all recall how the reactionary newspapers explained in black and white that "the PSD secretary general's proposal is aimed very simply at ousting the PCP from the municipal and parish councils where it remains in a majority, specifically in certain municipalities of the Lisbon industrial belt and of the south bank of the Tagus" (a trade of 17 March 1981).

We all recall how the PS secretary general, despite the fact that the aim of the PSD secretary general's proposal was as clear as crystal, regarded that proposal as interesting and worthy of examination.

And now? What did Mario Soares and Pinto Balsemao discuss at their recent 4-hour meeting?

We have seen in newspapers that at Mario Soares' meeting with Pinto Balsemao, Mario Soares proposed a PS/PSD alliance in the coming local elections and, as an "example" in the immediate future, a PSD/PS coalition to precipitate an election in the municipality of Loures and to seek to oust the PCP from the leadership of the municipal council.

Is this true or false? The PS has not denied it. And in the meantime in Loures, the discredited political bases of the PS and the "Democratic Alliance" are threatening to resign to provoke a new election.

Let them think twice because the Loures municipal council and the parish councils have demonstrated that they work tenaciously to serve their populations' interests. The confirmation of the APU's victory in Santa Iria de Zoia should serve as a warning to them.

The much talked about "central bloc" (that is, a PS/PSD alliance) in the local authorities will demonstrate even more clearly, if it goes ahead, that the PS policy of alliances with reaction is inherently contrary to the people and to democracy. It will demonstrate that democratic administration in the local authorities can only be achieved with the PCP and APU.

If this is the case in the local authorities, the so-called "central bloc" -- a PS/PSD alliance -- would constitute no democratic alternative with respect to the government, either. It would constitute a further commitment on the part of the PS to a rightwing policy.

These shady political transactions with a view to an understanding between the PS and the PSD (or the "Democratic Alliance" through the medium of the PSD) in the local elections or with a view to a possible future coalition for the formation of a new government are a grave matter.

The shady PS political transactions with the "Democratic Alliance" concerning the revision of the constitution are also an extremely grave matter. As is known, the "Democratic Alliance" on its own cannot change a single word of the Constitution. The "Democratic Alliance" does not have two-thirds of the deputies. And to revise the Constitution, two-thirds of the votes in the assembly are necessary.

Only the PS can give the "Democratic Alliance" the votes it lacks.

What the mouthpieces of reaction say is of a nature to cause grave concern.

The fascist newspaper O DIA says that there are "excellent prospects for securing agreement with the Republican and Socialist Front [FRS], specifically with respect to the organization of political power and on the president's powers."

The fascist newspaper TEMPO asserts that Mario Soares' "opportunity" is "to make viable the revision of the Constitution to secure moderate votes," denying powers to Eanes and "flattening" the PS parliamentary group....

A PS/PSD agreement for the revision of the Constitution is being talked about openly. And the plans of the "Democratic Alliance" and of the FRS converge (although with different formulations) on some points of crucial importance, such as the reduction of the president's powers, specifically depriving him of the power to appoint the chiefs of staff.

What would transferring (directly or indirectly) to the "Democratic Alliance" the appointment of the military chiefs mean? It would mean the factionalization of the armed forces, the creation in the near future of a reactionary military hierarchy and the implementation of a set of measures which would make the armed forces (as reaction has long sought) the armed mainstay of a counterrevolutionary policy and possibly of a counterrevolutionary coup.

Because of all this, we are under a strict obligation to point out these facts to the Portuguese people and to all democrats, certain that it is not silence about them but knowledge and condemnation of them which create conditions for joint action in defense of democracy and the Portugal of April [1974].

Some Questions for PS Members and Voters

We communists make this judgment of the facts. However, we are certain that thousands and thousands of PS members and voters are of the same opinion.

Because the PS is a democratic party, we are deeply convinced that the majority of PS members and voters are opposed to alliances with the reactionary parties and are declaring themselves increasingly clearly in favor of an understanding and an alliance among all Portuguese democrats, specifically, between communists and socialists.

For this reason, it is appropriate here to ask the PS members and voters some questions.

What do you want? That the PS should continue a policy of alliance with the "Democratic Alliance" parties in defense of the interests of the capitalists, landowners and imperialists or that the PS should at last return to a policy of defending the interests of the workers and of the classes and sections of the population affected by the "Democratic Alliance" government's antiworker and antipeople policy?

What do you want? That the PS should continue its policy of trade union splittism with the General Workers Union lackeys of the PPD/CDS--the lackeys of big capital and the government--or that it should return at last to unity among the workers and trade union unity, in which the only trade union federation truly representative of the workers--the General Federation of Portuguese Workers/National Intersyndicate--will play a decisive role?

What do you want? That the PS should adopt as a main policy guideline in the coming local elections an alliance with the "Democratic Alliance" (or with the PPD or the CDS separately) to attempt to oust the PCP and the APU from the municipal and parish councils where the PCP and the APU hold a majority or that the PS and the FRS should seek to reach agreement with the PCP and the APU to oust the "Democratic Alliance" and its administration from the municipal and parish councils where its administration has been marked by antidemocratic conduct, unlawful defense of privileges, incompetence, nepotism and corruption?

What do you want? That the PS should continue its policy of alliances with the PPD and the CDS or that it should at last return to an alliance with the great party of the Portuguese workers--the great and unyielding defender of the democratic system and of its achievements and gains--the PCP?

What do you want? That the PS should persist in its proposal for revising fundamental constitutional principles and continue with negotiations with the "Democratic Alliance" on the revision of the Constitution so as to give the "Democratic Alliance" the two-thirds votes in the assembly, which it needs for the unconstitutional revision which it wishes to make or that, side by side with the PCP and other democratic forces, it should at last decide to defend firmly the Constitution, and in defending the Constitution, defend the democratic system?

It is time for the PS to review its policy of alliances. It is time for the PS to finally abandon its policy of alliances with reaction and to seek unity among the democratic forces--unity between communists and socialists.

We wish here to reiterate an assertion, a readiness, an offer and a proposal in which we have long persisted. Today, as always, the PCP is prepared to examine together with all democratic forces--specifically, with the PS--all matters concerning the national situation and a democratic alternative.

Lessons of French Elections

The democratic forces' victory in the French elections and the formation of a government with communist participation are of great significance for the French people, have important international repercussions and contain experiences which the Portuguese democrats have a duty to examine closely.

In the first place, it is a matter not only of a defeat for the right but of the demonstration of the bankruptcy of its policy and of its removal from power, where it had been entrenched for over 20 years.

France, where certain commentators believed it certain that the rightwing forces were in a position to continue to govern for many years, demonstrates that the parties of big capital are incapable of resolving their respective countries' major problems and of ensuring the improvement of the people's living conditions and regular economic and social progress. It is clear that, even where the right seems most solidly established in power, it is quite possible to defeat and replace it.

Second, France clearly demonstrates that agreement and unity among the democratic forces--specifically, between communists and socialists--is the best driving force and the best guarantee of their victory.

There are those in Portugal who are seeking to minimize the essential role played by unity and the PCF in the great democratic victory. However, it is absolutely certain that the communists' votes were decisive for ensuring the French leftwing majority.

When the results of the French elections were known, the alarmed and disoriented "Democratic Alliance" organs proclaimed that the main losers in the French elections were not the rightwing parties but the French Communists.

But the truth (hard to swallow for the "Democratic Alliance") is that the rightwing parties were driven from power and that the French Government today has four Communist ministers.

We congratulate our French comrades on this great victory which, at the same time, is a great victory for the democratic forces, the working class and the French people.

Third, France demonstrates that the communists and the workers are necessary at government level to resolve the people's and the country's problems.

We warmly welcome the French comrades' participation in the French Government and are certain that the PCF will make a contribution of the utmost importance to ensuring that France follows the path of strengthening democracy and national independence, having socialism as its goal.

Fourth, France demonstrates that an independent and sovereign country, despite the pressures and acts of interference on the part of U.S. imperialism and world reaction, can determine its own course and the political composition of its own government.

In an independent and sovereign country, it is for the national will and not the will of foreign states to choose its own leaders. The French people wanted a democratic government with Communist participation. Only those who bow to imperialism can dispute the right to such a decision.

Communists' Participation in Government

The new French situation poses again in specific terms the issue of participation by the communists in the governments of the European capitalist countries. It is not a new issue. It has long been posed in France, Italy, Portugal, even in Spain and also in Greece, not to mention Iceland and also Finland where the communists take part in the government (despite the fact that TEMPO, praising the Finnish Government, pretends not to know that the communists belong to it), and in Cyprus, too, where the communist party--the restorative party of the working people--recently won the election.

In relation to Portugal, it is good to recall the decisive importance--combined with the people's mass struggle and the revolutionary military personnel's activity--of the PCP's participation in the provisional governments for the victory of democracy, the defeating of counterrevolutionary coups, the great democratic transformations and the establishment of a progressive democratic system which does credit to Portugal in the world.

The issue of the PCP's participation in the government has remained present in the minds of the people during the years which have elapsed since the communists left the Portuguese Government because, since the communists left the government, the economic situation and the people's living conditions have gone from bad to worse.

Successive governments (in 1976-80) without communist participation have led Portugal to the wretched situation which we see today. This is why on many political occasions the workers have emphasized the need for the PCP's participation in the government. It can be said with complete truth and complete accuracy: the right would never have succeeded in advancing as far as it has advanced, it would never have carried the work of destroying Portuguese democracy and its gains so far, the people's living conditions would never have deteriorated so much and the system would never have experienced such dangerous moments as it has experienced and still experiences, if at certain moments (specifically in 1977) the communists had entered a democratic government, together with the socialists and other democrats.

But when we insisted that the communists' participation in the government is essential to resolve the nation's problems, what did not only the reactionaries but certain democrats--specifically, PS leaders--say? They said that the PCP's participation in the government was not possible, not only for domestic reasons but principally for external reasons.

That it was not possible because (depending on the period) Kissinger, or Carter, or more recently Reagan, did not want communists in the West European governments in conformity with frequent warnings in relation to France, Italy and Portugal.

That it was not possible because Portugal wished to join the Common Market and communists were not allowed in governments in the Common Market.

That it was not possible because Portugal is a NATO country and the Atlantic alliance would not allow communists in a member country's government.

Poor are the leaders of the Portuguese state who, bowing to imperialism, invoke the will of foreign states in relation to internal affairs of our own country which it is for the Portuguese people alone to resolve.

And now, gentlemen? Now it is France--a Western country, a capitalist country of the much talked about geopolitical area to which Portugal allegedly belongs, a Common Market country, an Atlantic alliance country--which decides on the communists' participation in a democratic government.

Of course, confronted with the French Communists' entry into the government, imperialism and reaction are creating a great hubbub. The U.S. State Department, interfering in France's internal affairs, says that communist participation in the government will harm France's relations with the United States.

What was the reply of the French premier--the Socialist Pierre Maurov?

No, he did not reply like those in Portugal who said that the Portuguese communists could not take part in the government because Washington or Bonn or London or Paris or all together would not allow it.

The French premier--a PS leader--replied differently. He replied: "The French Government is not formed for other countries; it is a matter for the French people."

We welcome this assertion of national independence and sincerely hope that it will be understood and appreciated by all Portuguese democrats and that they will be inspired by it in their future statements and decisions concerning the Portuguese Government's political composition.

How did the "Democratic Alliance" react to the formation of the new French Government?

U.S. Vice President George Bush expressed his "anxiety" at the communists' entry into the government.

What does "Democratic Alliance" Prime Minister Pinto Balsemao say? What was to be expected. Repeating the U.S. statement almost verbatim, he also expressed his "anxieties."

We may ask in passing: If the prime minister suffers so much through the French Communists' entry into the French Government, what will he suffer on the day (which will come) when the Portuguese Communists enter the Portuguese Government?

This is the appropriate moment to repeat what we have always asserted. The Portuguese Government's political composition, program and conduct cannot and must not be decided abroad, but in Portugal by the Portuguese people alone.

Whether reaction and imperialism like it or not, the PCP will enter the government of the Portuguese Republic on the day when the Portuguese people so decide.

We are talking about the French elections. But if we are talking about the successes of our comrades in other European countries, it is proper also to recall here that only a week ago the PCI won the local elections, retaining among other things the mayorship of the municipal council of Rome--the capital of Italy.

You will certainly agree that from here--from this rally--we should not only congratulate the PCF on its entry into the French Government but should also congratulate the PCI on its victory in the municipal elections.

These and other events demonstrate that in West Europe the time of the rightward evolution which some people deemed irreversible and inevitable is over and a reversal of the trend in political evolution is becoming clearer.

Further defeats await the reactionary forces and further victories can be achieved by the democratic forces in Europe.

We unhesitatingly include Portugal among the countries where conditions for such an evolution are ripening.

DENMARK

KJELD OLESEN VIEWS BREZHNEV'S 'VAGUE' STATEMENTS

PM141043 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 6 Jul 81 part 1 p 5

["-LK" report: "Danish Call--Brezhnev Must Give Clear Information on Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Text] There is good reason for Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev to expand and clarify his statements on the possibility of including Soviet territories in the negotiations for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. This is the view of Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen.

"The government would like to find something positive in President Brezhnev's statement about the possibility of including Soviet territories in possible talks on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. These statements were couched in extremely vague terms," Kjeld Olesen wrote in a reply to Single Tax Party Folketing member IB Christensen.

"The clarification which the Danish Government--like a number of other governments, including the Nordic governments--has asked for is much needed. Thus there is every reason for President Brezhnev to make some statement, which would expand and clarify his original remarks and which would make possible an assessment of the scope of the statements in question. In this connection, it would also be interesting to know if the Soviet statements can be taken as an expression of an understanding that the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries must be seen in a larger European context," Kjeld Olesen concluded.

POLAND'S SOLIDARITY OFFICIAL REQUESTS MEDICAL AID

NC121141 Paris AFP in English 1135 GMT 12 Jul 81

[Text] Copenhagen 12 Jul (AFP)--The Polish independent trade union confederation Solidarity has appealed directly to the Danish Government for financial aid to help meet deficiencies in the country's medical sector, a visiting Solidarity official said here.

In an interview today with the Copenhagen daily BERLINGSKE TIDENDE, Z. Gryszkiewicz, head of the Solidarity's foreign section, declared: "We have had enough of our children dying in the hospitals, and as the government is idly standing by, Solidarity must do something."

Mr Gryszkiewicz, who is touring Western Europe and North America to seek support for the cause, launched an urgent appeal for medical supplies and equipment. He said that Solidarity had written to Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen to request financial and moral support.

Medicine Airlift Arranged

PM150935 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 13 Jul 81 part 1 p 1

[Jorn Mikkelsen report: "Danish Medical Aid to Polish Hospitals"]

[Text] Tomorrow the first Danish aircraft carrying aid supplies of drugs and medical equipment will leave for Poland. In an attempt to make a small contribution to improving the catastrophic shortages in the Polish health service, the aid organization, Caritas, has initiated a program of express deliveries which will fly all types of medicines to Polish hospitals.

The emergency action comes after an appeal to the Danes by independent trade union Solidarity's international section chief Z. Gryszkiewicz.

There are shortages of even the most elementary medicinal preparations--babies are dying from colds because they cannot be given the correct medicine. Similarly, 30 percent of all cases of hepatitis are ascribed to the reuse of injection needles.

A telex system has now been set up so that the medicines can be flown directly from Denmark to any hospital in Poland where needs become acute. For the time being, the action will cost Caritas around 50,000 kroner a month. But attempts are being made to expand the scope of the work as quickly as possible. Both Danish Foreign Minister Kjeld Olesen and the Danish Trade Union Federation have reacted positively to the aid program. The Foreign Ministry is at present considering from which of its accounts the aid is to be financed.

Today Polish hospitals have been informed of which medicines are produced in Denmark. S. Gryszkiewicz takes home with him a complete list of all available medicines, which he can ask to have flown to Poland.

PAPER REPORTS STATUS OF DEFENSE SETTLEMENT TALKS

PM160835 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 8 Jul 81 part 1 p 6

["-LK" report: "Top Social Democrats Brought in To Save Defense Settlement']

[Text] The Social Democratic Party has now brought all its top members into the negotiations for a new defense settlement. When the negotiations started many months ago, Defense Minister Poul Sogaard, Social Democratic defense spokesman Preben Steen Nielsen and Knud Damgaard were taking part. Knud Damgaard was later replaced by Social Democratic Party deputy chairman and Social Democratic Folketing Group Chairman Knud Heinesen. Yesterday, Preben Steen Nielsen was replaced by Social Democratic Party chairman, Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen.

At a meeting yesterday with the political parties which normally take part in defense settlements--the Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats, Christian People's Party and the Radical Liberals--Defense Minister Poul Sogaard presented the latest proposal from the Social Democratic Party. It offers over and above the previous zero-solution for defense spending a further 80 million kroner.

Some 44 million will be spent on improving the defenses on Sjaelland, 16 million on refurbishing 4 motor torpedo boats of the Sealion class, and 20 million on the Home Guard.

Radical Liberal defence spokesman Jens Bilgrav Nielsen has strongly criticized the Social Democrats' offer of a further 80 million kroner, which he finds unacceptable for the Liberals. The other defense settlement parties--the Liberals, Conservatives, Center Democrats, and the Christian People's Party--described the offer as far too small.

"As expected, the Social Democrats have shown a little movement during the negotiations, but unfortunately not enough. both sides have admitted the necessity of reaching broad agreement. A number of studies will now be made and the different political groupings will hold meetings, and the negotiations will continue in August. It must be stressed that if we are to reach a settlement by then, there will have to be much greater flexibility in the negotiating positions," Liberal defense spokesman Arne Christiansen said.

Conservative defense spokesman Palle Simonsen said: "We have agreed that we will continue to negotiate in the hope that an agreement can be reached. But is it clear what is needed for results--the Social Democrats will have to move further away from the 80 million kroner they have now offered."

FINLAND

SHIPYARDS EXCEEDING DELIVERY QUOTAS TO USSR

PM140931 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 9 Jul 81 p 9

[Text] With the handing over of the vessel Smolensk at the Valmet Nordsjoe shipyard yesterday, V/D Sudoimport Director General O.S. Kropotov said that the quotas for the present 5-year period for ship deliveries will be exceeded.

"During the previous 5-year period, Finland supplied ships worth approximately 7.2 billion markkaa, but now, 6 months into the present 5-year period, we have already reached agreement on supplies worth 7.8 billion markkaa," Kropotov said.

Kropotov was taking part in the ceremony to hand over the MS Smolensk at the Valmet shipyard and his visit to Finland will also include intensive negotiations with different firms in the shipbuilding industry. These will include continued negotiations wiht Waertsilae on the building of a nuclear icebreaker for the Soviet Union. At present, it seems that negotiations will no longer concern only the technical aspects of such a deal. Kropotov said nothing about new deals with Valmet.

The MS Smolensk is the fifth and final vessel in a series of 22,400 ton roll on-roll off vessels which Valmet has delivered to the Soviet Union. The vessel's value is around 200 million markkaa. The ship is large--205 meters long--extremely functional, and the first vessel in the series was even given a special award as "ship of the year" in the Soviet Union.

At present, the Nordsuoe shipyard has an orderbook worth 1.3 billion markkaa and full employment at the shipyard is guaranteed to the end of 1983. The MS Smolensk was delivered in record time, 3 months sooner than expected.

NORWAY

DELEGATION: USSR INVESTED IN NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

LD141030 Helsinki International Service in English 0830 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] Oslo: The Soviet Union has told a Norwegian delegation which visited the country recently that it is prepared to consider troop and weapon reductions in its own territory in connection with a possible Nordic nuclear weapons-free zone. The confirmation was given to Norwegian Church and Education Minister Einar Forde in Moscow last week. Minister Forde reported on the results of his visit in Oslo on the weekend.

Mr Forde said he had received an assurance form leading representatives of the Soviet Communist Party that the Soviet Union will not use nuclear weapons againt a possible Nordic nuclear weapons-free zone. In a clarification, the Soviet party representatives had noted that the Soviet Union is also prepared to reduce certain of its troops and weaponry if the idea of a Nordic Nuclear Weapons-Free Zone [NFZ] is realized.

The Soviet president, Leonid Brezhnev, earlier made a statement to this effect to the Finnish newspaper SUOMEN SOSIALIDEMIKRAATTI. In an interview published by the paper on 26 June Mr Brezhnev said that in connection with a possible Nordic NFZ the Soviet Union may be prepared to consider certain measures in its own territory in the regions bordering on such a zone. Mr Brezhnev reiterated that a Nordic NFZ must be seen as a part of the relations between East and West and must therefore be implemented in a wider context.

GOVERNMENT, PARTY LEADERS DISCUSS SECURITY ISSUES

Prime Minister Brundtland

PM090951 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 25 Jun 81 p 3

[Morten Fyhn report: "Concrete Plan Not Set"]

[Text] Active Norwegian efforts on the international scene to increase security in the Nordic countries.

Thorough preparations are necessary for possible future Norwegian initiatives.

Unilateral establishment of a nuclear-free zone is not likely.

Norway's relationship with NATO will not be altered.

Superpower guarantees must involve a concrete reduction in the threat to the Nordic countries.

Norway wants to maintain close ties with its allies and the Nordic countries.

This was how Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland set out the main points in the Labor Party's view of how it would be possible to implement the section of its manifesto concerning a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries, if the party retains government power after the election.

"It is wrong to speak of lack of clarity in connection with our manifesto proposals," the prime minister said in an interview with AFTENPOSTEN. She stressed that the work for a Nordic zone will form a part of the work to reduce nuclear arms in the larger European context. There is no suggestion of a unilateral or independent Norwegian or Nordic initiative.

"We have consciously tried to formulate the proposals as flexibly as possible. It would not do to draw up a fixed outline in such a complicated matter as disarmament. We must see it in an overall East-West context involving an accomodating spirit and reciprocity. This is a long process which could take time. Norway must pursue the matter on different levels and see where it is possible to contribute ideas. This requires active involvement. But it also requires preparatory work to see where is it possible to take initiatives within the confines of Norwegian foreign policy," the prime minister said.

She stressed that there are no concrete plans at present. Only after a possible election victory will the Labor Party give more concrete consideration to the possibilities of furthering its intentions to increase security in the Nordic countries through achieving a real reduction in the nuclear threat.

[Question] But is it so odd that many people have asked the question whether. for example, the Soviet nuclear arms on the Kola Peninsula or in the Baltic area should be included in a zone?

[Answer] The debate so far has been odd. It is irrelevant to a x such questions about the Kola Peninsula. We are here dealing both with geography and arms technology. We cannot let it appear that there are simple answers to complicated questions. The answer to the question of the nuclear arms on the Kola Peninsula is a clear "yes," but we do not require that the Kola Peninsula should form part of the zone's geographic area. On the other hand, the zone must have an effect on the Kola Peninsula. We must look at the connection between the zone and what is threatening it. It is in out interests to reduce the threat to the Nordic countries by having the nuclear arms removed which through their range and base areas directly threaten us. The long-range strategic arms are a part of the superpowers' strategy and must be considered here. [End of answer]

The prime minister attached great importance to the fact that a zone in the Nordic area must be seen in the context of the work for real control and reduction of nuclear arms both in the East and the West. For this reason, Norway is very interested in the talks and negotiations on these arms taking place between the superpowers and which form part of the Vienna negotiations for troop reductions in Europe. Norway is also working for a conference on disarmament in Europe in connection with the CSCE meeting in Madrid. In addition, Norway is attaching great importance to next year's special UN session on disarmament.

The prime minister did not hide the fact that she thinks there have been misleading and distorting newspaper articles about what the Labor Party actually means by a nuclear-free zone. She wanted to reject, for example, a report in AFTENPOSTEN in connection with her visit to Helsinki at the beginning of June which had the title "Norwegian Zone Demarche Outside of NATO."

"There is absolutely no basis for hinting at a demarche outside NATO," the prime minister stated. She wanted to emphasize that Norway would of course consult its allies about the concrete plans for following up the draft proposals in the party's manifesto. "The shape of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area would not be such that it would change Norway's security policy foundations," she said.

"Norway will behave responsibly. We will not sow doubts about Norway's security policy, and the other Nordic countries also attach great importance to maintaining their security policy positions. But within the framework imposed on us by the alliance policy, we will take initiatives to meet and solve problems adn the rest of Europe will be facing in the eighties," Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland said.

[Question] The United States, West Germany and NATO's military leadership have all expressed skepticism over the plans for a zone. What is your view of this?

[Answer] I am not surprised by skepticism and question marks, especially during the phase earlier this winter when we had a comprehensive debate on this difficult question.

[Question] What faith do you have in possible future Soviet guarantees in connection with a zone?

[Answer] The guarantees cannot only be verbal. They must also lead to a reduction in practice of the threat to our part of the world. We need a stregthening of the international guarantees to the nonnuclear states under the terms of the nuclear arms nonproliteration agreement. Norway is giving its support to this in the work prior to the special UN disarmament session.

Foreign Minister Frydenlund

PM031134 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 27 Jun 81 p 8

[Text] Neither Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund nor Conservative Party parliamentary leader Kaare Willoch was surprised to hear that President Leonid Brezhnev supports the plan for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries.

"Unfortunately, there is no reason to expect that the Soviet Union would agree to the inclusion of a significant section of its territory in a nuclear-free zone, even if Brezhnev declares there are openings for 'discussions on other questions affecting Soviet territories,'" Willochtold AFTENPOSTEN. Frydenlund said that what could be new in Brezhnev's interview with the Finnish newpaper is that arrangements could be made to include nuclear arms on Soviet territory. Knut Frydenlund stressed that a nuclear-free zone must be based on reciprocal measures. "The main idea behind our proposal is that it not be a unilateral Nordic arrangement, such as some people are advocating, but there must be reciprocal arrangements surrounding a Nordic nuclear-free zone as one phase in a larger and more comprehensive arrangement to reduce the nuclear threat to Nordic territory," the foreign minister said.

Kaare Willoch recalled that the plan for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is a Soviet plan, originally put forward by Nikita Khrushchev in 1959. The official Soviet newspaper IZVESTIYA wrote at the time that "the establishment of a nuclear-and missile-free zone in the Nordic countries could be the first stage in the transition of all the Nordic countries to neutral status."

"What the Soviet Union is offering in return is a guarantee that it would not use nuclear arms against us. But the Soviet Union has already broken so many promises not to use weapons against neighbors that such a guarantee cannot give any increase in security. On the other hand, we must be prepared for the possibility that a future treaty with the Soviet Union covering the Nordic countries' and Norway's nuclear-free status could later be used as a foundation for action against Norway under cover of incorrect claims that we are making preparations to break the treaty. I remember that the Soviet Union has already claimed that the agreement on the contingency stockpiling of allied defense material in Norway is not compatible with a nuclear-free zone," the Conservative Party parliamentary leader said, pointing out: "The plan would not strengthen Norway's security, but rather weaken it. Norway's security must be improved through agreements limiting the Soviet Union's nuclear forces."

Defense Minister Stoltenberg

PM131457 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 22 Jun 81 p 7

[Text] At the Norwegian Defense Association national conference on Sunday, Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg said that the regular consultations which Social Democratic parties in the smaller NATO nations have begun do not represent any danger to NATO cooperation.

"These meetings have turned out to be extemely useful and increase the possibility of making a contribution to NATO consultations," Stoltenberg said, pointing out that the large NATO nations are in close and frequent contact about the international situation.

Stoltenberg stressed that there are today large groups with both interest and insight into defense and security policy. This leads to debate which serves the defense forces well, he said, but it also makes great demands on the defense forces' own people. The fact that debate on such questions is no longer reserved to a few politicians and researchers requires a completely different style in the public debate about our foreign and security policy from the style required in the fifties and at the beginning of the seventies, he said.

Defense Minister Stoltenberg said that stability and unity surrounding important foreign and security policy questions must be created through sober argument, and not through bombastic slogans.

The Defense Association national conference at Gardermoen-Trandum elected the following executive committee: Provincial Commissioner Alf Jacob Fostervoll as new chairman. The other members of the committee are Director Per Bergsland, Storting Deputy Geirmund Ihle, Mrs Kjellaug Skogen and Lektor Jon Skard.

Centrist Leader Jakobsen

PM061015 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 29 Jun 81 p 19

[Excerpt] "An isolated Nordic zone is an irresponsible policy which is out of the question. If anything, this should be even more clear now that Brezhnev no longer dismisses the suggestion to include Soviet territory and nuclear arms in a nuclear-free zone," Norwegian Center Party Chairman Johan J. Jakobsen has said.

He pointed to the party's program, which states that disarmament must be based on reciprocity. The Center Party's view is that Norway must act on the basis of a common NATO strategy.

Jakobsen takes a positive view of the popular involvement expressed through the peace march, but criticized the slogans and declarations which have been made, because these aim at unilateral Western disarmament.

LEADERS BRIEFED ON ARMS TALKS BY FRG'S BAHR

PM141201 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 29 Jun 81 p 8

[Text] "A nuclear-free zone from the Urals to Portugal is a dream which has nothing to do with reality," Egon Bahr, former general secretary and a leading defense expert of the West German SPD, said in an interview with Norwegian journalists on Sunday [28 June]

Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund said that together with Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland, Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg, Church and Education Minister Einar Forde and former Trade Minister Reiulf Steen, he had been briefed by Bahr on the preparations for negotiations with the Soviet Union on nuclear arms in Europe.

"The Soviet Union is a nuclear power and a superpower with worldwide interests and commitments. The Russians will not be prepared to accept the removal of nuclear arms from the European part of the Soviet Union in the foreseeable future. Soviet arms systems must be included in a possible future Nordic nuclear-free zone--if not there would be an imbalance," Bahr said.

But a Nordic nuclear-free zone might be possible under very special security arrangements between the superpowers. "A nuclear-free zone would then have a certain usefulness not only for the Nordic countries, but also for the rest of Europe," he said.

"If a situation developed where the two superpowers were on a collision course, it would be beneficial if the superpowers agreed that a part of Europe would be excluded from the nuclear arms race. A Nordic nuclear-free zone could then be of some interest in the total international context," he said.

Egon Bahr's Oslo visit was part of a round of meetings between social democratic parties in the NATO nations, following his meeting with Soviet leaders in Moscow in mid-June. Bahr will also brief his party chairman Willy Brandt before the latter travels to Moscow on Thursday [2 July].

During the interview, Bahr said that in his view the Soviet leaders are convinced that NATO is serious about the so-called dual decision reached in Brussels in December 1979--the deployment of Pershing II and cruise missiles after 1983 unless negotiations with the Soviet Union lead to the reestablishment of the nuclear balance in Europe.

"The Soviet leaders are, therefore, facing up not only to the possibility, but also the probability that new--and let me say excellent--U.S. missiles will be deployed at the end of 1983 or the beginning of 1974. The Soviet leaders accept this as a fact."

I have not the slightest doubts that the Soviet Union will come to the negotiating table as quickly as possible and engage in serious negotiation. The Soviet leaders want to reach real results, that is, an agreement which will give nuclear balance in Europe," Bahr said.

"There is no change in the Soviet leaders' view of developments in Poland. The Soviet leaders hope that the Poles will be able to solve their problems without this affecting Poland's place in the Warsaw Pact system. We have exactly the same view and I hope that the Soviet Union will adhere to its present approach."

SWEDEN

DEFENSE COMMITTEE GROUP PROPOSES STAFF CUTS

PM151530 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 26 Jun 81 p 7

[Haakan Bergstroem report: "Hundreds of Jobs To Go in Headquarters Staffs"]

[Text] Disband the Bergslagen military district and in the process cut the number of military districts in Sweden from six to five. Around 100 jobs in the headquarters staff and administration would thus disappear from Karlstad and Kristinehamn. However, the artillery officers college at Jonkoping would be moved to Kristinehamn.

This was the only new proposal on which the so-called "death patrol"--five politicians who within the framework of the Defense Committee are to propose military cuts and savings--agreed on Thursday [25 June]

The provinces of Varmland, Oerebro and Kopparberg all belong to the Bergslagen military district, and in the future the three provinces would be assigned to other military districts, according to the politicians' proposals. Moderate Coalition Party Riksdag Deputy Per Petersson expressed his reservations at the proposal.

The Defense Committee politicians also proposed that S 2 in Karlsborg, P 2 in Hassleholm, A 6 in Joenkoping, T 1 in Linkoping, F 16 in Malmslatt and F 18 in Tullige should be disbanded. These proposals harmonize well with those presented by Swedish Commander in Chief Lennart Ljung in May.

As far as the cities affected are concerned, the proposals will mean personnel reductions of 250 men in Haessleholm, 300 in Jonkoping, 180 in Linkoping and 200 in Malmslatt.

As far as Karlsborg is concerned, either K 3 in Skovde or K 1 in Stockholm will be moved there to compensate for the disappearance of E 2.

The commander in chief proposed that K 1 be moved to Kungsangen north of Stockholm, but the "death patrol" also wants to have a move to Karlsborg investigated.

Defense politicians also hope that it will be possible to compensate for the lost jobs in Tullinge in Botkyrka municipality, which will lose F 18. Solna municipality is interested in losing its recruitment area office so that houses can be build on the site. This means that it would then be possible to move the office to Tullinge.

A question still hanging in the air is the closure of units within the coastal artillery. The commander in chief proposed disbanding KA 5 in Haronosand. But the "death patrol" wants to avoid such a closure because of the unemployment problems in the area.

The commander in chief also proposed the closure of I 3 in Oerebro. The politicians says that the closure of I 13 in Falun should be considered instead. The regiment in Falun will have to make large investments to continue its activities effectively. For this reason, it would perhaps make greater economic sense to close the Falun regiment.

Local authorities affected will now have the opportunity to give their views on the proposals from the "death patrol". The politicians will make further proposals for cuts at the end of September. The target is that 2.5 billion kronor should be saved over 10 years simply through regiment closures. A further 5 billion kronor are to be saved through cuts in central administration and other rationalization.

DISI STATEMENT ON NATIONAL COUNCIL PARTICIPATION

NC151814 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] The Democratic Rally [DISI] has announced that it decided to accept the party's participation in the forthcoming National Council sessions because of the serious decisions that it would soon have to make on our national problems. The statement added that this decision was taken today at a special session of the party's political committee under the presidency of the party chairman, Kliridhis. The meeting examined the issue that has arisen following the president of the republic's invitation for DISI's participation in the National Council. The statement further added that DISI's permanent participation in the National Council will depend on the harmonious, constructive and effective operation of the body. For this reason, DISI intends to submit specific suggestions.

HOUSE OBSERVES 1974 COUP, INVASION ANNIVERSARY

NC150956 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Excerpts] The House of Representatives convened in a special session today during which it condemned the 1974 treacherous coup and the barbarous Turkish invasion. It also paid tribute to those who fell in fighting for democracy and liberty in Cyprus. At the beginning of the session, the House observed a 1-minute silence in memory of all those who stood up courageously and whose blood watered the tree of democratic ideals as well as in memory of those youths who, betrayed and abandoned by all, thrust their bodies against the foreign invader and whose blood nourished the tree of Cyprus freedom.

During the session, House President Ladhas' speech called on everybody to forget the evil past and unite in an attempt to save the country. He also urged everyone to rally around the elected leadership and try to cope with the difficult conditions which foreign interests and antagonism create for us. Mr Ladhas stressed that all healthy patriotic, democratic forces of the country have their place in the struggle being waged by Cyprus for the existence of Cypriot Hellenism in the country of their forefathers.

AKEL General Secretary Papaionnou said that the leaders of the coup d'etat must be punished for reasons of fundamental security for Cyprus and that the dossier of Cypriot treason must be opened. On the intercommunal talks, Papaioannou said that if Turkish intransigence continues, there is no other choice but to appeal to this year's UN General Assembly and Security Council to demand the adoption of more decisive measures for a peaceful and democratic solution. He also invited the Turkish Cypriots to a joint struggle for the withdrawal of the Turkish occupation troops and all foreign troops from Cyprus, dissolution of bases and the conversion of Cyprus into a center of peace, friendship and cooperation for all people in the area.

Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis said that unity constitutes an essential prerequisite for the successful outcome of the Cypriot people's struggle.

The salvation of Cyprus is our common goal, he said, and to accomplish this target it is imperative that the attention of political leadership and people concentrate on finding an effective way for an early and substantive overthrow of the faits accomplis created by the Turkish invasion. Kliridhis added that the de facto situation caused by the Turkish invasion will never be accepted and the Cypriot people's struggle will continue until vindication. Finally, Kliridhis said that the Democratic Rally Party supports the opening of the Cypriot dossier so that the full truth emerges.

Democratic Party parliamentary spokesman Galanos said that Cypriot Hellenism has not recognized nor will it recognize the results of invasion and occupation or legalize partition or faits accomplis. We will struggle, he added, for an honest settlement on the basis of UN resolutions and the summit agreements where it is possible to find the framework for the solution as charted by late Ethnarch Makarios--the concept of historic compromise for the salvation of Cyprus.

EDEK Chairman Lissaridhis stressed that, if we really honor the sacrifice of those who fell fighting against the coupists and invaders, we must define a course to vindicate that sacrifice. We must charter a wise, realistic, militant course that does not strike at homelands and rights, does not tolerate fascism, bridgeheads of foreign occupation. Lissaridhis said that the opening of the Cyprus dossier mustbe persistently demanded so that the Cypriot people as well as all of Hellenism may know the real culprits.

Declaring the House session closed, Mr Ladhas expressed satisfaction because all benches of the House rejected the occupation faits accomplis and declared perseverance in the struggle for finding a just Cyprus solution that would be based on a free, independent, demilitarized and nonaligned Cyprus, whose internal structure would take the form of a true federation in which all citizens can be equal and enjoy the fruits of freedom and justice in a free and democratic state.

AKEL SENDS GREETINGS TO NINTH POLISH PARTY CONGRESS

NC160800 Nicosia KHARAVYI in Greek 16 Jul 81 pp 1, 7

[Cable from AKEL General Secretary Ezekias Papaioannou to the Ninth PZPR Extraordinary Congress; date not given]

[Excerpts] Dear Comrades: The AKEL Central Committee addresses to you and through you to your party's Ninth Extraordinary Congress warm fraternal greetings of solidarity and best wishes for great successes in its work.

AKEL is following with great interest and deep concern the events in your country and the complicated and multifaceted difficulties in building socialism, caused partly by grave mistakes and violations of the laws, committed by the previous party leadership. These difficulties have been aggravated by the subversive activities of local antisocialist, antirevolutionary forces and imperialism, creating anarchy and chaos and thus escalating the crisis to the greatest extent.

Imperialism and reaction throughout the world--including Cyprus--are exploiting the difficulties in Poland to defame the communist parties and socialism, undermine the socialist system in Poland and restore capitalism with all its repercussions for international communism, liberation movements and world peace.

Both friends and enemies of Poland are watching your struggle.

Appreciating the results of your 11th plenum and the practical measures for the defense of the party and state--which have already started to be implemented--the Cypriot communists expect the ninth congress to give new impetus to the struggle for the defense of socialism and its further improvement.

This would be a great service to your people, to the international communist movement and the cause of the world anti-imperialist struggle for peace, independence and socialism.

Long live the unity of the international communist movement on the basis of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

Long live socialism and peace.

HUNGARY'S LAZAR ENDS VISIT; JOINT COMMUNIQUE ISSUED

NC151956 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Hungary's Premier Lazar departed this evening at 2000 to return to his country. In the morning, Lazar was received by President of the Republic Karamanlis and subsequently concluded his talks with Prime Minister Rallis. Lazar was seen off at Ellinikon Airport by the prime minister. At noon, the Hungarian premier attended a luncheon that was given in his honor by Deputy Prime Minister and National Defense Minister Averof.

In a joint communique that was issued after the conclusion of the Greek-Hungarian talks, it was stressed that the two parties underscored the significance of summit meetings for the development of bilateral relations and reaffirmed their desire to continue developing their relations. The communique stressed that rallis and Lazar noted with satisfaction the progress that has taken place in the development of relations between the two countries and reaffirmed their determination to continue in the future permanent relations of good neighborliness, friendship and cooperation on the basis of the principles of independence, sovereignty, nonintervention in internal affairs, equality of law and mutual interest.

Special attention was paid to economic relations. It was confirmed with satisfaction that the Greek-Hungarian agreement that was signed last year for the development of economic, industrial and technical cooperation can constitute an effective organ for the further development of cooperation in all sectors. The two premiers reviewed current international problems and confirmed with satisfaction that their viewpoints on many issues are identical or very similar. At the same time, they expressed deep uneasiness over the aggravation of international tension, and stressed the significance of efforts that aim at guaranteeing peace, decelerating the arms race and effecting disarmament.

Rallis and Lazar noted the necessity for the complete implementation of the Final Act of the Conference for Security and Cooperation in Europe. The two premiers expressed the hope that balanced and constructive decisions will be made at the Madrid meeting toward developing cooperation and strengthening European security. They also supported the adoption of a specific resolution for the convening of a conference on disarmament in Europe whose purpose will be to take practical measures.

They also expressed uneasiness over the dangers posed by the continuation of the arms race and supported complete disarmament, both in the conventional and the nuclear sectors, under strict international control.

The joint communique also mentioned that the two parties are uneasy over the situation in the Middle East and support a just and permanent solution on the basis of Israel's complete withdrawal from all Arab lands. They also recognize the rights of the Palestinian Arab people for self-determination, establishment of a state and of the right of all countries in the area to live peacefully.

On the situation in Cyprus, the two parties agreed that it constitutes a threat to peace and security in the area and expressed the hope that the intercommunal talks under the auspices of the UN secretary general will have positive results. Both Greece and Hungary supported a just and permanent solution on the basis of respect for the independence, territorial integrity, sovereignty and nonalignment of the Cyprus Republic and of the relevant UN resolutions.

Finally, the joint communique mentioned that Lazar invited Rallis to pay an official visit to Hungary. The invitation was accepted with pleasure.

RALLIS, AVEROF, EVERT ATTACK PASOK POLICIES

NC142002 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 14 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] New Democracy will have a momentous victory in the forthcoming election. This belief was proclaimed by Prime Minister Rallis in yesterday's exclusive interview (with the newspaper VRADHINI) that was the culmination of a politically over burdened weekend. In this interview the prime minister severely criticized PASOK's options both with respect to its foreign policy and its political-ideological orientation on issues of domestic policy. From this viewpoint, the prime minister's observations constitute a reply to PASOK's policy declaration.

At the same time, Deputy Prime Minister Evangelos Averof also attacked PASOK's positions. Finance Minister Miltiadhis Evert launched an attack against PASOK in an interview in Sunday's AKROPOLIS. This coordinated New Democracy offensive is expected to continue because PASOK Chairman Papandreou, on his return from West Germany Saturday, admitted at Ellinikon Airport that the positions he supports today differ from those he supported in 1974. He attributed this difference to the fact that at that time PASOK was declaring its political strategy while today, in claiming authority, it explains the tactics it will follow within the framework of its strategic goals.

The Rallis Interview

Prime Minister Rallis underlined that the critical character of the next election is centered on this fact: To date, authority was claimed by strong parties dedicated to the bourgeois regime. This time, in seeking authority, PASOK declares it will change the social-economic regime into a Marxist-Socialist regime. Apart from the economic measures (socialization of business, nationalization of the import and export trade and others) he will give the party a leading role and "its groups will undertake to represent the people in the formulation of social and economic policy until such time as a socialist reformation takes place." This is contrary to the actions of other socialist governments in France and Germany. It is, therefore, obvious that the voter will not have to choose between parties but between social and economic systems. Such a change would not be for only 4 years but for perpetuity.

Rallis then stressed: "It is, therefore, the duty of New Democracy leading personalities to explain that this sugared sweet of 'change' is a very bitter pill wrapped up in very little sugar. This is the analysis we will systematically undertake until the election."

The prime minister also denounced PASOK because the policy it has announced dangers the independence and integrity of the country. He underlined that the dangers stem from PASOK's position of "out of the EEC" and "out of NATO." No speical agreement, such as the one pursued by PASOK, can guarantee the advantages we are already enjoying within the EEC. A possible Greek withdrawal from NATO would diminish the importance of Greece and make Turkey the only support of the West in the area. Such an act, in conjunction with the severance of the dialogue with Turkey--which Papandreou supports insistently--creates the danger of a military adventure under the most difficult of conditions. PASOK's policy on the questions of the EEC and NATO as well as on the question of the Soviet SS-20 missiles is contrary to that of French President Mitterrand.

Rallis then referred to a series of figures on the export of agricultural goods, 60 percent of which are directed toward EEC countries, a market that would close if he withdrew from the Community. Had we not joined the EEC--and this is a fact on which the opposition maintains silence--our products would not have been allowed in since they would have been available with increased tariffs while similar Spanish and Portuguese products would be circulating freely within a few years.

Apart from this free circulation of our products, which we have guaranteed through accession to the EEC, the Community also offers the Greek farmer very important aid which, in its various forms, amounts to 12 percent of the state budget.

The prime minister then criticized PASOK's tactics as slanderous and stressed that he is determined to fight it directly. He also underlined his belief that the president of the republic will remain above politics and added that if rumors to the contrary have been circulated (that Karamanlis favors PASOK), these rumors only demonstrate the inane character of those who circulate them.

Rallis also referred to the favorable prospects for our economy's development and stressed the new goals set by New Democracy in its policy statement, goals ratified by a democratic process during its recent special congress.

The prime minister also severely criticized PASOK for its stark exploitation of the youth.

E. Averof: A Mosaic of Indefinite Statements

In his article, Deputy Prime Minister E. Averof replied to the first part of PASOK's policy statement, which he described as "a mosaic made up of indefinite statements and promises which are beyond any reality." He then stressed that:

--With its policy statement PASOK attempts, in a most unholy way and "in the name of the vision for change," the most stark falsification of everything that has been "won in this country through sweat and blood."

--This policy statement "does not include a single specific measure that could prove that this party is in a position to administer the country responsibly."

Averof criticized PASOK and A. Papandreou personally for their positions on the EEC and NATO as well as for their economic policy and stressed:

"Ignoring reality and economic facts, PASOK, being enslaved within its ideological dead end, attempts to imprison the business acumen of the race within bureaucratic molds and to make the large-scale import and export trade the object of exploitation by public enterprises in accordance with the most stark bureaucratic models of the totalitarian states."

The government's deputy prime minister then stressed that "the vision of change (of PASOK) could become a nightmare for the entire country." He also stressed that the entire text of PASOK's policy statement does not once mention the word "Marxism" and recalled PASOK's statement that "byond any doubt we are a Marxist party," in order to call upon this party of the official opposition to clarify its ideological identity.

M. Evert

In his interview, Finance Minister Miltiadhis Evert primarily referred to the goals of New Democracy in the implementation of its economic policy. Answering a question on PASOK's policy declaration, however, he stated:

"The more I read it the less I understand it. It combines a paucity of ideas with an ignorance of facts. Political and economic programs must not be a collection of aphorisms and vague wishes. They must be plans of clear strategy and clear goals. I wonder whether it would be better for New Democracy to spend the money to reprint and distribute PASOK's policy statement so that the Greek people may understand the difference between words by PASOK and actions by New Democracy. One can deduce from its program that PASOK uses its own arithmetic: It gives little to very few people; it subtracts much from man; it multiplies problems and distributes poverty."

PART TWO OF PASOK GOVERNMENT POLICY DECLARATION

NC131300 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 12 Jul 81 pp 7, 8

[Part two of PASOK declaration of government policy, sections one and two, headlined "The Course Is Not a Flower-Strewn Path But It Is Possible;" date not given; passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] Section One--For independence, national defence, world peace, international cooperation.

A--OUR NATIONAL ISSUES

47. The unilateral and onesided policy of dependence pursued by the rightwing as well as the tactics of continual concessions and fluctuations have led our national issues into a dead end and to the ceding of sovereign rights.

PASOK will pursue a radically different policy in dealing with the national issues which cannot be postponed and which need firmness. This policy will be based upon the defensive arming of the country and upon a genuine independent multifaceted foreign policy. Individual steps toward achieving the irrevocable strategic goals will always bear in mind the arms requirements of the armed forces of our country as well as the development of the balance of power in the international area and specifically in our own area.

48. Our basic strategic orientation consists of the dissolution of both the cold war blocs: NATO and the Warsaw Pact. We place our country's withdrawal from the Atlantic alliance within our strategy.

However, over and above the question of principle we also have the nature of the Atlantic alliance and the peculiar relationship of our country with the alliance. We are the only country--a member of the alliance--which is being threatened by another member. The alliance is incapable (because it does not want to) to guarantee our frontiers against the Turkish threat. The exact opposite applies. The Turkish Armed Forces are being armed and strengthened while at the same time Turkish claims in the Aegean as well as its violations increase dangerously.

Over and above this peculiar position of Greece within the alliance, we also have the recent bitter experiences which the alliance has amassed for the people: The royal coup of 1965; the 7-year dictatorship, and the Attila in Cyprus.

In respect to our country's defense:

A) NATO refuses to guarantee our "eastern" frontiers.
B) At the same time, the disposition and preparedness of our armed forces is directed toward confrontation with the Warsaw Pact--and not toward the existing Turkish threat in the Aegean.
C) Within NATO there is a possibility of information leaks toward Turkey.
D) Even in the totally imaginary situation of the "danger from the north"--a nonexistent danger as admitted by the minister of national defense himself--there is no automatic process of intervention through the grant of assistance nor any guarantee about the supply of such assistance. Such intervention is left to the discretion of the members of the alliance.

Despite all this, the government of the rightwing proceeded to the signing of the reintegration agreement (Rogers) for our return to the military wing of NATO--with Attila always in Cyprus--which presupposes concessions to Turkey on inviolable national sovereign rights in the Aegean and the acceptance of virtual joint control with NATO over our airspace.

PASOK has already stated it will bring the Rogers agreement to the Chamber of Deputies for its aborgation. At the same time PASOK will proceed with the removal of NATO nuclear warheads situated in our country.

In conclusion, our armed forces will be placed under exclusive national control even if only in order to deal with the threat "from the east."

Concerning the general measures to be adopted by PASOK for the implementation of its national defense policy, all repercussions affecting the battle worthiness of our armed forces will be borne in mind. With no measure and in no eventuality will PASOK permit any decrease in the preparedness of our country's armed forces in respect of defense against a foreign imposition.

49. Foreign bases have no place in our country, because they oppose our national independence, because they do not offer themselves to our country's defense in a limited local war, and because in case of a world clash they will lead to a holocaust. At the same time, surveillance bases could be used to Turkey's benefit, while operational bases (Souda, Ellinikon) could become attack centers for an offensive against third countries with which Greece maintains excellent relations.

In conclusion, the very existence of the bases creates a direct interest by this foreign power in our country's domestic affairs, while it also creates large-scale social, economic and cultural disturbances and upheavals in the geographic areas in which the bases are located.

PASOK recognizes that in the process of withdrawal of the bases there will be a transition period which we describe as compartmentalization. This, primarily, means a separation of these bases from the national defense planning process.

For as long as these bases remain on our territory--within a specific timetable for the withdrawal of these bases--there will be guaranteed prerequisites that their operation will not be against our country's foreign policy and that it will not harm national interest. It is understood that the Greek Government will maintain the right to stop any activity or activities of these bases which do not fulfill the above conditions as well as the right to abrogate the timetable and to demand immediate withdrawal of these bases whenever national interest dictates.

50. The handling of the Aegean crisis cannot stand hesitations and backsliding. It must be made clear both to Turkey and to NATO that our land, sea and air boundaries as well as the limits of the Greek continental shelf in the Aegean are not negotiable. These boundaries of our fatherland were won with blood and sacrifices and are today guaranteed under international treaties and agreements.

Dialogue with Turkey has a meaning only insofar as it does not deal with concessions of inviolable national sovereign rights. We ask absolutely nothing from Turkey. We only want friendly relations between the two nations, but we are not going to cede one handful of territory. Peace in the Aegean cannot be guaranteed with continued stages of concessions in face of Turkish expansionism. Such a policy only encourages the political-military leadership in Turkey and opens the way to a military confrontation between the two countries.

51. For the Greek nation, Cyprus is a first priority issue. At the same time, it is a critical international issue--because the military occupation of a large portion of the independent and nonaligned state, a member of the United Nations, continues. Greece, however, as a guarantor power also has the legal right as well as the duty to actively support the struggle of the Cypriot people for the withdrawal of foreign troops and bases, for the return of refugees to their homes, for guaranteeing the right of free settlement and movement, for the drafting of a constitutional charter which will, on the one hand, guarantee the unity of the Republic of Cyprus and will, at the same time, provide equal rights and equal responsibilities for all its citizens--both the Greek and the Turkish Cypriots.

The continually-repeated reference, by the New Democracy governments, to the principle that "Cyprus decides and Greece supports," is an unacceptable alibi of the rightwing in its virtual abandonment of the sacred cause of Cyprus. PASOK's government will start a crusade in order to inform world public opinion and in order to mobilize, on an international scale, all the forces which are in a position to contribute toward promotion of a just solution to the Cyprus problem.

The intercommunal talks in Cyprus under UN auspices have a meaning only in what concerns the shaping of the new constitutional charter of the Cyprus Republic, and they can be fruitful only after the withdrawal of the foreign troops from the Megalonisos [Cyprus]. Under present conditions, the talks are leading only toward the stalemate of the Cyprus issue and the final recognition of the de facto partition of Cyprus. This is so because the interlocutors are, on the one side, the Government of Cyprus and, on the other side, Ankara (not the Turkish Cypriot community), whose primary negotiating weapon is the occupation troops.

The PASOK government will not accept any solution that would constitute recognition of the faits accomplis, but it will support with all its strength the struggle of Cypriot Hellenism for national survival. At the same time, the PASOK government will proceed without any delay to the opening of the Cyprus dossier so that the Greek and Cypriot people may at last be informed who are responsible for the Cyprus tragedy.

B--THE NATIONAL DEFENSE POLICY

52. The national defense policy presupposes constant improvement of the armed forces preparedness, modern arms and their correct array.

Defense expenditures have absolute priority. Their correct distribution and a more rational utilization of appropriations are absolutely correlated with the need for modernization and the gradual differentiation of the arms sources so that there will not be one-sided dependency.

At the same time, we will wage the battle for the development of a modern Greek war industry by utilizing the most advanced technology. A fundamental mainstay would be the development of the industrial field in general and of applied research, particularly in matters concerning electronic systems.

The Hellenization of the state has, as its primary concern, the armed forces, information services, and the security forces that should be protected from any infiltration by a foreign element. The armed forces that are shouldering the main burden of defense have extensively realized where Greek interests lie. The tragic experience from the foreign-motivated dictatorship and its outcome, the tragedy of Cyprus and Turkey's provocation have eliminated any possibility for being mislead. The people's fraternization with their conscripted children will constitute our incessant care as well as the primary mainstay of the national defense policy.

C--THE INDEPENDENT FOREIGN POLICY--A POLICY OF PEACE

53. Foreign policy is of decisive importance for the country's future. It affects the conditions and possibilities of our domestic development and determines the degree of our national independence. The extent to which political and economic options from foreign decision centers influence our foreign policy will affect the freedom and prosperity of the Greek people.

The time has come to proceed with the formulation of a new Greek foreign policy. This is necessary for the survival of the nation. The bases for PASOK's foreign policy are:

A) Greece is a country that simultaneously belongs to Europe, the Balkans and the Mediterranean, and it should make its presence felt in all three of these areas.

B) The integration of European countries into adversary military blocs, the U.S. presence at the Soviet borders, the installation of Euromissiles in Europe, the presence of the superpowers' navies in the Mediterranean, the continuation of armaments and the storing of nuclear weapons in the Balkans and the Mediterranean, the tension in the Middle East and the competition between the United States and the Soviet Union to secure spheres of influence all create a critical situation harboring local strifes and entailing the danger of a regional or even general conflict.

54. The independent Greek foreign policy is not a policy of isolation. It is an active and dynamic policy that will create the complex of international interconnections which will guarantee the territorial integrity and independence of the country as well as serve its interests. It is a policy of realism; no obligation must be undertaken without conditions which will make liberation from such obligations possible at a time when such obligations cease to serve the national interests. Every alliance or obligation in the international sphere must be based upon the principle of equality and mutual respect between states. Pressures and extortion are unacceptable.

There may be such historic conditions that will force our country to ally itself defensively with other countries. If such an alliance truly contributes toward national independence and the defense of territorial integrity, if it is truly a defense coalition, and if no country attempts to enforce its own policy, then PASOK will be prepared to examine such an eventuality.

55. The country's foreign policy must be based upon the principles of peaceful solution of international differences, of strengthening international peace and the development of relations of friendship and cooperation with all countries. It is for this reason that PASOK is in principle against every military alliance or coalition which:

A) Could possible be turned against peace and the self-determination of nations.
B) Could lead to world polarization, particularly in the European and Mediterranean areas.

Greece will contribute in every possible way to the dissolution of coalitions that divide the world and Europe. We are actively in solidarity with all peoples who fight for their national independence and against imperialism. We promote peace, both in our own area and on an international scale in full relationship with the cause of national independence.

In this context PASOK firmly supports the struggle of the Palestinians for their return to their fatherland in a peaceful Middle East free of foreign interventions. It will support every liberation movement which fights against colonial or racist regimes.

It condemns the open U.S. promotion and support of dictatorial militarist and oppressive regimes like those of Turkey and Latin America as well as interventions in domestic affairs of other countries under any excuse or in any form.

For the very same reasons, PASOK unhesitatingly condemned the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. We further support Poland, which has the right to proceed alone toward overcoming any of its own problems and to proceed along the course forged by the responsible government and parliament of its own people.

56. We will proceed toward a new orientation of European and Mediterranean policy on the basis of the following principles:

1. Europe is integral; it is not made up exclusively of the countries of the Common Market but also of those that do not participate in it (for example, Austria, Sweden, Norway and Switzerland) as well as those of Eastern Europe. European policy must deal with all the European countries and must not lead to division of the European area.

2. Close cooperation between the European states is dictated by a common cultural past, by joint economic and social interests.

3. European policy must not be aimed at the creation of a new superpower. Its goal must be a general reformation which will lead to the creation of a confederated Europe. A people's Europe, a confederated Europe, which will incorporate both Western and Eastern states is a desirable but very distant vision.

It is, however, encouraging that recently there are certain positive developments in the policy of states within the military coalitions of the two superpowers. Many European states take a position or initiatives with lesser or greater important deviations from the line of the political-military blocs. Within this framework, there is greater stress on arms limitation in the reactions expressed within the Western states against plans for the installation of new nuclear weapons on their territories. These reactions are the result of evaluations that these new weapons increase the possibilities that Europe will not only be the main but perhaps the only victim of a possible nuclear war.

The Balkan and Mediterranean areas are particularly important for our country's economic and social development. The PASOK government will actively promote Balkan cooperation and the strengthening of relations with the Mediterranean countries.

In particular--In the Mediterranean area it is necessary that:

A) The foreign fleets and all the nuclear weapons in general must be removed and the littoral countries must rid themselves of political-military blocs.

B) Investment programs and trade policy must be coordinated, there must be a united stand against the activity of international organizations which support the domination of Western monopolistic capitalism, and there must be a unitary position at the negotiations with industrial capitalist countries within the framework of the "North-South dialogue."

C) A common research center should be established for the development of technology that would serve the needs of the Mediterranean people.

In the Balkan area the following long-term goals must be pursued:

A) All foreign troops and bases must be removed, a nuclear-free and missile-free zone must be established, there should be disengagement from political-military blocs.
B) Political, economic and cultural relations should be expanded with the aim of establishing institutions that would secure lasting cooperation.

57. Finally, we will proceed with multifaceted cooperation with the countries of the Third World and promote the strengthening of these countries' position in the North-South dialogue.

58. The formulation and realization of a new national strategy require time and efforts. The road is not easy but it is possible. We must have persistence, system, wisdom, international support without dependency and above all the broad people's consent in foreign policy and national concord in the defense policy.

59. The first big change in the country is for the citizen to feel really free.

For many years, the rightwing has been falsifying democracy because it is afraid of the people. It violates the constitution, downgrades the Chamber of Deputies, conducts trade unionism and dishonors local self-administration. The rightwing has identified the state with the party, which rules, monopolizes the mass information media, violates fundamental rights of the citizen and has shaken the reputation of justice.

The primary duty for the PASOK government is to safeguard and expand the democratic conquests that are the fruit of the people's long struggles. The Chamber of Deputies, local self-administration and trade unionism will be elevated so that they may really constitute the three foundations of democracy.

Our basic political options in crucial issues, which concern freedom and democracy and are analyzed further on, are based on the principle that people decide in a sovereign, unbiased and informed manner in a democratic regime where there is a true variety of voices, equality before law, equality of rights, complete separation of the state from the ruling party--and from all parties--and absolute respect for the constitutional stipulations.

Specifically, our positions on local-self-administration, public administration and trade unionism, that constitute the levers of change, are analyzed in a following relevant chapter.

THE CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES

60. The Chamber of Deputies, which expresses the will of the sovereign people, must be established as the basic institution of democracy and people's sovereignty. It is not possible to permit the continued demotion, deliberately implemented, of the function of the Chamber of Deputies. Because the rightwing fears the voice of the people, it tries to diminish the importance of the voice of the people's representatives.

The governments of the rightwing have created a deformed executive authority. At the same time, they placed the Chamber of Deputies in a secondary position under an anachronistic regulation for its operation with a falsification of the role of the opposition and with only a formal function of the Chamber's committees. Issues which draw the people's attention never reach the Chamber of Deputies, but rather are debated when stale.

61. PASOK will elevate the authority and will radically improve the function of the Chamber of Deputies so that its legislative work becomes fundamental and the control of the executive authority becomes more effective. Toward this end, there will be a guaranteed and complete briefing of the Chamber on all government actions, not only because this a self-evident democratic duty, but also because an attempt must be made to achieve the broadest, sincere acceptance, agreement and criticism.

Equal rights will be recognized for all parties. Timely debate of all critical issues of interest to the people will be guaranteed.

Function of the Chamber's committees will be made more substantial and public debate possibilities will be provided. At the same time we will establish the principle under which the Chamber's committees will be able to invite experts and representatives of the trade union and social organizations of the people to attend their meetings.

The various services of the Chamber of Deputies will be enriched with suitable and adequate scientific potential so that complete, responsible and objective briefing of deputies on technical and scientific points may be guaranteed. Sufficient areas will be provided to ensure the effective function of political parties and the deputies.

In conclusion, regulations for the Chamber's personnel will be inaugurated with provisions which establish criteria on qualifications for the hiring and promotion of officials.

PARTIES AND THE ELECTION SYSTEM

62. The people's sovereignty and the democratic process presuppose freedom of expression and operation. The multiparty system is a basic political and ideological position of PASOK. This was analyzed in the chapter on its principles and identity.

The free function of parties establishes and expands political freedoms and is based upon respect for the democratic regime. The democratic expression of the people's sovereignty and prevention of any distortion of this expression through high-handedness or authoritarianism will be fully guaranteed.

63. With its advent to the government, PASOK will promote the adoption of the simple representation system of election so that the people's will may be registered without any distortions. In an effort to fully implement this, legislation will be passed granting the right to vote to 18-year-olds, and the right of emigrants, merchant seamen, and students abroad to vote at their place of work will be guaranteed. Arrangements will be implemented guaranteeing the democratic organization and function of parties so that the candidate deputy will become the herald of the principles, positions and the program of the party he will represent in the Chamber of Deputies. This will be accompanied by a basic solution to the method of election of deputies, which will abolish the chase after crosses of preference, thus elevating the standard of the political race and of parliamentary functions.

64. The state will ensure adequate financing of the political parties because their financial self-sufficiency constitutes a prerequisite for their political self-containment. The election expenses and advertising activities of the parties and candidates should not exceed a maximum limit. This restriction should in no case be confused with expenditures concerning the improvement of party organization and the publication of briefing material.

JUSTICE (EQUALITY OF CITIZENS BEFORE THE LAW)

65. The PASOK government will strength justice both morally and materially so that it may be restored to a level that would guarantee the effective fulfillment of its nat al mission and finally be a worthy bastion of democracy. The task is really difficult because this institution has paid a high price for the offshoots, bigotry and hatred that the rightwing cultivated after the civil war. The blow became more grave during the dictatorship. The blackmailing of conscience, emergency military courts, inspection of "loyalty," and the purge of judicial people have been stamped on the structure, functioning and the climate for administering justice. This is why the democratization of the institution is a primary but not the only concern.

The safeguarding of citizens' equality before the law presupposes a series of measures that would promote the securing of the independence as well as democratic functioning of justice. Moreover, the organizing of justice will be improved so that justice may be accessible to the people--without hardships and additional expenses--and be administered without delays.

Finally, there will be measures that will be gradually implemented and will aim at elevating education, establishing training, strengthening the department with new judicia ies, removing bulky secondary cases, and correcting town planning for the building of new court houses and so forth. We believe that the role of the judges union must be important in the entire effort.

66. Generally in the field of law, we will proceed with the cleansing of legislation and its gradual reformation.

Our specific and immediate targets are:

In family law, to safeguard the equality of the two sexes; in criminal law, the abolition of the death penalty and protection from torture. There will be immediate amendments to legal procedures that would ensure for collective bodies the possibility of appeal to defend social interests (e.g. environment, town planning). Special care will be given to the cleansing of the penitentiary system with extra effort geared to the juvenile prisons. Humane living conditions will be safeguarded for the prisoners and the penitentiary system will be orientated, with its appropriate scientific staff, to prepare for the inmates reentry into society instead of their present isolation.

CITIZENS' RIGHTS

67. From within its specific articles, the constitution recognizes human and political rights which, however, are daily violated by the mechanisms of the right. The citizen's relations with the administration are characterized by a similar spirit where the rights of reference, information, free expression and communication remain an empty letter or are exercised under the suffocating pressure of legal or true limitations.

68. With PASOK in the government, the constitutional decrees which protect citizens' rights against any attempt to trample individual freedoms will become a daily act. Our country's entire spectrum of political, social and intellectual life will also be governed by the spirit and substance of the UN declarations on human rights.

The right of information and the right of respect for individual life are specifically and systematically violated.

The basis of democracy is correct information. Free, frequent and complete information is a significant factor for the democratization of authority, for the substantive participation of citizens in issues that concern them.

At the same time, every citizen must be guaranteed respect for his private life. The supervision and policing of a citizen's private life in any way or means will be banned. Respect for private life is also a prerequisite for the citizen's respect for the state and the administration and the basis for the development of the individual's social conscience.

69. The PASOK government will immediately take substantive measures for the equality of all citizens before the law, something that at the same time will consolidate a democratic state. All discriminatory acts which unacceptably separate Greeks into citizens of first and second categories, according to their ideological affiliation, their political convictions, or their trade union activity, will be abolished.

Dossiers will be abolished. There will be no discrimination concerning religious minorities. The members of these minorities will be considered equal citizens and will have the same rights and the same obligations as other Greeks.

70. We shall immediately proceed with the recognition of national resistance, to restore to the people their recent history and the majesty of the national liberation struggle. This act simultaneously constitutes a fulfillment of a rudimentary duty and a minimum tribute to the victims of the struggle for freedom and national liberation.

A total, just and immediate solution will be given to the issue of political refugees, a solution that cannot be anything else but the free return to the fatherland for whomsoever desires it. At the same time, the PASOK government will take care so that the issue of the transfer to our country of refugees' rights be solved through interstate agreements. At the same, with special measures, repatriated people will be strengthened socially and economically so that they may become integrated into the fatherland's life without impediments.

The "celebrations" of hate, which are perpetuating old divisions and passions in order to serve the policy of the right, a policy of our people's division, will be immediately abolished. The Greek people have definitely condemned this policy of the right.

For the fuller protection of the citizen's human rights, all laws will be cleansed of those anticonstitutional provisions which limit freedom of expression, trade union freedoms, the freedom of the press and so forth--provisions which PASOK has repeatedly denounced inside and outside the Chamber.

THE DEMOCRATIZATION OF MASS INFORMATION MEDIA

71. The governments of the right have turned into party organs and shamelessly used the mass information media for their aims. PASOK considers it its duty to guarantee and protect the people's objective information from television and radio. For the people's complete information, political parties will be guaranteed the possibility to express themselves through the mass media. The media will be transformed into organs of correct briefing, recreation, cultural development and education and the free and open discussion of ideas.

Representatives of political parties and local self-government, cultural agents, and trade union and cooperative organizations will participate in the administration of the mass media so that a pluralism of viewpoints and artistic expression can be guaranteed. Censorship will be abolished; there will be no prohibition except to protect youth.

72. The current administrative form of the armed forces information service will be abolished. It is inconceivable to have a military radio-television network, not only because it is not offering anything to the armed forces but, on the contrary, it is involving them in the differences and antagonism inherent in the dissemination of information.

It is absolutely imperative to have a second or other public stations or channels because the possibility for a variety of choices should be offered. At the same time, it is necessary to establish educational television, broadcasts for local self-government, and so forth, which can be combined in an operation on a regional level. Within this framework there will be broadcasts beamed at the people's drafted children which will genuinely project the work of the armed forces, promoting more conciliation between the armed forces and the people.

73. Finally, there will be an end to the current unacceptable status of advertisement which, in certain instances, allows various circuits (for instance companies for the production of television programs) to indirectly control radio and television toward the direction of private interests. A maximum level of advertising revenue will be established and there will be a correct apportioning of advertisement among the various programs. On some of these programs or stations or channels there will be no advertisements.

FAMILY AND DEMOCRACY

74. A basic goal of social liberation, equality between man and woman, will proceed from the family, social life's primary nucleus. This goal which, in addition to the family, concerns all aspects of the country's economic, social and cultural life, requires a change in family law. A number of measures are analyzed in a special chapter of the declaration that follows (Guarantee of Equality Between Women and Men).

75. A change in the law is not enough both for equality and for relations inside the family. A new atmosphere and a new mentality are required. Education will contribute decisively to its creation.

New social institutions will support the family's functions. Social care (like centers for infants and babies, allowances and so forth) will be accompanied by care for the qualitative elevation of human relations within the family (schools for parents and so forth) and by efforts to bind the family with its social environment. Common manifestations and festivities in neighborhoods, which will be promoted by local self-government, will create new human relations so that the currently dissolved web of society can be reconstituted.

Neighborhood schools and parents' associations will contribute decisively to this task. The school's evolution into a cultural cell will promote a total cultural renaissance. All this effort will contribute to the intellectual development of family members and to the neighborhood's evolution into an aggregate of families closely knit together.

The correct integration of the family into the neighborhood, and common problems, will contribute to the new forms of organization for the people's daily expression and will help in the creation of responsible citizens.

[Item No 76 not carried by the newspaper]

77. The coordinated action of the family and the town quarter will also assist the state in coping effectively with the threat of narcotics which is taking on dramatic proportions, affecting human existence, potential and the very health and life of a section of the new generation.

In a last analysis, a new way of life and a new dimension in human relations will help the young person to come out of the shell of isolation into which he is led by such or similar destructive and antisocial solutions which are alien to Greek morals.

78. The civil marriage.

Separation of the state and the church and the necessity of basing family relations upon sincerity and freedom of choice without oppression also leads toward the establishment of the institution of civil marriage.

Those to be married will be offered a freedom of choice which will be officially recognized--a choice between religious and civil marriage. This will also increase the authority of the religious marriage and will put a stop to coersion for a change of religion or dogma which was enforced by religious regulations for a religious marriage, which also violate a series of provisions of the ecumenical charter on human rights. This method will also deal with the social problem of failed marriages without objections from the church.

SEPARATION OF CHURCH AND STATE

79. The full separation of the church from the state will give it the opportunity to proceed freely and independently from civil authority. Naturally, we mean the separation of the church as an administration. The ties of the church with the nation and the people must, naturally, be preserved. Nobody can ignore the positive role played by the church at moments that were difficult for the nation and for the people at the time when the church had a democratic organization and enjoyed the active participation of the laity.

The embrace of the church, however, with the system of "state control" is the main reason for a negative development of unprecedented government interventions, unacceptable political-church relations, and transactions, contribution to national division, overthrow of the church order, subjugation and a parallel course with the dictatorship--naturally, however, with honorable exceptions. This coarse and reprehensible behavior of the church establishment oppressed the parish clergy and created reactions among the faithful.

80. The separation of the church from the state toward which the government of PASOK will proceed will guarantee the course for helping the church stand on its own feet with internal health and democratic organization.

The church will be set free to follow its own course without intervention from the state. The Ministry of Education and Religion will be limited to a formal role until the full separation of church and state provided for under an amendment of article four of the constitution.

In the meantime, there will be a settlement, through a legal balanced process, of every existing unresolved issue, such as the question of the dispute between the state and the church over church and monastery lands. A settlement of this issue must be aimed at the utilization of this vast property for the purpose of guaranteeing the position of the parish clergy and other church workers and for the settlement of landless farmers or those who have little property within the framework of a cooperative organization.

THE ARMED FORCES--THE SECURITY FORCES

81. The people's reconciliation with the armed forces constitutes the primary mainstay for our homeland's defense shielding as well as the primary matter of democracy. The people today look upon their conscripted youth with confidence. The PASOK government will give priority to strengthening this reconciliation.

Dictatorship dealt a heavy blow to the Greek officers corp; while the dictatorship was supported by a small minority, the vast majority of cadres in the corp found themselves trapped in the suffocating mechanisms created by the dictatorial regime.

The abolition of every concept of discipline, the substantive abolition of hierarchy, the existence of parallel centers of power and channels of administration literally disorganized the armed forces and injured the reputation of its cadres.

After the change in regime, the retaining of a small number of junta associates within the ranks of the armed forces has been a grave political mistake because it allowed the preservation of a climate of mistrust in the officers corps. Despite all this, the men of the armed forces and security forces are now completely devoted to their duties: the defense of national independence and the protection of the country's democratic institutions.

82. However, the peculiarity of the armed forces has contributed to the massing of problems with serious repercussions on the life of its cadres who have no possibility of exerting pressure for the solution of their problems. It is the duty of every state governed by law, however, to deal promptly with the problems being created on its own initiative without allowing the problems to become chronic and to acquire disturbing dimensions.

The progress of the armed forces cadres today is linked to a huge number of incalculable factors. The present state of affairs favors partisan intervention and makes the officer a captive of political situations.

For the armed forces cadres to devote themselves to their duty unobstructed and without being crushed by problems, they need firm conditions of employment, security for the future and progress that would solely depend on their own capabilities. The truly worthy should be promoted to the top.

83. PASOK has a different policy to offer. It is deeply aware of the problems facing the armed forces cadres and it has concrete solutions and the will to promote them.

The number of measures that the PASOK government will take includes:

--Long term planning of the armed forces structure and programming of personnel flow in such a manner that would, on the one hand, secure the country's defense needs and, on the other hand, safeguard the smooth progress of cadres.

--Set objective prerequisites for progress--transfers, retirements. Standard regulations will determine the time of service in rural units, major urban centers and in the capital. The time and prerequisites will be determined accordingly for studies in schools and centers so that equal opportunities may be given to all cadres.

--Determining in a fixed manner the maximum time for the chiefs of staff in office so that the automatic renewal of the leadership may be accomplished.

--Decisions on transfers will be made and communicated in time. Their implementation will take place in a predetermined period of time so that personnel may be given ample time to resolve problems arising from the transfers.

--Abolition of provisions that established subjective evaluation in the promotion councils and the establishment of prerequisites for strict but just evaluation.

--Complete reasoning in the decisions of the councils and the abolition of the possibility of using negative characteristics on evaluation reports that had been appraised in previous ranks, particularly the lower ranks.

--Conformity with the decisions of appeal courts.

--Care for the improvement of the financial position of officers and noncommissioned officers and the gradual bridging of the gap between salary and pension.

--Amendment of the retirement regulations that would allow proportional annuity after a set minimum time, a measure that would indirectly contribute to avoiding redundancy.

--Solution of the housing problem both for a permanent family home as well as in securing housing for those who are continually being transferred.

84. Special concern will be given to the noncommissioned officers who constitute the backbone of the armed forces. Immediate and substantive measures will be taken to resolve their long and serious problems.

85. Concerning the best and democratic training of the armed forces cadres, the curricula of military schools should be reformulated with the introduction of new subjects, attendance at seminars, lectures and so forth so that, along with the professional training, the democratic education of the future cadres of the armed forces will be ensured.

The entire education of the new officers will tend to create unsuitable ground for any totalitarian concepts. It has been established on a worldwide scale that totalitarian concepts easily find response within the armed forces when the education of cadres is one-sided. In addition to the above, the PASOK government will encourage, through various means, the university education of cadres not only in theoretical sciences but also in social sciences and will introduce on a large scale the institution of educational leave. Moreover, the possibility for postgraduate studies in their speciality will be secured.

86. All that has been analyzed thus far, despite their particularities, will also apply to the security forces. Specifically, measures will be taken to raise the role of the security forces in the protection of the citizen--irrespective of political conviction--public order, security and the people's tranquillity as well as in combating crime.

We look to security forces that would be above parties, under the full control of the lawful, elected political leadership and with officers and men who would also enjoy the constitutional freedoms and have humane conditions and terms of work (working hours, etc).

87. The measures to be taken by the PASOK government will create a framework so that the men of the armed forces and security forces will build a career without humiliating interventions and only with their own merits so that they can unobstructedly fulfill their duty to the homeland.

AKROPOLIS COMMENTS ON PASOK DECLARATION

NC142110 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 14 Jul 81 p 2

[From the "Laconic" column: "PASOK's Foreign Policy"]

[Text] In the second part of its policy declaration PASOK stated:

"Our basic strategic orientation is the dissolution of both cold war blocs: NATO and the Warsaw Pact. Our country's withdrawal from the Atlantic alliance falls within this strategy."

This is the first time we have heard this. Thus far PASOK had been saying that it would take us out of NATO without its decision being contingent on the dissolution of the two blocs. Therefore, what should we suppose? That we shall remain in NATO if the two blocs are not dissolved? This is what emerges from the position of the policy declaration. Consequently, we cannot be "nonaligned" as long as the two blocs exist. Nevertheless, later in the "declaration" it is stated that PASOK will bring the agreement for the return to NATO to the Chamber and that it will vote against it. PASOK will remove the NATO nuclear warheads and will dismantle the foreign bases; that is, we shall and we shall not belong to NATO and although we shall belong to some extent we shall not be fulfilling our obligations. However, such an issue does not arise for the countries of the Warsaw Pact. They do not have the possibility of saying no to the Soviet Union on any issue. Therefore, PASOK is playing the game of the Eastern bloc since it aims at weakening NATO's defense without damaging the Warsaw Pact. Furthermore, its position on the bases issue is doubtful. The bases may be kept for some time that is not specified, PASOK says, but they should be "compartmentalized." The "declaration" also mentioned:

"Such historic conditions may exist that will compel our country to ally itself defensively with other countries."

Why "may exist?" Don't they exist now? Didn't they exist in 1951 when the governments of the center played the leading part in integrating us into NATO? What has changed since then? And why don't only the socialist but also the communist parties of Western Europe support their countries' remaining in the alliance? Don't they know what they are doing and only PASOK does?

Finally, the "declaration" states:

"Europe is unitary. It is not only composed of the EEC countries but of those countries that do not participate in the EEC... and by those of Eastern Europe."

The declaration added that the goal of a European policy should be a confederated Europe that will include Western and Eastern countries. However, it hastens to clarify that this "constitutes a desirable vision, but a very distant one." However, foreign policy cannot rely on distant visions. It should rely on current realities. Yet PASOK does not see or does not want to see these realities and it is charting an unreal and inconsistent policy that is exceptionally dangerous for the country's security, peace and independence.

CANDIDATES START TO APPLY FOR CONSULTATIVE ASSEMBLY

TA151833 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Candidates began today to submit applications for the 160-member consultative assembly which will be a wing of the constituent assembly. Applications will be received until 15 August. Applications were made today to the office of governers in provinces as well as the office of the general secretary of the National Security Council [NSC]. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent has learned that 33 candidates submitted petitions to the NSC office of the secretary general for the 40 members to be appointed by the Council. Provincial governors will nominate 360 people for the 120 seats the council will assign in the consultative assembly among these candidates. The names of the 360 provincial candidates will be submitted to the NSC not later than 15 September 1981.

MINISTER OZAL RETURNS FROM U.S., FRG VISITS

TA151630 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Airport statement by State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Turgut Ozal on his return from a visit to the United States and the FRG]

[Text] During our talks with the IMF, we reviewed activities during the first year of the 3-year agreement between the IMF and Turkey. As a result of this assessment it was decided to pursue the same policies. I would like to stress this point.

The results of last year were found to be satisfactory. We have briefed the IMF officials on the latest economic developments in our country. Our most apparent achievements have been realized in the struggle against inflation and in the increase of our exports and workers' remittances. With the enactment and implementation of the new revenue tax laws, an important step has been taken toward achieving a balanced budget.

Although the economic situation of the state economic enterprises has improved compared to 1979, there is still much to be done in this field. Measures will primarily be taken within the internal structure of these enterprises. In fact, the government plan envisaged these additional measures in principle. I would like to point out that these measures will now be implemented with more care.

Our talks with officials of commercial banks were also very satisfactory. My impression from these talks was that it is believed that Turkey will soon make important steps in its foreign trade. This is the result of the developments we achieved during the recent period. Both U.S. and FRG commercial bank officials have expressed this view.

According to the program drawn up with the IMF last year, a loan was to be released at the end of July in addition to the loan we received in June. Another loan was to be released 1 October. Because of some bureaucratic delays, the [July] loan to Turkey will be released in September. However, an agreement with the IMF will allow us to receive the IMF loans due both in September and October from the commercial banks in the form of a special loan, and these loans should be available toward the end of this month or the beginning of next month at the latest.

GREEK CULTURAL DELEGATION ARRIVES FOR VISIT

TA152041 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] The Turkish-Greek cultural committee will meet in Ankara tomorrow in order to review cultural relations between the two countries. The Greek delegation headed by Dhimitrios Kosmadhopoulos arrived in Ankara today. The Turkish delegation will be headed by retired Ambassador Turgut Menemencioglu.

In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport, Menemencioglu said that the meetings of the cultural committee were being held in accordance with the cultural agreement signed between the two countries in Ankara on 20 April 1951. He added that the agreement envisaged the establishment of friendly relations between the two countries in various social and cultural fields in a bid to educate the peoples of the two countries on each other and to draw them closer. Noting that the Turkish Government attached great importance to these talks, Menemencioglu said that his delegation would exert efforts to include measures in the program to be drawn up that will permit the two peoples to know each other better.

In a statement, Kosmadhopoulos, a former ambassador to Ankara, said that his delegation would work to improve understanding and cooperation in the cultural field between the two countries, which had joint geographic and historic ties. The meetings of the committee which will begin in Ankara tomorrow will last 2 days.

BULGARIAN ENERGY MINISTER BEGINS OFFICIAL VISIT

TA151303 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Bulgarian Minister of Power Supply Nikola Todoriev has arrived in Ankara for an official visit. He was received at Esenboga Airport by Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol. In a statement at the airport, Bingol said that the neighborly and friendly relations between the two countries as well as their cooperation in the field of energy was encouraging.

Todoriev expressed the belief that cooperation between the two countries in various fields would continue in the future.

The visiting minister then called on Trade Minister Kemal Canturk. In a statement at the meeting, Canturk pointed out that Turkey and Bulgaria could set up joint companies and undertake investments. Canturk also expressed his pleasure over the development of trade between the two countries.

Todoriev said Turkish-Bulgarian cooperation in the field of energy was a good example of goodneighborly relations between the two countries. He stressed that Bulgaria was ready to share with Turkey its experience in the electricity generation field. He added that a joint company would be set up with Turkey in this field.

Todoriev then held a meeting with Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol. In a speech at the meeting, Bingol noted that the energy problem was one which exceeded the powers of countries. That is why, he said, international cooperation in this field must be increased. In a speech, the Bulgarian minister said that the joint efforts of Turkey and Bulgaria would continue in the future based on mutual interests.

Ends Ankara Contacts

TA151902 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Bulgarian Minister of Power Supply Nikola Todoriev, who is in Turkey for an official visit, concluded his contacts in Ankara. After he visited Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol and Commerce Minister Kemal Canturk, the visiting minister was received by Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. In a statement during the talks, Ulusu said that this visit would make a significant contribution to the promotion of relations between Turkey and Bulgaria. The Bulgarian minister said that a constructive stage was reached in his talks in Ankara in the field of energy cooperation and that the development of relations between the two countries was based on new grounds.

Todoriev left for Izmir today after he completed his talks in Ankara. He will depart Turkey on Saturday, 18 July, after visiting Istanbul.

MILITARY PROSECUTORS ASK FOR MORE DEATH SENTENCES

Ankara Court

TA152037 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Summary] In operations they conducted in the province of Agri and its vicinity, the security forces have captured members of the illegal separatist Kordestan Workers Party [PKK]. They are accused of killing one policeman as well as a night watchman and of engaging in subversive activities. The following were seized during the operation: 10 pistols, 364 rounds of ammunition, 15 meters of timed fuse wire, 1 pair of binoculars and numerous banned publications. An investigation in connection with the captured suspects is underway.

Fikri Arikan and Kemal Ozdemir were convicted and sentenced to death today by the First Ankara Military Court for a second time after the higher court reversed the earlier death sentence. Eyup Ozmen, another suspect in the same trial, was acquitted by the court for lack of evidence. Arikan and Ozdemir, two right-wing extremists, are accused of killing two persons in Ankara in 1978.

The office of the military prosecutor in Ankara has demanded the death penalty for 3 of 21 members of the illegal People's Liberation Association. The suspects are accused of murder, engaging in armed clashes with security forces, collecting money for their association and organizing unauthorized rallies. In two other trials, 123 members of the People's Liberation Association are being tried; 20 of them with a request for the death sentence.

Diyarbakir Court

TA141839 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] Death sentences have been demanded for 11 of the 162 suspects who are members of the illegal and divisive Rizgari and Alarizgari organizations and who are on trial at the Diyarbakir Martial Law Command First Military Court. The indictment read by the military prosecutor today explains that the organization was active mostly in eastern and southeastern Turkey first under the name of Rizgari and later under the name of Alarizgari. The prosecutor charged that the suspects were involved in divisive activities, murders, attempted murders and robberies. The 11 men who face a death sentence are: Mehmet Al, Sabri Balta, Murat Celen, Ramazan Gore, Salih Kaplan, Inan Kaya, Veysi Lacin, Mehmet Nezih Okan, Isa Polat, Riza Sayin and Hasan Yerlioglu.

The prosecutor demanded prison terms ranging from 8 to 15 years for the other 151 suspects.

GOVERNMENT DOWNGRADES RELATIONS WITH AFGHANISTAN

TA160846 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] Turkey has downgraded its relations with Afghanistan. According to a statement issued by the Foreign Ministry, Turkey downgraded its relations with Afghanistan to the level of charge d'affaires. In its statement, the Foreign Ministry also announced that the Turkish ambassador in Afghanistan has been recalled.

In a statement on the subject, the Afghan ambassador to Ankara said the decision made by the Turkish Government is one-sided, that his government has received the Turkish Government decision with understanding and that a review of the decision by the Turkish Government would benefit both countries.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 137 17 July 1981

CONTENTS

AUSTRIA

Kreisky, Lanc Comment on Hodic News Conference E 1
Interview With Chancellor E 1
Interior Minister's Remarks E 1
Kreisky on Socialist International Session E 2
Austria, Libya Discuss Economic Cooperation [WIENER ZEITUNG 15 Jul] E 2
Greek Army Orders Personnel Carriers From Steyr [KURIER 16 Jul] E 3
Cabinet Hears Report on New Radar System [WIENER ZEITUNG 15 Jul] E 3

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Genscher, Papers Comment on Haig's Arms Statement J 1
Foreign Minister's Statement J 1
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Article [16 Jul] J 1
DIE WELT Commentary [16 Jul] J 2
State Minister Visits Hong Kong, Views Detente J 2
[SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST 17 Jul]
Government Proposes Schmidt-Honecker Talks J 3
Genscher, Italy's Colombo Discuss Europolitics J 3

FRANCE

Hernu Outlines Defense Program, Nuclear Policy [LE MONDE 11 Jul] K 1
France Willing To Reconstruct Iraqi Reactor K 6
LE MONDE Reports on Mitterrand-Schmidt Talks [15 Jul] K 6

ITALY & THE VATICAN

PCI's Natta Reports on Political Situation [L'UNITA 2 Jul] L 1
Text of PCI Message to Polish Party Congress [L'UNITA 14 Jul] L 9

SPAIN

Paper Views Catalonian CP Chairman's Ouster [LA VANGUARDIA 7 Jul] N 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

NORWAY

Brundtland Comments on Nuclear-Free Zone P 1
Frydenlund Note on Nuclear-Free Zone Issue [AFTENPOSTEN 7 Jul] P 1
AFTENPOSTEN Editorial [8 Jul] P 2
Stoltenberg's Views on Euromissiles, Security [ARBEIDERBLADET 1 Jul] P 3

UNITED KINGDOM

Communist Party Membership Shows Decline [MORNING STAR 16 Jul] Q 1
Paper Welcomes Reagan's 'Rebuff' to FitzGerald [DAILY TELEGRAPH 16 Jul] Q 1

TURKEY

Turkish-Greek Cultural Committee Meets in Ankara T 1
Communist Party Greets Polish Party Congress [VOTCP] T 1

KREISKY, LANC COMMENT ON HODIC NEWS CONFERENCE

Interview With Chancellor

AU161931 Vienna Domestic Television Service in German 1730 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Paul Schulmeister interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky in Bonn on 16 July--recorded]

[Text] [Kreisky] I am not all that convinced that the aforementioned person (Hodic] was a Czechoslovak agent from the very beginning. I rather believe that here a man was returned most likely against his will, and that there--under the pressure and influence of the circumstances that are prevailing in a dictatorship--he was prompted to make certain statements; because I cannot conceive that such a highly qualified person as Dr Hodic would have been used as a simple agent and that the public has been informed about it, in addition--all this is so unusual, or it only serves propaganda purposes. I still cannot say that [words indistinct] but there certainly is no doubt that the method is unpleasant, that we do not gladly put up with it and that this certainly is a burden.

[Schulmeister] In any case, for the time being there is no impact on the plans for a visit to Austria of Czechoslovak state-party head Husak this fall?

[Kreisky] This has not yet been discussed. All these things only happened yesterday. I would like once more to repeat that these methods are too well known, all this is being practiced in a stereotyped pattern and I don't allow such things to bother me very much. We experienced this once before with Lausman [Czech social democrat returned to CSSR]. We also experienced this in other communist countries and states. I don't allow such things to bother me very much.

Interior Minister's Remarks

AU161406 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1040 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Harry Sichrowsky interview with Interior Minister Lanc in Vienna on 16 July on CSSR agent Josef Hodic's 15 July Prague news conference--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Mr Interior Minister, the CSSR secret service agent Josef Hodic--as had been announced--held a news conference in Prague at which he reported on his activity in Austria. How is this to be assessed by Austria?

[Answer] Well, what was announced as an unmasking of alleged activities directed against the CSSR, in my opinion, is actually an unmasking of those who have staged the whole thing. And, in that respect, it is, I believe, very useful and enlightening, both for the Czechoslovak and the Austrian public and, moreover, for the world public.

[Question] Mr Minister, normally the work of such agents is treated discreetly by their masters. Is the Czechoslovak attitude in this case to be regarded as a kind of provocation?

[Answer] I believe the self-declaration only goes to show that actually no real espionage was involved, only snooping on Czech emigres in various European countries, including Austria. And what was presented as findings is something you can read and establish everywhere in West Europe, and for that, certainly no espionage is needed. The timing and the choice of topics, however, permit certain conclusions to be drawn: First, that it was intended to denigrate Czech emigration, to assert that it was in especially close contact with China.

Second, what was emphasized at the Hodic news conference seems to indicate that Prague finds particularly the Czech paper LISTY and its editors and writers irritating. And, finally, one has to ask how such implausible statements can be made, such as the assertion that food donations were changed into weapons--this would in fact mean that, if such weapons were shipped overland to Poland, they would have gone to Poland either through the GDR or the CSSR or through Hungary or, if such shipments had been sent by air, it would mean that Polish authorities cannot distinguish between food and weapons. I think that example is indicative of the quality of the whole show.

[Question] Has the question been fully clarified as to whether the activity of Josef Hodic directly affected Austrian interests or was detrimental to Austrian interests?

[Answer] Well, that is a question that will have to be assessed by our judicial administration under pertinent penal code stipulations, but in the final analysis it will probably be reduced to a purely hypothetical consideration since Hodic is in the CSSR.

KREISKY ON SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL SESSION

AU161750 Vienna Domestic Service in German 1600 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Statement by Chancellor Kreisky at the end of the Socialist International conference in Bonn on 16 July--recorded]

[Text] Asked how he saw the outcome of this internationally, widely publicized Bonn Socialist International deliberation, Chancellor Kreisky said:

First, the problem of a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe played a great role since almost all the north European prime ministers attended. And then, regarding the situation in Latin America, the Socialist International adopted an attitude which is not entirely devoid of criticism of the United States and also of certain developments in Latin America. Naturally, we do not uphold the view that movements aimed at overcoming dictatorships themselves subsequently possibly incur the risk of turning into another, new dictatorship. All this was discussed in a very frank and informative manner. Thus, I am returning home much better informed than I was previously even though, properly speaking, I am normally well informed.

AUSTRIA, LIBYA DISCUSS ECONOMIC COOPERATION

AU151500 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 15 Jul 81 p 2

[Summary] At the 14 July Vienna cabinet meeting, Trade Minister Staribackher reported on the fourth session of the joint Austrian-Libyan-Arab Commission for Economic, Scientific and Technical Cooperation held in Vienna from 23 to 25 June 1981. According to Staribacher, on this occasion, the sides discussed the very favorable development of bilateral trade, cooperation projects and new opportunities for Austrian firms to participate in Libyan economic, scientific and technical projects.

"They are primarily projects for developing Libya's infrastructure laid down in the Libyan 5-year economic plan, where Austrian firms could participate more than in the past, especially in light industry, heavy industry, the power industry, railroading, housing construction in agricultural sectors, in developing the urban supply structure and in vocational training."

GREEK ARMY ORDERS PERSONNEL CARRIERS FROM STEYR

AU161324 Vienna KURIER in German 16 Jul 81 p 9

[Brigitte Fuchs report on interview with Hans Michael Malzacher, director general of the Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation in Athens; date not given]

[Summary] Director General Malzacher returned to Vienna from Athens on Tuesday with a Greek order for the delivery of 100 Steyr armored personnel carriers for the Greek Army. Delivery is to be completed by the end of next year at the latest and part of the vehicles will be assembled at the Steyr-Hellas plant in Greece. In an exclusive KURIER interview, Malzacher declared that Steyr will first supply to Greece vehicles that are in stock in Austria. However, the assembling of the personnel carriers at the Greek plant can be taken up soon after the agreement goes into effect, he said.

According to Malzacher, the current agreement does not provide for followup orders. "However," he said, "it is clear that the Greek Army will need more than just these 100 vehicles." For the Greek partners of Steyr-Hellas--60 percent of its shares are held by the state-owened ETVA bank and 8 percent by the Athens Lainopoulus Company, while the remaining 32 percent are owned by the Austrian Steyr-Daimler-Puch Corporation--the tank business is also interesting with a view to exports and apparently there have been successful preliminary talks with several Middle East countries, including Saudi Arabia.

Malzacher said: "The possibility of exports is provided for in principle, but we agreed to make long term decisions in each specific case." According to a Greek source, however, there is no list of countries to be excluded from deliveries. Assembling the armed personnel carrier in Saloniki is to ensure a better utilization of the Steyr-Hellas plant. To date, this plant mainly has produced tractors and trucks, including 1,200 trucks annually for the Greek Army. Moreover, old U.S. Army trucks of the Greek Army are being equipped with new Steyr diesel engines at the Saloniki plant. In the long run, the assembling done in Greece regarding the Steyr armed personnel carrier, which has been given the name Leonidas in the Greek Army, will account for almost 50 percent of the total production cost, according to Malzacher. Exports by the Steyr company to Greece, mostly to the Saloniki plant, amount to about one third of Austria's total exports to Greece.

CABINET HEARS REPORT ON NEW RADAR SYSTEM

AU151210 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 15 Jul 81 p 2

[Summary] At the 14 July meeting of the Austrian cabinet, the ministers for transportation and national defense gave a joint report on the current state of the project for an integrated civil-military air traffic and airspace control system. According to the report, this system is designed to meet the safety requirements of the increased air traffic with the aid of new technologies and installations.

"This aim is to be achieved with the establishment by the civil side of a center in Vienna where all data supplied by the individual radar stations are to be fed into an electronic data processing system and to be displayed on radar screens; the establishment by the military side of an operational center for airspace control and the operational guidance of military aircraft, as well as the establishment of a military aircraft and the establishment of a military radar station to supplement existing civil radar installations; the construction of a joint civil-military medium-range radar station; and the renewal of parts of the civil radar systems."

According to the report, construction work under this program has been virtually completed so that some installations can be put into operation before the end of this year. The others will follow in 1982. Total project costs are nearly 4 billion schillings, with orders of 2.2 billion schillings benefiting domestic business.

GENSCHER, PAPERS COMMENT ON HAIG'S ARMS STATEMENT

Foreign Minister's Statement

LD160932 Hamburg DPA in German 0830 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 16 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher criticized those people in the Federal Republic who cast doubt on the U.S. desire for negotiations as the mouthpiece of (? a Moscow campaign) [words indistinct]. In a statement published in Bonn today, Genscher also welcomed the speech by U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig, in which he reaffirmed U.S. readiness for arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Article

DW161433 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 16 Jul 81 p 3

[Commentary signed HHG: "Western Quality Product"]

[Text] Without being cynical, we can slowly feel sorry for the federal chancellor. Alexander Haig, U.S. secretary of state, who, despite his toughness, is said to have understanding for the European partners, has slapped Schmidt and other Europeans in the face. How else can one interpret Haig's remark in a foreign policy speech that the United States will not allow itself to be pressured into taking part in arms control talks to achieve minor political results. The Bonn government is among those U.S. partners who are exerting some frank pressure.

It is possible that, with his remark, Haig is trying to save face for a world power. It is equally possible that negotiations on medium-range arms in Europe will begin late this year as announced. But how smoothly can such talks be pursued if Haig says that arms control talks, including discussions on medium-range weapons, must accompany the building of military strength. Even such an enormous military power as the United States needs a lot of time in view of the planned additional armament.

One must not impute bad will on the part of the U.S. Government because the logic of its own conditions prohibits such negotiations from producing something within the foreseeable future. The Soviet reaction is not even taken into consideration in this connection.

The federal chancellor has linked his political future to NATO's dual decision, which soon will be 2 years old and with the fact that everyone must take both parts of the decision seriously. It is up to him to come to terms with the fact that the Reagan government judges the world situation so completely differently that it follows another sequence; and the conditions voiced by Haig regarding arms control negotiations also contain linkage with Soviet conduct everywhere in the world. This good conduct and repentance clause can quickly block negotiations because of lacking Soviet insight.

The Soviet Union has nothing more in mind than to drive a wedge between Europe and the United States and it is rather successful in West Europe in this respect, one of the criticisms by the advocates of the new policy of strength says. That is obvious nonsense. The Soviet Union can best harvest where it has not planted anything; if difficulties between the leading power of the Atlantic alliance and its European partners increase in the future, this wedge would be a purely Western product.

DIE WELT Commentary

DW161407 Bonn DIE WELT in German 16 Jul 81 p 1

[Wilfried Hertz-Eichenrode commentary: "Haig's Principles"]

[Text] U.S. Secretary of State Haig is unaffected enough to pick up formulations he has heard from somebody else, namely, Willy Brandt who said: Make peace more secure. Coming from Haig, however, it sounds completely different than from Brandt. The difference lies in the contrast of the peace policy philosophies which have been described--independent of the two mentioned names--as "neocontainment" and as "safeguarded detente."

To understand "safeguarded detente," one must read what the German originator, Brandt, wrote in 1973--when he was still the federal chancellor--on Ostpolitik: "There are qualified relations now between the Soviet Union and the West, the United States, France and the Federal Republic. That is not natural at all." In these two formula-like sentences, Brandt outlined the philosophy that the treaty policy network has created qualified relations between the East and the West. They safeguard detente sufficiently so as to give priority to the continuous attempt to bring about satisfaction of political interests rather than to the arms policy component. Brandt said in 1973 in response to a question of whether we would get balanced rearmament instead of balanced disarmament: "That is a temporary state in connection with disarmament measures. We experience similar things in daily life. Prior to starting something new, everybody wants to take a big slug from the bottle."

With its unbalanced excessive armament in Europe, the Soviet Union has taken a big slug from the bottle. The result is that others, not Brandt, draw the consequences along the lines of "neocontainment." Haig formulated the principles in a classic manner, saying that arms control efforts must not be substitute for common security policy but its instrument. In other words, the arms race must be accepted as long as Moscow is not prepared to accept controlled arms limitation. Mitterrand said exactly the same thing in Bonn.

STATE MINISTER VISITS HONG KONG, VIEWS DETENTE

HK170248 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 17 Jul 81 p 34

[By Stephen Clark]

[Text] West Germany will do all it can to convince U.S. President Ronald Reagan that detente with the Soviet Union is essential for world peace, a senior German minister said in Hong Kong yesterday.

The minister of state for foreign affairs, Dr Hildegard Hamm-Bruecher, also called in China to make its own proposals for detente. The Federal Government had always seen detente as a "realistic long-term policy to reduce and contain the sources of conflict between East and West," she told a lunch meeting of the Foreign Correspondents' Club.

Dr Hamm-Bruecher said the Reagan administration had been successful in quickly defining its domestic policies, but was having difficulty defining its foreign policy. "We have to do all we can to convince them that detente is necessary for Europe and that we should continue on the same lines."

Earlier she said: "Security in Europe, which we work for with our efforts to create a stable balance between East and West, is an important contribution towards strengthening world peace and international security." There would of course be "inevitable setbacks" such as the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. But, she said, the Bonn government felt it important to "continue the dialogue" with Moscow even in such times of "international crisis." However, any Soviet intervention in Poland would cause irreparable damage to the process of detente.

As for China, Dr Hamm-Bruecher said: "We all try to have bilateral and multilateral arrangements with China. But I think it is up to China itself to make its own proposals for detente. Maybe, in the future, we could see some initiative from China over the Indochina problem, for instance. We will appreciate and welcome all efforts by China to contribute towards world-wide detente."

She also said West Germany wanted to encourage and help genuine nonaligned nations, including those in Southeast Asia and Africa, to remain nonaligned as a means of preventing a "total polarization of the world into two large camps."

GOVERNMENT PROPOSES SCHMIDT-HONECKER TALKS

LD151434 Hamburg DPA in German 1330 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 15 Jul (DPA)--The Federal Government has suggested to the GDR the (?opening) of a dialogue on the [word indistinct] of inter-German relations without preconditions and thus reaffirmed its interest in a meeting between Chancellor Helmut Schmidt and SED head Erich Honecker. Government Spokesman Kurt Becker made it clear at a news conference in Bonn today, however, that a Schmidt-Honecker meeting would probably not take place this year. The cabinet earlier had been discussing inter-German policy. Becker said that no one assumed that such a meeting would take place before the Bonn visit of Soviet state and party head Leonid Brezhnev, which is expected at the end of November or the beginning of December. Becker pointed out that the time remaining until the end of the year would then be too short.

Becker stated that it seems that East Berlin's interest in a meeting between the chancellor and Honecker, which had been postponed last summer mainly because of the situation in Poland, is just as great as Bonn's, notwithstanding the occasional attacks on Bonn from East Berlin.

GENSCHER, ITALY'S COLOMBO DISCUSS EUROPOLITICS

LD162127 Hamburg DPA in German 2015 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 16 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher received on Thursday in Bonn his Italian colleague, Emilio Colombo, for a talk on Europolitical questions and the impending summit conference of the seven most important industrial nations in Ottawa. At the talk, Genscher probably also informed his colleague of the results of the German-French consultations.

HERNU OUTLINES DEFENSE PROGRAM, NUCLEAR POLICY

PM161200 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Jul 81 pp 1, 9

[Jacques Isnard interview with French Defense Minister Charles Hernu; date and place not given]

[Text] [Question] In what state of morale and finance did you find the French Armed Forces when you arrived at the Defense Ministry and, in particular, have the many changes of minister and chief of staff in the past 8 months disrupted their activities by delaying the most urgent decisions?

[Answer] When I arrived at the Defense Ministry with, as I am sure you will understand, some emotion, the transfer of powers between Galley and myself took place under remarkably good conditions. The minister assembled all the senior aides and took the trouble of introducing them to me. He then had a long personal conversation with me. He told me that the political choices on the budget had not been made in order to leave responsibility for them to me. Regarding the nuclear deterrent force, he was anxious to inform me immediately that it was France's real strength. Although some ministers, I know, found their drawers empty, there was nothing missing in the Defense Ministry.

Some people sometimes say: The victory of the candidate of hope who has become president is a liberation. It is true that the French people have a feeling of liberation, but the 1944 liberation followed the Nazi occupation and it was only natural that men and women in public office were sanctioned. Since then, all the successive governments have been democratically elected. I feel, therefore, that the armed forces have loyally served the successive governments. If there are any criticisms to be made, for instance on the choice of Larzac or on military programming, they should be addressed to the politicians and not to the military who are merely the instrument--the arms--of the political authorities.

From that viewpoint, I found the army in a satisfactory state of morale although I felt there were some questions and doubts with the arrival of a new government.

On the financial level, things must be made very clear. Bloch-Laine is chairing a commission which has the job of drawing up the balance sheet of the last 7-year term and I have authorized General Lacaze, chief of staff of the armed forces, and the chiefs of the three branches of the armed forces to appear before the commission. You see how much confidence I have in them.

The 1977-82 military programming law covered all military spending and was to set specific targets for equipment and forces' training. You asked me what I think of it and I will tell you.

1--The armed forces' resources--and I am anxious to make this point--have undoubtedly increased and yet they have never reached the levels set by law. The gaps were such that we in the assembly's National Defense Committee were not even aware of them. I do not want to betray any secrets but, after all, when I realize that the existing hangars for our aircraft do not even have protective doors, when I see how far behind we are in terms of rifles and frontline armored vehicles, when I realize that the present tonnage of our navy is lower than that of the French Navy after the fleet was scuttled, I say to myself: "How far behind we have fallen!" So, I must take this backwardness into account today. This requires a major budgetary effort.

2--It will be up to us to make decisions and to ensure that they are clearly expressed in future programming laws because it is not possible to deceive the nation, to say that decisions have been made and implement different ones. That has been known to happen.

3--The activity of the forces has never attained the level laid down by law. Our sailors, our airmen and our tank crews are below the scheduled training thresholds.

"You Are Soldiers of the Homeland"

[Question] What major fundamental reforms do you regard as necessary today and what specific measures have you already planned?

[Answer] For the time being, I have taken measures which consist in tackling those things which seemed to me to be necessary and urgent. Moreover, I am a minister who has hitherto said nothing on defense questions. I have attended to the most urgent things first.

What is expected of the defense minister is a structural activity--reflection. I have, therefore, had consultations and listened attentively, for instance, to the Higher Council of Military Administration to all the workers' trade unions from the arsenals to the general staffs and the gendarmerie. I went to Taverny with the president, I visited the strategic oceangoing force with the premier. In addition, I will be visiting Cherbourg in a few days' time.

I feel that, to give a better idea of the army's role to the nation, the Armed Forces-Youth Commission should be revived under completely different conditions and I will chair its first meeting in September with the participation of all the workers' trade unions, teachers and youth organizations. I am one of those who think--and this is already a structural answer--that national service cannot be reformed unless national service is backed by national education and the civic and physical preparation of children and young people. I said that when I was in opposition, I wrote it in SOLDATS-CITOYENS and Jaures already described it perfectly in L'ARMEE NOUVELLE. I met with National Education Minister Savary and asked if we could have a meeting on defense questions. He agreed and I regard that as very important.

I would like to add that France's defense means the nuclear deterrent and national independence although I am rather wary of the term since everybody talks about it and that makes it rather ambiguous. It means an area of freedom to be won, France's autonomy in decisionmaking and, since France is in the Atlantic alliance--which we intend to respect and develop--we must preserve our decisionmaking freedom without being automatically drawn into a conflict which we do not want to enter.

In modern society we are busy saying to men and women: you are soldiers of the homeland, your mission is to prepare for battle each day in the knowledge that you are preparing for battle in order never to fight a war. That is what is being asked of the army today. It is not easy to explain but that is, nonetheless, the meaning of our policy. It is on that basis that we will study the reform of national service--I do not say military service--which should include civil defense for the population and general interest assignments. National service will--in the framework of decentralization--have to include these assignments, including the intervention forces' mission. They are necessary because the threat is not only in Europe; there are permanent threats to Africa. It is not for France to interfere in other states' affairs but it must protect its voluntary workers, helpers, engineers and nationals.

Basically, I think that the important thing is not the length of service but its content and efficacy. It is possibly more important to have a service adopted to young people's choices, to defense needs and to different formats. But that is a personal idea.

5-Year Programming

[Question] Since 1976, the French Armed Forces have enjoyed a fairly clear budgetary advantage. Will the 1982 budget continue in the same way and will 1983 see the start of a new military programming law or will 1983 not be programmed?

[Answer] As always, I will give you a frank answer. The defense minister is not the representative of the armed forces' lobby--if such a thing existed--in the government. I am the government's representative to the armed forces. Nonetheless, as defense minister with a ministry of 750,000 people and with the task of defending the nation, I would, of course, like to have as large a budget as possible. The president stated during his campaign that the budget should approach 4 percent of the GNP. I hope, therefore, that our budget will not be reduced. There will have to be some arbitration. But, whatever decision is made, I will back the government and do my best.

On the subject of programming, the premier has said that there will be 2 years (1982-83) and then a 5-year plan. What I will propose is that, in drawing up the 1982 budget, we also draw up the 1983 budget and that anything not honored in 1982 will be met in 1983. I am planning my budget with a 2-year period in mind. I will propose that these 2 years be followed by 5-year military programming.

[Question] When will the French taxpayer be informed of our major decisions in the nuclear sphere (new missiles, new submarines and the neutron bomb) and on what strategic thinking will these decisions be based?

[Answer] The French taxpayers know that clearly, having made a choice. They have elected Francois Mitterrand who put forward 110 options. One of them corresponded precisely to this question. The candidate of hope, who has become president, announced:

1--Development, not just maintenance of the nuclear deterrent;

2--As much disarmament as possible in the world, primarily by the two superpowers, without undermining France's security;

3--Protecting our decisionmaking freedom;

4--Continuing studies and research on enhanced radiation weapons.

We will have to make a political decision when these studies are sufficiently advanced to be assessed. That stance was unanimously adopted by the PS Executive Bureau a few months ago.

Regarding nuclear submarines, Francois Mitterrand when a candidate replied: At most, two additional units by the year 2000. Studies are underway on mobile missiles.

Who will make the decision? The president answered that in your newspaper. He is the chief of the armed forces and he clearly has demonstrated how essential he deems two sectors: foreign relations and defense. A forthcoming Defense Council meeting will have to examine the major options on which you are questioning me.

Each week I have a meeting with External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson; our secretaries hold meetings. I have excellent relations with my friend Jean-Pierre Cot since cooperation requires that the armed forces supply any necessary help. I do not need to tell you that I have very frequent meetings with the president on all these questions.

[Question] What freedoms and what change in life style do you intend to give the armed forces?

[Answer] Command is very difficult in modern society. It requires a great deal of humanity and a great deal of feeling. We live in a world in which the conventional institutions are finding it difficult to survive.

In France, the army is surviving well. It isn't something which is widely noticed but we in France--probably thanks to General de Gaulle's extraordinary gamble (although we are in the alliance, we are no longer members of the integrated military structure and we have a nuclear deterrent)--are less threatened by neutralism than the European countries which are integrated into NATO and which are asking questions about U.S. credibility, whereas I am not very worried.

There is a very high degree of consent on defense in this country. The young man or young woman who volunteers for the armed forces--and there are some!--must no longer say serving your time is a waste of time. Serving your time must really mean wanting to defend France and socialism.

The armed forces must really belong to the nation. The first steps we must take are in providing information and in communicating. The deputies can play an essential role. The army must be able to maneuver on free ground. There are no internal enemies for our armed forces. There are only external threats. The French people fully understand that. I have introduced all the daily newspapers into the barracks. I have appointed a general inspector and three inspectors to ensure that the regimental committees provided by Article 17 of general regulations function smoothly in all units. I will visit them personally.

People must be informed. The officers and NCO's cannot be expected to do everything--they have an enormous amount of work. People must be prepared for entry into the army, they must be prepared by schools, colleges and universities. There must be a partnership with the national education system. These are fundamental measures which will not be achieved in 6 months or 1 year. It is a state of mind which must change. France is worth defending. Everything is interdependent. I am simply the minister of military defense. France's defense is also what the Mauroy government does in the sphere of nationalization; it is struggling to regain possession of our brains, our industries and to ensure that the multinationals do not have the role which they are now playing. What would France be without an agricultural and food industry, without a computer industry, without an aeronautics industry or a French arms industry--a country in which we would defend an empty France whose brains and industries would be satellites?

In my view, defense is an all-embracing notion. Jacques Delors is a defense minister. Labor Minister Jean Auroux is a defense minister. Alain Savary and Jean-Pierre Chevenement are defense ministers and I am only the minister of military defense. I put myself in my place.

"The Ministers Do Not Represent Their Party"

[Question] Other ministers are concerned with defense problems, especially the transport minister. Allied countries have taken exception to the fact that a Communist transport minister might have access to defense matters.

[Answer] At the cabinet meetings all ministers are informed of the major problems on the agenda. The members of the cabinet are all aware of their responsibilities and there is no reason to doubt their patriotism, absolutely none whatever.

Regarding the transport minister, it is true that he has to know the transport plans. I am not worried about this. When any crisis arises the defense minister will assume full powers. But I am not leveling accusations at anybody. The ministers in the government team show solidarity. They do not represent their party. The president and the premier can be relied on to ensure that there will be no such anxiety in defense--a sphere which, I would like to remind you, concerns the president who is supreme commander of the armed forces. Moreover, our partners in the alliance are perfectly well aware of that.

[Question] On what specific criteria--other than the signing of individual contracts--will French arms sales to foreign countries be based?

[Answer] That is an excellent question. For the time being, France is honoring previous contracts. Why? To tell the truth, we would not have signed all of them. But we feel that France's word must be kept. Nonetheless, there are exceptions. For instance, it is not possible to supply street fighting equipment to Chile. It is not possible to supply arms to South Africa.

You know that the defense minister plays a very major role in these affairs since I am responsible for the arsenals, for controlling the arms industries which employ 300,000 people. It would be crazy to say that France will no longer export any weapons. If we did, we would have to abandon a French defense system because the cost of our weapons would be so high that the French Army would not be able to buy them.

When we were in opposition, we said that arms sales should be moralized. This is a rather surprising word to use when talking about weapons. Well, on the basis of the new markets being proposed to us, we must now gradually make the necessary changes and define a new policy which excludes notoriously fascist and racist countries. If the client states did not buy from France, they would buy from some other country in any case. However, France does not impose conditions which amount to interference and satellization and we do not accept conditions which might be imposed on us by the countries to which we sell weapons.

[Question] Some French-and English-speaking African countries request military support from France. On what bases will the overseas military policy (cooperation) and presence of troops on detachment be organized?

[Answer] When an alliance with military agreements is signed, those agreements must be honored or else they should not be signed. We presently have such agreements with African countries. They must be respected. That also means that France must have the means to carry out an overseas intervention, in other words, it must be equipped appropriately. We must have intervention forces. It isn't a question of exploiting those countries and indulging in neocolonialism. Do you know that, in this particular sphere, we are presently not able to accept all the foreign trainee officers applying to our French military schools?

This cooperation must be developed, provided that the independence of those countries is respected and that French troops never intervene without being asked to do so and without the express agreement of the leaders of those countries. Our troops' mission must also be to protect our nationals if they should happen to be molested or threatened. That is the spirit in which I view these cooperation agreements, in other words, the spirit which the president himself defined, which is the spirit of a North-South relationship.

[Question] In a book which was published at the end of 1980, you disputed the generally accepted idea of the Soviet Union's nuclear and conventional supremacy and you condemned the alarmist propaganda of ultra-Atlanticists. Mitterrand points out that the SS-20 missiles have contributed to the military imbalance in Europe and that we must now arm in order to negotiate. Are you still of the same opinion?

[Answer] I feel that, from the conventional viewpoint, Soviet supremacy is indisputable and that is what I wrote. In the book I wrote last summer, it did not seem to me that the strategic nuclear balance between the two superpowers had been affected. It is true that since then the Soviet Union has increased its SS-20 capability and, in 1 year, their number has been considerably increased. Nonetheless, it must be admitted that, rather than see the United States in turn deploy more weapons in the European countries, it would be better to start negotiations.

I do not want the French nuclear deterrent force to be taken into account in those discussions. It must not be added to the American force, it must remain independent. I also think--and I wrote this at the time--that there is a certain American military-industrial propaganda which pushed and is pushing the United States to equip itself with excessive arms. Today there is also an essential difference between the time when I wrote my book and the present situation. There are two new men on the world stage--Reagan and Mitterrand. President Reagan, about whom so many stories have been told, will be a great statesman. He is surrounded by a remarkable team. There will undoubtedly be greater understanding than people think between these two men who have nothing in common on either the ideological or the political plane. Basically, each is trying to restore his own country's identity.

FRANCE WILLING TO RECONSTRUCT IRAQI REACTOR

LD161740 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] The Iraqi nuclear reactor stands the best chance of being reconstructed at Tammuz, first because Baghdad has found the money to finance the work--Saudi Arabia is willing to pay--and second because France is willing to reconstruct what was destroyed by the Israeli aircraft.

This has been confirmed at the Quai d'Orsay. Only Iraq's request is being awaited. Cheysson simply states that the checks aimed at preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons will be increased two-, three-or even four-fold.

LE MONDE REPORTS ON MITTERRAND-SCHMIDT TALKS

PM161315 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Jul 81 p 3

[Bernard Brigouleix report: "Mitterrand Praised 'Exemplary Nature' of Relations Between Bonn and Paris"]

[Text] Bonn--The French-German meeting ended on the afternoon of Monday, 13 July, with a dinner which Mitterrand gave for President Carstens and Chancellor Schmidt at Ernich Castle, the French ambassador's residence. During the dinner, the French president proposed a particularly warm toast to this guest, praising the "precious and irreplaceable intimacy which has been forged between our two nations," speaking of their "historic role" and their "prominent place in the Europe they must build together." He saw the fact that Schmidt was his first visitor in Paris after his election as a "symbol of the exemplary nature" of relations between the two countries.

In reply, Carstens stated: "Never before has there been such political and economic cooperation between Germans and Frenchmen. This French-German friendship now no longer depends on day-to-day political events."

At this reception, to which the leaders of the various West German parties had been invited in keeping with tradition in the FRG, Mitterrand spoke in particular with Brandt. The SPD chairman informed him chiefly about the impressions received during his recent trip to Moscow--a trip which is still causing a great deal of controversy.

Prior to that, Schmidt and Mitterrand granted the now traditional joint news conference. The chancellor made do with a brief statement welcoming the fact that "the same state of mind still prevails in French-German relations"--a state of mind which "is embodied in the French president and his premier." "My conviction that this cooperation will continue to be close in the coming years has been confirmed," Schmidt concluded.

Mitterrand, for his part, made a more detailed analysis of French-German cooperation as he sees it. He stated: "Coming to Germany in these circumstances creates a feeling of contributing to the construction of a great edifice.... I am pleased that, over long conversations on many subjects, I was able to extend my personal acquaintance with Chancellor Schmidt and our capacity to work together.... The preferential friendship between France and Germany is still a cornerstone in the process of building West Europe and the Community...but it is also a decisively important factor on the international political scene." The French president welcomed the fact that "sound agreements" were in general reached.

In fact, not very many practical or immediate decisions seem to have been made in Bonn. If, as is probable, joint initiatives are to be taken in the coming months, especially in the European sphere, their precise content and timetable remains to be defined. These spheres of concerted action can be grouped under four headings:

Going Into Things "In Depth" in Ottawa

I--The international monetary situation: "Our common approach will be asserted next week when we meet in Ottawa," Mitterrand stated. Paris and Bonn are agreed on discussing--but will it be entirely with one voice?--relations between the industrialized and developing countries at that meeting, particularly the role which the World Bank (notably on energy questions) and the IMF could play in this connection and relations between West Europe, Japan and the United States. Above all, as the chancellor noted, "the seventh summit should once again bind us on not giving way to the temptation to pursue egotistical economic, commercial and monetary policies." Mitterrand and Schmidt will together urge Reagan to see that the United States stabilizes the dollar and abandons an interest rate policy which is seriously upsetting the capital market.

During the morning session, Cheysson stressed that the Ottawa meeting should be the opportunity for "real discussion" going "to the root of the matter" without "verbiage." The French external relations minister nonetheless expressed the hope that the necessary frankness will not endanger the equally necessary Western cohesion.

For his part, [Economy and Finance Minister] Delors expressed the desire to see the 20-21 July conference tackle the general problem of relations between the dollar and the European Monetary System, which Schmidt praised. Nonetheless, although the Federal Government head showed "great understanding" toward the objectives of French economic, social and monetary policy, he pointed out to his interlocutors that Bonn is less free regarding borrowing, especially European borrowing, owing to the FRG's already considerable debt.

Something More From the Soviets

II--Security and disarmament problems: Questioned on his statements to STERN in which he said that the modernization of NATO's nuclear arsenal was a precondition to new preliminary peace negotiations with Moscow (an idea which came at a good time to support Schmidt's position), Mitterrand replied: "Rearming is, in any case, what we are now doing since, to my knowledge, no negotiations have begun. The bases for these future negotiations must be clear and the Western leaders must say how they view a possible agreement.... My country has an autonomous nuclear deterrent force, but the state of the world balance concerns me, especially the European balance.... The point of negotiations is to ensure that there is no longer any threat to anybody. I expect something more from the Soviets. if something else is said, I will judge it as France's leader. But I know perfectly well that the situation is different for the German people.... The United States must not end up seeking strength for its own sake or even a dominant position of strength."

"Joint Approach" on the European Budget

There was also French-German agreement on the Madrid CSCE: The two countries would like to see a new initiative taken before the end of the month if a specific mandate is to be achieved on the conference on disarmament in Europe this fall. As for Afghanistan, the two delegations expressed the view that, despite Moscow's refusal to open negotiations on this subject, Lord Carrington's recent approach on this subject was a positive element since not all the European proposals were rejected by the Kremlin, "at least the Soviets have not closed the door," Genscher pointed out.

III--Functioning of the Community institutions: Although Mitterrand and Mauroy had the opportunity to mention the notion of a "European social area," which was proposed in Luxembourg, it was mainly budgetary questions which occupied the delegations' attention. A "joint approach to the budget debate" should be drawn up "in the near future," according to one of the participants. This means that there is still some way to go. At least France gave the FRG an agreement in principle on harmonizing positions.

The French stances have not yet been officially decided on the three points which West German Finance Minister Matthoeffer put to Delors and to [Budget Minister] Fabius. In fact, Bonn is asking for the value added tax contribution to the Community budget not to exceed 1 percent in 1982, for the expenditure due to the Common Agricultural Policy to increase less rapidly than Community receipts in the long term and for an attempt to be made to reduce that expenditure in the short term. Only the first request produced a clearly positive reply from the French delegation. In addition, agreement was reached on the desire for better cooperation between the Ten's Council of Ministers and the EEC assembly to ensure that it is possible to avoid hitches like the one which occurred last fall over the supplementary budget and to ensure that the Community's general budget is no longer automatically increased.

IV--Bilateral Questions: During a fairly lengthy discussion on the cultural aspects of cooperation, Mitterrand confirmed that the information institute on contemporary Germany, which Giscard d'Estaing proposed in Bonn last year, would be set up in Paris with a branch in Strasbourg. Schmidt also was invited to personally visit Mitterrand this fall.

Furthermore, on the subject of the nationalizations planned in France, it was indicated that West German interests, like all interests foreign countries might have in the firms to be nationalized, will "be scrupulously respected." Finally, [Defense Minister] Hernu recalled to his West German counterpart Apel France's attachment to the plan for the joint construction of a new battle tank. He expressed the hope that this plan, which has marked time for many months, might finally be concluded.

PCI'S NATTA REPORTS ON POLITICAL SITUATION

PM160710 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 2 Jul 81 pp 6-7

[Report on PCI Secretariat member Alessandro Natta 1 July report to PCI Central Committee meeting in Rome]

[Excerpts] Character and Political Implications of 21 June Election Results

Natta devoted the first part of his report to the evident and major national and political importance of the 21 June elections--not only because of the scale of the consultation but also because the elections were inevitably indicated as an opportunity for starting a stocktaking of the country's political leadership and government. The political significance of the elections has, moreover, been strongly accentuated (and, Natta pointed out, it was logical and right for us to vigorously highlight and emphasize it) following the extraordinary success of the "no" votes in the referendum on abortion; and particularly after the Forlani government was engulfed by the vast unprecedented P-2 scandal, which again emphatically posed the issue of the causes and political responsibilities for a degenerative process in the system and in democratic order that has involved the DC, but also other government parties, the public institutions, administration and apparatus and the security services.

It must be said, Natta added, that it was not only the crisis of the government and, more fundamentally, of the DC power system, followed by the failed attempts to restore a DC-led four-party government and the innovative appointment of Spadolini to the post that helped to increase the political significance of the elections and to focus attention on the major issues of the reform and regeneration of society and the state. Influence in this direction was undoubtedly also exerted by international events, especially the 10 May-21 June battle in France that led first to Mitterrand's election and then to the spectacular success of the PS, the left and the democratic alignment gathered around the president of the republic.

We immediately and clearly stressed--correctly and without any obsession with the Mitterrand "effect"--the exceptional importance, not only for France but for Europe, of a political change achieved through a lengthy and tough fight against the conservative alignment and the Giscard regime, along the line of an alternative and unity that was not abandoned, despite disagreements and clashes on the left, and for prospects and a program of regeneration and reform of the economic and social structures, for a new kind of development that will make it possible to surmount the crises of capitalist societies and of the experiments in the social state. The awareness of the diversity of the political situations and institutional orders in France and our own country and of the fact that the challenge of the change will certainly have to contend with complex problems and difficult tests could not and still cannot, however lessen the value of the example given by the change of direction, its political significance, its very advanced policy substance and its autonomous approach in the international field; and also, it can now be added, by the historic end of a discrimination in Western Europe with the French Communists' government participation and with the clear and proud assertion--in the face of crude and grave U.S. interference and warnings--not only by the majority but also by the opposition, of France's right to choose its governments and policy freely.

The Polish events, which experienced another tense moment at the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] 10-11 June Central Committee meeting, were also in people's minds and also exerted an influence, though perhaps less than at other times and in a less widespread and penetrating manner than the French elections--not only because polemics with the socialist countries have continued to be a constant theme of propaganda, particularly on the DC's part, but also because of the undoubted influence on democratic and leftwing opinion of events that are questioning the ability of a communist party, the Polish one, to tackle a profound crisis and to lead to a positive outcome an arduous and complicated process of democratic regeneration of the economy and the state.

The debate and conclusions of the June Central Committee meeting, the reply to the CPSU letter--with the acknowledgement of the well-founded nature of the anxieties and, at the same time, the reaffirmation of the party's autonomy and national responsibility--and the development of the congress campaign have again highlighted the difficulty and arduousness of the task facing the Polish communists. But they also took a positive step forward with their determination to carry forward the policy of reforms facing up in a balanced and steadfast manner to the splittist, adventurist and anarchist-type thrusts and threats and to the hindrances of the conservative restraints, and vigorously urging everyone's responsible commitment to prevent the collapse of the Polish economy.

I believe that the Central Committee must now confirm our confidence in the Polish people and workers and it must confirm our full support and most heartfelt good wishes to the PZPR, whose task it is, in complete autonomy and without any interference of any kind and in cooperation with all the forces of Polish society, ranging from the trade unions to the church, to renew and advance Poland while safeguarding the socialist gains, national independence and its delicate role in Europe's balance and peace.

There is no doubt, therefore, of the meaning and the political importance of the 21 June [Italian] elections, though this emphasis could not--nor was this, of course, reflected in the approach to and conduct of our campaign--overshadow or drastically subordinate the prime and specific factor in the elections, namely decisions and choices concerning local government. It would be wrong to underestimate the influence exerted--as in previous regional and local elections--by the various individual elements of the popular contest and verdict; the validity or otherwise of the experiences in government or opposition; the substance or otherwise of the prospects indicated; the use of local and national power levers; the fielding of a much larger number of candidates than in the general election; and the recourse, particularly in the south, to methods of patronage and "U.S.-style" rivalry between parties and individuals involving vast resources.

Confirming Democratic Alternative Line

Next Natta returned to the trend toward change reflected in the 21 June election results, albeit, he said, in a less clear and unambiguous direction and with a less vigorous thrust than in the 1975 and 1976 elections. Nevertheless, the challenging of the DC's leadership and centrality, its political and electoral weakening and the development of the overall strength of the left, the PCI and the PSI, are evident and substantial facts. Hasty superficiality is evinced in opinions expressed that the PCI has fallen short of the targets that it set itself with the November 1980 turning point, in remarks about the radicalization of the communists' opposition battle, the radical challenging of the DC's government practice and the accentuation of the emphasis given to the moral issue (which, it should be said in passing, has nothing to do with the so-called criminalization or diabolization of the DC), and in the comments about the polemic and criticism against the policy of PSI-DC cooperation under the banner of governability and on the basis of reasserted prejudices against our party. Above all, these verdicts fail to take into account the fact that, if we had not fiercely countered the plans and approaches characteristic of DC-led governments since 1979, their specific action and often their "nongovernment," then the demand for and trend toward regeneration would have made no progress, the topics of moral, political and institutional reform would not now be on the agenda, as in fact they are, and probably even the partial but important change in the prime ministership would still be, as Comrade Craxi has said, simply the candidacy of "Mr Nobody."

We believe, Alessandro Natta stressed, that we have done what was necessary for an opposition party and a major democratic and national force to do. The elections have proved us right, not wrong.

Partly from their results, but more fundamentally from the country's serious and in many respects tragic situation, from the lesson of events in France and also from the hard-fought and unpredictable process of renewal in Poland, the international crisis and tensions and the exacerbation of financial and economic relations between the United States and Europe, we now draw a stronger conviction of the validity of our political strategy and of the value and topicality of the proposal of the democratic alternative. Of course, it must be stressed that as far as we are concerned the significance of the alternative lies not in predetermining any particular alignment but in the substance and contents of a policy of regeneration and of new economic development. The need for a break away from the DC's power system stems not only or principally from corruption in public life and implies not only a task of moral reform or some kind of purging or regeneration of the DC. The issue behind so many scandalous and dangerous matters, the latest and most extreme of which is the P-2 scandal, is that of state reform within the framework of the constitution; the full restoration of democratic and constitutional logic in the formation of majorities and government. Nobody has yet made any serious correction of the erroneous and stupid thesis that the PCI can belong to a majority but not to a government; moreover, I do not believe that any government leader has yet dared express any agreement with or backing for the free options taken in France. It is a matter of the distinction between parties and state, between the parties' role and the government's function; of the correct relationship between the executive and parliament; of justice--to use an ancient but once again valid term--in public administration; of promptness and correctness; and of the "rule of law" in the functioning of the machinery of the state, the institutions and the services, and thus in relations with the citizens.

How To Tackle Inflation

It is clear that we are proposing to and must carry forward, without hesitations or surrender, our battle in this field of moral and institutional regeneration and renewal of democracy, which we link closely to our consistent and steadfast antiterrorist commitment. We will take action, from the opposition, on these test benches and, of course, on the decisive test bench of socioeconomic policy, the anti-inflation struggle, and for new development and progress to free southern Italy from dependence and subordination, so as to achieve positive results, provide specific and valid answers to the need for honesty. security, justice and progress, and lend specific substance, vigor and irresistible persuasiveness to the idea of a democratic alternative, of a change in the classes and forces in the country's political leadership.

We are well aware that to this end our party must specify and refine, with the utmost clarity and consistency, its program proposals--starting with the preparation of an economic policy--and that it must improve its capacity for political and mass initiative.

Following the failure--in this field as in others--of the experiments carried out by the Cossiga and Forlani governments, there is now a dramatically pressing need to turn down the path of the anti-inflation struggle. The situation is serious and worrying and could get out of control. Inertia and irresponsibility have characterized government action in recent months and the measures taken have constituted a further stimulus to inflation or such large-scale and indiscriminate squeezes as to impart a thrust to recession, with very serious effects on employment and the country's industrial and economic future. On the other hand, however, an outright campaign has been staged aimed at portraying labor costs as the main cause of inflation and a maneuver has been developed to involve the trade union movement in a majority and government outlook, with serious consequences for the trade union movement's autonomy and unity.

There must be a determined change of path. We do not hesitate to state that the first initiative taken by the Spadolini government with last Sunday's meeting with the trade unions and employers' confederation is to be valued for the balanced way in which it was conducted and for the realistic approach to it taken by the prime minister.

Noteworthy was the abandonment--which hopefully will be lasting, not merely tactical--of confused and irresponsible maneuvers in connection with the so-called "social contract" designed to fetter the trade union movement and violate its autonomy.

Inflation must be countered with satisfactory policies that will tackle its structural causes, ranging from energy to agriculture, industrial crises to the services, and so forth. Determined, concerted action on the European level must also be carried out in defense against the dollar policy dictated by the Reagan administration.

It is also necessary to work to increase production and productivity in all areas of the economy.

Our Party's European Identity

Will the Spadolini government manage to present Parliament with a new economic policy, determinedly anti-inflationist and anti-recessionary and socially fair? Natta asked. We shall see, we shall judge objectively what is presented to us and what the government is capable of doing. We are not setting our sights on the worst and we do not want an exacerbation of the social conflict. For this reason, too, we hope the government will manage to say something responsible and reassuring and will, above all, work to ensure, for example, that the Fiat management fully honors the agreements signed with the trade unions last fall; that the so-called denationalization of Montedison (decided outside any parliamentary debate) does not involve demobilizations and dismissals; that the crisis in so many industrial activities, large and small, public and private, does not lead to increased unemployment, especially in the south; and that the reconstruction of the quake-hit areas proceeds responsibly and vigorously.

Only a government capable of tackling these and other matters can address the trade unions and the workers and request, for the country's sake, increased production and productivity and a responsible attitude to all the problems of labor costs. We welcomed the news that common sense has prevailed within the employers confederation and that the 1975 agreement on the escalator was not rejected. If this had happened, a very bitter struggle would certainly have ensued; and I believe it unnecessary, since it is obvious, to repeat, that we and all our forces would have been on the side of the workers and the trade union movement. We believe that the way is now open for autonomous negotiations among the social partners on all aspects concerning labor costs, and we hope that such negotiations will begin at once and can reach positive conclusions. Our positions in this regard are well known. The defense of the real value of salaries and pensions against the onslaught of inflation must be guaranteed. We are and will remain absolutely immovable on this point. It is to be hoped that conflicts and differences on this and other points will be surmounted within the trade union movement, and we believe (and would like to repeat again) that they key way to resolve the differences is through the full exercise of trade union democracy and the consultation of the workers.

To establish an alternative we must at the same time make a commitment to develop our strategy, specifying our view of the future of Italy and Europe, the ideas of Eurocommunism, the third way and the new internationalism, the value of which we reasserted a few days ago in the meeting with the PCE and to whose resumption and progress in Europe we must work with a more intensive political and cultural effort. Nevertheless, we must warn those who urge us and invite us in a friendly manner to declare ourselves more explicitly "European" and "part of European socialism" against possible ambiguities. Our policy, Natta explained, has moved forward, has gained strength and prestige even outside Italy, and has undergone some very significant innovations, while still remaining consistent with a fundamental tradition and approach that have been common to the vast majority of the Italian workers movement and of its component parties (the PCI, but also the PSI), and that have distinguished the Italian workers movement and left from social-democratic-type experiences.

It is not a matter of wanting to be arrogantly different from other people. It is a matter of recognizing and safeguarding a particular political character that we consider an enduring element in our strength and a fundamental guarantee for our country's development in a socialist direction today. In any case, this PCI identity is fully European, and we have no need to portray ourselves as the French socialist party's alter ego to this end. However, anyone who reasons independently of schemes might perhaps have some doubts about the consistency with the so-called European model even of a party such as the French Socialist Party, which reemerged after a heavy defeat of the French section of the workers international's clearly social democratic approach, and which advanced on the basis of a program of reforms and a policy of left-wing unity which it would certainly be difficult to reduce to the level of or to identify with the experiences of other social democratic parties. So, the commitment in imparting the most consistent and courageous development to our strategy and the quest on the European plane for broader political agreements and unitary initiatives between the communist and the socialist and social democratic forces, based, as far as we are concerned, on a clear awareness of the European value and the importance for a democratic and socialist development of Europe of our party's historical and political heritage.

Alternative and PCI-PSI Relations

Next Natta stressed the need to stand firm on the following point: not to reduce the democratic alternative to and not to rank it with the leftwing alternative or the alignment of parties to the left of the DC, though there could have been no doubts or misunderstandings (either at the time of the November appeal for a change or during subsequent political developments) about the fact that we considered relations with the PSI essential to a policy of regeneration and democratic transformation. In confirming this point he made some observations.

The first concerns the importance of the progress achieved by the PSI. Political rivalry within the left is entirely legitimate and useful. Nobody can claim hereditary mandates, reserved areas or delimited areas of action. The rule always applies that he who has the strongest thread will weave the best cloth. However, Natta said, we are dealing with something quite different (something that I consider negative and dangerous) in the Socialists' approach aimed at subordinating a policy of understanding and a unitary battle for a change in the country's leadership to a prior rebalancing or redistribution of forces and, some people are now saying, even to an "overtaking," be it French-style or Bari-style. One indication of Mitterrand's political intelligence is the fact that he never made either the prior establishment of a balance of forces favorable to himself or the demand for an ideological revision preconditions for an understanding between socialists and communists.

The thesis of a rebalancing or alteration of the balance of forces within the left in fact threatens to be a cause of diversion, by shifting the center of the battle--with little constructive purpose if the real intention is to pursue a leftwing policy. Or it could become basically a wait-and-see attitude, which in the present Italian situation could mean missing real opportunities and chances. Otherwise, it means opting for a different policy destined to remain within the horizon of the center-left.

The thesis of a rebalancing, in fact, raises a fundamental political issue. The PSI has tried, hitherto with partial success, to exploit the objective factor of the ambiguity of its position.

On the one hand, it has carried forward its competitive cooperation with the DC, under the banner of necessary governability, variously either accentuating or playing down the political value of this option or almost dismissing it as an actual necessity (by arguing that the numerical conditions do not exist for alternatives and, recently, that the legislature cannot be governed without an agreement with the DC) and now by imparting to its consent to join the Spadolini government the character of a necessary pledge, but only for a limited solution, not for the duration of the legislative period, and increasingly regarding further general elections as a possibility. On the other hand, the PSI has maintained broad and positive cooperation with our party in the government of local and regional administrations, though with the constant and increasingly insistent refrains--following the breakup of the democratic unity majority and our differing political and parliamentary stances--that the obstacles to and difficulties with a fundmental political agreement stem from our failure to acknowledge the PSI's role, our hegemonic presumption, delays in the ideological and political revision of our stances, factious attacks on governments including socialists, and so forth.

This line might have facilitated electoral progress, but we must now again present the PSI with the problems that existed before 21 June, but which have become more acute.

Since the elections, there has been a great hullaballoo within the secular-socialist area concerning an alternative based on this alignment, naturally following a lengthy transition via cooperation with the DC. But clearly--and the Socialist comrades certainly cannot be unaware of this--many of the propagandist advocates of such a prospect are aiming not at a real political change but, if anything, at a reorganization of the present system. Nor can the Socialist leaders really believe that the Italian situation is at present frozen by bipolarism rather than by the permanent burden of the preclusions against the PCI and the paralyzing crisis of the DC, and that it is feasible to resolve such a situation of instability and uncertainty without waging an all-out battle against the DC's power system, without demanding the participation in the nation's political leadership of the leftwing forces as a whole.

The change in the government leadership, Natta pointed out, is not unimportant, and the Communists worked as vigorously as possible to ensure that the government would be led by a non-Christian Democrat. However, much tenacity and shrewdness is employed in the tortuousness of Socialist policy, this professed desire to pursue an alternative to the DC (through still leaving it somewhat indefinite as to whether it is a socialist, "leftwing" or "democratic" alternative) by means of an alliance--albeit incomplete and conflictual--with the DC. It is difficult not to see that such a course is becoming increasingly dangerous and destined to prompt suspicious resistance, a counterattack or countermeasures from the present interlocutor or to raise doubts about whether the goal indicated really is the one being aimed at--indeed rather more than doubts, if one bears in mind Craxi's latest remark that he sees no "possibility of a communist-led leftwing alternative in Western Europe."

Natta stressed the need to reject the idea behind this assertion, even though the proposal in question is not in fact exactly the same as the one put forward by the Communists. But, he added, are there not major doubts about the realism and feasibility of a Socialist-led leftwing alternative, which seems to be the latest version of the PCI's proposal? That is, unless the leap forward to 50 percent on the part of the secular-socialist area which Craxi envisages (as a deterrent, it seems to me), in the event of an agreement between the two major parties excluding the intermediary parties and to the detriment of the PSI, actually takes place.

But, irrespective of designs and calculations on the prospects, which vary and are often confused in these polemics, the fact remains that in the present attitude of the PSI, whose main concern and aim is to achieve greater weight as a party, there seems to be an insufficient awareness of the gravity of the country's situation, the pressing need for a break away from and real improvement on the political and power system centered on the DC, and the seriousness of the crisis affecting that party.

The PCI's critical objections to the ambiguous elements in the socialists' policy, and its stronger reassertion of the need for a democratic alternative and for a development of relations and understanding between Communists and Socialists also reflect the need to grant no respite, to provide the maximum stimulus for a process of revision and changes of approach, ideas and political conduct within the DC itself, and a new deployment of democratic and progressive Catholic forces.

Spadolini Government and PCI Opposition

Natta made an initial and rapid assessment of the government issue, pointing out that a complete assessment can be made and a specific stance adopted in Parliament when the prime minister's program has been presented. Having stressed that the PCI has considered it positive and important that the task of forming a government was not entrusted to a DC leader, Natta also recalled the acknowledgement of Senator Spadolini's intentions to create a government which--in the formulation of its program and in the methods and criteria for its composition and for selecting its ministers--would mark a restoration and correct implementation of constitutional norms and satisfy the country's needs rather than the parties' interests or political calculations.

Lost Opportunity

The full political significance of the innovation, breaking a 35-year chain, of a government headed by a non-Christian Democrat must be reasserted now that Senator Spadolini has managed to form the new government, and must remain for us an important element in determining the assessments and attitude of the party and its parliamentary groups.

But it must be stressed that the government's structure and composition fall seriously short of intentions and expectations and reduce at a stroke the significance of the change. Indeed, there is no sign of the innovation which Senator Spadolini pledged and which the parties asked to join the government did not seem to want to hinder. The criticism concerns not to much the fact that the number of ministers has been increased but that once again there has been a failure to tackle any of the problems regarding structure, rationalization and greater efficiency that are continually being raised in plans for reform, on whatever scale, even by the government parties, and which people then complain are not taken into consideration.

Unfortunately, no change is apparent with regard to composition; indeed it seems that the utmost has been done to emphasize and stress continuity. The distribution of posts among the parties was hotly contested. The idea of choosing among lists of candidates was short-lived, and an examination of the 15 DC ministers' names will show immediately that the traditional, balanced doling out among the currents was fully and scrupulously observed. The rule, therefore, remains the one that has always, thanks to the DC, governed the formation of all cabinets and that the DC leaders claimed as compensation to restore their party's centrality. Nor do we feel that the other parties gave any useful assistance to the prime minister-designate in ensuring the formation of a more highly qaulified government with different characteristics.

Apart from imposed or obligatory relinquishments and eliminations that emphasize its party-and current-oriented character, the cabinet list remains essentially the same as before and remains rather depressing. One regrets to have to say that an opportunity has been missed. Similarly, one cannot fail to be concerned by the fact that for a government which should have been "program-oriented," so to speak, so little attention was given to the line and solutions to be pursued, judging from the debate and the dialogue on the fundamental issues. Why is this? Natta asked. We are often urged to pay attention to the substance, to make a specific contribution to resolving the problems assailing the country; somebody has again criticized us for not giving Senator Spadolini greater credit. What credit was given him by his partners, if the program--what was to be done and how--was not the central topic of debate and failed to arouse strong feelings or quarrels among the parties about to govern, and if, instead, the doling out of posts and the usual dispute within the DC were the basic concern and obsession? Is this the way to form a new government, at such a worrying and grave time? Does it benefit in terms of authority and strength it, as soon as it is formed, people with considerable influence and responsibility within it state that its program is limited?

Another Crisis Already in Mind?

We will responsibly assess the prime minister's proposals and will also, of course, ask for an explanation of the program's limitations, but, in the meantime, we must point out that it is regrettable that it was decided at the outset to diminish the importance of the new government's program platform. Even more worrying and serious than this are the stances aimed at describing the Spadolini Cabinet as transitional, a truce--active, of course--a bridge, therefore of limited duration and scope.

It is extraordinary (though this has been happening for some time) that as soon as a government has been formed its very ministers are the first to start talking about the next one. It is disconcerting when the PSI secretary stresses that the nascent government is now the fourth in 2 years, while at the same time declaring that no agreement for the legislative term exists! It is lamentable that several sides take it for granted that in a few months' time there will be another government crisis and that this will probably be the last government of the legislative term. Nor does it seem a very convincing argument that this probability will in fact increase the government's strength!

We Are For Open Dialogue

The PCI's attitude to the Spadolini government must not be determined on the basis of interpretations and forecasts of this kind, though of course we must not underestimate their significance and even though they provide further confirmations of the need for a radical change that will extricate the country from the straits of instability, maneuvers and power games. There is no need to repeat that our party's aim is a democratic alternative government or to explain the reasons why we are adopting a clear opposition stance toward the new government, with full freedom of criticism and action. It would be opportune, however, to repeat that not only is there no prejudice on our part, but we are willing and keen to proceed to a more open and constructive dialogue, if the government really does pursue the aim outlined by Senator Spadolini and manages to seek correct relations with Parliament, to tackle--partly with the contribution of the opposition and in a true democractic dialectic--the acute and inalienable problems of moral reform, economic recovery and the struggle against subversive contaminations and terrorist attacks, and to commit itself to a policy on the part of our country and Europe that will autonomously and actively work for detente, nuclear arms reduction and the political solution of international conflicts and tensions.

Be that as it may, the Communists intend to be present and active in Parliament, as always, to assert their ideas and proposals and to wrest positive results. They must also broadly develop their initiative and arouse the movement of the workers and masses in connection with the central problems. We must be watchful, Natta concluded, and ready to tackle difficult situations and rapid, even traumatic developments; we must be aware that we are, more than ever, at a moment of truth for our party: this awareness is the prime condition for waging our battle properly and winning it.

TEXT OF PCI MESSAGE TO POLISH PARTY CONGRESS

PM161210 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 14 Jul 81 p 1

[Text of PCI Central Committee message to Polish United Workers Party (PZPR) Congress; first paragraph is L'UNITA introduction]

[Text] Rome--The PCI Central Committee has sent the following message to the PZPR Central Committee on the occasion of its extraordinary 10th congress:

Dear comrades, on the occasion of the 10th Extraordinary PZPR Congress, please accept the Italian Communists' fraternal greetings and good wishes for the congress proceedings and conclusions to strengthen the policy of socialist renewal being pursued by your party leadership.

The Italian Communists have followed very attentively, and not without anxiety, the troubled and agitated evolution of the events which have characterized Poland's political and social life over the past year and which have seen your mobilization in and commitment to the difficult task of renewal. The Italian Communists have always expressed their confidence and belief that the Polish Communists, workers and people will themselves perform their rightful task of resolving, by political means, the complex problems stemming from the serious crisis that opened up last August, on the basis of socialist gains and national independence and within the framework of Poland's international position.

The hope that we express for the Polish Communists' important assembly is that the renewal policy receive a precise pointer and a new thrust from the congress so that the PZPR--with the responsible cooperation of the other fundamental components of Polish society--will work more and more effectively to surmount the country's present difficulties, imparting new strength and vigor to socialism, by means of an original development of it that will prompt the broadest and most committed involvement of all workers and all the people's forces.

Dear comrades, mindful of the historical bonds which link our two peoples, from the national risorgimento to the antifascist and anti-NATO struggle and resistance and the battles of recent decades for the shared ideals of socialism and for the cause of European and world peace, detente and disarmament, to which socialist Poland has contributed major initiatives, the Italian Communists reiterate to you their good wishes and warm greetings.

PAPER VIEWS CATALONIAN CP CHAIRMAN'S OUSTER

PM161514 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 7 Jul 81 p 11

[Excerpts] The entry of five members of the "Euro" sector into the Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] Executive Committee immediately following Pere Ardiaca's dismissal closes the penultimate chapter of the process of return to the Eurocommunist strategy in the Catalonian communists' party. The national conference, to be held next weekend, thus appears to be the final and decisive act in the crisis created within the PSUC following the fifth congress.

Last weekend's PSUC Central Committee meeting ended with the forecast outcome: Pere Ardiaca was dismissed from the chairmanship, as LA VANGUARDIA already reported, and the Executive Committee was enlarged by five members to admit the Eurocommunist sector, both initiatives being at the proposal of the party's Executive Committee. In view of Ardiaca's reiterated stance of not accepting the policy laid down in the Central Committee's May resolution, he was dismissed at its meeting on Saturday by 58 votes in favor, 1 abstention and 33 votes against, in an unprecedented decision. Despite the secret nature of the vote, it is obviously to be assumed that the votes against belong to the members aligned in the pro-Soviet current, who through the medium of one of their top representatives in the Central Committee expressed their opposition to Ardiaca's dismissal during the meeting.

Self-Criticism

Party Secretary General "Paco" Frutos told journalists that the vacancy left by Ardiaca will remain "until the internal political process itself leads to the election of a new chairman," a task which in any event rests with the Central Committee and which foreseeably will have to wait until after the summer. Frutos did not deny that "there is now a good deal of internal tension in the party" and that it is foreseeable that it will culminate at the coming national conference and at the PCE congress itself. The PSUC secretary general emphasized that the controversy stemming from the fifth congress "has been vitiated from the outset by superficial approaches which made it impossible to enter into the real substance of political action." He criticized Ardiaca for not agreeing to implement the policy approved by the Central Committee in May. Frutos denied that he had been asked to recant but said that he had been asked to accept, as chairman, the Central Committee's majority decision.

Frutos, who acknowledged the objective danger of a possible split, although he denied having knowledge of imminent resignations within the party leadership, criticized with some harshness, although without being specific, "those comrades who before, during and after the fifth congress have maintained at the very least an irregular conduct," and he called on them to "conduct self-criticism." He also described as "irresponsible" public statements undermining the party leadership's authority and emphatically stated that in the PSUC "there is only one policy--that of the fifth congress." In this connection, Frutos stressed that the May political statement is not aimed at replacing the results of the last congress but at "restoring the party's political capability."

Ardiaca Disagrees

Following his dismissal from the PSUC chairmanship, Pere Ardiaca did not conceal his disagreement with the Central Committee's conduct. In statements to EUROPA PRESS, he said: "I am more interested in defending the decisions of the fifth congress than in being party chairman. My dismissal is not correct, just as the resolution of the last but one party Central Committee meeting," which returned to Eurocommunism "is not correct," Pere Ardiaca added. "The fifth congress voted by a majority to remove the name of Eurocommunism. The Central Committee is perfectly entitled to dismiss a chairman, but the problem is whether doing this does or does not implement the fifth congress' resolutions." Concerning the party's future, he said: "Now there will be more exasperation and party unity will be made more difficult. It is necessary to struggle for unity. And that requires a maximum degree of internal democracy and the respecting of communist democratic centralism, provided that it is observed by everybody. It is a difficult moment, but I have confidence."

NORWAY

BRUNDTLAND COMMENTS ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

DW161132 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1900 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Reporter Udo Philipp interview with Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland; in English with superimposed German translation; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Do you think it is realistic that the Soviets will remove their nuclear weapons from the proximity of the Norwegian borders?

[Answer] I believe that you must realize that the superpowers and the other nuclear powers must be willing to do something realistic if disarmament is to be realistic at all.

[Question] Do you think that the Soviets will take such a step?

[Answer] You ask me a very far-reaching question. We are not naive and only need to look at the European map and at the two superpowers. Naturally, we don't believe that Norway and the Scandinavian countries are in a situation that can be removed from the relations between the Soviet Union and the United States.

[Question] Are you happy about Willy Brandt's suggestion?

[Answer] He has not made a suggestion. He said something quite natural, I believe. It is Norway and the Scandinavian countries' business to see what is contained for Scandinavia in Brezhnev's suggestions. That is most natural and we will do this. It doesn't mean, however, that negotiations between Norway and the Soviet Union are involved. There will just be normal talks, if at all. We have our relations with the United States and the other Western allies, and this will be the main basis of our disarmament talks. We must talk with the Soviet Union and other East European countries to be aware of all problems to be discussed and to overcome the difficulties if we want disarmament negotiations to be successful.

[Question] So the main thing is relations with NATO and the policy of the alliance?

[Answer] That is absolutely essential. That is and will remain the case.

FRYDENLUND NOTE ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE ISSUE

WA161920 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 7 Jul 81 p 4

[Article: "Frydenlund on Nuclear-Free Zone: A Good Issue in the Labor Party Election Campaign."]

[Text] Soviet territory will not be included in a nuclear-weapons free zone in the Nordic area, asserted Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund in an internal memorandum to Labor Party representatives. The foreign minister stated that a plank in the Labor Party program regarding a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area can be good issue for the party in the election campaign.

The contents of the note, according to a disclosure on the television news program, were presented to the Labor Party Central Committee, where they were unanimously approved. The views contained in the note are also the basis for the talks which the Labor Party deputy chairman, Einar Forde, will have with the [Soviet] party leaders in Moscow on nuclear-free zones.

Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund goes into more details in this note than he has earlier on what a Nordic nuclear-weapons-free zone would possibly contain.

He expressly states that Soviet territory will not be included in such a zone. On the other hand, Soviet weapons which can threaten targets in the Nordic countries must also be the subject of an [arms] reduction, in a European context. Moreover, a study must be made to see if air and sea areas shall be included in a nuclear-weapons-free zone. Frydenlund is referring to the fact that Sweden is emphasizing, among other things, the inclusion of the Soviet nuclear-missile submarines in a nuclear-weapons free zone.

Frydenlund warned in the note against a Nordic nuclear-weapons-free zone being established as an isolated measure. It will not provide any added security. To assert anything else is a deception, he writes.

The foreign minister greatly emphasized that guarantees for such a zone should be given by the United States and the Soviet Union, but thinks that the Soviet Union has already in advance refused to include Soviet territory in nuclear-weapons-free zone, and that the United States has adopted a skeptical tone toward the entire proposal.

AFTENPOSTEN Editorial

WA162002 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 8 Jul 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Political Irresponsibility."]

[Text] The government and the Labor Party are playing at high stakes with Norway's security interests. The increasing and understandable fear people have of nuclear weapons is now definitely being used as a tool in the Labor Party election campaign.

This appears with complete clarity from a note which Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund sent to the representatives in the Labor Party, and in which he states that the question of a Nordic nuclear-weapons-free zone can be "a good issue" for the Party, provided that they avoid being concrete. Since the government is being pressured from all sides to commit itself to definite formulations, the foreign minister says frankly that it is a matter of maintaining the ambiguity which was intended certainly in shaping the point in question in the Labor Party's new program: "Norway will work for a nuclear-weapons-free area as part of the effort to reduce nuclear weapons in a broader European context."

The foreign minister's note proves a cynical use of a vital security issue which, apparently, is intended for short range political gain for the party. On numerous occasions we have pointed out the damaging effects which the government's and Labor Party's ambiguous game could have in a fateful international situation, and not the least one in which NATO is pressing for starting negotiations between East and West on nuclear disarmament in Europe. When Norway's foreign minister, who is the one presumably most responsible for our foreign and security policies also lets himself be tempted to go along, and even contributes himself to the political irresponsibility, then there is reason for sounding the alarm. We understand well that even party people are beginning to feel deep uneasiness and frustration over the drift they are witness to within the government party regarding defense and security policies.

It is extremely disturbing when the foreign minister on one hand seeks to urge the representatives to use the issue in the election campaign, while, on the other hand, conceding that an isolated Nordic solution will be a deception. According to the foreign minister's own statement, such a solution, since it would remain an isolated Nordic measure, could not contribute to a reduction of the role of nuclear weapons in Europe or aid in a process in that direction.

But ambiguity on the Labor Party's stance shall most likely prevail, and the party's earlier chairman, Reiulf Steen, who is still the chairman in the Storting Foreign and Constitution Committees, is doing his obvious utmost to increase the confusing. Steen emphasized that a treaty-guaranteed nuclear-weapons-free Nordic zone is independent of, or need not come simultaneously with, measures in all of Europe. And we ask: Is this then the Labor Party's official position?

We will appeal as often as we can to the government and the Labor Party leadership that it must not create more confusion on Norway's position on these vital questions for security in Europe. It is also in the interests of the Nordic countries that the question on the nuclear-free zone be included in the negotiated solutions between NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

STOLTENBERG'S VIEWS ON EUROMISSILES, SECURITY

PM170752 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 1 Jul 81 p 7

[Paal Nordenborg interview with Norwegian Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg: "The Goal Is That the Missiles Should Not Be Deployed"]

[Text] A living white dove was given to Thorvald Stoltenberg by friends as an advance gift at a celebration of his 50th birthday last Friday. What sort of bird is the defense minister? In this interview he explains what he means by "extended security policy."

Thorvald Stoltenberg answered "no" when asked if the so-called COB [expansion unknown, but presumably relates to contingency stockpiling accords] aggrements with the United States conflict with the goal of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. The defense minister also said that it is important that we attach some urgency to following up the NATO dual resolution from December 1979, and that the goal of the negotiations is to avoid the deployment of the Euromissiles totally.

[Question] Not so long ago you predicted that we were nearing the final phase in the Conservative Party's reaction to nuclear-free zones. Now the Conservative Party, together with the Christian People's Party and the Center Party, have at least not been negative about the zone. You were not surprised?

[Answer] No. I am not surprised that the Conservative Party first ridicules a new proposal and then fights it, only to finally support it when it has been forward. I have always assumed that that is what is called conservative policy.

[Question] The fact that the nuclear-free zone proposal made by Reiulf Steen is now being discussed not only in Norway but in other countries too must be a victory for the Labor Party?

[Answer] I do not like to use expressions like victory and defeat. They would introduce prestige or stagnation into the work toward an important goal. What is important and pleasing is that the nonsocialist parties in their commentaries on the government's long-term program admit the importance of nuclear-free zones. They would hardly have done so if others had not raised the question for them.

[Question] What is your view of Brezhnev's recent demarche?

[Answer] I have not read what Brezhnev said. But if it is true that he is indicating that a zone could include Soviet arms, this is important. It shows that he is basing his approach on reciprocity, and reciprocity in a broader East-West context is the key to setting disarmament endeavors in motion.

[Question] A nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area would make a contribution to the reduction of nuclear arms in a broader European context, it is said. Will the so-called COB treaties which the United States has signed with Norway and other allies to establish bases for U.S. aircraft in crisis or war not conflict with such a goal?

[Answer] No. The reinforcements Norway would ask for in a situation when the country would be under attack or facing the danger of attack would be conventional arms. The Norwegian Government would have to make a special request or give special permission for our allies to bring in nuclear arms. It is this latter possibility we are prepared to abandon in order to arrange a zone, providing it makes a contribution to the greater security of our country by reducing the number of nuclear arms in the East and West.

[Question] You have made yourself a spokesman for an "extended security policy." What does this involve?

[Answer] That in the final analysis the aim of security policy is to create just and stable conditions economically, socially and politically. We have been relatively successful in achieving this for Norway, but in the international field there is still much to be done.

Security policy is often equated with defense policy. But this is too narrow. Security for peoples and nations is created by having a good defense force and by pursuing activities for arms control and in the disarmament field.

The greatest danger for people in both the North and South is the fact that the majority of the world's inhabitants live with hunger and deprivation. Attempts have been made to do something about this through negotiations, particularly in the last decade. But these have led to relatively few results, and no results which the people in the developing countries have been able to see.

This means that we are moving into a time when the majority of the earth's population could see the use of force as their chief means of assuring themselves of a better future. Combined with the danger of the spread of nuclear arms, this makes international terrorism one of the biggest threats facing us in the coming years. In the light of this, the work toward a new world economic order is also work toward increasing our security. Hitherto, it has almost been seen as charitable work.

[Question] Is this your message as defense minister?

[Answer] Yes.

[Question] After a few fairly brisk exchanges of opinion on the distribution of defense spending between the United States and Europe, it looks as if the U.S. criticism of Europe has been toned down somewhat. Has understanding between the United States and Europe been reestablished on a new foundation allowing greater freedom of action with regard to each other?

[Answer] It is true that the new U.S. administration no longer attaches supreme importance to the rule of 3 percent real growth in the NATO member states' defense budgets. But I think it would be wrong to interpret it as meaning that the United States is not concerned with the European nations' defense efforts. What we have been able to work our way toward within NATO is attaching importance to the kind of defense we get for the money we spend. In this respect, Norway is in a strong position, because we have conscription. And the standard of officers and civilians in our defense forces is very high.

[Question] NATO Secretary General Luns is one of the people warning against the large member nations' making too many decisions between themselves, over the heads of the smaller nations. Do you support this criticism?

[Answer] Luns is pointing to a problem of which is it important to be aware but to which I believe there is no solution. We cannot forbid any nations, large or small, to have contacts on important questions independently of their membership of the alliance. These contacts are continually taking place between Washington, Bonn and London. I think this is perfectly natural.

But what I do react to is when we meet criticism here at home, and also internationally to a certain extent, because the social democratic parties in a number of NATO nations have similar contacts. Such contacts put us in a better position to be able to make contributions to the consultations within the alliance and therefore make us more interesting partners in the alliance.

[Question] Is it not beginning to take far too long for negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on the nuclear missiles in Europe to start? The man who is to lead the Reagan administration's disarmament agency is recently supposed to have said that such negotiations cannot start before spring 1982 at the earliest.

[Answer] He was reported inaccurately in that news item. What Rostow was referring to was the date for the resumption of the negotiations on strategic nuclear arms between the United States and the Soviet Union. Unfortunately, ratification by the U.S. Congress of the present SALT II agreement does not look very likely.

As far as the negotiations on the Euromissiles are concerned, preparations for these are also taking place within NATO. The meeting between the U.S. secretary of state and the Soviet foreign minister has been fixed for September, and it is expected that negotiations will start before the end of the year.

We for our part think that this is late, and Norway has already tried to use its influence to bring about an a earlier start. It is also true that these negotiations, which are part of the NATO dual resolution from December 1979, are the only ones which have as their aim the reduction of the nuclear arms in Europe. We stress that the aim of the negotiations is that there should be no deployment of new nuclear arms at all.

[Question] What about the idea of deploying the European missiles onboard ship?

[Answer] I realize that the background to this idea is to be found in difficulties in the countries which are to receive the missiles. However, I doubt that such compromise proposals really serve any purpose. They could easily ease the pressure to initiate negotiations. The point of the negotiations is that we should not have any more nuclear missiles. On the contrary. For then we could begin to move in the right direction--toward disarmament.

[Question] There are opposition voices within the defense forces who claim that expensive advanced technology does not lead to better defenses for Norway. This might make some people wonder what the point would then be of the money spent on the military technology race.

[Answer] I do not see this as opposition but as a constructive debate about what sort of defenses we should have. And I agree with those who claim that there is always a danger in being tempted to acquire new and expensive technology.

But for us, when we must consider the use of new technology, it is a question of what we have to defend ourselves against and how we are to do this. Norway must have the technology which puts it in a position to stop modern tanks and aircraft.

[Question] Claims are made that mobilization readiness is being neglected?

[Answer] I have met this question many times. There is little doubt that the massive investments we have made, in the F-16 for example, have created problems. However, I have now asked for resource reallocations which can satisfy some of the needs felt by the army and the Home Guard.

[Question] Do you agree with those who think that the first service period for conscripts could be made shorter and cheaper?

[Answer] The figures I have been given do not support the claim that a reduction in the first service period would reduce costs.

COMMUNIST PARTY MEMBERSHIP SHOWS DECLINE

PM161323 London MORNING STAR in English 16 Jul 81 p 3

[MORNING STAR staff report: "Communist Party Membership Now Stands at 18,458"]

[Excerpt] The Communist Party's official membership figure now stands at 18,458, national organiser Dave Cook announced yesterday at the party's London national offices.

The membership is totalled in July before the party holds its biennial national congress. The figure before the last congress in 1979 stood at 20,590.

Mr Cook said that although 1,000 new members had joined since last September, a rate of recruitment of at least 10 per cent wss needed for growth. The size of the party and how to overcome the membership decline would be an important issue in the precongress discussion due to open in comment on 5 September.

Nina Temple, YCL general secretary, was able, however, to report that the league has gone into growth. Membership is 230 up on this time last year and two above the membership of two years ago. This is despite losing over 200 members in this period through the lowering of the YCL's age limit from 28 to 26.

PAPER WELCOMES REAGAN'S 'REBUFF' TO FITZGERALD

PM161300 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 16 Jul 81 p 18

[Editorial: "Dublin Drops a Clanger"]

[Text] President Reagan has shown impeccable good manners--in the diplomatic sense--in his reaction to Dr Garret FitzGerald's ill-judged request that he should intervene with the British Government over the H-block hunger-strike. He has made it clear that it is an internal matter in which it would be improper for him to interfere. When he meets Mrs Thatcher on Monday at the Ottawa economic summit meeting, he will not take the initiative in raising the subject, but would naturally be interested to hear Mrs Thatcher's views if she cares to bring it up. It is a pity Dr FitzGerald was not possessed of the same sense of fitness as Mr Reagan. Dr FitzGerald's appeal to Mr Reagan was an error, but very much the kind of error to be expected from him--an impetuous decision bred from his anxiety to be seen to be as active over Ulster as his predecessor, Mr Haughey.

Dr FitzGerald gravely miscalculated the President's reaction. The result will now recoil on him. He has taken an initiative and been politely rebuffed. By inviting the rebuff, and allowing it to become public, he has increased the isolation of the IRA and the friends of the hunger-strikers. They are always looking to the Americans to put pressure on Britain. By playing the American card so nakedly, Dr FitzGerald has in effect thrown it away. The President's reaction will also strengthen the hand of those Americans--and they do exist--who know the true score on Northern Ireland, and who share the governments of NATO allies are against America's interests. [as published]

Dublin's energies are being concentrated on trying to bring the British Government into direct "negotiations" with the hunger-strikers. The attitude in London is that the government will continue with its policies of liberalisation of prison conditions, and that the proper channel for such policies remains through the prison administrations.

TURKISH-GREEK CULTURAL COMMITTEE MEETS IN ANKARA

TA161247 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1200 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] The Turkish-Greek cultural committee met in Ankara today to review the cultural relations between the two countries.

Opening the meeting with a speech, Foreign Ministry Secretary General Kamuran Gurun said that these talks demonstrate the importance the governments of the two countries attach to developing Turkish-Greek relations. Pointing out that a rapproachement cannot be achieved without direct contact between the communities, Guran noted that the Turkish-Greek cultural committee will contribute to the realization of this and to the establishment of an atmosphere of friendship, trust and understanding between the two countries.

In his statement, Greek ambassador to Ankara Yeoryios Papoulias noted that his country attaches great importance to cultural exchange and cooperation with Turkey.

Following these statements, the Turkish-Greek cultural committee met. It is headed by retired Ambassador Turgut Menemencioglu on the Turkish side and by former Greek ambassador to Ankara Dhimitrios Kosmadhopoulos.

Cultural relations between Turkey and Greece were established through a cultural agreement signed in Ankara on 20 April 1951. The Turkish-Greek cultural committee, which was established within the framework of this agreement, held its last meeting in 1968. The foreign ministers of the two countries decided to reactivate the cultural committee during their meeting in Brussels in December last year. The committee meeting in Ankara is being held in accordance with this decision.

COMMUNIST PARTY GREETS POLISH PARTY CONGRESS

TA161155 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Turkish Communist Party Central Committee Secretary General Bilen greeting message to Ninth Congress of the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR]; date of message not given--read by announcer]

[Text] Dear comrades: On behalf of all Turkish Communists and the working class of our country, the Turkish Communist Party [TCP] Central Committee extends revolutionary struggle greetings to the Ninth Congress of the brotherly PZPR.

The ruling circles of NATO and the U.S. administration, which is pursuing a policy of confrontation with socialist countries and escalating the arms race, and which resorts to every method to stifle the national and social liberation wars of various peoples, are inciting the counterrevolutionary forces in socialist Poland to seize power. These attempts by the imperialists and the counterrevolutionaries are directed against the independence of people's Poland, the gains of socialism, the security of the socialist bloc and peace in Europe. International reactionaries are using developments in Poland as a tool in their anti-Soviet and anticommunist campaign in various countries including Turkey.

In this connection, the developments in Poland are very important for the Turkish working class. Together with Polish communists, who are waging a persistant struggle against counterrevolutionary elements, and all patriotic Polish citizens, the TCP shares the views expressed in the letter the CPSU Central Committee sent to the PZPR Central Committee. We voice our solidarity with the Polish toilers and with all patriotic forces with the aim of resolving the problems in Poland on the basis of Marxist-Leninist principles and proletarian internationalism. We wish the Ninth Congress of the PZPR success in its work. Long live Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism.

[Signed] TCP Central Committee Secretary General I. Bilen.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 138 20 July 1981

CONTENTS

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

LE MONDE Reports on Socialist International Meeting [17 Jul] A 1
Jospin Remarks on Euromissiles A 2
Schmidt in Ottawa Criticizes U.S. Interest Rate A 2

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

LE MONDE Reports Deadlock Over Spain's Entry [15 Jul] B 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt, Economics Minister Discuss Ottawa Meeting J 1
Chancellor's TV Remarks J 1
Lambsdorff Interview [FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 17 Jul] J 1
Brandt Says Soviets Accept Need To Reduce Missiles J 2
DIE WELT Criticizes SPD Chairman's Activities [17 Jul] J 3
Papers Assess Meeting of Socialist International J 4
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU [17 Jul] J 4
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE [17 Jul] J 5

FRANCE

Government Voices 'Strong Concern' Over Lebanon K 1
Beregovoy Statement K 1
Cheysson, Visitors Discuss North-South Summit K 1
Group of 77 Chairman [LE MONDE 11 Jul] K 1
Mexican Foreign Minister K 1
Foreign Minister Comments on Irish Hunger Strikers [LE MONDE 17 Jul] K 2
Mauroy's Policy Statement to National Assembly [LE MONDE 10 Jul] K 3
National Assembly Abolishes State Security Court K 20
Employers, Trade Unions Draft Protocol on Workweek K 20
Communications Minister Details Broadcast Reforms K 20
Marchais Agrees To Meet With Italy's Berlinguer [L'HUMANITE 11 Jul] K 21
PCF Cadres Reportedly Called for Giscard Vote [LE MONDE 8 Jul] K 21

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Red Brigades, International Organization Linked L 1
Spadolini Government Makes Additional Appointments L 1
Secret Service Officials L 1
Military Chiefs L 2
Intelligence Officials L 2
AVANTI on PCI 'Superficiality' on Socialists [3 Jul] L 3

PORTUGAL

Council of Revolution Opposes Government Decree M 1
President on Decision M 1
Sao Tome's Ex-Leader Trovoada Released in Lisbon M 2
Briefs: Party Deputy Resignation M 2

UNITED KINGDOM

Opinion Poll Shows Improved Labor Party Standing [DAILY TELEGRAPH 16 Jul] Q 1

CYPRUS

Kiprianou Holds National Council Meeting on Cyprus R 1
O AGON Comments [17 Jul] R 1
O AGON: Confusion in Official Positions on Treason [18 Jul] R 1
Investigation Urged [I SIMERINI 18 Jul] R 2
USSR Wants Intercommunal Talks To Continue [YANKI 13-19 Jul] R 2
Paper Sees Contradictions in Nicosia, Athens Views [O AGON 18 Jul] R 3
CYPRUS WEEKLY Reports Italian Mediation Efforts [17 Jul] R 3
Paper on Efforts To Expand Gobbi's Role in Talks [I SIMERINI 17 Jul] R 4
North Assembly Fails To Elect President [Bayrak Radio] R 4
Nejat Konuk Elected [Bayrak Radio] R 4

GREECE

Mitsotakis Gives Foreign Policy News Conference S 1
Averof Announces Measures To Improve Economy [NEWS 19 Jul] S 1

TURKEY

Government Requests Extradition of Agca From Italy T 1
Foreign Ministry Condemns Israeli Raid in Lebanon T 1
CUMHURIYET Interviews Foreign Minister Turkmen [14 Jul] T 1
State Minister Leaves for North Cyprus Visit T 2
TERCUMAN on Denktas' Intercommunal Talks Proposals [16 Jul] T 2
Turkish-Greek Cultural Committee Concludes Talks T 3
Energy Minister Views Relations With Bulgaria T 3
Bulgarian Minister Departs T 3
ARAYIS Comments on Economic Relations With Libya [11 Jul] T 3
Military Prosecutors Demand Death Penalty T 4
Istanbul Command T 4
Diyarbakir Command T 4

LE MONDE REPORTS ON SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL MEETING

PM171417 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Jul 81 p 5

[Jean Wetz dispatch: "West German Government Contrasts Mitterrand Stances With Brandt Ideas"]

[Excerpts] Bonn--The Socialist International Presidium members who met in Bonn on Wednesday, 15 July, presented to photographers the picture of a harmonious community. Their discussions were not public. Nonetheless, the inevitable leaks suggest that many nuances and even differences of opinion are appearing within the organization. Although such fundamental questions as North-South dialogue and the situation in Central America or the Near East were discussed, Wednesday's discussions mainly were devoted to East-West relations, arms control and, more especially, the Euromissiles controversy.

PS representative Jospin was, of course, questioned on what the changes in Paris can be expected to bring. Although he spoke Wednesday in the very free discussions to which this meeting gave rise, he waited until Thursday's session to give more detailed answers. Moreover, all the participants clearly understood that Mitterrand himself may well now be "rather too much president of the French republic" to readily play his role as the International's vice chairman although, accoridng to Jospin, there is no ruling on this matter.

The meeting between the socialist leaders which was held after Willy Brandt's visit to Moscow and the new French president's visit to Bonn was characterized by the respective attitudes of three very prominent members of the Internationl: Schmidt, Brandt and Mitterrand. Although there have been no public explanations yet, behind the scenes at the conference, people were claiming that the former chancellor's report on his recent trip to Moscow and Schmidt's observation on the subject did not give rise to controversy. However, it is thought that, in Schmidt's view, the Brandt-Brezhnev talks did not contribute any important new element and that the chancellor basically shares Mitterrand's concern in the face of the existing Soviet supremacy in the Euromissiles sphere.

The stances of the various sides are well known, However, a new factor may have been introduced into the debate by the French PS first secretary. Indeed, Jospin told journalists that he thinks it "paradoxical" that only the Soviets and Americans are qualified to negotiate the problem of the medium-range missiles which primarily concern the European countries. The socialist leader stressed that at present no one envisages altering the existing negotiation system, but his remarks nonetheless raised the question of whether the new French Government is thinking of giving the Europeans a wider role in a confrontation in which the essential role was hitherto been reserved for the two superpowers.

In addition, a few details are now emerging on Monday's meeting between Mitterrand and Brandt. The French president, as could be expected, apparently gave an unequivocal verdict on an initial point: The French nuclear forces cannot be the object of negotiations on the same footing as NATO's nuclear forces. Brandt, on the other hand, judging from his statements to the weekly DER SPIEGEL, is suggesting tha it would not be unreasonable to include the French strike force in negotiations on the Euromissiles. Second, Mitterrand apparently rejected in an equally categorical way any play for a "moratorium" on the deployment of medium-range nuclear missiles on the Euopean continent whereas Brandt thinks he noticed a "new tone" in the Kremlin's language on this subject.

Officially, the Socialist International Presidium meeting in Bonn is not in a position to make decisions binding on the member parties. Nontheless, the conclusions of this meeting may cast a new light on the Euromissiles problem in general and, more precisely, on the differing or convergent views held by the International's chairman on the one hand and by Schmidt and Mitterrand on the other.

Jospin Remarks on Euromissiles

LD162040 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] The leaders of the Socialist International met today to discuss the problem of the deployment of Soviet and U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe, the so-called Euromissiles, the SS-20 on the Soviet side and the Pershing missiles on the U.S. side. It was decided to ask the two big powers to negotiate this matter as soon as possible because, as Lionel Jospin [first secretary of French Socialist Party] explained to our special correspondent Dominique Souchier, after all, it is us, the Europeans, who are most concerned by this matter.

[Begin recording] [Jospin] You say "Euromissiles" and "Europe" and you say that this concerns first of all the United States and the USSR. The present situation is a paradox. It is quite clear that the SS-20, for example, represents a qualitative change insofar as this is a case of weapons which can concern only the Europeans since these missiles cannot cross the Atlantic. However, the historic situation has it and the strategic data have it. [as heard] It is true that the United States and the Soviet Union have started and perhaps will open talks again regarding these matters. This very paradox was discussed freely by the socialist leaders today.

[Souchier] How is this paradox to be resolved? Will it mean that one day France will also directly join these negotiations?

[Jospin] It is a question which we are asking ourselves. Moreover, France cannot fail to show interest in talks regarding European territory even if it has its own force and is not a member of NATO and thus not directly concerned with the deployment of Pershing missiles on its territory. Therefore, our thoughts on the matter are evolving. We will have to go gradually from thought to deed. [end recording]

SCHMIDT IN OTTAWA CRITICIZES U.S. INTEREST RATE

LD191416 Hamburg DPA in German 1225 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 19 Jul (DPA)--Should the Americans not change their high interest rate policy then the Federal Republic must "take appropriate measures," according to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt. He told ZDF in Ottawa on Sunday that such measures have already been prepared by the Federal Government. The chancellor emphasized that the European countries intend to present to President Ronald Reagan in a business-like manner the consequences of the high American interest rate for the economy. His hope is for agreements by the heads of government in Ottawa against unilateral protective measures by national economies. This does not require such agreements to be made in writing or signed.

Walter Leisler Kiep, deputy chairman of the CDU/CSU Bundestag group, said in the same program that the heads of government ought to agree on the fight against inflation as a precondition for the revival of the economy. It is to be hoped that the Americans in Ottawa will embark on an interest rate policy which offers the opportunity for FRG interest rates to be lowered.

LE MONDE REPORTS DEADLOCK OVER SPAIN'S ENTRY

PM200825 Paris LE MONDE in French 15 Jul 81 pp 1, 15

[Philippe Lemaitre dispatch: "Negotiations on Spain's Entry Deadlocked Until November"]

[Excerpt] Brussels (European Community)--In view of the crisis and at a time when numerous factories are closing, the European Community, while refraining from protectionism, can only open the door to foreign imports after some precautions. Thus, negotiations on Spain's entry into the EEC are deadlocked over two essential issues--the organization of industrial free trade and the Common Agricultural Policy [CAP]--until winter; in other words, until the European Council meeting in London in November. At least that is the prevailing impression following the negotiation session at foreign minister level in Brussels on 13 July.

For several months now, the Community countries, pushed in this direction by Paris, have been explaining to the Spaniards that it would not be reasonable to discuss methods of integrating their agriculture into green Europe until they have completed their internal debate on CAP reform. Thus, since it is impossible to discuss "agriculture," it is through that progress can be made on establishing the industrial customs union. The essential aim is to fix a timetable for abolishing the customs duties which still apply in trade between Spain and the EEC and for aligning Spanish customs charges with the common rates.

Chandernagor, French minister responsible for European affairs, confirmed that France refuses to start this exercise until Madrid formally promises to implement VAT by the date it enters the Community at the latest. He pointed out that the trade agreement signed by the EEC with Spain in 1970 was already imbalanced in the latter's favor regarding industrial trade; customs duties for goods entering the EEC have been considerably reduced but duties on goods entering Spanish territory are still high.

This unfavorable situation for Community enterprises is accentuated by the Spanish tax system. The use of the existing system of sliding scale taxation, in fact, makes it possible to subsidize exported output by up to 6 or 7 percent of the price. "This cannot go on. The Spaniards must adopt the VAT system. They cannot be allowed to go on thinking that they can postpone this decision indefinitely. This is a fundamental rule on which there can be no negotiations," Chandernagor commented, though he denied that he is being obstructive or even posing preconditions. "We know," he said, "the importance which membership has at the political level. We are prepared to heed the Spaniards but they must not disregard the real problems."

The Spaniards are disappointed. "The precondition used to be principally the agricultural question," Foreign Minister Perez Lorca explained. "That precondition was lifted by President Mitterrand during Calvo-Sotelo's visit to Paris. Now it is VAT. This is new to me. We don't think that there should be preconditions but all these questions should be settled around the negotiation table."

The French attitude is all the less welcome since there was apparently some misunderstanding over agriculture. The Spaniards understood in Paris that the president agreed to negotiations on their integration into green Europe being carried out parallel to the Ten's debates on the adjustments to be made to the CAP. The French assert that there was never any question of that. The misunderstanding can be explained if Mitterrand meant that a number of agricultural matters which are not connected with the CAP's central mechanisms and which will therefore not be affected by the current reforms could be dealt with without waiting until the end of the year...

SCHMIDT, ECONOMICS MINISTER DISCUSS OTTAWA MEETING

Chancellor's TV Remarks

DW171033 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1700 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Reporter Hans-Joachim Reiche interview with FRG Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt prior to his departure for Ottawa--recorded]

[Text] [Schmidt] The economic-political debate in Ottawa will certainly contain some variations. There is, for example, the fact that in France and the United States two very different economic methods presently are being applied. We stand there in the middle like some sort of a child.

[Question] Will the high interest rate issue overshadow the conference?

[Answer] No, I don't think you can put it that way. At the moment, the U.S. Government under Reagan cannot abandon its current economic policy. Maybe it was not clearly enough realized in the beginning that this policy would also have considerable consequencss for Europe. It doesn't make sense, therefore, to harp on it for too long a time. But it is correct--and not just the French state president, but others as well as myself have this intention--to make it clear to the Americans that their high interest rate policy also has negative consequences for economic developments throughout the rest of the world. We have much smaller rates of inflation and we pursued our stability policy successfully without having to introduce high interest rates in past years.

Lambsdorff Interview

DW170947 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 17 Jul 81 p 5

[Bonn correspondent Rolf Dietrich Schwartz interview with Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff; date not given]

[Text] FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU (FR): The first round of talks of the big seven will end with the seventh meeting in Ottawa. Are such world economic summit meetings worthwhile?

Lambsdorff: I am convinced that the summit meetings should be continued. I don't deny that occasionally there is idle talk, but even that has its purpose. Summit talks are not meetings which lead to operative decisions. But the fact that seven heads of state and government chiefs are getting together, that they will make intense preparations for their talks and that they will be dealing with the problems and questions of others, this alone is of great value. Of the seven participants, four will be meeting for the first time and for some it will be the first chance to get acquainted.

FR: What does the meeting of the big seven have to do with the consolidation of the German budget?

Lambsdorff: You can either say nothing at all or, based on experience, quite a lot. By experience, I mean that prior to the world economic meeting in Bonn, we postponed our economic and budget policy decisions until coordination could take place with the other governments on their action. Because of its relative strength, the Federal Government bears a special international responsibility. It is good when we tell our partners at such economic summits what we generally intend to do and what possible effects there might be. In addition, we study and listen to see if the national decisions we want to make will fit in with the ideas of our partners worldwide.

FR: The North-South issue often was the main topic at earlier meetings. What will Ottawa produce with regard to the great North-South conference to take place this fall in Mexico?

Lambsdorff: There are a number of reasons this time as well why the North-South issue is important for us. One of the main reasons is that the oil price explosion has led to a balance of payments deficit with economic difficulties in developing countries. These difficulties are very alarming and no one seems to have the right answer to them. A second reason is that the new U.S. administration has adopted an attitude regarding the North-South problem which we believe must be spoken out against and which fails to realize the significance of the problem. The Federal Government and some of our partners in Ottawa believe that the world does not consist only of East-West problems but that it consists of North-South problems as well. We will not solve these difficulties if we concentrate just on the East-West conflict.

FR: Mr Minister, prior to Ottawa, you repeatedly indicated that you were sceptical that the Americans could be made to abandon their record high interest rate policy. Do you think that the high interest rates in the Federal Republic, which result from the development of interest rates in the United States, are of such secondary importance for German economic development that it does not pay to fight in Ottawa for a worldwide decrease of interest rates?

Lambsdorff: No, the Federal Government has always said that the interest rate level in the Federal Republic contradicts our investment policy and employment policy efforts and complicates the economic upswing we urgently need. On the other hand, we know that U.S. economic policy is aimed at fighting inflation in the United States. Together with other European partners, we have demanded for years that the United States do something to fight inflation and stabilize the dollar. Therefore, we cannot fight the U.S. policy and its aims. However, we will try to explain the complications this creates for European economies. We also will discuss whether monetary and fiscal policy means have been used in the best possible way in the United States and whether the way in which the money supply is being controlled really is the final answer.

FR: A decisive role in the economic field will probably be played by such issues as high interest rates as well as protectionism and trade restrictions. Do you feel in a position, after your experience regarding the European and the German steel industry problems, to act in Ottawa as a "protector of market economy" and fighter against protectionism?

Lambsdorff: Based on our preparations, the trade policy issue will be the most difficult in Ottawa. Many things are still open in this respect regarding the draft of the communique, the fronts run straight through the European Community. Well meant statements on preparedness to cooperate cannot conceal the fact that the new French Goverment is clearly more protectionist than its predecessor. However, at the German-French consultations, the federal chancellor, again stated quite clearly that developing protectionism would initiate such a development as that which occured in 1930-31. This would mean the deterioration and ruin of the world economy with all the negative consequences for national economies. In the name of the Federal Government, I have fought for years in Europe and the FRG against protectionist efforts, admittedly with modest or moderate success. But resistance by protectionists strengthens my will to defend myself against them.

BRANDT SAYS SOVIETS ACCEPT NEED TO REDUCE MISSILES

LD181132 Hamburg DPA in German 0906 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 18 Jul (DPA)--SPD Chairman Willy Brandt proceeds from the Soviet leadership's recognition that the Soviet Union's nuclear medium-range missile force must be reduced if the deployment of new nuclear missiles in West Europe is to be avoided.

Referring to the NATO decision to deploy such missiles, Brandt said in an interview for South German Radio today that, following his talks in Moscow, he believes "that the Soviet leadership knows if it wants to see the additional Western arms program changed then it will have to discard some of the things it has already done." Brandt affirmed his Moscow statement: "Anyone who wants to avoid counterarming must correct prearming."

Brandt called this point the "real question" and more important than the newly formulated Soviet proposal for a moratorium concerning medium-range missiles since that was only a question of procedure. Asked about endeavors by sections of the SPD to bring down the NATO decision, Brandt said this is not a real issue as would soon become clear. It is a waste of time to bicker about the NATO decision and the relevant SPD party congress resolution. The real question is how to fully exploit the NATO decision, namely, to negotiate to avoid, if possible, the introduction of new Western nuclear arms. "This will work only if the Soviet Union, on its part, is prepared to withdraw certain things. Whether that is possible, I don't know. But I will not stop pursuing this matter."

DIE WELT CRITICIZES SPD CHAIRMAN'S ACTIVITIES

DW171305 Bonn DIE WELT in German 17 Jul 81 p 2

[Gottfried Capell commentary: "Brandt, Surrounded by Skepticism"]

[Text] Reservations regarding what Willy Brandt has brought from Moscow are not malevolent, but they are almost universal. The Scandinavian members of the Socialist International Presidium meeting in Bonn indicated that they view the Soviet trial ballon with great doubts, namely, the suggestion to create a nuclear-free zone on NATO's northern flank.

Danish Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen said that one must first examine most throroughly what lies behind it. His colleague from Oslo, Gro Harlem Brundtland, stressed that such a project can be pursued only "in a broader European framework" including the United States, because we are "not naive." Foreign Minister Frydenlund commented on television almost with relief on the strict "no" of the America's regarding a nuclear-free zone in the north by saying: "Priority must be given to the solidarity of the alliance."

The special issue of a nuclear-free northern zone meets with as much skepticism on the part of those involved as the slightly softened moratorium suggested in connection with medium-range weapons which Brezhnev suggested to Brandt and which the Federal Government considers insufficient. Fortunately, this was assessed in a similar way by Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, Brandt's deputy who also went to Moscow.

SPD Chairman Willy Brandt has made no statement on medium-range weapons or a nuclear-free zone in Scandinavia, which would indicate that he has detected decisive progress or even a breakthrough. The SPD chairman suggests here as well as elsewhere that the matter must be examined thoroughly. It is a phenomenon that Willy Brandt, despite verbal caution, always creates the impression that something significant has happened.

This is the way in which the eloquent SPD chairman creates pressure on the Federal Republic or the United States. This pressure, assisted by Willy Brandt's international reputation, is obviously resisted not only by his French but also his north European comrades--particularly since powerful counterpressure is rearing from the Atlantic.

PAPERS ASSESS MEETING OF SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU

DW171357 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 17 Jul 81 p 3

[Dirk Cornelsen commentary: "Common Concepts of Value"]

[Text] Rarely are so many party leaders and heads of government seen together in Bonn. The meeting of the Socialist International Presidium, which was convened on short notice and chaired by Willy Brandt, was a result of the concern for the East-West relationship and the disrupted dialogue between the two superpowers. Harmoniously gathered at a round table in the Bonn SPD "Barracks," leading social democrats and socialists discussed virtually every world problem, including medium-range missiles, Poland, Afghanistan, the Middle East, El Salvador and Namibia, as well as world economic problems.

In a crowded room, different politicans such as the German Helmut Schmidt and Michael Manley from Jamaica, the African Leopold Senghor and Englishman Michael Foot sat together. What unites the men and the few women, including the new Norwegian head of government Gro Harlem Brundtland, is not so much absolutely identical political views, but rather a social democratic or democratic-socialist basic stance and the commitment to social justice, as for instance in El Salvador and Namibia. Small wonder that Michael Manley, former prime minister of Jamaica, did not find a good word to say about the Latin America policy of the new U.S. goverment. Small wonder, too, that conference participants such as Austrian Federal Chancellor Bruno Kreisky and his Danish counterpart Anker Jorgensen as well as Englishmen Michael Foot and Denis Healey explicitly paid tribute to Willy Brandt's Moscow visit. Equally not surprising was that Federal Chancellor Schmidt openly voiced his skepticism over Brezhnev's moratorium proposal at the meeting.

The differences existing in the assessments by Brandt and Schmidt on the meaning of such a "moratorium" (suspension) in the deployment of nuclear missiles and a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe also proposed by Brezhnev, are no secret and could not have been concealed at this meeting. Similar to Brandt, north European heads of government Brundtland and Jorgensen were not totally opposed to the proposal.

But what is actually surprising about differing assessments when such a vital question is at stake? Certainly much more surprising is the almost military solidarity of the opposition regarding the arms issue as well as the dispute over nuclear energy.

To remove misunderstandings, which are played up by an interested party, Helmut Schmidt told the gathering of socialists at Palais Schaumburg that the Brandt visit was a "valuable contribution." Bruno Kreisky reciprocated, thanking Schmidt "for what you have achieved in the past" and expressing the hope "that you will be able in the coming weeks, months and years to bring about this great dialogue."

The Socialist International is not a closed regional or political organization, but a loose association which is being held together through common concepts of value. This is why it cannot and also does not want to pursue a common policy. Nevertheless, it becomes involved in many places in the world, for instance, in El Salvador. Unlike Washington, the socialist leaders are counting on a military solution to the conflict. This is why Spanish socialist leader Filipe Gonzales bluntly told the U.S. Government that is making a "mistake" in delivering weapons to the junta.

The Socialist International, to be sure, does not exercise political power and its appeal to the U.S. President can at best have a moral effect. One can only hope that this will happen. The association of social democratic and socialist parties has a political voice only when it avoids speaking with different tongues.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE

DW171235 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 17 Jul 81 p 1

[Commentary signed ME.: "Internationalists"]

[Text] Politicians always try to gain a stronger voice. An ideal case in this respect is the "Socialist International," a worldwide organization made up of 50 parties ranging from the far to inner left. Every 2 years, a great congress is held. There is an impressive Presidium session every year and every 6 months there is a Bureau session with more than 100 participants. And there are headlines. This is the case with the Bonn Presidium session this week. But who profited from it except President Brandt and the vice presidents such as Palme of Sweden, Gonzales of Spain and Kreisky of Austria--just to name a few?

The two main subjects of the organization's work provide the answer. Regarding disarmament, whoever manipulates the organization in a most determined way profits most because the important socialists who consider negotiating a value in itself listen most passionately to him. If Brezhnev gives Brandt in Moscow a few key words along the way, they can be turned around at the Presidium session so as to give disarmament priority over security and balance, thus giving much credit to the originator and allowing him to remain gracious. The second main point is the policy toward the Third World, with the organization mainly viewing Latin America and the Caribbean because of the makeup of its member parties. That makes one of the big powers a victim from the very beginning because the "Yankees" are considered imperialists there and correspondingly branded. The leading bodies of the Socialist International applaude this and when the SPD leadership applauded somewhat more softly in connection with Nicaragua and El Salvador, it was criticized.

From the point of view of the U.S.-Soviet antagonism, the Socialist International allows Brezhnev to win twice and President Reagan to lose twice. No wonder one highly regards it while the other thinks little of it. It is much rather a wonder that the so-called "basis" of the West European member parties generally does not pay much attention to what their elected party leaders do as internationalists with the mandate they received at home, as we already said, an ideal situation for such people as Brandt, Palme, Gonzales and Kreisky.

GOVERNMENT VOICES 'STRONG CONCERN' OVER LEBANON

NC171835 Paris AFP in English 1810 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 17 Jul (AFP)--France today expressed "strong concern" over violence in Lebanon and the "murderous" bombings but never named Israel as the perpetrator of the violence. "French authorities deplore the numerous victims caused by this renewed outbreak of violence among Lebanese nationals and people in exile in this country as well as among the Israeli population," a foreign ministry spokesman said. "For several days, Lebanon has been the target of shelling whose murderous effects add further to the cruel sufferings of a people," the spokesman said. "France cannot remain indifferent to such actions," he said. "France expresses its strong concern about the grave consequences" of the violence "and renews its support for steps and actions aimed at ending it," he said.

Beregovoy Statement

NC181106 Paris AFP in English 1056 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 18 Jul (AFP)--France today responded to the Israeli raids in Lebanon by warning against a new military flare-up in the Middle East. A statement from Elysee Secretary-General Pierre Beregovoy commented: "It is not through force that one will reach a just settlement guaranteeing Israel's security in sure and recognised borders, Lebanon's right to live in peace and the Palestinian people's right to a homeland. "Dialogue and negotiations between all interested parties are the only means of reaching a lasting solution." He added: "France is ready to back any effort in this direction but it warns against anyone who might yield to the temptation of a new upsurge of violence."

CHEYSSON, VISITORS DISCUSS NORTH-SOUTH SUMMIT

Group of 77 Chairman

PM171503 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Jul 81 p 24

[Text] The revival of the North-South dialogue was the main topic discussed at the meeting which External Relations Minister Cheysson had on Thursday, 9 July, with Manuel Perez-Guerrero, the Venezuelan head of state's adviser and chairman of the Group of 77 (122 developing countries). The two men recalled the need to implement the plan for all-embracing negotiations within the UN framework and to convince all the Western countries that it is in the interests of all to maintain an atmosphere of cooperation between the developing and the industrialized countries.

Cheysson explained his view on the North-South summit in Cancun (Mexico), which will be attended by 27 representatives of each group of countries: It should be a series of informal talks enabling the heads of state and of government to pose the real problems without any agenda. Perez-Guerrero stated that he hoped that the "Cancun spirit" might make it possible to open all-embracing negotiations. The summit is to be preceded by a preparatory ministerial conference in Cancun on 1 and 2 August.

Mexican Foreign Minister

FL171600 Mexico City NOTIMEX in Spanish 1500 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 17 Jul (NOTIMEX)--The promising future of the relations between Mexico and France was stressed in Paris today by the foreign ministers of the two countries, Jorge Castaneda and Claude Cheysson, after the end of a long meeting. Cheysson accompanied Castaneda to the front of the Quai d'Orsay, where the two ministers underscored to newsmen the importance of the upcoming Cancun summit which had been the main topic of their talks.

Cheysson asserted that "the North-South summit meeting is very important to us," adding that the problems of Central and Latin America in general were studied during the meeting. The ministers also studied French-Mexican bilateral relations which Cheysson said have a "great future" since there are prospects of improving cooperation between the two countries.

Cheysson stressed his satisfaction at receiving the Mexican minister in Paris and also at the fact that he had been invited to Mexico. The French minister will be received in Mexico on 30 and 31 July and will then make a short tour of Central America where he will visit Honduras, Nicaragua and Costa Rica.

In turn, Castaneda said that French-Mexican and Central American problems were analyzed during today's meeting. He added that the preparations for the Cancun summit are well advanced and that there is agreement on holding the meeting, although great fundamental problems still remain regarding the North-South dialogue.

Neither of the two ministers went into details regarding Central America and Castaneda limited himself to saying that the present situation in Nicaragua and El Salvador had been studied as well as the general "difficult situation" in Central America. He added, however, that "we have not made any specific agreements."

The Mexican minister stated, on the other hand, that practically everything has been solved regarding the petroleum problem since the petroleum companies, Compagnie Francaise des Petroles [CFP] and Mexican Petroleum [PEMEX] reached an agreement on Thursday to resume deliveries as of next month. A joint CFP-PEMEX communique was, in fact, released yesterday, saying that Mexico would resume petroleum deliveries as of next month and that the norms of crude quality and prices will be studied in the meantime.

The Mexican Embassy in Paris also explained on Thursday that the French would resume their purchases of 100,000 barrels of crude per day as of 1 August. The negotiators of the two parties also committed themselves to study at the end of the year the possibilities of increasing petroleum purchases and making joint investments in refinery and distribution.

Foreign Secretary Castaneda will immediately go to Vienna for a meeting with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky regarding the Cancun summit.

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON IRISH HUNGER STRIKERS

PM171558 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] In reply to a question from Bernard Derosier (PS, north) on the situation of the hunger strikers in Northern Ireland in the National Assembly on Wednesday, 15 July, External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson stated: "Some people will describe these supreme sacrifices as fanaticism. The fact that six men in the space of 10 weeks have shown this courage deserves respect. Would we all be capable of making such a sacrifice? Nonetheless, bombs have exploded, there have been massacres killing 2,100 people, of whom 1,500 were civilians and many were children.

"Hatred divides two communities which many things ought to bring together. We French, more than others, should take part in seeking a settlement...show our deep sympathy for that people and those men and take every opportunity to promote a solution. France's influence, its relations and its opportunities for action and intervention within the Community give us the means of doing so.

"I express my admiration and support for what the new Dublin government may do for its brothers. The new prime minister (note)--This is Garret FitzGerald, leader of Fine Gael (centrist), appointed 30 June--is full of imagination and courage. Let's hope that he will be able to put forward solutions as an Irishman and on behalf of the Irish. He can rest assured that if he does, the French Government will use all its influence to ensure that they succeed."

MAUROY'S POLICY STATEMENT TO NATIONAL ASSEMBLY

PM160711 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Jul 81 pp 3-6

[Apparent text of French Premier Pierre Mauroy's policy statement to the National Assembly on 8 July; passages in all capitals denote italics as published]

[Text] On 10 May, Francois Mitterrand had a date with history. The left once again had a date with the republic. France and the left are now in step. The election of the Fifth Republic's first Socialist president paves the way for renewal.

The French people have entrusted the honor of embodying the republic to the man who best embodies the left's desire for freedom and justice. Francois Mitterrand, the man who united the Socialists, the man who advocated the union of the entire left, has become the guarantor of the unity of all French people, the bearer of a vast hope in keeping with our country's history and vocation.

By subsequently electing a broad parliamentary majority in keeping with the presidential majority, the French people wanted to give the change the force of law. This hope and, more especially, this demand for change which the French people are making imply strict respect for the lines proposed by the president. This is the will of the majority of the people. It is the president's promise. It is the ambition of your assembly. And it is my government's task.

Rarely will a majority in a republic have been the representative of such great hope in such a difficult period. This is our common responsibility. It is historic.

The first gesture made by the new head of state was to chart the path which we are going to tread together. He did so with three roses. Three roses in the gloom of the pantheon. Three roses on three tombs--an emotional reminder of our collective memory. Three roses on La Montagne Sainte-Genevieve, amid the joy of the Parisian people, amid the young people worried about their future, who yesterday rebelled outside closed doors and suddenly stood joyfully in front of the open doors of a new age.

One rose was for Jean Jaures, the man who, in his day, succeeded in uniting the Socialists and mobilizing the left. That was the rose of heritage. An idea of justice and freedom, born from the cry of revolt and dignity of the first proletarians faced with the tragedies and failures of the first industrial revolution, came down over the century with the people. The union of exploited people enabled the emergence of a social force. A political power was built on the basis of that social force. The period through which we are living today is just a stage in that long march.

Our country is now engaged in a new phase of industrial and technological changes. The harsh laws of competition and productivity are imposed on an open economy which is part of the world system of trade. It is up to us to master progress and the machine. It is up to us to finally use them in man's service. It is up to us to "aim for the ideal and understand the real." That is Jean Jaures' message which is still relevant. The challenge of the first rose lies in that.

There was one rose for Jean Moulin, the man who, in his day, succeeded in uniting all the sections of our people in the struggle against the invader. Today France is still facing challenges which are too serious for it to be able to dissipate its energies.

My government comprises all the elements of the majority. It was the French people who defined the balance and drew the outlines of that majority on two occasions and with greater force each time. Today the leftwing people are united behind us, just as Jean Moulin in the past succeeded in uniting the underground people--fighting France.

The simple joy which was unleashed on the streets of France's cities and villages on 10 May at the announcement of Francois Mitterrand's election spontaneously awakened memories of 1936 and 1944--memories of Leon Blum and General de Gaulle. It was the joy of a fraternal and liberated crowd.

Our people's collective memory quite naturally associates the two times when the working class celebrated newfound dignity and then their regained freedom. These are two moments in which France was reconciled with itself.

The newfound French unity behind the socialists must be preserved, extended and increased even more. We will welcome all those who want to be involved in the policy of renewal which is henceforth France's policy. That is the hope expressed by the second rose.

There was one rose for Victor Schoelcher, the man who, in his day, succeeded in making France the emancipator of peoples. For instance, he enabled the Antilles and the peoples of the overseas departments and territories to remain within the national community by their free choice.

However, the chains were not broken everywhere: dictatorships, oppressive regimes remain the rule in vast areas of the world. New chains have even been forged: hunger, economic dependency and underdevelopment. The egoism of the great industrial nations is hurling the planet into chaos. It is already keeping thousands of men in a new state of slavery.

France refuses to bow to this state of affairs. It will fight for a new world order; to ensure that the Third World is better understood by the French people and is no longer regarded as a tank or an enemy and gradually becomes a partner, even if it costs us harsh industrial or agricultural redeployment.

France will be a friend to the peoples struggling for their freedom. It will not be deaf to the cry of gagged men; it will welcome exiles and be fraternal to immigrants. It will struggle to end all forms of exploitation and colonization, to cast off all chains. This is the message of the third rose.

Indeed, these three roses, these three symbols, express a unique demand: Man must become the "yardstick for everything." It is at the "human level" that a policy is judged. The left is indeed bringing a plan for civilization. The French people know that the left's victory was long awaited and you know too how much hope and ardor there is in our victory.

Someone dared to say that, in this spring of 1981, France decided to abandon its effort and to "stop in a shady grove." (Note 1--Pierre Mauroy is referring to the remarks made by National Council of French Employers Chairman Francois Ceyrac who, in an interview with LE MONDE, stated with regard to the presidential election results: "The French people saw it all as a kind of pause in a peaceful grove, beside the road.") That is a refusal to understand what has just happened in this country. The left's victory reflects a new upsurge and not resignation. France has decided to say no to injustice, to stop accepting the arrogance of a few people and to reject uncontrolled liberalism and its disastrous effects.

In so doing, the French people did not reject effort. They simply want--and this is no small hope--the effort to be shared out in a different way, to make sure it no longer weighs so heavily on the shoulders of the weakest. They simply want, and we must fulfill their hope, the effort--their effort--to bring progress for all and not power or profit for a few.

They also said no to a particular method of running their country. They rejected the language of figures which have swept away any tone of humanity. They rejected the dehumanization of work which is portrayed as an unavoidable evil. They rejected the invitation to "administer the unpredictable." They rejected this unfeeling attitude, the invocation of fatality, appeals for resignation in the face of the crisis, and the unemployment which threatened to smash our country's vital energy and which condemned young people to despair and the workers, sooner or later, to revolt.

They lifted up their heads without revolt, democratically and calmly but with what strength! They have once again taken control of their own future. This doesn't mean that the French people deny the existence of the crisis. They are fully aware that tomorrow will not be easy, that we will continue to suffer many constraints for a long time. But they have chosen to fight the crisis in a different and active way. They have chosen to fight the chaos of a system which we constantly condemned. They have chosen to do so by attacking the causes and not merely putting up with the effects.

I would like to add, as I look at this assembly, that the political takeover which has just been carried out is also a change of generation. This is certainly a sign of vitality and not of resignation. In response to this upsurge, the program which my government will ask you to support throughout this parliamentary term is not that of a France draped in subsidies to keep out the cold, a France in which corporation and bureaucracy would impose their law on the state, a France which would abandon its international commitments and cut itself off from the world. No, the France I am discussing today, the France which we want to build with all the French people is a France made strong by the work of all its people; it is a France stamped with solidarity, anxious to create the conditions for social justice and dignity for all; it is a responsible France laying the foundations for a "new citizenship" at all decisionmaking levels; it is an enterprising and willing France determined to win back control of its means of production; it is a France which is proud of its universal message of peace and progress --the France of human rights which is the champion of a new international order.

2-Year Employment Plan

What we want is primarily a France with full employment. That is our ambition. That is the central objective of the economic policy which I am going to propose to you. In these days of unemployment, we want to put France back to work. The employment situation has deteriorated constantly over the past 7 years. Our country has 1.8 million unemployed. One out of every six young people is unemployed; 60 out of every 100 unemployed people are women.

The causes of this scourge are simple. Of course, we are suffering from the crisis just as other people are; the recession is general. But should we have accepted the contraction of our production base, the stagnation of investment, the aging of our machinery, the devitalization of whole industrial sectors, the disappearance of so many enterprises, the costly and ineffective shoring up of so many sectors of industry? By cutting off the allegedly dead branches of the tree and not strengthening the trunk, in other words, the competitive industries, the tree has been stunted. If we had continued like that, it would die.

That is not the whole story: We find that the country has not been prepared for the third industrial revolution; inflation is excessive--two or three times higher than in some neighboring countries; the economy has been allowed to lie fallow since the beginning of 1981--postponement of adjustments in public service charges, a budgetary deficit of over Fr50 billion and not Fr30 billion, as our predecessors stated. We immediately tried to remedy the effects of this record on the economic and monetary plane--a record of which the commission chaired by Bloch-Laine will draw up an accurate assessment.

On the very day Francois Mitterrand entered the Elysee, I took the necessary measures to defend the franc. They have been completely effective over the past 7 weeks despite a terrible external context caused by America through its soaring dollar and intolerable interest rates.

We then started the task of reviving the economy. The June revival, which had to be cautious to avoid accentuating imbalances, was characterized by solidarity. The first people to benefit from the progress were the poorest people.

We also hinged those initial measures on employment via the revival itself which will gradually make its impact, by a program aimed at the integration and training of young people, by aid to productive investment--all of which is rendered possible by the credits which I will ask you to support with your votes on our finance bill.

In addition to these short term actions, our economic policy will continue to be centered on employment. The recovery will not be brought about in a day. We will suffer the ill-effects of the previous administration for a long time; it will take us several months to reverse the trend toward increasing unemployment which we have inherited.

That is why the government will propose a 2-year plan to you in December--a plan now being drawn up by the minister of state for planning. The aim of this plan is the rapid implementation of a policy for employment, based on an increased effort of national solidarity. It will comprise major structural reforms, the extension of the public sector, decentralization and a new division of labor.

During the 2-year plan, we will combat unemployment by reviving economic activity in a more permament way. We will create 210,000 jobs in the public sector or through local initiative, in keeping with the program which was started in June. We will start to reduce the working week--a subject to which I will return shortly.

The 2-year plan will, therefore, mount a relentless struggle against unemployment. It will enable us to launch a more far-reaching change in our society in 1984. At that time, a more ambitious 5-year plan will be submitted to you. The timetable is clear: We have dealt with the most urgent matters with the dual aim of revival and national solidarity; between now and 1984, the 2-year plan should reverse the trend, particularly in employment; it should bring us back to the right starting point; at that stage, we will be able to change life and change France in a more permanent way.

This approach for which I have given a timetable will be carried out strictly. That means budgetary stringency. It means that we will defend the franc and will keep it in the European Monetary System. It means a determined struggle against inflation. That will be our course. We will combat unemployment without giving in to facile measures and by restoring economic balance.

We will not win the war we are waging against unemployment without greatly reducing the working week. I informed the professional and trade union organizations 1 month ago of the government's determination to reduce the working week. I set them an objective: an average of 35 hours actual work per week by 1985. I asked them to immediately open negotiations aimed at attaining that. These negotiations are difficult but they are moving toward an agreement.

Reducing working time also means lowering the retirement age. In a few weeks' time, the government will submit a draft outline law aimed at reducing the retirement age to 60 years. Of course, that will be a right and not a requirement. It will be available mainly to those people who have had a particularly long and wearing working life.

More Effective and Just Social Protection

By struggling for employment together, we will build a united France--a France in which the right to work again exists. A united France is a France which has ceased to be the champion of inequalities among the big industrial nations. A united France is also a France which is able to give each citizen, each inhabitant, each worker his share of responsibility and which respects the autonomy and dignity of all.

As soon as it took office, the government decided to increase the minimum wage by 10 percent. That is just the first step, but if each increase were to be reflected throughout the different levels of the salary scale, we would merely produce excessive inflation. The salary scale will, therefore, have to be reorganized, not with the intention of eliminating the different levels but to eliminate the most scandalously low wages, to end the existing discrimination against workers, and especially against working women, who are all too frequently badly paid and have no career prospects. It is up to the two sides of industry to reach agreement on the gradual implementation of the necessary changes.

In the civil service and in the public and nationalized sector, the government will ensure that negotiations on wage levels, on salary structures and the length of the working week will be started in the fall.

Financial stringency calls for caution. These reforms will be slow, but we are very determined. The worker must be restored to his rightful position in this country; the worker must be paid for his efforts; the right to work is also the right to a living wage.

Solidarity also will be shown to all those prevented from working by age, illness or misfortune. France can pride itself on having built an effective and generous social protection system since 1946. But it must be made even more effective and just.

Our predecessors aspired to impose a limit on the increase in social spending without worrying about the consequences of their action. We intend to adopt a different line of thinking. The only limit to the financing of social protection is the one set by the national community. What do the French people want? If they want to improve the situation of old people, they must accept a larger amount deducted from their income. If they want to maintain general availability of health spending, then social contributions will be affected.

Each year parliament will debate the increase in receipts and spending on social protection. The obscurity in which social security accounts have hitherto been kept will be dispelled. The decisions--and they will be very difficult, not to say painful--will be made openly. As early as the fall, we will open the debate on the future of social security, especially its financing--because the contributions it levies must be fairer and not harm the employment policy--and on the principles governing the administration of the social security funds, in which the insured parties should be given a predominant role.

Old and handicapped should enjoy growing solidarity--the minimum old age pension will, therefore, continue to increase rapidly--but they want more than just help. They don't want to be kept on the fringes of society. Our policy will, therefore, be aimed at developing home services, bringing about a real transformation in the establishments housing old people but also at encouraging all initiatives aimed at giving old and handicapped people an active role in our society once again.

Finally, we must ensure that men and women in our country are never again abandoned to their fate when things become difficult. The aim is certainly not to build a society of people dependent on assistance. Quite the reverse, the aim is to give everybody, at all times, the means of taking part in working life and in shouldering the responsibilities for it.

We are fortunate enough to have a very complete health system which ensures great freedom to health care practitioners and to patients, with the cost of health care being a collective responsibility. These principles will be maintained. The patients are still free to choose their doctor and doctors will be able to choose their method of practicing.

A real public health policy eventually leads to savings. We will encourage the methods of treatment which are least costly and best suited to each case. The general practitioner will make the primary contribution to this humane medicine. We will encourage initiatives, especially the establishment of health centers. We will have detailed discussions with doctors and other medical professions to define the new rules of the game and to draw up a real health charter.

As for family allowances, one of our first measures was a 25-percent increase in those allowances. That effort will be continued. The system of compensation for family burdens must be simplified, at present there are 23 different allowances! The government will open discussion to define fairer and more effective rules for determining benefits and tax allowances for family burdens.

Today parents are encountering insurmountable difficulties in the reception and supervision of their young children. An ambitious program will be implemented which will maintain the parents' freedom to choose among all the possible solutions.

Solidarity and dignity are also the principles governing the government's policy on foreign workers and their families. As soon as the government was formed, it suspended the expulsions. It will make sure that the status and rights of all foreign workers living in France are fully recognized. However, in view of the employment situation, France is not in a position to accept an increasing number of foreign workers. Therefore, it intends to limit entries and to propose to the countries of origin bilateral agreements defining the conditions of work, residence and return of foreign workers in France and French people abroad.

Before concluding this session devoted to solidarity, allow me to say something about our repatriated compatriots. The president has recalled that the national community has debts toward them. They will not be forgotten.

Ladies and gentlemen, by electing Francois Mitterrand, the French people decided to replace a society which was hard on the poorest people with a just and equitable society. But if we are to give more to some, we must give less to others. There will be no miracle. There is no kitty from which we can take the wages paid to some people without affecting those paid to others.

Wealth Tax

We must replace a decrepit and unjust tax edifice with a system in which, as Article 13 of the Declaration of Human Rights states: the burden is "equally divided among the citizens according to their ability to contribute." But improvisation and haste are dangerous. The government will take all the time it needs for study and consultation.

Four lines of action will be proposed to you in the 1982 finance law: the creation of a wealth tax, but this tax will not apply to the means of production; reviewing some anomalies in the income tax sphere; combating tax fraud; establishing a ceiling on the effects of tax relief for dependents.

After 1982, the search for greater justice will lead, through successive and gradual measures, to introducing a land tax, organizing savings incentives and rights of succession, harmonizing tax and social protection systems for employees and self-employed workers and redistributing resources between the state and the local councils.

But solidarity is not just a matter of money. Inequality in France does not just exist between those who have everything and more and those who have nothing. There is also glaring inequality between educated and uneducated people, between those who can direct the course of their life and those who are never asked what they want or even what they think, between those who choose where they live and those who are forced to live somewhere and between those who give orders without explanations and those who are given orders without being heeded.

Different Way of Exercising Power

We must establish a responsible France. In the face of these inequalities, we intend to establish the bases for a "new citizenship." The French people's recent votes mean that they expect power which is not simply exercised by different people but which is exercised in a different way.

The social and administrative structures which, in fact, have constantly become more rigid since the days of the empire do not allow people to show the necessary initiative to face new challenges. In the coming days, we intend to give back to the 500,000 elected representatives the means of exercising their responsibility and initiative. We will give the citizens, users and consumers the means of playing a real part in organizing their daily lives.

We are determined to encourage decisive progress in economic and social democracy. The French people, who are citizens in their communes, must also be citizens at their place of work. The employers should neither fear nor oppose this desirable and necessary development. The sense of responsibility which the trade union organizations have is not new. But it takes on its full significance when a government which shares their hopes calls upon them to become full partners and protagonists in change.

Building a "new citizenship" primarily means handing the state back to the citizens. I think that it would be appropriate to set the example for this "new deal" in everyday democracy here. I will not conceal the fact that the initial exchanges between the majority and the opposition in the new assembly have not satisfied me. The government's intention was to play the democratic game loyally and to break with a parliamentary practice which excluded the opposition from any responsibility.

I regret the fact that the new opposition refused that. The notion of "opposition status" is a remnant from the previous 7-year term. The problem should not be posed in that way. We simply have to allow the democratic rules to work fully in order to restore parliament's role, to restore a balance between the legislative and executive powers and to establish respect for the opposition. I confirm that we are determined to do that. This means, for example, that on current issues it will be possible to express your views in full and to reply to members of the government. It also means that bills will be able to be discussed, that the systematic use of the vote on bills without the opportunity to introduce amendments will be abandoned and the government will respect all deputies' power to introduce amendments. But the "new citizenship" reflects a plan which is much broader than mere parliamentary procedures. This is true of justice, which must be simultaneously released from the state and brought closer to the ordinary man. This is a priority.

In this sphere too, we have a burdensome legacy. In recent years, we have witnessed a decline in freedom and, hence, in the confidence which the French people have in their legal system. To restore that confidence the government intends to take a series of actions: On 3 June, it pronounced in favor of French people having the right of individual appeal for which provision is made in Article 25 of the European Human Rights Convention; in the present session, it will propose a bill to eliminate the State Security Court. Subsequently, it will propose the elimination of the armed forces' permanent courts, the annulment of the law of 2 February 1981 known as the "security and liberty" law and the abolition of the death penalty; it will propose the long awaited reform of the higher magistrates council.

The legal system is increasingly being directly confronted with economic, financial and industrial problems. In this difficult period for employment, no stone must be left unturned to enable it to work effectively. That is why we will resolutely tackle the job of updating the legal arsenal which is stifling rather than saving enterprises in difficulty. These enterprises, clearly, chiefly need economic solutions but the law's role cannot be disregarded, as we had reason to note recently.

The law's primacy also must be reaffirmed regarding telephone bugging. I have decided to set up a commission which will present proposals to me before 31 October, aimed at ensuring that telephone bugging which is used outside cases of information for legal purposes is strictly aimed at preventing or neutralizing major acts of gangsterism and helping to safeguard the state's external security. Opposition and majority deputies from both assemblies, lawyers, magistrates and civil servants will be asked to carry out that mission.

Finally, I would like to say a word about the role of the police. The policeman must be given back his proper prevention role. Policemen are aware of this and are already involved in the effort. The criminal investigation department must act patiently, without seeking spectacular effects and by respecting peoples' rights and dignity.

Giving the citizens control of the state, ensuring them freedom and responsibility primarily means guaranteeing them the right to a complete and pluralist media. The French people's culture, information and leisure depend increasingly on modern means of communication. The question of radio and television and, more especially, of news on radio and television resurfaces regularly at the start of each 7-year term! This proves that radio and television do not have the status which would guarantee their independence. We have inherited a corrupt situation in this area too. Very bad habits have been established. Structures must be reformed. You will have to debate a bill in the next few months.

All problems must be handled with constant concern for great freedom but also in a legal framework, preventing an anarchical development which would ultimately benefit those who have financial power. We must have freedom with a concern for pluralism, balance and fairness. This bill also should make it possible to lay the foundations of a law capable of being rapidly adapted to lightning technical developments.

The government wants the law to attain three objectives: to ensure full autonomy from political power be it national, regional or local, but also from financial power; to organize decentralization and encourage plurality of forms of expression; to develop the mission of providing culture, education, entertainment and information for citizens with concern for the quality of programs and the encouragement of creativity.

Broadening Daily Democracy

A responsible France is also a country which, henceforth, is to implant the unity of the republic in the diversity and responsibility of its local authorities. Such is the object of the first bill affecting the structures of our community life which will be placed before your assembly this session.

While awaiting the vote on these texts, the regional institutions, thus, will continue to function within the framework of the 1972 law but on flexible terms tending to bring their operation closer to that of the other territorial authorities and to prepare for the setting up of the future regional institutions. Henceforth, the government has rescinded the decrees and memorandums which, above the law, would restrict the actions decided on by the regional councils. With the adoption of the bill which is going to be submitted to you, the president of the regional council will become the regional executive and, as with other authorities, trusteeship will be replaced by an a posteriori jurisdictional control.

The suppression of the office of prefect will be put before you not from hostility toward a body which has constantly borne witness of its state-mindedness but from the wish to see disappear the image of a France centralized in the extreme, bound up in the rigidity of its laws, rules and memorandums.

Decentralization is not limited to reforming the local authorities. It is the guiding logic which will operate in all the measures that we are proposing. Thus, the new citizenship will make it possible to offer to daily democracy, wherever possible, new areas of freedom and responsibility, and first of all, to the benefit of the majority of our compatriots, and here I mean fellow countrywomen, since much remains to be done if we want French women to have their full rights: rights to a job, a salary and a career comparable with those of men, rights to responsibilities.

The government is equally resolved to encourage this new force which is affirming its capacity for dialogue, for making proposals, for negotiations and for action, by which I mean the consumers and users movement. Prompted by the minister of consumption, the government's policy will favor the development of a genuine consumers' power thanks to the placing of legal, technical, financial means and means of expression at the disposal of the consumer associations. Within the system of freedom of prices and competition, the existence of dynamic consumer associations is a fundamental element in the fight against inflation.

Making French citizens once more masters of their everyday life also means associating them with building and administering the framework of life. "A property built up is a property controlled," people say, the majority have still not gained the right to high quality housing, the right to a city. The local authorities will control the property market. This means the end of speculation. They will be able to conduct a voluntary urban planning. Toward this end, the government will put before you a policy supported by a declaratory property tax. The distribution of housing aid will be reshaped. From today, social housing becomes a priority again.

[Apparent line drop]energy in the home, the protection of older districts and the promotion of a humane and bold architecture. We will accept private initiative without restraining its action in so far as it does not run contrary either to present day justice or the future quality of life.

We will give back to residents full power over their environment. In this direction, the government will place before you a bill for reforming the tenancy law. Housing and environment will be the chosen ground of the new citizenship as they will be that of decentralization. In many domains, the associative movement will be the privileged support of the new citizenship, particularly for developing leisure time.

From this viewpoint, the government is inviting the associative movement to define with it a new set of rules. It is up to us, in particular, to erase social segregation in the sphere of leisure. We will tackle it by means of the "vacation check" and by developing the social forms of leisure and tourism. Leisure time is also a permanent education, it is the means whereby everyone can progress in his personal and socioprofessional life.

Permanent training has been neglected for a few years. It must be relaunched, its financing must be reviewed and schools and universities must be opened to it. The level of the working people's education and training is one of the French economy's greatest opportunities. We will undertake a profound transformation of our educational system. Everyone must participate in it: parents, elected representatives, associations, employee and employers representatives, and, most of all, teachers, who in the past have been too often unjustly criticized and mistreated.

The unification of the public education service will be the outcome of concerted action and negotiation. This public service will be inclined to welcome all establishments and all staffs within pluralism and by way of a contractual policy. We must also envisage the future of the universities and the higher schools.

Above all, it is essential to renew the university councils. With this aim, the government will soon be putting down a bill abrogating the Sauvage law and instituting new rules for their composition. New councils will be elected and will meet before the end of the year. At the end of this concerted action, the university charter will be established by contract.

Our desire to promote daily democracy would be meaningless were it not applied as a priority to the working people's conditions in their firms.

France expects from its firms as much in the way of performance, dynamic productivity and innovation as it owes itself, morally and by efficiency, to guarantee and strengthen the rights of those whose efforts--now more than ever--determine the nation's very future. As citizens in a city, working people must also be citizens of their place of work.

Through the labor code, works committees have important powers. We will ensure that they are respected. We must free ourselves of the situation where negotiations are still the exception. Salaries, employment policy, training and the hours or organization of work are to be the subjects of talks between managers and works trade union sections. Contractual ties strengthen economic and social progress: the systematic recourse to the law, to the regulations and to intervention by the public authorities entails irresponsibility and rigidity.

The government will propose to parliament legislative measures intended to avoid a misused recourse to temporary work and to fixed term contracts and to strengthen the rights of temporary workers. At my request, the minister of labor meanwhile has undertaken a study and extensive consultations on trade union rights. The government already has shown and will continue to show its desire to make trade union organizations participate in a search for solutions to the difficulties of lameduck firms.

Industrial Policy

Getting France back to work, practicing social justice, strengthening citizens' rights --none of these aims can be attained without an enterprising France, imaginative and determined to regain control of its means of production. The new economic policy that we are placing before you rests broadly on the private sector's will to be enterprising, to be innovative, to invest and to create jobs. It will be our constant concern to stimulate this will.

To support medium and small businesses, we will be proposing to you a review of the fiscal and regulatory machine which discourages the setting up of businesses and innovation; we will facilitate their access to public markets; we will promote their supply of capital stock; we will formulate a subcontracting charter. We intend to resume our credit policy and to develop productive saving.

To finance the planned great program of public and private investments, the government is rejecting resource to monetary means. The growth in money supply will remain strictly controlled. But businesses expect that credit destined to finance investments and the treasury will be more accessible and less expensive.

In conjunction with our European partners, we have undertaken a concerted action with a view to convincing U.S. leaders of the dangerous nature for European economies of their current policy of high interest rates. We hope that these efforts will lead to concrete results in Ottawa.

But above all, we are appealing to a mobilization of savings and to the active participation of savers to ensure a solid financial footing for our programs of economic and social recovery.

I confirm our intention to encourage steady savings earmarked for financing productive investment and particularly savings invested in bonds. Meanwhile, measures will be studied without delay, which makes it possible to ensure that people's savings are protected against the effects of inflation. Still with a concern to promote the spirit of enterprise, the government will apply itself to easing certain social burdens which weigh on businesses and slow down recruitment.

The government, which intends pursuing and enlarging the first against inflation, does not wish, as a consequence, to threaten the freedom of industrial prices. It will apply itself to achieving a slowing down in price rises within an economy of freedom and concerted action. This means that competition will be stimulated but also that abuses will be penalized.

Our industrial policy's central objective is a simple one. It aims at creating the conditions for a relaunch of productive investment. In 1980, private firms' investment was 5 percent below its 1974 level. This development is disturbing since there is no prosperous economy without a powerful industry and NO POWERFUL INDUSTRY WITHOUT AN INVESTMENT OR RESEARCH EFFORT. At present, the gap with our main partners continues to widen from year to year.

Nationalization of the Banking Sector....

Equal access for all, particularly for small and medium-sized enterprises, to short and long term finance will be sought. Banking establishments will become more concerned about the general interest in distributing credit and will add this criterion, which has been too long neglected, to those they already use for deciding on the granting of assistance. Moreover, measures will be adopted to ensure that application of the 1945 texts on the nationalization of banks becomes effective in the three big national banks. This nationalization will respect the following principles:

There will be no undue nationalization of the economy: Shares held by the banking groups thus nationalized in enterprises outside the enlarged public sector as defined by the president will be offered to the private sector. This applies in particular to the multiple industrial shares held, outside the 11 nationalizable industrial groups, by the Compagnie Financiere de Paris et des Pays-Bas and the Compagnie Financiere de Suez. Here too, in the course of the parliament, we will do what we have stated: No more and no less, that is our commitment.

The government reasserts that it wants the national enterprises to be able to conduct international activity without hindrance and that it wants those enterprises to adopt the best strategies they can to take their place in world competition.

The recent initiatives adopted, with the agreement of the authorities, by ELF-Aquitaine and Rhone-Poulenc show that this orientation applies in effect as well to public groups as to the private sector.

Nothing will be done in this respect that could disrupt the international operations of the nationalizable banking groups--operations which, since they are useful to our exporters and our investors, must be maintained.

The banking sector will remain pluralist. There is no question of establishing a credit monopoly. Every businessman will continue to have a free choice of bankers, to change his banker if he is not satisfied and, if he wishes, to make several bankers compete so as to obtain the best service. This pluralism will be developed by means of maintaining and creating decentralized regional networks. Finally, the missions of the National Credit Council and the Banking Control Commission will be strengthened and extended to all credit distribution.

...And of Industrial Groups

Thus France will acquire new instruments enabling all enterprises--and individuals--to benefit from a more effective credit and finance policy, better oriented toward the development of economic activity. Of course, nationalization does not affect foreign banks or French banks under foreign control. Nor does it apply to establishments with special legal statutes or to cooperative or mutual benefit networks, or to companies like the Siconi [expansion unknown] or brokers.

Nationalization is not designed to disrupt the structures or attack the character of the existing networks. Its purpose is, making use of personnel and employees who have proved their efficiency, to give new impetus to the activity of the groups concerned. Above all, its aim is to return to national control of the privilege of issuing money, which has been partly conceded heretofore.

It is a question of returning, in practice, to the spirit and the letter of the law of 2 December 1945. The small independent banks, which are often very useful in local or regional economic life, will be rapidly put out of range of nationalization in accordance with conditions we will define. Discussions will be commenced with their leaders with a view to involving them in the new orientations in credit policy which I have just defined.

In the fall session, a second bill concerning industrial groups will be submitted to you. A modern industrial economy draws its strength simultaneously from a network of medium and small enterprises of great diversity and a core of large industrial groups which alone are capable of carrying out the very big investments which are required both by basic industries, which are highly capital intensive, and by frontline sectors involving very costly research.

These large groups must be competitive and, by their joint efforts, must maintain France's place in sectors where world competition is intense. It is up to the men who lead them, group by group, to establish an industrial strategy and to implement it. This is their duty, and at the same time their responsibility, which will remain intact. The plan, the essential instrument of our growth, will ensure compatibility between these decisions, which are often decisive for the national interest, and the major development options chosen by the government. Once this cohesiveness is ensured, it is our firm will to help enterprises to realize their goals. In particular we are well aware that today they find themselves in an international environment; they must be able to invest abroad or sign agreements for cooperation with foreign partners whenever it is a case of securing a direct or indirect increase in the national wealth.

It is in this spirit that we will move on to certain industrial nationalizations which are essential to the development we intend to promote. In accordance with the president of the republic's pledges, 11 industrial groups will be brought within the public sector during this parliament. Eleven groups, not one more or less. That is our commitment. But the diversity of those groups means that our course must remain somewhat flexible as to time and form.

Nationalization will be immediate for the Dassault group, which operates mainly on military orders. The same will apply to the Matra Company's "arms" branch. Studies will be undertaken without delay to consider the specific situation of these two groups.

Second, the iron and steel group made up of Usinor and Sacilor, which is undergoing a prolonged and painful crisis. It is the duty of the state as shareholder to immediately take full responsibility for a restructuring operation, whose repercussions will be of national importance.

Third, five industrial groups--the Compagnie Generale d'Electricite, Pechiny-Ugine-Kuhlman, Rhone-Poulenc, Saint-Gobain-Pont-a-Mousson and Thomson-Brandt--will be immediately nationalized at the level of the parent companies.

The public appropriation of these five groups' capital will not apply to that part of the capital--very small, in any case--which is held by foreigners. The latter will be free to hold on to their shares or to sell them to the state.

We have an open economy. Industrial or technological agreements with foreign partners and reciprocal capital investments create links between the French economy and its international environment. Such exchanges often create jobs and wealth. Whenever they meet this criterion effectively, without putting us in a dependent position, we will seek to maintain them, or even to strengthen them.

Negotiations With Foreign Groups

We want the state, through nationalization, to secure control of the industrial poles which seem to us to command a dynamic investment and employment policy. But at the same time we want foreign partners and shareholders who have hitherto taken part in companies' expansions to be able to continue to do so if they wish.

Negotiations will be opened immediately with the leaders of three groups--CII-Honeywell-Bull, ITT-France and Roussel-UCLAF --which, for specific reasons, will not be covered by the impending nationalization bill. In fact they include substantial foreign shareholdings--majority holdings in the last two cases. The negotiations will aim to discover ways and means for the necessary restructuring of capital by agreement with the foreign partners, taking care to preserve existing technological, industrial and commercial ties but also the will to pursue the nationalization movement.

I am convinced that nationalization will manifest itself in a strengthening of the industrial groups concerned. This goal is a priority in my eyes.

Nationalization will not mean state control. We will protect the identity and autonomy of the national companies created in this way. They will enjoy full responsibility as enterprises called upon to act on their own initiative in the national sphere as in the international sphere. Past examples show that our public enterprises can be remarkably successful provided they are guaranteed management autonomy. We will guarantee it, within the framework of the enterprise contracts which they will sign with the state.

The government is aware of the complex, vital nature of these groups. Its aim is not to dismantle them but to call on them to display enterprise and to prosper. So I call on the teams which lead them and which have proved their capability--leaders, cadres and personnel--to mobilize themselves in the service of an investment and development effort.

Finally, the public sector, thus enlarged, will of course have a direct interest in the legislative measures which the government, as I have said, envisages with a view to improving working people's rights within the enterprise in general terms. Moreover, my government will later submit to parliament a bill which will aim to make the public sector the preferential site of social innovation.

It goes without saying that, in the banking sphere as in the industrial sphere, compensation for shareholders, the procedure for which will be specified in the two bills I have just been speaking of, will be legally beyond dispute and financially equitable.

We are going to make immediate preparations for the implementation of this arrangement as a whole. To this end the government will appoint delegates responsible for contacting the banking and industrial groups concerned and studying with them the measures which must be adopted during the transitional period before the vote on the nationalization bill. These delegates will report on their proceedings to a standing interministry committee, from which they will receive the necessary instructions.

The extension of the public sector is not the only structural reform which the government intends to implement in order to bring about profound changes in our economic life.

The cooperative form seems to us, for instance, to be well adapted to encouraging the efforts of creators of enterprises. Local communities, on their part, would like to be able to encourage such initiatives, and the mutual benefit societies have demonstrated their economic and social effectiveness. Many legal obstacles and regulations exist which have hindered a mobilization in savings banks in favor of cooperative enterprises. These obstacles must be removed and a new legal framework must be instituted so that a real social economy can develop.

Agriculture

I would not want to finish this part of my speech without touching on that other source of national wealth--agriculture.

French agriculture can only be expanding agriculture. There are several reasons for this. The first is the wealth of our country, whose diversity you are familiar with but which, while it accounts for 33 percent of the cultivable area of the Community, produces only just over one-fourth of the 10 member countries' total agricultural output. So substantial room for progress exists. We can and must further increase the positive balance of our agricultural and food exchanges, which will exceed Fr20 billion in 1981. There is only one way to do that; by developing our agriculture and our agricultural and food industries.

The second reason is that the increasing food deficit in the Third World countries and, in particular, our neighbors in the Mediterranean and Africa is alarming on the human plane as well as on the political plane.

Is it reasonable to envisage limiting the development of a wealth which is so vital for millions of people? Can North America alone be left with the opportunity to respond to this demand, which will only increase, and to capture the world market to its own profit?

This expansion can only take place within the Community framework. All the same, it is no longer possible to believe in the virtue of laboriously negotiated compromises alone for saving the Common Agricultural Policy and avoiding the progressive blockage of all its decisionmaking bodies under pressure from national egoisms.

One final word about the economic opening up of France to the world.

The penetration of our domestic market by foreign goods is taking on disturbing proportions. It has increased by nearly four percentage points for industrial products since 1978. In the face of international competition it is the government's duty, in consultation with our partners, to rapidly restore our economy's room to maneuver and its competitiveness.

This effort will be made with respect for our international commitments. Any abuse of border protectionism would be more harmful than effective for industry. But the government will be vigilant as regards unfair competition. It will make use of the consultation procedures which exist with our trade partners. Our attitude will be based on respect for strict reciprocity in trade and tariff practice. The attention of the United States and Japan has been drawn firmly to this matter.

Two priorities will be laid down within the framework of the 2-year plan:

The reduction of energy dependence;

The strengthening of our strong points as regards exports and the reconquest of the domestic market.

The government will propose a comprehensive energy program which will be the subject of a debate in parliament and then in regional bodies. We will not neglect any of the fossil fuel resources extracted from our own territory, provided that the cost of exploiting them remains acceptable in relation to world market prices.

An active research and development policy for the utilization of renewable energy sources will be implemented.

Finally, it is a question of pursuing a substantial but rational nuclear power program which takes account of the lower cost of this energy source but which avoids the headlong all-nuclear policy which was formerly promised us.

I repeat, it is through dynamism in indusrty, a coherent industrial policy and increased consultation among national producers and distribution networks that it is possible to make an effective reconquest of the domestic market and to improve our competitiveness in the industrialized countries' markets.

The economic and social modifications on which we are embarking will be carried out without France seeking to isolate itslef. Not only will it remain open to the world, it intends to keep a firm hold on its role in the diplomatic arena.

European Building and the Alliances

Our aim is to build a proud France; a France of human rights, a France resolved to promote a new international order. You are aware of the hope that has been aroused in many foreign countries by Francois Mitterrand's election. Drawing strength from this current of sympathy, the diplomacy which we will develop will embark resolutely on the quest for real solutions to the interantional economic crisis and to the grievous conflicts which are creating intolerable situations for many peoples. Only a worldwide effort of reorganization and solidarity can lessen the zones of tension and contribute to prosperity and peace.

For France, the surest way to create an environment in accord with the wishes I have just put forward is, first and foremost, European building.

The cooperation mechanisms at the Community's disposal already owe much to our country's actions. The government will strive to go further and, above all, to ensure that the considerable organizational capacity which these mechanisms offer the member states are fully utilized in the service of economic revival, employment, the elimination of inequalities and cooperation with the developing countries.

It is our firm intention to revive the spirit of the Community institutions and to settle--fairly and pragmatically--the current disputes. We are neither ideologists of supranationalism nor theologians of antisupranationalism. The restructing of the Community budget, the reform of the Common Agricultural Policy, the renegotiation of international arrangements like the multifibers agreement and the enlargement of the Community will be approached in a constructive spirit with a view of reconciling the definition of common positions and the safeguarding of France's interests.

But the real task facing Europeans is on quite a different scale. It is a question of facing up to the crisis, that is, to unemployment, to industrial restructuring, to the problem of energy supplies.

Well, in this new economic environment, the route of free exchange appears paralyzed. The new division of labor, to the advantage of the multinational companies, is taking place without Europe and even against it. Unless Europe shakes off its lethargy, it is to be feared that the member states may be forced to resort to substantial protectionist measures. Then European building would be threatened.

To take up the challenge, Europe must show itself to be active and voluntarist, ensure the development of industries which represent a strategic interest in international competition and strengthen ties of cooperation with the developing countries.

To take up the challenge, Europe must further extend the European dimension in the social sphere, as the president told his colleagues at the last European Council session in Luxembourg. The government will seek to rapidly give reality to the European social dimension by means of seeking a progressive harmonization of working conditions and working people's rights in the Community.

But the importance which the government attacnes to Community affairs does not mean that France will not hold on to its role in international relations.

Our diplomatic action will be based on certain imperatives. I would like to emphasis three of them: maintaining our place in the world; fighting for respect for right; promoting international solidarity.

We are responsible for a heritage which we must preserve and whose best elements we must augment. Out of respect for itself, France will honor all the commitments it has adopted and will not disappoint anyone who has found it a reliable partner. I am thinking in particular of all the African countries with which historical accident, but also generous impulses, have woven special bonds.

The same loyalty leads us to reassert the importance we attach to the networks of friendships or alliances which bind us to other nations throughout the world. Naturally, first among our allies are the United States and our other partners in the Atlantic alliance. This alliance is not only a means to collective security, in our view, it is also a human community which we have joined of our own free will and within which we intend to implement our domestic policy quite independently.

At the same time, France cannot keep its place in the world unless its independence, security and economic prosperity are guaranteed by its own efforts. That is why I wish to solemnly recall our commitment to all the efforts our country has made to obtain the means of independence, in particular, the military means. This effort will be pursued so that our defense policy, which is based on a national deterrent capacity, remains the ultimate guarantee of our sovereignty. In particular, France will accept no delay in the continuing technological race which is underway in this sphere.

Unfortunately, not all our reasons for anxiety have been dispelled. They relate in particular to the continuing growth in the Soviet Union's military potential, which is manifested today in the medium-range weapons directly threatening West Europe. We have stated that our European allies cannot yield to intimidation and that global strategic equilibrium must be.

The defense of peace lies not in neutrality but in the equilibrium of forces. If this equilibrium is disrupted, an additional effort must be made to restore it. Indeed, talks can only result in a situation of equilibrium. They must aim to lower the level of armaments.

We must also fight for the respect of right. That means that France will seek to adopt an exemplary attitude and deliberately reject compromise and the tyranny of short term interests so as to lead the way to respect for the fundamental principles of international life. It will firmly assert the peoples' right to control their own destiny, independence, sovereignty and security for states and the right to development.

Thus, together with our European partners, we come out in favor of the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Afghanistan and the exercise of self-determination by the Afghan people and against all interference in that country's affairs.

We hope that the dailogue between France and the Soviet Union will soon find new impetus in accordance with the traditional relations of friendship between our two countries , to which both paid a heavy tribute in the last world conflict.

In Poland where an effort toward revival and renewal is taking place in a peaceful manner and is giving rise to great hope, we are prepared to give assistance in conjunction with our partners. We assert our rejection of all foreign intervention and interference, whatever the motivation. Poland's problems must be resolved by the Poles themselves.

We advocate that in the Near East a negotiated solution should take effective account of the legitimate interests of all the region's states, including Israel, while recognizing their right to live within safe and recognized borders and guaranteeing the Palestinians the real right to a homeland.

We advocate that an independent Kampuchea, free from foreign military presence and free to choose its own government, should regain the dignity to which it has a right.

We advocate that in Latin American social progress should triumph within the framework of democratic institutions and without these changes being exploited from outside by being placed at the service of blind confrontations foreign to the aspirations of the peoples in the region.

We also advocate that all the African countries, in accordance with the principles laid down by the OAU, should be able to live in peace, safe from aggression and foreign interference. In this sphere, France will assume its responsibilities more fully than before while respecting the will and interests of its partners and the universal principles which I have just mentioned.

This leads me on to say a few words, finally, about our third imperative: promoting international solidarity.

The increase in oil prices, the instability of raw material prices, the disorganization of the international monetary system have most often aggravated the economic and social situation of the developing countries without the aid policy of the industrialized countries changing in the least.

The French Government, for its party, is resolved to strengthen bilateral and multilateral public aid to development and to achieve in full the objective of 0.7 percent of the gross national production.

In discussions with its partners among the industrialized and developing countries, the government will seek to promote new types of international cooperation, such as product agreements and the common pool of raw materials.

It is time for the industrialized countries to display in concrete form their will to strengthen trade relations with developing countries. The government fully subscribes to the declaration published at the end of the ministerial meeting of the OECD council 16 and 17 June. It regards the proliferation of exchanges with developing countries, stimulated by a voluntarist policy of aid and cooperation, as one of the chief instruments for restoring growth in the world economy. In forthcoming international meetings, France will seek to promote these ideas.

In all its actions, France will renew contact with its history, which largely explains its prestige in the world. No aspect of France's influence can be separated from its culture and its past. France abroad is first and foremost the France of the 1789 revolution, the France of audacity. Today once more France can offer an original model of society and can be creative. We want our country, in renewing contact with its traditions, to carry far and wide the values of human rights, fraternity and understanding of other peoples' cultures.

We will, therefore, devote great attention to the development of cultural exchanges, within the framework of the French language in particular. Wherever possible, we will develop the bonds of language and culture which transmit the form of civilization which we value.

Those, ladies and gentlemen, are the goals, the means and the timetable of governmental action. As you can see, there is no shortage of work, for you or for us. I thank you for your patience.

To implememt this program, the executive and the legislature must work in concert, in an atmosphere of honesty and trust. To seal our common will, a vote is essential.

That is why this morning I obtained the authorization of the cabinet to pledge the government's responsibility on this general policy declaration in accordance with Article 49 of the Constitution.

Ladies and gentlemen, thank you.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY ABOLISHES STATE SECURITY COURT

LD171852 Paris Domestic Service in French 1800 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Text] The State Security Court no longer exists. The deputies of the National Assembly voted in favor of abolishing it by a show of hands. This decision is intended to return to the ordinary law courts their power to review cases on attempts against the security of the state.

EMPLOYERS, TRADE UNIONS DRAFT PROTOCOL ON WORKWEEK

LD181315 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Summary] The National Council of French Employers (CNPF) and the trade unions have drawn up a protocol of agreement on work hours, a compromise solution which reduces the workweek from 40 to 39 hours and generalizes the fifth week of paid leave. The Force Ouvriere and the CNPF already signed the protocol; some trade unions, including those of the small and medium-size enterprises and the French Democratic Confederation of Labor want until 24 July to consider. The General Confederation of Labor, which has voiced strong reservations, will give its views in the next few days.

The 39-hour workweek will mean, in fact, a maximum of 40 hours, including overtime, as opposed to the former maximum of 50 hours. The maximum number of overtime hours every year will not exceed a ceiling to be established during negotiations within the branches; the ceiling will vary from one branch to another. This represents an attempt by the trade unions to make room for more jobs.

In exchange, the employers obtained greater flexibility in the work timetables to ensure profitable operation of the machinery in the face of reduced working hours. The employers' requests have been accepted by the trade unions but only in principle; the ways and means have to be discussed by the individual branches.

It is expected that the branch level negotiations will begin before 30 September. The conclusions will be made at a national level meeting to be held in December. Parliament will then be informed of the changes to be made in the law and the new program will undoubtedly come into force the beginning of this year.

COMMUNICATIONS MINISTER DETAILS BROADCAST REFORMS

LD162344 Paris Domestic Service in French 2200 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] Communications Minister Georges Fillioud gave the senate a few details about the role to be occupied by local radio services in the future reform of broadcasting in France.

The new statutes will open the way to local expression but not to anarchy. Authorization for broadcasting, breaking the monopoly, will not be granted to business undertakings or to new local monopolies whether they are financial, municipal, trade union or political monopolies. The only stations authorized to broadcast will have to sign terms of references which will impose on them the status of nonprofit making organizations or low-power transmitter monitored by (?TDF) [French television] and the transmission of original programs. These local radios will not be authorized to form networks and will have to comply with the requirements laid down in legislation which governs the press. Finally, the government and parliament will decide whether advertising will be forbidden either partially or totally.

MARCHAIS AGREES TO MEET WITH ITALY'S BERLINGUER

PM171440 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 11 Jul 81 p 6

[Text] At the meeting with PCF Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz on 1 July, Antonio Rubbi, PCI Central Committee member and international section chief, proposed on behalf of the PCI Directorate a meeting between Georges Marchais and Enrico Berlinguer in the near future. Georges Marchais accepted this proposal with pleasure. The date and place of the meeting will be set later by joint agreement.

PCF CADRES REPORTEDLY CALLED FOR GISCARD VOTE

PM171530 Paris LE MONDE in French 8 Jul 81 p 7

[Text] Alain Leygnier, a L'HUMANITE journalist (who wrote under the pseudonym Nicolas Prayssac), has sent the text of his letter of resignation to Leroy, editor of the PCF daily, to RENCONTRES COMMUNISTES-HEBDO, which Riszbin edits and which published the letter in its 3 July issue. Levgnier accuses the party leadership of "using doubletalk and the cynicism of omniscience" and says that after the PS success and PCF's failure in the first round of the presidential election, there was "open capitulation, shameful opportunism and even behavior paralleling the old workerism." Leygnier adds: "This was a capitulation which, however, was not without duplicity: The Central Committee called on people to vote for Mitterrand, but some cadres, both senior and middle ranking, and some L'HUMANITE journalists campaigned for a Giscard vote or abstention. Petty political maneuvering triumphed to the detriment of principled politics. The leadership bears collective responsibility for this blow dealt to the revolutionary current of the French workers' movement."

RED BRIGADES, INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATION LINKED

AU171943 Rome ANSA in English 1910 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 17 Jul (ANSA)--A top-secret document uncovering the link between the urban guerrilla Red Brigades in Italy and an "international organization" was reported here today to have been among the papers confiscated earlier this month from Maria Grazia Gelli, P-2 grand master Licio Gelli's daughter. The scoop will appear in the next issue of the ESPRESSO news weekly, whose editors confirmed today that the authenticity of the document has been proven. They said that no more than a dribble of leaks were available about the contents of the explosive document.

What is known, ESPRESSO disclosed, is that it has been kept under seal as top-secret material since its disclosures not only regard Italy, but other countries as well. There was no explanation as to how the fugitive P-2 grand mason got hold of the document, described as being of "very recent" writing.

All that ESPRESSO revealed was that it portrayed not-better-defined "big international organization" as somehow pulling the strings of leftwing terrorism in Italy. The weekly, which has made a reputation for itself with a long series of journalistic scoops, did not know the identity of the author of the document although it insisted that the existence of the document and its authenticity were indisputable.

Maria Grazia Gelli was stopped at Rome's Fiumicino Airport on July 4 as she was entering the country with a suitcase in which a series of documents pertaining to her father's secret Masonic lodge were concealed. The nature of these papers has not been disclosed to the press, although some of them apparently falsely accused the Milan judges investigating the P-2 scandal of corruption.

According to press leaks, another of the documents in the false bottom of Ms Belli's suitcase was a secret CIA report on Italian terrorism.

Whatever their nature, the magistrates in Rome investigating the case have disclosed that the documents were full of "sensational" revelations. The woman is under arrest on charges ranging from espionage and criminal association to aiding and abetting crime.

SPADOLINI GOVERNMENT MAKES ADDITIONAL APPOINTMENTS

Secret Service Officials

NC181715 Paris AFP in English 1644 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 18 Jul (AFP)--The government today replaced the heads of Italian secret service agencies, whose reputations were thrown into question in the recent scandal involving the secret Masonic lodge, Propaganda Due (P-2).

Emanuele de Francesco, 60, who served as police commissioner in Rome and Turin in the northwest, was named chief of Italy's internal security agency, SISDE. The police commissioner of Padua in the northeast, Orazio Sparano, 55, was appointed head of the secret service organization CESIS.

The nominations were announced following an inter-ministerial meeting today.

Mr Sparano replaces Walter Pelosi, who is under judicial investigation for "political espionage". He allegedly ordered a surveillance report of the socialist state participation minister, Gianni de Michelis, and sent a copy to the P-2 grand master, Licio Gelli. Mr Pelosi resigned his post while the heads of the two other agencies were put on "regular leave" for membership in the lodge.

Italy's secret services were reorganized in 1978 following charges that they were incapable of curbing Italy's surging terrorism. Following the neo-fascist bombing of the Bologna train station that killed 85 last August, they were again criticized for not forecasting the "reawakening" of Italy's extreme-right. Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini has said he will place the CESIS secret service under his direct control.

Military Chiefs

LD182139 Rome Domestic Service in Italian 1700 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Text] The Council of Ministers has appointed the top military chiefs. Here are their names: Gen Vittorio Santini is defense chief of staff; Gen Umberto Capuzzo is army chief of staff; Admiral Monassi is navy chief of staff; Gen Lorenzo Valdi Tara is general commander of the Carabinieri; Gen Nicola Chiari is general commander of the Inland Revenue Guard.

Prefect Orazio Sparano has been appointed general secretary of the Interministerial Committee for Information and Security. Prefect Emanuele de Francesco is head of SISDE [the intelligence service]. The head of SISMI [military intelligence service] will be appointed at the next meeting of the Council of Ministers at the proposal of the minister of defense. [sentence indistinct].

Intelligence Officials

AU182004 Rome ANSA in English 1945 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 18 Jul (ANSA)--The Italian Government announced a radical shake-up at the uppermost echelons of the nation's intelligence services--army, navy and finance police--today in the wake of the P-2 Masonic lodge scandal.

An interministerial committee today appointed two civilians to run Interior Ministry Intelligence Operations (SISDE) and the Liaison Office (CESIS) Emanuele de Francesco and Orazio Sparano respectively. An armed forces officer will be appointed in two weeks to head Military Intelligence (SISMI).

All of the new officers appointed today to take over the key posts of command in the armed forces were said by Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio to "fully meet the essential (?requirements) for the high offices they will cover."

Defense chief-of-staff General Vittorio Santini, who replaces Admiral Giovanni Torrisi.

Army chief-of-staff: General Umberto Capuzzo, replacing General Eugenio Rambaldi, who was retired because of age.

Navy chief-of-staff: Admiral Angelo Monassi, replacing Admiral Bini, retired because of age.

Commander of the "Carabinieri": General Lorenzo Valdi Tara, replacing General Umetro Cappuzzo, who was promoted Army Chief-of-Staff.

Commander of the finance police: General Nicola Chiari, who replaces General Oreste Giannini, a suspected P-2 member.

AVANTI ON PCI 'SUPERFICIALITY' ON SOCIALISTS

PM161405 Rome AVANTI in Italian 3 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Editorial: "Short-Sighted Analyses and Simplistic Assessments from PCI"]

[Text] Altogether the observations devoted to the Socialist Party have been rightly identified by almost all press commentators as the most narrowminded and disappointing aspect of the opening report to the Communist Central Committee meeting. We shall see whether such a shortsighted and hasty approach is corrected during the debate and in the conclusions, but there is little hope of this judging from the premises.

Meanwhile, we cannot fail to point out the superficiality of the analysis of Socialist policy, whose premises, motivation and formation are determined at the same time by the present and inalienable duties of governability; the requirements of regeneration, reform and progress; and a vigorous and proud thrust to the development of Socialist ideals and representation.

This superficiality reveals a mixture of incomprehension and hostility. On the one hand, one has the impression that the PCI is unable to extricate itself from the limitations of a comfortably and unproductively dismissive view of the role and potential of Italian Socialism while remaining content to pay belated and self-interested tribute to European Socialism. The new PSI, rooted in the left and in the free and modern popular awareness of contemporary Italy, and determined to deal with and surmount both the reasons for a lengthy decline and the many crises afflicting the country (not excluding the crisis of DC-PCI bipolarism) remains incomprehensible to the intelligence of PCI headquarters.

On the other hand, the very superficiality of an analysis backed by rambling observations and hasty assessments reveals a fundamental hostility toward the Socialists and toward the innovation that the Socialists represent (dear Comrade Natta, it is your pillars of Hercules [identified wtih Gibraltar, representing limit of human knowledge] and not our "search for the East by sailing West" that is in question; it is the narrow limits of your political culture, not our courage to explore and experiment, that are in question). This hostility reflects the still dominant tendency within the PCI; this hostility is incompatible with the unitary offers. Indeed, overall, it is precisely this contradiction that is paralyzing the PCI and shaping its policy in an ambiguous and sterile manner.

But it the report is ambiguous, there are even in the PCI some people who border on provocation when they talk about a government formed 3 days ago, a government with strong Socialist representation and headed by a non-Christian Democrat, as "alien" to and not the friend of the workers. We reply most clearly that the ones who are not friends of the workers are those who do not defend the autonomy and unity laboriously gained by their trade union organizations; those, indeed, who threaten the unity edifice from within because they are summoned and forced to perform this task from outside, by a party discipline that has become more demanding.

Moreover, it is no accident that the exacerbation of the tone of the antisocialism in the report and the Communist press over the last few days has gone hand in hand with a clampdown on internal debate and the insipid internal dissent, which are accused of "shortcomings in correctness and rigor of moral conduct" and "divisions," no less, which the author of the report graciously "consents to others, but not to us Communists."

Evidently at PCI headquarters speaking ill of the Socialists, splitting and weakening the trade union movement and normalizing the internal dialectic all boil down to the same thing.

COUNCIL OF REVOLUTION OPPOSES GOVERNMENT DECREE

LD180904 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 0815 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Excerpts] The Council of the Revolution today declared the government decree seeking to amend current legislation defining the boundaries between the public and private sectors of the economy as unconstitutional, thus opposing the views expressed on the matter by the constitutional committee which had endorsed the decree. This is the second consecutive time that the Council of the Revolution has gone against the constitutional committee's ruling on this matter.

According to ANOP, the ruling by the Council of the Revolution was approved by a large majority. Only Gen Lemos Ferreira, Adm Sousa Leitao and Lt Col Canto e Castro opposed the council's ruling.

Generals Melo Egidio and [name indistinct] were absent from the Council meeting. As usual, the president of the republic did not vote.

The Council's decisions will be made public in a communique to be released this morning and read by the Council's spokesman, Lt Col Vitor Alves. According to ANOP, the communique will be very harsh toward the government.

In a first reaction to the Council's ruling, which vetoes the government decree establishing a new demarcation line between the public and private sectors of the economy, leader of the Popular Monarchist Party [PPM] Goncalo Riberio Teles said it might have unforeseeable consequences since it harms all the government's efforts to overcome the country's current economic crisis. The PPM leader does not believe, however, that the Council's ruling could lead to the resignation of Pinto Balsemao, but he admitted a conflict between the government and the Council of the Revolution has now emerged, and it will be difficult to solve.

President on Decision

LD182350 Lisbon in Portuguese to Africa 2000 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Speaking to reporters today during a visit to Paredes, President Ramalho Eanes said he was certain that the decision of the Council of the Revolution would not cause any kind of an institutional breakdown.

[Begin Eanes recording] I take the view that democracy is a system incompatible with dramatic breakdowns; this being so, and ours being a democratic regime, it is obvious that the decision of the Council of the Revolution will not, in my opinion, cause any kind of a breakdown.

That was the first aspect I wanted to highlight. As to my personal position, it is well known; whenever this law has come before the Council of the Revolution I have come out against its being declared unconstitutional and have defended its promulgation.

I would like, however, to explain my position further so as to clear any possible doubts. I take the view that this law, in its present version, provides a general framework that would not directly cause any significant changes in our economic life. Secondly, I take the view that this law would not--even after it had been elaborated on in the revelant norms and regulations--lead to any major developments in the investments sector, because there is a revision of the Constitution coming up and this revision could always--in theory at least--change the law in question.

I would like to add that I understand the attitude of the Council of the Revolution--and respect it--in the light of the position it has adopted. Likewise, from a political standpoint I understand--and accept--the government's position. I am aware that the government has inherited an extraordinarily difficult economic situation. It is understandable that the government should seek to equip itself with all the instruments it deems necessary for carrying out its work--namely in the economic sector.

However, I repeat, there are no breakdowns in democracy; our democratic regime gives us solutions instead. The first possible solution would be the law's reappraisal by parliament by a specific parliamentary majority. In this case, as you know, the president of the republic would have no choice but to promulgate it.

The other possible solution is the revision of the Constitution, which could already have been carried out and will surely now take place rapidly. This revision could totally change the entire legal framework that regulates the country's economic life, in such a way that all its active components--and especially the private enterpreneurs--would have clear prospects before them, with clearly defined rules, enabling them to invest confidently and thus create the wealth indispensable for improving the country's situation.

I would also like to add that, in the light of what was said at the Council of Ministers' meeting in 1980 when it discussed the Council of the Revolution's latest veto on this law, I became convinced that this law would not crop up again. What convinced me were the statements made at the time by the then prime minister--which seemed totally reasonable to me--to the effect that there would be no further legislation on the matter before the revision of the Constitution, because after the revision matters would be much simpler and clearer. [end recording]

SAO TOME'S EX-LEADER TROVOADA RELEASED IN LISBON

NC141028 Paris AFP in English 1012 GMT 14 Jul 81

[Text] Lisbon, 14 Jul (AFP)--Former Prime Minister of Sao Tome Principe Miguel Trovoada has been released by President Pinta do Costa on the sixth anniversary of independence from Portugal, the Portuguese socialist daily PORTUGAL HOJE reported today.

Mr Trovoada, who was a leading figure in the fight for independence, was arrested in December 1979 accused of destabilisation, economic sabotage and being a foreign agent.

Portuguese Socialist Party leader Mario Soares asked President do Costa to release Mr Trovoada on several occasions.

BRIEFS

PARTY DEPUTY RESIGNATION--Mario Raposo, deputy chairman of the Social Democratic Party, "today resigned from his post." In a statement to Lisbon Radio late this afternoon, Mario Raposo said that he tendered his resignation due to "disagreements with a number of criteria which are being adopted by the party's political executive" and which were reflected most recently in the "press statement made by the prime minister after the meeting of the Council of Ministers the day before yesterday." He added that his disagreement concerns basically the recently approved law on the parliamentary deputies' revised statute and the prime minister's stand on the document signed by a number of MP's undertaking to present a new amnesty bill to parliament explicitly covering militants of the Revolutionary Party of the Proletariat currently in jail. [Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 1830 GMT 16 Jul 81 LD]

OPINION POLL SHOWS IMPROVED LABOR PARTY STANDING

PM171236 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 16 Jul 81 p 11

[Text] On the eve of the Warrington by-election, the voting pattern of the nation as a whole shows Labour's lead continuing to improve from eight per cent last month to 10.5 per cent this [month].

The most recent Gallup poll conducted exclusively for the DAILY TELEGRAPH also shows that approval of the government continues to decline with Mrs Thatcher's standing as prime minister at its lowest ebb.

Mr Foot's popularity has not improved in line with his party's, and Mr Steel remains the only major party leader with a majority approval.

With interviewing carried out while street violence was in the news, the number of people citing law and order as the most important problem rose from something like one per cent last month to 10 per cent last weekend.

This came a poor runner-up to unemployment as a problem, which was mentioned by 68 percent.

Replies to Gallup's normal voting question were:

	Today	June	May	Apr
Cons	30	29.5	32	30
Labour	40.5	37.5	35.5	34.5
Liberal	14.5	18	18	14
Soc. Dem	12	12.5	11	19
Other	3	2.5	3.5	2.5

Replies to Gallup's now standard second voting question, where respondents are reminded of the existence of the Social Democrats, as well as the other main parties, shows Labour at its highest point since this question was first asked earlier this year:

	Today	June	May	Apr
Cons	25.5	28	28	25
Labour	36	33.5	29.5	29
Soc. Dem	24.5	23	25.5	32.5
Liberal	11.5	14.5	14	12
Other	2.5	1	3	1.5

Despite Labour's improvement support for an alliance between the Social Democrats and Liberals increased as indicated in replies to Gallup's third question when such an alliance is put to those interviewed.

	Today	June	May	Apr
Conservative	25	27.5	28.5	25.5
Labour	33.5	33.5	28.5	28
Social Democrat-Liberal	39	37	40	45
Other	2.5	2	3	1.5

Labour has a narrow lead over the alliance among men, while the alliance is ahead among women.

The survey was based on a nationally representative quota sample of 965 electors in more than 100 districts between July 8 and Monday. The "don't knows" excluded from Gallup's standard voting question amounted to 10.5 percent.

Details of the standard "popularity" questions were:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the government's record to date?"

	Today	June	May	Apr
Approve	23	26	29	24
Disapprove	66	63	60	67
Don't know	11	11	11	9

"Are you satisfied or dissatisfied with Mrs Thatcher as prime minister?"

	Today	June	May	Apr
Satisfied	30	33	35	30
Dissastisfied	65	61	60	65
Don't know	5	6	5	5

"Do you think Mr Foot is or is not proving a good leader of the Labour Party?"

	Today	June	May	Apr
Is	25	28	26	21
Is not	52	48	52	54
Don't know	23	24	22	25

"Do you think Mr Steel is or is not proving a good leader of the Liberal Party?"

Is	56	61	63	60
Is not	20	18	17	20
Don't know	24	21	20	20

[Column headings in penultimate table are as published; final table has no column headings]

KIPRIANOU HOLDS NATIONAL COUNCIL MEETING ON CYPRUS

NC162044 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] President Kiprianou presided over a National Council meeting that convened this afternoon.

According to an official announcement, at the meeting which lasted for about 3 hours, the president of the republic briefed the National Council members on the latest development on the Cyprus issue, including the consultations that President Kiprianou had with the Greek Government during his recent visit to Athens. An exchange of views began at the meeting which will be continued.

O AGON Comments

NC170748 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 17 Jul 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "The National Council"]

[Text] The National Council, instituted by the unforgettable Ethnarch Makarios, proved until his death to be a very useful institution. A man of Makarios' stature considered that the critical moments through which the nation was passing dictated collective consultations and that the burden of responsibility for the necessary decisions was too heavy for his shoulders alone.

With the adoption of the institution, Ethnarch Makarios considered it expedient to invite members of the National and Ministerial Councils to collective consultations prior to the adoption of any decisions. Responsibility for the decisions and the decisions themselves, when the time came to take them, were his own. This, however, did not make him ignore the views of others. On the contrary, he asked for the recommendations of others and discussed with them both his own views as well as their recommendations. The result was that when he made his decisions there was no reaction and there was unity on the national issue. After Makarios' death, the institution of the National Council was debauched. It was altered from a body for consultation into a body to be informed after the fact. This led to its fundamental dissolution when it became useless.

The return of the Democratic Rally [DISI] to the National Council will, we believe, offer an excellent opportunity for its revitalization. The moments we are passing through are no less critical than those when Ethnarch Makarios considered it necessary to ask for the opinion of the masses. Nor is the burden of decision any less. There is, therefore, every reason for the National Council to function as it did at the time of Makarios--with the prospect that national unity on national issues will emerge.

O AGON: CONFUSION IN OFFICIAL POSITIONS ON TREASON

NC180806 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 18 Jul 81 p 2

[From the "Our Positions" column: "Where Do They Stand?"]

[Text] Government policy is, officially, expressed by the president of the state. The government's positions are those independently stated by the president despite the fact that other leading personalities of his own party express contrary views. Thus, when the president states that the case of treason remains open and that those guilty of it have not yet been punished, this means that this is what the government believes. This is why, only yesterday, we asked him to close the case by punishing those guilty without any further delay.

There is confusion, however, about the positions of his Democratic Party [DHIKO] on this issue. On the one hand, we have the "second in command," Chairman of the House of Representatives Ladhas, asking for the oblivion of the past, and the party's parliamentary representative, Galanos, taking a position against the investigation of those guilty, while on the other hand we have the leader of the party, Kiprianou, stating that those who think the case of treason is closed are wrong.

There certainly is confusion and lack of clarity on the party's position on this serious issue, and it should be cleared up.

Investigation Urged

NC180855 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 18 Jul 81 p 3

[From the "Independent" column: "The dossier and the government"]

[Text] All parties are agreed and make lengthy statements that the dossier on the treason in Cyprus should be opened so that the complete truth may become known and those guilty punished. The government does not disagree. It tells us, however, in the words of the president himself, that it is unable to open this dossier because all the basic facts are in Athens and that only the Greek Government is in a position to reveal them. In its turn, Athens argues that the national interest does not at this moment recommend such a move. It has not escaped our attention, however, that Nicosia has never, openly and officially, asked Athens to proceed with the opening of the dossier. So long as it fails to do this, it means that Nicosia also does not want this dossier opened. If it is to prove the contrary, all Nicosia has to do is to grasp the opportunity to use the forthcoming visit of Foreign Minister Mitsotakis and to ask, on behalf of Cypriot Hellenism, that upon his return to Athens he proceeds with the opening of this dossier.

USSR WANTS INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS TO CONTINUE

NC160744 Ankara YANKI in Turkish 13-19 Jul 81 p 13

[Excerpt] Views expressed by some parties during the election campaign in the Greek Cypriot sector to the effect that "Turkish Cypriots will make concessions after the elections" have led Western news media to talk about a NATO plan for Cyprus, which has caused anxiety and expectations in both the Turkish and Greek Cypriot sectors. The authorities concerned flatly deny these rumors.

The changing conditions in the Middle East, the importance of defending the Persian Gulf and the occupation of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union have removed Western pressure on Turkey in connection with Cyprus. Now no one, not even the United States, talks about Cyprus and says "resolve this issue without further delay." Only occasional press reports on "NATO plans" or reports that the United States will be given a base in Cyprus for its Rapid Deployment Force for the Persian Gulf worry the political parties in the Greek Cypriot sector. Such reports worry Moscow, too. Moscow advises the communist party AKEL, which is growing in strength in Cyprus, to see that the intercommunal talks are not discontinued. Therefore, the dialogue continues. Now that the general elections in both sectors are over, Denktas will fly to Ankara for consultations as soon as a government is formed in the TFSC. Then the Turkish and Greek Cypriot intercommunal talks will be resumed in earnest. However, no one expects an early result. The Greek Cypriots as well as some Turkish Cypriots, who have been worrying about it, know now that it is wrong to expect the Turkish military administration to make concessions for the sake of resolving the Cyprus dispute. Consequently, the intercommunal talks will have to be resumed and continued on a more realistic basis.

PAPER SEES CONTRADICTIONS IN NICOSIA, ATHENS VIEWS

NC180756 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 18 Jul 81 p 1

[From the "My Opinion" column: "The New Contradictions--Different Estimates Between Athens and Nicosia"]

[Text] Unfortunately, we are once again obliged to point out new contradictions and differences in evaluations by official Athens and official Nicosia on the prospects of the national issue. These contradictions and differences, unfortunately, appear just after the president's visit to Athens and declarations about joint views and positions of the two governments on the Cyprus issue.

What are the clashing views and the absolutely contrary evaluations observable on both sides? The difference lies in the fact that the president of Cyprus says one thing while the Greek foreign minister says something different.

On two consecutive days, Mitsotakis proclaimed that he is certain the Turks will submit "realistic and specific" proposals on the territorial issue and stressed he has "controlled optimism," hoping for "positive developments" on the Cyprus issue.

On the other hand, President Kiprianou appears pessimistic and misses no opportunity to declare that statements from the Turkish side leave no margins for optimism on a favorable outcome of the dialogue. Only last night, Deputy Interior Minister Stilianou stressed that the provocative and incendiary Turkish statements leave no doubt about the content of proposals to be submitted by the Turks on 5 August.

This is not the first time that Nicosia says one thing and Athens another. This time, however, things are different. These clashing statements come only a few days after the consultations of President Kiprianou with the Greek Government, during which, as it was declared, "full unanimity of views" was established.

It is characteristic that during his last statement Mitsotakis said: "With Kiprianou we exchanged information that is approximately the same as ours and we agreed on the handling."

What kind of "unanimity of views" was achieved and how is it that "common information" was exchanged at a time when Athens concludes in advance that there will be a submission of "realistic and specific Turkish proposals" while Nicosia states that with his statement Denktas revealed the unacceptable character of these proposals? How is it that Athens is optimistic and Nicosia is pessimistic?

The people have every right to expect some sort of official explanation on this serious observable divergence in the evaluations of Athens and Nicosia. The people also expected that Kiprianou's visit to Athens would have cleared things up and would have set the foundation for a joint handling of new developments. It is with sadness that the people now see that confusion increases and that evaluations are completely different.

CYPRUS WEEKLY REPORTS ITALIAN MEDIATION EFFORTS

NC171105 Nicosia THE CYPRUS WEEKLY in English 17 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Rome--Italian Defence Minister Lelio Lagorio revealed here yesterday that the Italian Government was involved in quiet mediation between Greece and Turkey in an attempt to solve the Cyprus problem and Greco-Turkish differences over air space and Aegean sea rights. "The more we think about these issues and the less we talk about them the better," Lagorio told a news conference launching a monthly magazine on foreign and military affairs, ITALIA INTERNAZIONALE.

Asked whether Italy had volunteered to mediate or been asked, Lagorio replied "there was a convergence of intentions. Italy is carrying out without any clamour a task of dialogue and attention between Greece and Turkey on the (oil drilling) platform and on air rights," Lagorio said. He said the issue of Cyprus where Turkey maintains several thousand troops, since she invaded the island in 1974, was also involved. Lagorio refused to go into details except to say that contacts had been stepped up in the past few months.

Lagorio, a Socialist, said the efforts originated from a committee of the three nations to study problems of NATO's southern flank, the committee was created at a defence ministers' meeting a year ago. He said contacts were taking place among chiefs of staffs of the three countries because diplomatic talks between Turkey and Greece had been stagnant recently.

Disputes over rights for the seabed--believed to contain oil--and over air channels, have strained relations between the two nations since the Turkish invasion of Cyprus in 1974. In 1980, in the first breakthrough between the two NATO nations, Greece, and Turkey, opened Aegean airspace to international civil aviation. As a result airline companies can now fly over the Aegean Sea instead of taking costly roundabout routes. Last year, Greece rejoined NATO, despite domestic opposition from leftwing parties.

PAPER ON EFFORTS TO EXPAND GOBBI'S ROLE IN TALKS

NC170655 Nicosia I SIMERINI in Greek 17 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] According to information available to I SIMERINI, the Cyprus Government is seriously considering severance of the intercommunal talks and an appeal to the United Nations if Turkish proposals on the territorial issue are not specific and substantial. As reported, Turkish proposals on the territorial issue are expected on 5 August.

According to our information, the possibility of severing the intercommunal dialogue seriously concerns Gobbi, the special envoy of the UN secretary general in Cyprus, who is already making efforts to prevent a new deadlock. We have also been informed that a new formula is being studied aimed at expanding Gobbi's authority and at strengthening his role. The Greek side appears to accept the formula while the position of the Turkish side has not yet been defined. Finally, we are informed that, if necessary, Waldheim is determined to personally intervene in order to prevent severance of the intercommunal negotiations.

NORTH ASSEMBLY FAILS TO ELECT PRESIDENT

TA161407 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] Communal Liberation Party [CLP] Gazimagosa [Famagusta] Deputy Ismail Bozkurt, who was proposed as the legislative assembly president at the assembly meeting this morning, did not obtain sufficient votes. The legislative assembly met at 1000 this morning and held four sessions. Speaking at the assembly, National Unity Party [NUP] secretary general and Minister of Agriculture, Natural Resources and Energy Kucuk said that his party will not submit any candidates at this stage. CLP leader Alpay Durduran proposed party secretary Bozkurt as a candidate. Bozkurt could not obtain an absolute majority, namely 21 votes, in the first round of voting. Nineteen votes were cast in favor and 18 against, 2 deputies abstained and 1 vote was void. The legislative assembly will meet again at 1100 on 18 July to elect a president.

Nejat Konuk Elected

TA181042 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1030 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Text] According to a news bulletin, Democratic People's Party leader Nejat Konuk, who was a candidate for the assembly presidency, was (?unanimously) elected president of the assembly.

MITSOTAKIS GIVES FOREIGN POLICY NEWS CONFERENCE

NC162240 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Today, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis had a free discussion with the press representatives on issues of foreign policy over the ERT television. The foreign minister stressed that the government considers the results of the country's entry to the EEC as very satisfactory.

In answer to a question on the Cyprus issue and the Greek-Turkish differences, the foreign minister expressed as totally inaccurate the rumor about so-called Greek concessions in the Aegean so that Turkey will make concessions on the Cyprus issue. Greece, he said, has never connected the consultations that it holds with Turkey with its efforts to resolve the Cyprus issue in a friendly manner. It is foolish, he added, for one to think that exchanges can be made from one issue to another.

Referring to the Atlantic alliance, Mr Mitsotakis reminded that the entire military armament of our country is Western and, basically, American. The military aid that is being granted in order to bring our national defense to a high level, he added, is being granted within the framework of the Atlantic alliance. If Greece ever leaves the alliance, it is certain that we shall not have its support. It is natural for the alliance, Mr Mitsotakis pointed out, not to support countries that are not its members.

On the issue of the Greek-U.S. negotiations on the bases, the foreign minister said that the talks will be continued after the elections, based on a review of the old 1953 agreement.

Finally, he referred to his coming visit to Cyprus. The foreign minister said that he reserves cautious optimism for the coming developments of the Cyprus issue. There is hope, he added, that the Turkish Cypriot side will submit realistic proposals at the beginning of August, as the extension of suspense is not in the interest of Turkey. Lastly, he said that the visit that he will pay in a few days to Nicosia indicates the Greek government's increased interest in the course of the Cyprus problem.

AVEROF ANNOUNCES MEASURES TO IMPROVE ECONOMY

NC192023 Athens NEWS in English 19 Jul 81 p 12

[Text] Vice-premier Averof yesterday announced measures for the improvement of the economy. Among others, Mr Averof said that the investments program was under review and that the emphasis would be on financing big projects. It is hoped that in the next 4 months 5 to 10 billion drachmas will be saved.

All public service corporations will be asked to reduce expenditures by 2 per cent, Mr Averof said (those with deficits by 5 per cent) and there will be a freeze on public service hiring--except for hospitals, educational institutions and the security forces.

Other measures include the doubling of the amount banks can loan to small and medium businesses without collateral, doubling of housing loans and lengthening the "grace period," increasing the ATE [Agricultural Bank of Greece] program to 2 billion drachmas, simplifying the Agricultural Bank's loan-granting procedures, setting up a program of loans to graduates mechanical and electrical engineering and agricultural schools, and others.

GOVERNMENT REQUESTS EXTRADICTION OF AGCA FROM ITALY

TA191821 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] Justice Minister Cevdet Mentes has announced that Turkey has officially applied to Italian authorities for the extradition of the murderer of Abdi Ipekci, Mehmet Ali Agca. In a statement to the National Press Agency [UBA], Mentes said that the Turkish Government expects the Italian authorities to show understanding on this subject. Mentes said: We have officially applied to Italian authorities for the extradition of terrorist Mehmet Ali Agca. Agca will receive the necessary sentence from the Turkish courts.

FOREIGN MINISTRY CONDEMNS ISRAELI RAID IN LEBANON

TA181715 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Text] It has been announced that Turkey believes that the recent Israeli attack against Lebanon could create grave consequences in the region. The Foreign Ministry statement on the subject is as follows:

We have learned with grief that the recent air and sea attack by Israel against Lebanon on 17 July has caused great loss of life. Israel's dangerous and grave actions could increase the existing tension and create serious consequences by inviting new elements of instability to the region. Through this action, Israel will bear the responsibility of the mounting tension and escalation in the region. Turkey is following with concern those developments in the region that highly interest it.

CUMHURIYET INTERVIEWS FOREIGN MINISTER TURKMEN

NC170940 Istanbul CUMHURIYET in Turkish 14 Jul 81 pp 1, 7

[Interview granted by Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to CUMHURIYET correspondent Kenan Mortan in Izmir; date not given]

[Excerpts] Question: In your address to businessmen in Izmir, you stated that political conditions must be favorable for full EEC membership. Can you expand on this?

Answer: In principle, Turkey has decided on full membership, but as you know, to be entitled to full membership we have to have an operating parliamentary democracy. We have informed the EEC that we would like to be full members. What we are trying to do now is to fulfill the obligations toward the EEC which Turkey has had to postpone. The necessary joint customs tariffs reductions will be made in 1982. You appreciate that full membership cannot be attained overnight. For this to happen, optimum political conditions are essential. As a matter of fact, by synchronizing our application for full membership with parliamentary democracy, we shall be expressing our faith in parliamentary democracy.

Question: Is there a favorable basis for intercommunal talks now that elections are over in the Turkish and Greek Cypriot sectors of Cyprus?

Answer: Certainly. Talks should begin in July [as published]. However, I think the main talks will begin in August. In the meantime, I hope that the political parties that come to power will act with a sense of responsibility.

Question: It is understood that Begin, who is in favor of a tough Israeli policy after the elections, is going to form the government. Is this likely to increase tension in the Middle East?

Answer: Naturally, implementing a tough policy is by no means auspicious for the region. But tension in the Middle East is caused by more than one factor.

Question: Will the peace mediation conducted by Turkey through Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu continue?

Answer: Yes, it will, but no great developments should be expected during the month of Ramadan. Turkey will undertake any and every effort which is likely to reduce tension in the region.

STATE MINISTER LEAVES FOR NORTH CYPRUS VISIT

TA171204 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Text] State and Deputy Prime Minister and Cyprus Coordination Council President Zeyyat Beykara has left for the TFSC. Baykara, who will attend the 20 July peace and freedom ceremonies, will also hold talks in the TFSC on economic and social matters.

A delegation comprised of representatives of relevant ministries and organizations is accompanying Baykara on his tour. Baykara and the delegation accompanying him will return to Ankara on 21 July.

TERCUMAN ON DENKTAS' INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS PROPOSALS

NC171633 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 16 Jul 81 p 3

[Report by Ozdemir Kalpakcioglu, AKAJANS correspondent, Ankara]

[Text] Intercommunal talks in Cyprus are expected to be intensified during August following the formation of a TFSC Government. It is reported that President Denktas will arrive in Ankara on 21 July, where he will be received by Head of State Gen Kenan Evren and where he will have consultations with Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu and Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen.

According to information, obtained by the AKAJANS correspondent, the TFSC will be open to suggestions for land and border adjustments in specific areas instead of global talks involving specific percentages when the Greek Cypriot side brings up the question of Varosha as a priority issue. Sources say that the TFSC is ready for land adjustments in the south of Varosha and in Erenkoy (Kokkina), Avgona, Gaziler (Pyroi), Akincilar (Louroujina), and Duzce (Akhna) areas, but it is not prepared to discuss percentage suggestions concerning the whole of the island.

On the other hand, it is also reported that the TFSC will insist on Turkey remaining as a guarantor as in the 1960 constitution and that the future Cyprus Republic be founded on the basis of a bizonal system. It is further reported that the TFSC will make no concessions on its demand that its equal partnership rights be represented in all organs.

In the intercommunal talks, the TFSC will insist on the complete lifting of the embargo now being implemented against the Turkish Cypriot community. The TFSC will also want the recognition of the passport system currently being implemented in the Turkish Cypriot sector and it will insist on the ports being freely used by all ships as well as on allowing the passengers landing at Ercan airport to cross into southern Cyprus quite freely.

Observers say that the attitude of the Greek Cypriot side will determine the fate of the intercommunal talks which are expected to be intensified in August. They believe that if this attitude takes the form of intransigence, the TFSC may adopt important decisions concerning its future.

TURKISH-GREEK CULTURAL COMMITTEE CONCLUDES TALKS

TA171528 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1500 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Text] The Turkish-Greek cultural committee has concluded its activities in Ankara. The heads of the delegations, who held a joint news conference after the committee meetings that lasted 2 days, gave information on the developments. Head of the Turkish delegation retired Ambassador Turgut Menemencioglu said that the Turkish-Greek cultural agreement signed in 1951 was reviewed at the committee meetings. Noting that they had discussed steps that might be taken to develop cultural relations within the framework of this agreement, Menemencioglu added that the proposals on which a unity of views was reached at the meetings will be submitted by the delegations to their respective governments. The head of the Greek delegation and former Greek ambassador to Ankara said that the aim of the committee was to activate the 1951 cultural agreement.

ENERGY MINISTER VIEWS RELATIONS WITH BULGARIA

TA171300 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 0900 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Text] It has been announced that as of next year, the electricity to be imported from Bulgaria will be doubled. Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol answered our correspondent's questions on the talks held with the Bulgarian energy minister in Ankara a few days ago. Bingol said that currently Turkey is importing some 700,000 kilowatt hours of electricity annually from Bulgaria. Bingol noted that following the inauguration of the new transmission line being built between the two countries, this amount is expected to reach 1,200,000,000 [as heard] kilowatt hours as of next year.

Pointing out that cooperation will be conducted with Bulgaria on the enrichment of low-calorie lignite, which is produced in great quantities in various parts of Turkey, Bingol said that it will thus be possible to use this coal in industry and heating.

Bulgarian Minister Departs

TA181044 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 18 Jul 81

[Text] Bulgarian Minister of Power Supply Nikola Todoriev, who arrived in Turkey some time ago, has left for Bulgaria. After concluding his official talks in Ankara, Todoriev visited historic sites in Izmir and Istanbul. He left Istanbul for Sofia by air this morning.

ARAYIS COMMENTS ON ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH LIBYA

NC161854 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 11 Jul 81 p 9

["Interpretation of Events" column: "Turkey, Libya and Saudi Arabia"]

[Excerpts] Libya provides Turkey with 2-3 million tons of crude oil every year. However, it is difficult to say that by supplying Turkey with crude oil, Libya is extending exceptional facilities to Turkey. When the example of Iraq and Iran are taken into consideration, particularly that of Iran in the past 2 years, one might say "Libya is behaving jealously."

Apart from crude oil, Libya's importance to Turkey's economy has greatly increased. A total of $95 million worth of exports, equal to 7.1 percent of the total $1.34 billion worth of goods Turkey exported during the first 4 months of the year, went to Libya. The value of goods Libya has expressed a desire to purchase from Turkey has risen to $650 million, and this amount is expected to rise to $1 billion. On the other hand, $3.5 billion of the $5 billion worth of construction work undertaken by Turkish contractors in the Middle East is in Libya.

It can be said that Libya is carefully trying to win Turkey's heart. It is, in fact, possible to talk about some Libyan success in this respect. For example, Libyan Air Force officers trained in Turkey are shown on Turkish television. If one can believe what the daily press says, one of the reasons West Germany postponed military aid to Turkey until September is that a few of the submarines obtained from Germany during the pervious aid period have been given to Libya.

It cannot be argued that from Turkey's standpoint, these developments carry much weight apart from the fact that they improve trade relations. Nevertheless, Libya, which appears to be isolated from the arena of external politics, is undoubtedly trying to prevent a rapprochement between Saudi Arabia and Turkey, which, despite its economic difficulties, is the biggest military power in the Middle East. Those who shape Libya's foreign policy believe that the protection of the interests of the Western powers in the Middle East is possible through the conclusion of a military pact between Turkey and Saudi Arabia. They also believe that later on Egypt and Israel will join it.

The Turkish authorities have clearly stated, whenever the question has arisen, that Turkey would not be a party to such a plan. But Libya appears to be acting cautiously in this respect. It is very closely watching efforts Turkey is making in Saudi Arabia to overcome its economic difficulties and increase its foreign exchange reserves. Turkey's efforts to maintain its economic and financial relations within certain limits without undertaking any political responsibility in the Middle East cannot be easily accomplished under the present circumstances.

MILITARY PROSECUTORS DEMAND DEATH PENALTY

Istanbul Command

TA161914 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Summary] The third military court of the Istanbul Martial Law Command has begun trying 24 militants belonging to an illegal extreme leftist organization accused of committing anarchic acts with the aim of overthrowing the existing order and replacing it with a Marxist-Leninist one. In his indictment, the military prosecutor demanded the death penalty for 5 of the suspects, who have not yet been captured. Prison sentences not less than 7 years each were demanded for the remaining 19 suspects.

The military prosecutor's office of the Third Army and Martial Law Command has filed a suit in connection with 39 members of the illegal Revolutionary Path Organization [Dev Yol] and the People's Liberation organization who were involved in numerous anarchic incidents in Rize. The prosecutor's office demanded the death penalty for 12 of the suspects and prison sentences ranging from 5 to 15 years for the remaining 27 suspects. The Aegean Army and Martial Law Command has filed a suit in connection with 25 militants belonging to an illegal extreme leftist organization who are accused of killing 6 persons, one of them a security forces official. The death penalty is demanded for 10 of the suspects.

Diyarbakir Command

TA161909 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] The interrogation of 162 suspects belonging to the illegal secessionist Rizgari and Alarizgari [secessionist Kurdish organizations] organizations has begun at the first military court of the Diyarbakir Martial Law Command. The death penalty is demanded for 11 of the suspects. The indictment, read by the military prosecutor, demanded prison sentences ranging from 8 to 15 years from the remaining 151 suspects. Interrogation of the suspects will continue tomorrow as well.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 139 21 July 1981

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reports on Industrialized Nations' Ottawa Summit A 1
Schmidt Interview A 1
Spadolini, Schmidt Talks A 2
French Minister's Comments A 2
Cheysson Remarks A 3

AUSTRIA

Kreisky Comments on Disarmament Negotiations E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Government Rejects Soviet Proposal at CSCE J 1
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Views Nuclear Deterrence [16 Jul] J 1

FRANCE

Government Cites Objectives for Ottawa Summit K 1
Cabinet Communique [LE MONDE 17 Jul] K 1
Presidential Spokesman [LE MONDE 18 Jul] K 1
Minister Discusses Fishing, Law of Sea Stances [LE MONDE 4 Jul] K 2
PCF Sends Message to Ninth PZPR Congress [L'HUMANITE 16 Jul] K 4
Officials Hold Meetings With Brazilian Ministers K 5
LE MONDE Reports Details of Budget Amendments [3 Jul] K 5

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Agca Trial Opens; Defendent Makes Accusations L 1
Leading Financier Sentenced for Currency Smuggling L 2
Radice Speech at PCI Central Committee Session [L'UNITA 3 Jul] L 2
PCI's Ingrao Speaks in Chamber of Deputy Debate [L'UNITA 11 Jul] L 3

SPAIN

Calvo-Sotelo Returns From Mexico, Cites Agreements N 1
Spain Asks French Minister To Postpone Visit N 1
PSUC Conference Confirms Eurocommunist Stance [LA VANGUARDIA 12 Jul] N 1
Further Report [LA VANGUARDIA 14 Jul] N 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Government May Buy FRG Submarines Built for Chile P 1
[BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 3 Jul]

FINLAND

Troops Will Not Join Multinational Sinai Forces P 1
Manzhulo Visit Leads to Finnish-Soviet Contracts P 1
[HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 10 Jul]

SWEDEN

Prime Minister Welcomes Brezhnev Zone Remarks P 2
[SVENSKA DAGBLADET 27 Jun]
CP Leader Urges Conference on Nuclear-Free Zone P 2
[DAGENS NYHETER 4 Jul]
Iraq Orders Underground Shelters From Company P 3

CYPRUS

Rally Marks Coup, Turkish Invasion Anniversary R 1
Kiprianou Remarks R 1
Greek Delegation Attends R 2
Stefanopoulos Comments R 2

GREECE

Government Condemns Israeli Raids in Lebanon S 1
I KATHIMERINI Reports Denial of Italian Mediation [17 Jul] S 1
Yugoslavia's Djuranovic Pays Official Visit [cross-reference] S 1
Karamanlis Notes Anniversary of Cyprus Invasion S 1
Institute Reports New Uranium Deposit Near Drama S 1
New Democracy Government Issues Program Statement S 2
[I KATHIMERINI 19-20 Jul]

TURKEY

Bulent Ulusu, Polish Official Address Ceremony T 1
Arabs Praise Government's Attitude Toward Israel T 1
Bulent Ulusu, Turkmen Send Messages to Denktas T 1

OTHER COUNTRIES

CANADA

Quebec's Levesque, Mitterrand Agree To Meet [LE MONDE 16 Jul] Z 1

SWITZERLAND

9 June Group Claims Responsibility for Bombing Z 1

REPORTS ON INDUSTRIALIZED NATIONS' OTTAWA SUMMIT

Schmidt Interview

DW201143 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 1930 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Reporter Schaff interview with Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Ottawa; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] Do you expect changes to emanate from the forthcoming summit meeting with regard to the U.S. interest rate policy, changes which could have a positive effect on our position?

[Answer] I have reservations and am skeptical with regard to that point. At any rate, we will clearly point out what effect the U.S. high interest rate policy has on the European national economies and what consequences we will necessarily have to draw for our national economies. Other countries also have drawn consequences, such as Canada.

[Question] One has the feeling that you now have more understanding for the U.S. high interest rate policy than you did a few months ago. Is this true?

[Answer] No, I would not put it that way. We have lower price increases than in America; we have had lower price increases for years. We accomplished this without such a high interest rate policy. We have used monetary policy means, wage agreements between trade unions and firms, state tax policy means and the state budget policy means--we have used all these instruments and have not relied just on monetary policy and interest rates.

One can hold the value of one's currency stable--we have demonstrated this in Germany--without this kind of a high interest rate policy. But the Americans have embarked on this path and it seems to me that they will continue to follow it for several more months. We will decide on measures in late July in Bonn to reduce debts by laender, the government and communities so as to create leeway for interest rate cuts by taking up less money from the capital market. These measures will be the necessary consequence we Germans have to draw because we do not want to experience the same high interest rates that have become usual in North America.

[Question] The Canadian prime minister has great plans for the Third World, such as a development plan for the Caribbean. Does he expect the Federal Republic to take part financially?

[Answer] No, I don't think that is expressed quite correctly. First, I would like to stress that the ideas of common development aid with Canadian, U.S., Mexican and Venezuelan financing may have occurred simultaneously to several people, but we in Bonn expressed it publicly some time ago. We have a certain copyright there.

The Federal Republic gives development aid to a great number of states in the Caribbean and on the Central American isthmus. We will continue doing this. If the four North and Central American states who are to be the main financial supporters of the new project, namely, Canada, the United States, Mexico and Venezuela, so desire, we will coordinate our development policy with theirs in this area. However, we do not intend, and it isn't even possible at the moment, to increase our financial aid.

[Question] Regarding the key word protectionism, all the countries represented here at the Ottawa summit conference have committed an increasing number of sins lately. Would a communique issued at the end of such a conference be credible if it expresses the desire to return to free trade?

[Answer] You are right. Almost every state has sinned. Some states of the European Community have very much sinned regarding steel, with the result that there have been bad social consequences for our steel industry. Yet I believe that it is urgently necessary for the seven greatest industrial democracies of the world to again promise themselves not to let trade protectionism, currency protectionism and credit protectionism develop any farther. If we let matters develop freely, we might possibly find ourselves in situations such as in 1931 or 1932. How beautiful the words of the communique are is not important; what is important is being able to trust each other in this matter.

[Question] How binding can such a communique be?

[Answer] The communique has no significance under international law, but I repeat: Personal confidence is very decisive.

Spadolini, Schmidt Talks

AU202020 Rome ANSA in English 1930 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Ottawa, 20 Jul (ANSA)--Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt met this morning on the fringe of summit talks to discuss East-West relations and problems between the industrialized West and the Third World.

A communique said the two sides had identical views on all of the issues discussed. They confirmed their commitment to NATO's plans to modernize nuclear missiles in Europe, plans which are linked to the resumption of arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union.

The two government leaders also discussed developments in Poland, the Middle East and Afghanistan, disclosing that they had similar views on these issues too.

French Minister's Comments

LD201823 Paris Domestic Service in French 1700 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] The summit meeting of the world's seven richest countries has opened in Ottawa. Since early this afternoon, Francois Mitterrand has been in session with his six colleagues. They have immediately tackled the main subject of the meeting, monetary problems, particularly the high U.S. interest rates which at times have had disastrous consequences for the economies of the U.S. partners. At Chateau Montebello in the Canadian countryside, Mitterrand has with him a specialist, Finance Minister Jacques Delors, who has explained the essence of the problem to our special correspondent, Bernard Vallette.

[Begin recording] [Delors] What has pleased me is that our German friends have shared our opinions; thus, the Bonn summit had its uses. In their own style, the Japanese, the Italians and the British also had the same criticisms.

[Vallette] So what happened then? Can one foresee in the medium term an American gesture, namely, a reduction of the interest rates.

[Delors] No, obviously, we are not on the same line as the Americans. Therefore, I have turned to a solution which is simple, because it corresponds with what has already been done, that is, separating the evolution of the dollar from the evolution of the U.S. interest rates. In other words, the Americans should regulate the value of the dollar. If we obtain only this much--not tonight but in the coming months--I believe we would already be making some progress in the fight against the world monetary disorder. However, we must understand that if this disorder continues for too long, we run the risk of seeing as dark a period as in 1928. [end recording]

Cheysson Remarks

LD210848 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] In Ottawa, the dialogue between the United States and its allies is difficult. Dispute centers on the unreasonable inflation of U.S. interest rates. The Europeans and France have calculated its effect. It equals that of a third oil shock. Reagan refuses to make promises but makes forcasts: According to the U.S. President, credit should be cheaper before the end of the year. The Europeans, however, are not satisfied with dregs. The arm twisting duel continues. Here is Claude Cheysson, French minister of external relations, who sums up clearly the position held by Francois Mitterrand.

[Begin recording] It is important that Reagan understand the repercussions of this policy. These repercussions include considerable suffering for his allies in Europe, allies whom he also asks--and we in France think that he does so quite rightly--to step up their defense efforts, to show in many ways their complete solidarity in the field of security. Reagan is now better informed on the contradiction that may appear between a unitary solidarity, unitary security between all our countries, and U.S. measures that would unsettle fundamental factors of the European countries in a way that would impair this security. [end recording]

I add that Francois Mitterrand submitted to his partners a five-point plan for better coordination of the fight against unemployment. This plan also deals with customs tariffs and trade with the USSR. Finally, the next summit of the seven industrial countries will be held in France next year if everybody agrees.

KREISKY COMMENTS ON DISARMAMENT NEGOTIATIONS

DW200931 Hamburg ARD Television Network in German 2030 GMT 17 Jul 81

[Reporter Ernst-Dieter Lueg interview with Austrian Chancellor Bruno Kreisky in the program "Report From Bonn"; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] According to your assessments and insights, do you think that disarmament negotiations will begin this year between both superpowers? And isn't some European interest involved in such negotiations because the new missiles will be deployed on European territory?

[Answer] I can only hope that the talks slated for this fall between the U.S. secretary of state and the Soviet foreign minister will eventually lead to negotiations. However, at the moment, such an atmosphere of mistrust exists between the big powers--more than in the past--that we are somewhat unsure.

[Question] Do you consider European interest in such negotiations logical and natural?

[Answer] Obviously, a major reason for the negotiations is to see whether we in Europe can preserve the policy of detente. This is the matter involved; we have seen the successes of detente policy and we want this policy to be continued here.

[Question] When you speak of mistrust between the superpowers, don't you consider a meeting of the two superpowers to be absolutely necessary and urgent?

[Answer] It always depends on, of course, what level such a meeting takes place. If it is a meeting of important personalities, naturally, it must be properly prepared because we cannot afford a debacle. It would be good if both foreign ministers talked to each other since they really are most experienced men and know what is involved.

[Question] Do you think that the German Social Democrats--aside from the fact that disarmament negotiations are not directly their business--that the German Social Democrats should play a special role here in the heart of Europe?

[Answer] I would like to see this although, in the end, negotiations will have to take place between the superpowers. But after all, our affairs also are involved. It would, therefore, be good for European politicians, not just Social Democrats but other politicians as well, to become involved with this problem and to make some preparations to the degree they can.

[Question] Do you think, Mr Federal Chancellor, that the Moscow visit of SPD Chairman Willy Brandt provides an example for stronger efforts by the Socialist International to become involved in this field?

[Answer] There is no reason at all for the Socialist International to become involved in this because it is a sort of clearing point for political ideas of various countries where the respective parties act. These problems naturally play an important role, particularly among the European member countries. The question of future developments in Europe is one which involved the European member parties very much.

[Question] Do you think that neutral states, countries such as yours, could develop particular initiatives and become involved in these international negotiations?

[Answer] Actually, I have no special hopes that neutral countries could make a useful contribution beyond the known limits. No, we can render good services if we are asked to, but we cannot make a substantial contribution on our own. That is a matter to be eventually negotiated between the two superpowers. We, however, are greatly interested in these negotiations taking place.

GOVERNMENT REJECTS SOVIET PROPOSAL AT CSCE

LD211046 Hamburg DPA in German 1007 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 21 Jul (DPA)--The Federal Government has rejected as unacceptable to the West the Soviet proposal at the CSCE followup meeting in Madrid on delineating the area for agreements on confidence-building measures in the military sector. Consequently, the efforts to reach a successful conclusion to the followup meeting before the end of July have regrettably been hampered, a foreign Ministry spokesman said in Bonn today, with regard to the Soviet proposal which aimed at including parts of North America. It is hoped that the Soviet Union will decide to reexamine its views.

The spokesman also expressed regret that the Soviet Union rejected in Madrid the U.S. proposal, supported by all the Western alliance partners, on the sphere of applicability of confidence-building measures. This proposal covered the entire European Continent in accordance with the Helsinki Final Act. It opened up opportunities for regulating at a European disarmament conference certain military activities in the bordering sea region and in airspace. In the view of the Federal Government and its alliance partners, this constructive proposal was a suitable basis for reaching a harmonious settlement by way of fair compromise.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE VIEWS NUCLEAR DETERRENCE

DW161343 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 16 Jul 81 p 1

[Adelbert Weinstein editorial: "The Great War Does Not Take Place"]

[Text] The discussion on the military part of NATO's dual decision has achieved its own dynamics. Fear of nuclear war tempts some people to conclude that Western counterarmament is a call for nuclear destruction. And there is fear of the countermove of the other side and the repeated demonstrative increase of Soviet destructive capacity.

That the modernization of the Atlantic arms arsenal is just a phase in a security policy is not considered even though this policy so far has stood the test. The great war has not taken place and it will not take place. The atom's penetration into military thinking has changed the principles of strategy. After 1945, it was a matter of mental adaptation from the waging of war to the prevention of war. The analysts of the nuclear age quickly realized that nuclear weapons could only be political weapons. Since the military use of the atom can destroy everything, the human mind turned nuclear weapons into a military element of a policy aimed at avoiding war. Since that time, the entire security policy is aimed at preserving a nonwar situation.

The Pershing missiles and the unmanned "cruise missiles" belong to this deterrence strategy. Arms systems are supposed to give signs. Thus, the other side is being shown the price it will have to pay if a certain line is crossed. The excitement over counterarmament, therefore, goes in the wrong direction. From a technical point of view, it is exaggerated. The improved quality of our nuclear weapons must be seen against the background of new military revolutions; in a decade, computer-controlled satellites could fire laser guns at strategic missile positions. In view of this future, the West's current efforts to reestablish the strategic balance are modest.

The strategic planners ought to trace the reasons for the emotional explosion in the so-called peace camp. The Soviet propaganda offensive alone cannot be held responsible.

The Kremlin has certainly initiated a perfect psychostrategic campaign, but actually the discomfort has been caused by insufficient information particularly on the part of the intellectuals with regard to the nature of nuclear strategy. There no longer is the great discussion that was conducted in the 1950's and 1960's by American analysts with their theses and antitheses. At that time, the public was informed in an outstanding way. In addition, the dialogue had a mute partner: the American interpretation of the deterrence strategy was adopted by the Soviet military and politicians. Both sides arrived at the conclusion that the use of nuclear arms would lead to destruction. But it is questionable today whether the East and the West mean the same when they speak of deterrence.

Agreement on the interpretation of deterrence strategy is the basis for the security of all. It must be worked out together because the deterrence theory is based on assumptions. It is just lastly related with classic strategy. Deterrence is based not just on reason, it also includes hope in its security system. In classic strategy, reality and facts are dealt with. This strategy is almost a version of mathematics. Deterrence, however, means moving conceptually only in the sphere of possiblities. Classic strategy looks for a decision, while deterrence strategy tries to avoid it. It must logically avoid it because one does not want to apply its crucial element--the nuclear inferno. The escalation theory must, therefore, be accepted by the West and the East. Both must read the same strategic script.

But the Soviets represent the thesis that a nuclear war can be waged and won, and that is a statement that can be disproved only by reality. The Americans, however, believe as always that the atom is militarily taboo. But unfortunately, they separate nuclear strength in their minds and have from the very beginning considered tactical nuclear weapons to be some sort of super artillery of their security concept. The American side could not silently ignore the Soviet challenge that a nuclear war could be won and the Pentagon had to make it clear that the West would also use nuclear arms for its defense and that it does not plan to use them only as a theoretical means of deterrence.

Both sides thus violate the "pure doctrine" of deterrence. Whoever considers the partial military exploitation of the atom to be possible divides the terror into a predictable military action and incalculable warning which emanates from strategic nuclear arms. This vagueness intimidates those powers which have no nuclear arms. The nuclear giants ought to newly define the strategy of deterrence. The impetus ought to come from the morally stronger party--the United States.

GOVERNMENT CITES OBJECTIVES FOR OTTAWA SUMMIT

Cabinet Communique

PM210805 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Jul 81 p 10

[Excerpts] The cabinet met at the Elysee Palace under Mitterrand's chairmanship on 15 July 1981. At the end of the meeting, the following communique was issued.

External Relations

In the past week, external activity has been largely centered on preparations for the Ottawa summit at which the French Government is determined to secure a frank and direct discussion of the major current problems, namely, the economic and social situation in the industrialized countries and the relations between them and the developing countries, stressing the unacceptable nature of unemployment in the industrialized countries and of the poverty and growing impossibility of any development in the Third World. The French Government will take this opportunity to stress the inappropriateness of some responses to the crisis now being proposed, such as the use of high interest rates, the sudden rise of some currencies and the sudden fluctuations in raw material prices.

These problems were discussed during the French-German summit. They also were discussed during the visits of the Ivory Coast and Niger heads of state. These visits made it possible to highlight the special nature of France's relationship with these two states, whose economic and social progress is to be continued and extended according to the lines laid down by their leaders. France will certainly contribute to that as far as its means permit.

Presidential Spokesman

PM210755 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] "France will make its voice heard with particular firmness in Ottawa," spokesman for the president Vauzelle stated on 16 July when he presented the French position prior to the summit.

After stating that "a Socialist president" had a "way of viewing world problems," Vauzelle continued: "The president already has said that 'we are living in a dangerous world,' not only because there are hotbeds of tension in the military sense or areas which might become hotbeds of tension in the future, but because there are social and economic problems in our societies which might one day lead to serious conflicts either between the developing countries and the industrialized countries or among the industrialized or developed countries."

Vauzelle then referred to Britain, mentioning "the very serious attacks and violence... which stem not only from racism... but from social factors." He continued: "The president stressed in Bonn that France's partners must realize that, unless they moderate some policies in the economic sphere, they will not find it easy to come and ask France, among others, and Europeans in general, to be political and military allies unless they make an effort to enable these good political and military allies to enjoy a tenable social situation. If the conditions on the international market are so harsh and savage that all are forced to adopt a more aggressive policy, we can expect the worst at social level.

"The president is going to Ottawa primarily to meet with partners and friends" and to "review the situation" with them, but he is not expecting decisions "which show marvelous and enthusiastic unanimity," Vauzelle added.

Picking Out Areas of Agreement

"There is no question of not being absolutely frank in order to encourage dialogue.... The time for talk and empty words is over. We are going to get to the roots of the problems. We intend to frankly explain our circumstances; we will say frankly what we think about U.S. policy, about the high exchange rates or the problems posed by an excessive imbalance between the dollar and the European Monetary System.

"At the same time, France will not be a divisive element but a country which will adopt a reasonable tone, asking others to see that nobody stands to gain from complete lack of cohesion and a return to national egoism. Everybody stands to gain from picking out areas of agreement in order to speak a common language and to adopt a minimum common stance.

"That will lead the Europeans to put a number of questions to the Americans in a very frank way," Vauzelle added. With regard to Japan, he said, the problems will also be "posed in a very frank way."

Regarding North-South relations, Vauzelle stated that here too "there is an American and a French way of viewing the situation" but there is also "an area of agreement." President Reagan has decided to attend the North-South summit in Cancun, Mexico, next fall "because he thinks there is something to be done and said.... The Americans may also think, as we do, that peace depends not only on the balance of forces between East and West but on a new way of viewing relations between North and South."

Energy also will be mentioned. Vauzelle stated in this connection: "Just because there is less pressure on the oil market, the industrialized countries should not abandon their study of energy supply and the search for new energy sources.... The problem will be raised again very soon." He then explained that "nuclear programs also will be discussed."

Vauzelle concluded: "The special characteristic of France's position is that it has specific ideas. Mitterrand is not an ideologue or somebody who adheres to doctrinaire stances...but somebody who is prepared to view problems with a great deal of pragmatism.... We think it conceivable that Ottawa might lead not to a list of declarations...which would correspond to the expression of national egotism and would disappoint everybody...but rather to a minimum common language which would be beneficial to peace and to all the partners."

MINISTER DISCUSSES FISHING, LAW OF SEA STANCES

PM161301 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Jul 81 pp 1, 10

[Francois Grosrichard interview with Louis Le Pensec, French minister for the sea; date and place not given]

[Excerpts] [Question] Let us discuss fishing. Could you tell us, a few weeks before the resumption of negotiations in Brussels, what the government's stance will be with respect to the British, in particular and with respect to the European Community?

[Answer] First of all, I think we might ask ourselves about the firmness of the government in the previous 7-year term in negotiations on the common fisheries policy. The president himself raised the question during his debate with Valery Giscard d'Estaing.

The current block is based essentially on what has become known as the problem of access to Community waters because of the claims of our British partner. My attitude toward Britain will be a combination of firmness and readiness for dialogue.

This firmness is essential since it is the basic interests of French fishing which are at stake. And it is justified since it is based on an incontestable legal position, as a decree of the Court of Justice in Luxembourg has just recalled.

The talks will be conducted with firmness and also in consultation with professionals who will be involved in the preparations and who will be represented on the French delegation.

Finally, in this matter, right is on our side by virtue of the provisions of the treaty whereby Britain joined the Common Market. The sea is and will remain the property of the Community. Firmness on this position doesn't mean rejection of dialogue. And we are prepared to define with our partners, without any discrimination, a regime of common management ensuring the protection of our fishing resources in the interests of all.

[Question] One final question on a subject that is close to you. I mean the Conference on the Law of the Sea, which is to resume in Geneva in August.

[Answer] The minister of the sea is entrusted with leading French delegations at conferences dealing with questions of the sea, in collaboration, of course, with the minister of external relations and the other ministers concerned--I am thinking of the industry minister in particular.

The work of the Conference on the Law of the Sea has been marking time since the first part of the 10th session, which met in New York in April 1981, because of the U.S. delegation's stance. The United States made it known that its government, before making its position clear, must conduct a reexamination of the draft convention as a whole. It asked for a postponement until the next session, in early 1982. At the request of the Group of 77, however, it was decided that work will resume in Geneva on 3 August for 4-5 weeks. But it is feared that this second part of the 10th session, in the absence of effective U.S. participation, notably on questions relating to the international seabed, will only be a repetition of the previous session.

[Question] In view of this situation, what is France's stance?

[Answer] Above all, we want to avoid postponing the talks and to promote the completion of the work. The external relations minister insisted to the U.S. secretary of state that the United States should determine its stance by the end of the year and should be capable of participating in a resumption of talks in Geneva this summer.

France is prepared to play a concilliatory role between the Third World countries on the one hand, which are anxious to obtain a convention on the Law of the Sea, and the United States and certain countries less keen to arrive at an international agreement on the hand. But this conciliatory role requires two conditions.

The first is that we should be actively present in the great adventure of polymetallic nodules, that is, in the exploitation of the seabed. It is up to my colleagues in industry and research to determine the means to urge French industrial groups to take their place.

The second condition is that, in the international sphere, we receive guarantees of the pursuit of our national industrial effort. Hence, our efforts to include an effective antimonopoly clause in the treaty. In the same vein, in view of American expectations, it is important to consider the protection of French interests. France must not bear the cost of attempts at obstruction by the Americans or by other European countries--this is a condition of its credibility, not only in the industrialized countries but as regards the Third World.

[Question] Aren't you afraid of being accused or protectionism?

[Answer] True, the Third World countries have on several occasions come out against the emergence of national legislation which could look like attempted blackmail on the part of the industrialized countries. But the current attitude of the new U.S. administration represents a new element, which all parties concerned, including the Third World countries, must now take into account. In this respect, the recent meeting of the Afro-Asian legal committee organized in Colombo revealed a clear evolution on this point since it seems that the developing countries admit that the industrialized countries concerned are arming themselves against American claims.

In view of the importance of this dossier, I intend to propose to the premier that an interministry committee be organized on this question of the seabed during July.

PCF SENDS MESSAGE TO NINTH PZPR CONGRESS

PM201359 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 16 Jul 81 p 7

[Text] The PCF Central Committee Secretariat has sent the following message to the Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] Central Committee:

Dear comrades, on the occasion of your extraordinary ninth congress, the PCF sends your party, all communists and the Polish people its fraternal and warm greetings.

The bonds which have long united us have always led us to follow attentively the process of the reconstruction of your country which was devastated by the last world war and whose present difficulties cannot make us forget that Poland today has become a great developed country on the economic, social and cultural levels.

Adhering to the principle of noninterference, our party has kept French public opinion widely informed of the development of events in Poland. Since September 1980, Georges Marchais has asserted in the name of our party "that it is up to the Polish people, their government, the PZPR, and them alone, to bring to fruition the announced reforms, which will allow--we are convinced of this--the difficulties to be overcome and which will contribute to the strengthening of socialist Poland."

It is with great attention and interest that we have been following since then the process of economic, social and democratic renewal in which you are engaged.

The holding of the extraordinary ninth congress will be, we are sure, a decisive stage on the path you have chosen to ensure the development of socialist Poland--strong and sovereign.

At this important moment in the history of Poland, the PCF assured you of its sympathy and solidarity and renews before you its attachment to the bonds of friendship and esteem which have long existed between our two peoples and parties.

In this spirit, we wish to reiterate the importance we place on the development of cooperation between France and Poland and on the strengthening of these relations in all spheres on the basis of mutual interest.

For our part, relying on common traditions, we intend to do everything so that France and Poland work actively in favor of peace and disarmament on the basis of independence and security for all states.

We wish you complete success in your work and send you, dear comrades, our most fraternal greetings.

OFFICIALS HOLD MEETINGS WITH BRAZILIAN MINISTERS

PY162353 Paris AFP in Spanish 2130 GMT 16 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 16 Jul (AFP)--Brazilian Planning Minister Delfim Neto held a meeting here today with French Premier Pierre Mauroy and tomorrow he will meet with Foreign Trade Minister Michel Jobert. Neto also will meet tomorrow, Friday, with Economic and Finance Minister Jacques Delors.

Neto is now in Paris on his return from Moscow where he signed important trade agreements with the Soviet Union. Brazilian Transport Minister Eliseu Rezende also met here today with his French couterpart Charles Fiterman. The two ministers reviewed French-Brazilian cooperation in railroads, highways and air transport.

Rezende arrived in Paris on Wednesday on a 3-day visit during which he will sign financial contracts for the construction of the metropolitan railroad in Belo Horizonte.

LE MONDE REPORTS DETAILS OF BUDGET AMENDMENTS

PM161432 Paris LE MONDE in French 3 Jul 81 p 27

[Text] How does the 1981 budget look after the changes made by the government on 1 July to the finance bill which will be examined this month in parliament?

The raising of the internal tax on oil products will bring in Fr900 million this year (Fr2.2 billion in a full year). This sum will be expended to support enterprises: 700 million in the form of supplementary loans from the economic and social development fund and 200 million in subsidies. This means that as the new spending is strictly covered by an increase in oil taxation the budget deficit is not changed.

By contrast, public spending for 1981 is globally increased. It now reaches Fr653 billion as against Fr617.9 billion in the original budget. It is divided up: Fr22.1 billion for already incurred liabilities, that is, accounting for spending resulting from decisions made before the change in government or from economic and financial development (Fr2 billion). An example of the loans: iron and steel (to remedy the poor situation in this industry)--Fr5.3 billion of supplementary spending resulting from the level of reserves on 3 June and Fr7.7 billion resulting from the measures decided on 10 June and 1 July.

In this budget package, the new credits going to industry alone are Fr390 million in subsidies and Fr5.3 billion in loans or Fr5.7 billion. If you add the Fr4.7 billion initially provided for when the 1981 budget was voted at the end of 1980, you come to a total of Fr10.4 billion for enterprises.

AGCA TRIAL OPENS; DEFENDENT MAKES ACCUSATIONS

AU201600 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 20 Jul (ANSA)--The young Turkish national charged with the attempted homicide of Pope John II, Mehmet Ali Agca, declared today in court that he had been tortured in Rome's Rebibbia prison and threatened to begin a hunger strike. The defendent made his charges on the conditions of his confinement during the opening session of the trial in the first section of the Rome criminal court.

Agca is also charged with the attempted homicide of two American tourists, Anne Odre and Rose Hall, who were wounded during the shooting in Saint Peter's Square on May 13 and with lesser crimes, including illegal possession of a firearm, the Browning nine caliber parabellum found at the scene of the attempt, and possession of a false passport.

Today's hearing got underway when the prisoner, wearing a white shirt and grey trousers, was led into the dock. He kept his eyes fixed on the floor while the six judges, two women and four men, took their places behind the bench then cast a cold look around the courtroom as photographers' strobe lights flashed and telecamera operaters filmed footage. An estimated three-hundred reporters, photographers and television units from Italy and abroad gained access to the courtroom.

After the judges were sworn in, the chief magistrate, Saverio Santiapichi, read out the charges filed against Agca and the Turkish translation of the charge sheet was read to the prisoner by one of the two court-appointed interpreters.

The court-appointed defense attorney, Pietro d'Ovidio, then made a motion to strike the proceedings on the grounds that the trial could be held only at the express request of the Italian Justice Ministry because the defendent is a foreign national and the crimes he is charged with occurred in a foreign state. Public prosecutor Nicolo Amato moved to deny the motion and the judges retired to their chambers to weigh the issue raised by defense counsel.

At the end of half-an-hour of consultation, the judges ruled that there was no need for a Justice Ministry request and that the trial could be conducted within the terms of the 1929 Lateran Pact which regulates relations between the Vatican State and Italy.

Mehmet Ali Agca, in his first appearance on the stand, refused to answer the questions asked by the judges. [words indistinct] the venue on the same grounds as those contained in the defense motion. The prisoner then declared that he had been tortured in confinement and aired his threat to begin a hunger strike. He also charged that: "In prison I am under pressure, I am oppressed and threatened with death. My condition and my physical appearance clearly demonstrate this". Agca alleged that he had been living in "inhuman conditions the past seventy days. I can't understand whether I'm in a medieval prison or in a democratic country", he said.

In his ten-minute appearance on the stand, the prisoner continued his statement by saying: "I protest before the eyes of the world the inhuman treatment applied to prisoners in this democratic country".

In his statement to the court, the prisoner said that in exactly five months, on December 20, "I will begin a hunger strike to protest the venue, which he included in "these injustices". He explained that, "On May 13, when I shot the head of the Vatican State, I was within the borders of that state and absolutely do not accept the jurisdiction of the Italian court.

"The Vatican is an independent state", Agca continued, "with its own borders, its own government and its own head of state. The existence of international law cannot be forgotten in one fell swoop. For what I have done I cannot be tried by a foreign state", he insisted. At this point, the defendent returned to his accusations of improper treatment in confinement and referred to "inhuman behavior" he has been subjected to.

After another reference to international law, he said, "I appeal also to the Vatican to eliminate the shadow cast over you by the Italian state" and urged the Holy See to give a show of "your independence, prove that you are really a state or once and for all cut your ties with foreign countries", he challenged.

He reiterated his charges of torture and improper treatment accorded him in prison, the [word indistinct] of international law and the "silence of the Vatican" and declared that he would wait five months for written briefs to be filed in response to his charges by the Vatican and Italy before beginning a hunger strike.

In conclusion, the prisoner said, "I feel at this point that my defense attorney no longer has anything to do and I do not accept him in my defense. The trial is over. I thank you".

LEADING FINANCIER SENTENCED FOR CURRENCY SMUGGLING

AU202030 Rome ANSA in English 1915 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Milan, 20 Jul (ANSA)--One of Italy's leading financiers, Roberto Calvi, president of the Banco Ambrosiano and the Centrale Holding Company, was sentenced to four years in jail and fined more than thirteen million dollars today for illegally smuggling large sums of capital out of the country. Two years of the sentence were suspended and Calvi was released on bail for the period leading up to his appeals trial.

RADICE SPEECH AT PCI CENTRAL COMMITTEE SESSION

PM201353 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 3 Jul 81 p 6

[Report on Lucio Lombardo Radice speech at PCI Central Committee session]

[Text] The 23 June joint communique signed by the French Socialist and Communist parties, Lucio Lombardo Radice observed, outlines seven main points of European policy which have for a long time been a peaceful field of understanding between the PSI and PCI, at least in their official statements. In respect to agreement in outlook on the gradual elimination of blocs, commitment to the EEC, Afghanistan's right to self-determination and the withdrawal of Soviet troops, Poland's autonomous development, Israel's right to exist and the Palestinians' right to a homeland, the Italian Communists' and Socialists' positions correspond exactly to those expressed in the Paris communique. There are some differences regarding Euromissiles, to which I will return.

We can and must say with great satisfaction that, following some corrections by the PCF, we now have a joint program of the French and Italian leftwing forces that could be put forward as a joint program for the European left. There is a major difference, however, between the PS and PSI stances. I am saying nothing new when I say that whereas Mitterrand is reaping the rewards of consistent tough opposition to the Gaullist regime and its follower, Giscard, Craxi does not propose an alternative in terms of the elimination of the crisis-ridden DC power system. On the contrary, the "governability" thesis, which I find semantically incomprehensible, implies permanent backing for semigovernments or bad governments, as long as some government exists. So the basic issue concerns not the program but the strategic objective, and this objective must be an alternative to the DC regime, not an alternation within the DC regime.

To return to the issue of the Euromissiles, there is a need for negotiations that must "center precisely on the presence of Soviet SS-20 missiles and the decision to deploy U.S. cruise and Pershing-II missiles" (citing the Paris comminuque). The PSI seems unwilling to commit itself to the above-mentioned line. But even we, though our political stance is clear-cut, are not yet waging a battle among the public and the masses for a halt to Euromissiles and a start to European nuclear disarmament.

To advocate European nuclear disarmament "from Poland to Portugal" a major 1981 peace march, due to end in Paris on 9 August, "Hiroshima Day," is underway, supported by the Russell Foundation, which issued the first announcement of it back in May 1980. L'UNITA did indeed publish the appeal for Italian participation, with Giovanni Favilli heading the list of signatories. But that is not enough. There must be an organized mobilization of communist women, young people and intellectuals, a full-scale campaign and rallying of support.

July 19 marks the second anniversary of the Liberation of Nicaragua. This small country represents a great hope and is an original example of the path to socialism within freedom. It is no coincidence that Reagan and Haig would like to terminate its experience and prevent El Salvador and other Latin American countries from following this path. Do we wish to limit ourselves to a ritual celebration of the day or do we want to place solidarity with El Salvador, Nicaragua and struggling Latin America at the center of our ideological attention? For behind those liberation movements there lies a major regeneration of Christian thought, known as the theology of liberation. Little or no attention is devoted to it by non-Christian Marxist intellectuals in our party, the Gramsci Institute or the magazines. In general, the end of the prospects of a "historical compromise," in terms of a government with the DC, must not imply any indifference toward the Catholic world, which is something apart from the DC, which is increasingly impoverished intellectually as well. Let us try to understand the processes of conscience and thought which set apart so many believers--who remain believers--from obedience to the Vatican, as shown by the results on 17 May [referendum on abortion].

PCI'S INGRAO SPEAKS IN CHAMBER OF DEPUTIES DEBATE

PM161515 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 11 Jul 81 pp 1, 14

[Giorgio Frasca Polara report on PCI floor leader Pietro Ingrao 10 July Italian Chamber of Deputies speech: "Hands Off Power System?"]

[Excerpts] Rome--Speaking in yesterday's lower house debate on Senator Spadolini's statements, Pietro Ingrao presented the PCI's verdict on the Spadolini government and its program. Ingrao proceeded from the Spandolini' cabinet's inherent innovation--a non-Christian Democratic prime minister--and pointed out that the Communists played an active part in pressing for this innovation. Together with the result of the abortion referendum and of the 21 June elections, the PCI's action and struggle against the DC's power system, the monopoly that it represents and its effects on the country have also exerted an influence.

The first criticism concerns the government's structure. It is not so much a matter of the number of ministers and undersecretaries. The fact is that there is no appreciable difference compared to previous cabinets, in the character of the ministries, their duties (and in this sense also their number) or relations among them. No attempt was even made at any kind of rationalization, let alone innovation, despite the fact, for instance, that the existence of the regional government for several decades urges and indeed demands a reappraisal of ministerial functions and duties. And what can be said about the choice (or exclusion) of individual ministers? Why, despite the promises, has there basically been a repetition of the old distribution of posts? It is not merely the arrogance of this or that party, but the abnormal party control of the state that is in question.

Another criticism concerns the characteristics and substance of the government program. The Communists expected a real choice of substance and timetable, an indication of priorities, a hierarchy among the things to be done. Spadolini has done the opposite. In the field of justice alone, he proposes 16 complex laws; and in some of them not a single line has yet been written. How long would it take to complete the entire program? The executive is weak, Spadolini complains. But an executive is strong if it takes decisions, provides guidance and gives precise pointers. Instead, there is such great and widespread confusion that the secretary of one government party, Social Democrat Pietro Longo, recently challenged a not unimportant point in the government program (concerning justice) and went as far as to accuse the prime minister of duplicity. Such an irreconcilable contradiction between the commitments made in the majority agreements and Spadolini's program statements call into question the PSDI's very vote of confidence....

Next, Comrade Ingrao dealt in detail with some of the program points mentioned or not mentioned by Spadolini; public spending cuts (but for what objectives, not only quantitative, but also productive and social); the south of Italy (the prime minister's exposition does not say enough about this and lacks any specific commitment, though, for instance, the southern development fund deadline is now only a few weeks away); the role of state-controlled industry (what is the government's position on the Fiat-National Hydrocarbons Agency pact?); the absence of any reference to the most strongly opposed options affecting housing, employment, the incomes policy, and so forth.

The basic point, therefore, is the absence of the specificity that continues the hub of a modern program. But this is no accident, as shown by the matter of the disputed measures to reform the public prosecutor's office (and the spectacular argument that broke out in this house). This is what happens when deals reached among the currents or the tactical requirement not to speak out clearly obscure or restrict the debate on the substance. What about ungovernability? This is where it stems from, these are its roots, and here it is exploding a mere moment after the government's formation.

The same applies to the foreign policy pointers. It is not enough to express the hope for and favorability toward negotiations. A great many difficult deadlines are approaching; what is Italy doing, what initiatives is it taking, how does it assess the new possibilities of negotiation? Nor is it enough to say that we belong to the Atlantic alliance, because this alliance includes both Thatcher and Brandt, whose assertions conflict; both Schmidt and Mitterand; the Dutch, who reject the deployment of missiles on their territory; and the British Laborites, who are even demanding unilateral nuclear disarmament. Is Spadolini really sure that an alliance's authority and legitimacy are strengthened if it demonstrates the impossibility of a dialectic within itself?

From current trends in Europe--how different from the time when some people believed that only the Thatcher-Strauss axis was making any progress in Europe!--Comrade Ingrao inferred the following basic indicative tendency: These are different processes and phenomena, some of which embody even harsh contradictions, but which reflect the existence of many and various forces that can no longer remain within the old social and political framework and which in one way or another are seeking an answer to questions and contradictions, including some new ones; employment and quality of work, housing, land, the environment, peace again, the removal of the threat of nuclear disaster, what meaning to give to life, and new relations with the Third World.

Therefore, even if many of these forces come from paths different from ours, we Italian Communists feel close to and are interested in them, they are related to us and need us and what Eurocommunism represents as an innovation in Communist tradition, as a major European factor that has prompted the world to talk about it and these forces are the sign of the resurgence of scope and the existence of major potentials for a social transformation--this is the most important factor--which will rest on broad foundations, take place within consensus and use various traditions, histories and cultures.

Of course, there is no point in statistically adding these forces together. Nevertheless, both a very open attitude and great consistency will be needed to encourage victorious aggregations and to build vigorous processes. This is the strong message of Mitterrand's victory and of his proposal to create a new social area in Europe. Is it perhaps wrong, Ingrao said, turning to the Socialists, to say that real, healthy rivalry within the left depends not on who gets the most votes but on seeing who can best promote these new and plural forms of aggregation, who can best understand other people's arguments too and can connect with this agitated, crisis-ridden and changing Europe? Italy now has no prospects of progress or independence outside or against Europe. Outside this battle for a new role and a new face for Europe and for a rallying of the advancing forces, for Italy there is only corporative decline and dependence on an empire. The national driving role will belong to whoever manages to conduct a dialogue and exchange views with and to build bridges to this crisis-ridden and changing Europe.

Leaving aside semantic complexities, the "democratic alternative" implies an awareness of this dimension, an awareness of the national role to be performed; it implies breadth and innovation in the bloc for regeneration that must be built. This is why there is no point in telling us communists to come into line with or adapt to the status quo, when in fact everything demands that we do not turn back but seek to innovate and move forward. This is the underlying reason behind Eurocommunism. The path to these developments is being barred by reexcavating the old trenches of the fifties and sixties, Ingrao said. Moro realized this before he was assassinated. Indeed, the old trench of the pramble [DC rightwing] failed to stand up and the DC and the Italian Catholic movement are again confronted by the entire problem which Moro perceived, but they are facing it now in a much weaker situation.

Of course, there is a difficult path to be pursued. But in France too it seemed that division would prevail, that the alternative was in pieces; a year ago there were even doubts about Mitterrand's candidacy. Then, however, there came the impact of political initiative, the consistency with which the alternative was pursued, the key elements which brought it to life and the steadfastness with which that target was kept in sight. Of course the alternative and its substance are different in Italy. But who will succeed in promoting and developing the initiative for the alternative in Italy? This is the major issue and a lofty national task. The Communists will devote all their skills and strengths to this very important task, which we consider decisive.

CALVO-SOTELO RETURNS FROM MEXICO, CITES AGREEMENTS

LD191908 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 1600 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo returned from his trip to Mexico at 1230 today. He said on arrival at Barajas Airport that the agreements reached with Mexico will be incorporated into a general cooperation agreement which will give relations between the two countries the privileged status they ought to have had all along. These relations, he said, have opened up for us since the king and queen's visit.

SPAIN ASKS FRENCH MINISTER TO POSTPONE VISIT

NC201609 Paris AFP in English 1557 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Madrid, 20 Jul (AFP)--Spain has asked French Interior Minister Gaston Defferre to postpone his visit here tomorrow because of his comments that Basque separatist militants were involved in "political combat," a diplomatic source here said today.

Spanish Prime Minister Leopoldo Calvo-Sotelo asked his French counterpart Pierre Mauroy to postpone the visit in a telephone call shortly after the Spanish leader's arrival in Mexico City on a four-day official visit, a source close to the Spanish Foreign Ministry said.

"It was not the most opportune moment for such a visit," she said, adding that it would "have had bad repercussions in the media."

Madrid has been waiting for a French policy statement on the question of French cooperation in fighting terrorism in Spain.

In an interview in the French magazine LE NOUVEL OBSERVATEUR Saturday, Mr Defferre affirmed that France would not extradite Spanish Basque terrorists demanded by Madrid because their activities were part of a "political combat." France has traditionally had a policy of accepting political refugees.

His comments unleashed sharp criticism in the Spanish press, which accused Mr Defferre of "scandalous" interference in Spanish internal affairs and demanded a "firm" response from the Spanish Government.

The centrist newspaper DAIRIO 16 today said that French-Spanish relations "are at their lowest."

PSUC CONFERENCE CONFIRMS EUROCOMMUNIST STANCE

PM171605 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 12 Jul 81 p 9

[Margarita Saenz-Diez report: "Frutes Prepared To Enforce Party Rules Stringently"]

[Excerpts] The delegates at the Fourth Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] Conference yesterday confirmed by a majority of almost two-thirds the Eurocommunist nature of the party's policy. The second day of the proceedings passed in an atmosphere of tension as a result of a demonstration by a group of pro-Soviet members who assembled at the entrance to the Orfeo de Sants--a demonstration which included several booings of Eurocommunist members and personal confrontations with officials responsible for order, reaching the point of mutual physical aggression.

With respect to the ideological debate--which included, in addition to the confirmation of the Eurocommunist line, endorsement of the stance that the party should formulate its international policy independently and the discrediting of the stance that "the confrontation between the socialist countries and imperialism is one of the principal manifestations of the class struggle at the international level," among many other issues--this concluded with 133 votes in favor of the political theses formulated by the Executive Committee and the Central Committee, 67 against and 6 abstentions.

Result Without Surprises

Thus, the correlation of forces which has recently been occurring in the Central Committee and which it was forecast this conference would produce was repeated, although a mistake crept into yesterday's report with respect to this specific aspect--a mistake which made it difficult to know exactly the strength of each of the currents.

The triumph of the proposals is due to the fact that "Leninists" and "Euros" voted in unison, apart from a few exceptions. In the Executive Committee, there was 1 vote against and 3 abstentions, corresponding to leaders linked with the pro-Soviet sector.

This sector yesterday publicly demanded the holding of a congress as the only way to "correct" the violation, which it believes is taking place, of the decisions of the Eighth PSUC Congress held in January. A congress would certainly represent for them an attempt to win the support of some Leninists, which contributed to the success of some of their proposals at the January congress.

Congress for Two Strategies

In view of all this, it could be said that the appeal for unity made by Francisco Frutos on Friday did not produce the desired effect. At any event, the PSUC secretary general emphasized yesterday that it is now necessary to cease to discuss the party's political line and to study grave and specific problems which are confronting the left and society in general. He denied the desirability of holding a special congress and called on the delegates to shun the specters hinting at the permanent existence of traps and the dangers of social-democratization.

For their part, Eurocommunists--as LA VANGUARDIA has already reported--want a special congress to be held, although they did not demand this publicly yesterday. In that event, since Eurocommunism would very likely emerge confirmed in a manner very difficult to reverse, those who did not accept it would have to leave, thus ending from this viewpoint the coexistence of "two differing political blueprints" under the name of a single party.

Further Report

PM171508 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 14 Jul 81 p 7

[Excerpt] The Unified Socialist Party of Catalonia [PSUC] delegation which will take part in the imminent PCE congress will support the Eurocommunist strategy there, in line with what could be regarded as the principal conclusion of the Fourth PSUC National Conference, which concluded at the Orfeo de Sants on Sunday afternoon.

Comprising 170 delegates--the entire Central Committee plus six dozen members, several of whom hold posts in the institutions--in accordance with the proposal made with the Executive Committee, one of this delegation's tasks will be to stanch the wounds opened between the two parties as a result of the Fifth PSUC Congress. The correlation of forces within this delegation reflects the correlation maintained during the conference, as well as at the meetings which the Central Committee has been holding for several months, that is, about two-thirds is comprised by "Leninists" and "Eurocommunists," while the "pro-Soviets," who are also represented, are in a minority.

According to the political resolution approved at this fourth conference, the delegation "will express our will as one more delegation, taking part in a fraternal and constructive spirit in the formulation of the communists' policy at the level of the entire state, in the formulation of the PCE's policy, a commitment which also means accepting the policy which we will all determine democratically, sharing responsibility for this policy at the level of Spain."

Right to Self-Determination

This stance, which was decided on by a majority after studying the PCE's theses, will dispel the unease which the PCE leadership was displaying with respect to the Catalonians' presence, in the event of Eurocommunism not having been restored. According to reliable reports, it is very likely that a delegation which did not support the Eurocommunist identity for the two parties would have been excluded on the grounds that the PCE and PSUC rules stipulate that the two parties will maintain "the same principles," the same general policy and the same methods of organization." At any event, the Catalonian delegation will uphold the principle of the peoples' right to self-determination, specifically today, in the full implementation of the constitutional provisions concerning autonomy.

For his part, PCE leader Simon Sanchez Montero, who was present at the conference, forecast that his party's 10th congress will be the congress of its regeneration and of the proliferation of internal democracy.

Different Viewpoints

In the opinion of Secretary General Francisco Frutos, with this conference, the period of abnormality which the party was experiencing can be deemed to be over--a viewpoint which is shared only partially by the Eurocommunists and is rejected by the pro-Soviets who insist that the fifth congress' resolutions alone remain legitimate.

In the opinion of one of the most prominent representatives of the "Eurocommunist" sector--spokesman in the congress Jordi Sole Tura--"this conference has constituted a great step toward normalization, although this has not yet been fully achieved. Sole Tura, who, as LA VANGUARDIA reporter, had to be protected from the "pro-Soviet" demonstrators' jostling when he was entering the Orfeo de Sants on Saturday afternoon, added that the results achieved over the last few days "are perhaps not accepted by a section of the pro-Soviets, and so resignations could occur in this sector." With respect to his personal safety, he stressed that but for the perfect functioning of the body of officials responsible for order, he could have ended up in the hospital. He also pointed out that if the rules were stringently enforced, as had been announced, enforcement in his instance would mean the expulsion of those involved in the attack. This kind of decision rests with the Executive Committee.

With respect to the attack on Sole Tura, the dismissed chairman, Pere Ardiaca, stated on Sunday that the incident was exaggerated. "I went out into the street," he said, "to calm people down and I can assure you that I could see no attack." As far as his dismissal is concerned, he regards it as "retaliation for maintaining the demand that the fifth congress' decisions be fulfilled."

Some conclusions

Prominent among the many items approved by the Fourth PSUC National Conference, in addition to those which we have been reporting over the last few days, are the vigorous condemnation of the Reagan administration's arms policy, the confirmation of the PSUC's stance in favor of Spain's neutrality and in opposition to the existence of U.S. bases on Spanish territory and the assertion that the government has promoted political and legislative activity aimed at limiting citizens' rights (the law governing states of alarm, emergency and siege) and at cutting back the autonomies from a centralist viewpoint (the committee of experts, the bill on harmonization and the local government bill).

DENMARK

GOVERNMENT MAY BUY FRG SUBMARINES BUILT FOR CHILE

PM201352 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 3 Jul 81 part 1 p 2

[Report by "Auni": "Sogaard Looks at 'Cut-Rate' Submarines"]

[Text] According to press reports from Kiel, Danish Defense Minister Poul Sogaard has discussed the possibility of Denmark purchasing two almost complete submarines which the West German Government has "on offer."

The submarines, together with a third, were built for Chile, but after strong political pressure the West German Government has decided not to deliver them to Chile.

After seeing the submarines, Poul Sogaard said that he had not promised to help the West Germans to get rid of the submarines. The Danish Defense High Command in Vedbaek is working on a project to replace the three Danish Delphin-class submarines, and their work involves both West German and Swedish models.

A spokesman for the Defense High Command yesterday told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that the Chilean submarines are a little larger than the West German submarine model which was originally being considered. However, the Chilean boats are not too large for use in Danish waters and in the Baltic.

FINLAND

TROOPS WILL NOT JOIN MULTINATIONAL SINAI FORCE

LD201858 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 1600 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Finland will not participate in the formation of the multinational force to be stationed in the Sinai Peninsula. This weekend, Egypt, Israel and the United States signed an agreement according to which troops will be sent to the Sinai immediately after the Israeli withdrawal from the area, in other words, by next April. The UN control office of the Ministry of Defense stresses that Finland has provided, and will continue to provide, peacekeeping troops only for the use of the United Nations. According to our current laws, Finland cannot make troops available for anyone other than the United Nations.

According to the 1979 agreement signed at Camp David UN troops should be sent to the Sinai Peninsula following the Israeli withdrawal in order to supervise the concerned parties' observance of the conditions of the withdrawal. However, the United Nations has refused to send troops.

MANZHULO VISIT LEADS TO FINNISH-SOVIET CONTRACTS

PM171100 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 10 Jul 81 p 11

[Text] Oy W. Rosenlew AB's process technology factory is to supply one cellulose sulfite and two cellulose sulfate evaporation plants to the Soviet Union. The value of the deal amounts to around 50 million markkaa. The contract was signed in Pori in connection with the visit to the town by the Finnish-Soviet economic cooperation commission.

The Soviet delegation was led by Deputy Foreign Trade Minister A.N. Manzhulo and the contract was signed for V/O Prommash-Import by General Director G.F. Rakhimbayev and Director Y.A. Pavlov and for Rosenlew's by Director in Chief G Rosenlew. The agreement is an extension of one to supply four similar cellulose sulfite evaporation plants. These considerably reduce the load on watercourses by utilizing waste alkali solids, which can later be used for burning in waste alkali tanks. The capacity of the cellulose sulfate evaporation plants ordered is 200 tons of evaporated water per hour and that of the cellulose sulfite evaporation plant 100 tons per hour.

The order will considerably ease the employment situation at the process technology factory and will give work amounting to one-third of the factory's annual capacity. Once this agreement has been concluded, Rosenlew's process technology factory will have supplied a total of 14 evaporation plants to the Soviet Union.

The Rosenlew metal engineering section exports combine harvesters for experimental agriculture concerned with plant breeding and improvement as well as process technology. In 1980, Rosenlew's exports to the Soviet Union almost trebled and they accounted for 44.2 percent of the company's total exports. Plastic and paper sacks are the most important export goods alongside metal engineering products.

Allmaenna Ingenjiorbraan has signed a construction and planning agreement with the Soviet Union worth 50 million markkaa. The agreement with the Soviet company V/O Soyuzvneshstroyimport was signed in June and covers the planning of an aluminum foundry in Pskov and the supply of the building materials. The building's floor area will total 10,000 square meters. According to the contract, materials will be supplied during November.

SWEDEN

PRIME MINISTER WELCOMES BREZHNEV ZONE REMARKS

PM020822 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 27 Jun 81 p 4

[Text] "I have not yet had the opportunity to study the text of the interview with Brezhnev," Prime Minister Thorbjorn Falldin said on Friday [26 June]. "If it is true that the Soviet Union is prepared to discuss the question of a restricted zone affecting Soviet territory bordering on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries, this is a welcome factor," Falldin said. By "restricted zone" Falldin means the area in the western Soviet Union where today there are nuclear arms of various types. The Swedish Riksdag already requested the government to maintain contacts with the other Nordic governments to investigate whether there is a common foundation on which a nuclear-free north could be created.

CP LEADER URGES CONFERENCE ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

PM131018 Stockholm DAGENS NYHETER in Swedish 4 Jul 81 p 2

[Swedish Left Party-Communist leader Lars Werner "debate" article: "Issue Invitations for Conference on Nuclear-free Zone"]

[Text] "The prerequisite for the establishment of a nuclear-free zone is that the superpowers be prepared to give the guarantees which this would require.

"The information which we have so far is that the Soviet Government is not at all interested in discussing any such commitment" (Ola Ullsten in the Riksdag 3 June 1981).

"The Soviet Union is ready to guarantee that nuclear arms will not be used against the countries in a Nordic nuclear-free zone. The Soviet Union also is ready to discuss the question of certain other measures affecting our country where it borders on the nuclear-free zone" (Leonid Brezhnev in SUOMEN SOSIALDEMOKRAATTI 26 June 1981).

The Swedish Government has made the Soviet Government the principal obstacle to the establishment of a Nordic nuclear-free zone. Claims about the nature of the Soviet attitude also have been made to serve as an excuse for its own passivity. Thus, it is typical that the Soviet statement which has now been made is not a reply to a direct question from Ullsten or the government.

Since the question was never asked, the Soviet Union answered the question on its own initiative. If, for example, Ullsten had been more active and asked the question of the Soviet Government, a positive response probably would have come a lot earlier. But no one ever thought of the possibility of asking and the government has now been left even further behind. There is a risk that the Swedish Government will continue with its passive and clumsy approach and will allow the present opportunity to slip away.

The risk also exists that the government, because of bureaucratic stiffness, fear of losing prestige and doubt about the U.S. reaction, is consciously allowing the opportunity to slip away.

Despite the fact that the Soviet Union has expressed its support for a nuclear-free zone and the United States has declared its opposition to such a zone, Ullsten has made the Soviet Union the decisive obstacle. Who has heard him complain or even express regret about U.S. opposition?

This is not only tragic for the establishment of a Nordic nuclear-free zone, it is also extremely negative and dangerous for Sweden's international reputation as a neutral and nonaligned country. Ullsten and the Swedish Government must dispel all suspicions of this and immediately begin active work for the proposal for a Nordic zone.

The majority of the Swedish people supports the proposal for a nuclear-free zone and the Soviet statement has created improved opportunities for the establishment of one. The Swedish Government, therefore, should take the initiative for a conference with the Nordic countries and the superpowers to discuss such a zone. Regardless of the recent Soviet statement, such a conference is necessary. Partly to reach clarity concerning the ACTUAL [upper case denotes italics as published] requirements of such a zone and partly to set in motion serious negotiations between the parties involved.

In the past, Ullsten has said that conditions are not right for such a conference. He should now realize that such a conference is both necessary and unavoidable. Ullsten should also realize that the United States is the principal obstacle to the establishment of such a zone and must be pressed to change its negative stance. The only possibility of bringing about direct talks with the U.S. Government and of influencing it is a conference--or have Ullsten and the government better suggestions?

Act quickly with an initiative now, break out of the passivity, send out invitations to a conference and direct talks on the establishment of a Nordic nuclear-free zone.

IRAQ ORDERS UNDERGROUND SHELTERS FROM COMPANY

NC130920 Paris AFP in English 0911 GMT 13 Jul 81

[Text] Stockholm, 13 Jul (AFP)--The Iraqi Government has ordered 500 million dollars' worth of underground shelters from the Swedish company Armerad Betong Vaegforbaettringer.

Installed in Baghdad and other cities they will be used in peacetime by the civilian population for various activities, the company said. Work will begin at the end of this year and last for four years.

RALLY MARKS COUP, TURKISH INVASION ANNIVERSARY

Kiprianou Remarks

NC202008 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Excerpt] A mass interparty rally was held at Elevtheria Square in Nicosia tonight to condemn the treacherous coup d'etat and Turkish invasion. President Kiprianou delivered a speech at the rally which was also addressed by the Greek Minister to the prime minister, Stefanopoulos, and by a representative of the union of Greek municipalities and communes.

Speaking at the rally, President Kiprianou declared the decision and determination of Cyprus Hellenism not to accept the legalization and consolidation of the results of the dual crime of the coup and the Turkish invasion. He said: We will never accept a solution that would mean the selling out of our people's rights. We want to secure an absolutely free and independent Cyprus that would be territorially integral, federal but united, a nonaligned Cyprus in which all its people will live happily and formulate a better future for the coming generations.

The president of the republic also said: We are pursuing an honest solution of the Cyprus problem on the basis of the UN resolutions and the summit agreements. Referring to the inter-Cypriot talks, Mr Kiprianou said the dialogue has thus far not brought about any result and this has been so despite the good will demonstrated by the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side. He said: The dialogue has always clashed with Turkey's intransigence because when holding talks with the representative of the Turkish Cypriots we are actually talking with the conqueror. What is necessary for progress to be made in the dialogue, Mr Kiprianou said, is a radical change in the Turkish policy, and substantive proposals should be submitted, particularly on the territorial aspect of the problem. Because, if such proposals are not submitted it is very difficult for the dialogue to survive, and when the dialogue fails the responsibility will fall entirely on the Turkish side. For this reason, those who lightly are interested in an early solution of the Cyprus problem, must now turn their attention and pressure on Ankara so that there may be a radical change in the Turkish stand.

President Kiprianou stressed: Although the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side possess good will and readiness for an honest solution, nobody should ever hope that the Cypriot people will allow conditions similar to those that have led to treason. He said: Anybody that might dare disturb tranquility, order or democracy will be crushed relentlessly.

In conclusion, the president of the republic said we are not alone in our difficult struggle. We have the support of all freedom-loving people in the world. We have the multifaceted and variable support and stregthening of democratic Greece--its government, political world and people. Kiprianou said: There should always be a differentiation between the junta, which brought Greece itself to the verge of destruction, and the present democratic Greece which is struggling with us for the restoration of our rights.

In his address at the rally tonight, the Greek minister to the prime minister, Stefanopoulos, declared the unreserved support of entire Hellenism for the Cypriot people's struggle.

The rally approved a resolution addressed to the UN secretary general. The resolution expresses the strong demand that the United Nations proceed with all necessary actions that would force Turkey to comply with the resolutions and decisions on Cyprus. The resolution also expresses the ardent desire that all Cypriots live peacefully and creatively in an independent sovereign, nonaligned, demilitarized, and well-governed federal state.

The resolution also expresses unanimous support for Mr Waldheim's efforts for a constructive and fruitful intercommunal dialogue that would lead to a just and lasting Cyprus solution. At the same time, however, the resolution denounces the filibustering tactics of the Turkish side that refuses to submit concrete, constructive and complete proposals on all aspects of the Cyprus issue.

Greek Delegation Attends

NC192339 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 2000 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] At the invitation of President Kiprianou, Greek Minister to the Prime Minister Konstandinos Stefanopoulos and a seven-member interparty parliamentary delegation arrived from Athens this evening to attend the pan-Cypriot interparty rally to be held at Elevtheira Square in Nicosia tomorrow evening to condemn the coup d'etat and the Turkish invasion. Mr Stefanopoulos and the Greek interparty parliamentary delegation were welcomed at Larnaca airport by Minister to the President Katsellis, Greek Ambassador Zakharakis, party spokesmen in the House of Representatives and by Foreign Ministry Director General Pelayias.

In a statement at Larnaca airport, Mr Stefanopoulos said he himself, as representative of the Greek Government and the interparty delegation of the Greek Chamber of Deputies, came to Cyprus to express the unanimous and unreserved support of the entire Greek people in the struggle being waged by the Cyprus Government and Cypriot Hellenism for a just and honest solution of the Cyprus problem, a solution that the Cyprus Government is pursuing with consistency and sincerity. But in order for it to be vindicated, it also needs a response by the other side. Mr Stefanopoulos said: We hope the intercommunal talks will offer the opportunity for such really substantive negotiations that would accomplish the purpose we all pursue and hope for.

Stefanopoulos Comments

NC201201 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Greek Minister to the Prime Minister Stefanopoulos, who came to Cyprus to attend tonight's rally in Nicosia to condemn the coup and the Turkish invasion, met President Kiprianou today.

After the meeting, Mr Stefanopoulos stated that Mr Kiprianou had briefed him on the latest developments and expectations on the Cyprus issue. The Greek minister said that there was no need whatsoever to confirm for his benefit what constitutes the aim of his presence here, namely, the unanimous and unreserved support of the Greek Government and people. Mr Stefanopoulos expressed the hope that a just solution to this great national problem will be found soon which, he stressed, is in urgent need of resolution in the best and most rapid manner.

President Kiprianou stated that in his talks with Mr Stefanopoulos, besides the briefing on the latest developments and the exchange of views, he reiterated the Cypriot people's gratitude for the complete support of the Greek Government, politicians and the people in Cyprus' struggle for freedom and justice. Mr Kiprianou said: The hope of all is that this struggle be ended at the earliest possible moment so that the Cypriot people's drama may also end. Moreover, President Kiprianou reiterated that the content of the solution and not the time is of primary importance while the solution must be truly just and viable and be based on the UN resolutions and summit agreements. Mr Kiprianou concluded: Sooner or later justice and freedom must be restored to the whole of Cyprus. This is something that concerns not only Cyprus but also Greece and the whole international community.

Minister to the President Katsellis and Greek Ambassador Zakharakis accompanied Mr Stefanopoulos at his visit to the president. Today, Mr Stefanopoulos also met Minister to the President Katsellis, Foreign Minister Rolandhis and Archbishop Khrisostomos.

GOVERNMENT CONDEMNS ISRAELI RAIDS IN LEBANON

NC201849 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1800 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] The Foreign Ministry issued the following statement: The Greek Government expresses its concern over the continued Israeli air raids against Lebanon. These raids not only cause severe damage to civilian housing and urban projects but also serious casualties among the population.

The Greek Government is convinced that no solution can be reached through acts of violence. On the contrary, such acts only make the situation in Lebanon more difficult to resolve and generally prevents progress toward a solution of the Middle East problem.

I KATHIMERINI REPORTS DENIAL OF ITALIAN MEDIATION

NC171628 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 17 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The Greek Government knows nothing about an Italian mediation between Greece and Turkey on the issue of the Aegean airspace. This statement was made last night by government sources and by Foreign Minister Mitsotakis following a statement by Italian National Defense Minister Lelio Lagorio that in the recent months Italy had mediated between Greece and Turkey on the Aegean issue. During a news conference, the Italian minister said that the mediation had taken place at the level of chiefs of general staffs and had been kept secret.

The statement of the government sources is as follows: "The Greek side has not asked for mediation nor is the Greek Government aware of any mediation." Also, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis stated: "The Foreign Ministry knows nothing."

YUGOSLAVIA'S DJURANOVIC PAYS OFFICIAL VISIT

For Belgrade TANJUG and Athens radio reportage on the visit to Greece by a Yugoslav delegation led by Premier Veselin Djuranovic, see the Yugoslav section of the 20 July Eastern Europe DAILY REPORT.

KARAMANLIS NOTES ANNIVERSARY OF CYPRUS INVASION

NC192019 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] On the occasion of the seventh anniversary of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus, President Karamanlis made the following statement:

If 20 July is a sad day for the Greeks, for the Turks it must be considered as a day of dire shame as the extension of the drama in Megalonisos must also be considered as a sign of decline of the civilized world. The Cypriot people must be certain that Hellenism in its totality will stand by its side until the day of its vindication.

INSTITUTE REPORTS NEW URANIUM DEPOSIT NEAR DRAMA

NC192305 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] A new, large deposit of uranium has been located at the "Arkoudhorema" site in Drama, a short distance from the known deposit at the Paranestion site. According to the first indications, this is a very considerable deposit estimated at hundreds of tons. An announcement to this effect has been made by the Institute of Geological and Mineral Research.

NEW DEMOCRACY GOVERNMENT ISSUES PROGRAM STATEMENT

NC201220 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 19-20 Jul 81 p 7

["General framework" of New Democracy government program to be implemented in the next 4-year period--passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] The New Democracy policy has thus far succeeded in securing the country's integrity and independence, consolidation of democracy and functioning of its institutions, safeguarding political stability and social tranquility as well as restoring the country's international reputation. At the same time, the New Democracy policy has accomplished Greece's integration into the EC, economic stability and development and the realization of reforms that have brought us into the vanguard of developed societies.

However, this creative task has not been completed. The New Democracy program for the next 4 years aims at fulfilling this task. With this program, the New Democracy aims at:

--safeguarding the liberal sociopolitical system and its values;
--modernizing the administration of this system, that is, the renewal of its structures, methods and persons.

The main targets of the program area:

NATIONAL SOVEREIGNTY

1. To maintain and safeguard our national sovereignty and national integrity.

The prerequisites for safeguarding and maintaining our national sovereignty and integrity consist of:

--the consolidation of democracy and functioning of its institutions at home.
--the exercising of an effective and multidimensional foreign policy which is strengthened by the fact that our country is an equal member of the European Community.
--the defense of the country based on the people's will and the strength of the armed forces for the defense of Greek borders.

The program of the New Democracy foreign and defense policy is based on the above principles.

FREEDOM AND TRANQUILLITY

2. To safeguard and further develop the present standard of spiritual and political freedom, social tranquillity and social progress.

Spiritual and political freedom is an autonomous benefit; it is the very foundation and essence of our sociopolitcal system. But if it is not safeguarded, social tranquillity cannot by secured or lasting. Social tranquillity constitutes the prerequisite for economic progress. Autocratic regimes that oppress spiritual and political freedom actually undermine social tranqillity and restrict the possibilities for economic development. The safeguarding of social tranquillity in an regime of individual and collective spiritual and political freedom is the basic and immutable goal of the New Democracy. Every program and every activity by the New Democracy aims at realizing this goal.

FREE ECONOMY

3. To safeguard the free economy, further devlop and consolidate the institutions that guarantee free economic activity to secure international competitiveness of Greek products which is the only way of attaining economic stability and progress.

The expansion of state intervention in sector of productivity has been exhausted. New Democracy will base the further development of economy on private initiative with licit profit as the fundamental incentive. The public enterprises must operate by the private economic criteria so as to improve their productivity and make the acquisition of shares attractive to those working in the enterprises. THIS IS TRUE SOCIALIZATION.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ADMINISTRATION

4. To modernize and reorganize the administration and economy by facing their structural and geographic weaknesses.

The public administration and management of our national economy have been planned and organized to meet the needs of an era and a level of development that we have surpassed long ago as a state. Today, it is necessary to adjust the administration and mechanisms of managing our economy to the needs of a new era; an era that demands very advanced knowledge, great speed of action, undertaking increased responsibilities and quick adjustability.

PROTECTION OF THE ENVIRONMENT

5. To protect the environment from destruction and create a new, higher standard in the quality of life.

The natural environment belongs equally to all of us. Its careless destruction through pollution or its exploitation by gangsters are equally detrimental to all of us. The New Democracy is determined to protect and safeguard this common property that constitutes a prerequisite for the very survival of both ourselves and our children; however, it will do it with concrete measures and not with statements and demonstrations; in accordance with scientific findings and not in accordance with slogans; and by maintaining and not obstructing the country's economic development. The New Democracy will secure this balance of protection and development with a special program it has prepared.

DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME

6. To carry out a more just distribution of income and safeguard everybody's participation in the more general efficiency of society and economy.

The more just participation of all citizens in the national income has been the goal of New Democracy for the past 7 years. This goal will be expanded progressively through a variety of measures that cover the entire spectrum of state activity. Economic, taxation, social and agricultural policy measures will converge on the target for a more just participation of everybody in the whole social and economic efficiency of the system. The New Democracy attaches particular importance to the correct geographical distribution of income, and this is why it has concentrated and will concentrate its strength on an integrated attempt for regional development.

EDUCATIONAL REFORMS

7. To improve the quality and safeguard the reforming of education so that all citizens may acquire the necessary education that will allow them equal participation in our social system and equal opportunities for promotion in it.

Education is not only a means of securing vocational and social integration into a developed society. Spiritual cultivation and knowledge has always been an end in itself. This dual mission of education has guided up to now the most serious reforms in the history of the modern Greek state which the New Democracy has realized in the field of education. The New Democracy will continue, with the same principles, its efforts to improve the quality of our educational system so that the nation may not lose any spiritual capability or talent because of weaknesses in this system. Special efforts will be exerted to restore the smooth functioning of the senior educational establishments.

The unrest in the sphere of senior education, which was caused by the dictatorship and was prolonged by inadmissible incitement on the part of PASOK and KKE, has downgraded studies to a dangerous extent. However, without high-level science and technology, there is the danger of national subjugation and dependency. Only if we secure the unimpeded movement of ideas and protect the freedom of tutors and students in the academic spheres will the senior educational establishments again become nurseries for free intellectuals and qualified scientists who will be qualified for a professional career and successfully compete with their colleagues from the technologically developed states. With a series of measures, the new democracy aims at the flourishing of science and research in Greece again and at safeguarding equal participation in this effort for everybody.

WORK FOR ALL

8. To safeguard the prerequisites and create the conditions that would enable every citizen to find work in accordance with his qualifications.

Work is not only a means for earning a living. It is the functioning of man's creative participation in social and economic life. It is one of the procedures of fulfilling individual and social destiny. The New Democracy has succeeded in securing a high degree of employment at a time when unemployment is a scourge in all the developed countries without exception. With a series of specific measures of economic and social policy, the New Democracy will preserve a high level of employment and improve the terms and conditions both during work and in the free time of the working people.

EQUALITY OF WOMEN

9. To create the prerequisites for the equal participation of women in every activity of our society.

The equality of citizens is not exhausted in the political and legal equality or the common starting point of distinction for all the citizens. There should also be equality between the sexes. Any discrimination against one of the two sexes constitutes an infringement of the entire system of freedom, equality and justice. In addition to what it has already realized in this field, New Democracy will secure the possibility for women to acquire an equal place in all sectors of social life while, at the same time, recognizing her particular place as a mother.

PROTECTION FOR THE WEAK PEOPLE

10. To offer protection for the weaker members of our society and, in particular, to the children and the aged. The special protection for children and the aged is not and should not be regarded as a philanthropic obligation of the state. Protection of the children constitutes an investment for the country's future and the protection of the aged is due in return for their contribution to the development and prosperity of our society. If the New Democracy's slogan that will be realized as of 1 August was "Nobody uninsured," the slogan for the forthcoming 4-year period is "A decent pension for everybody."

DEVELOPMENT OF THE PROVINCE

11. To create humane conditions of life for all those who live in the Greek provinces as well as in large population centers whether these are towns or quarters. Crowding in urban centers creates new problems, the pace and extent of which are greater than the possibilities for their resolution. Therefore, it is necessary to intensify the efforts to solve the problems that already exist as well as to chart a program for the prospective center to avert the creation of similar conditions. However, the best solution is to avert these problems by developing the Greek province that has always been the genuine expression of the Greek soul and by avoiding estrangement which is represented in urbanis. .

BULENT ULUSU, POLISH OFFICIAL ADDRESS CEREMONY

TA201231 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, Public Works Minister Tahsin Onalp, Energy and Natural Resources Minister Serbulent Bingol as well as officials accompanying them flew by helicopter from Izmir to Mugla today in order to participate in the cornerstone laying ceremony of the new Yenikoy thermal power station in the Milas district of Mugla province and the third additional power unit to be built at the Yatagan thermal power station.

Poland has provided a loan of $153 million for the thermal power stations which are scheduled to be completed in 1984, and will cost about 53 billion Turkish lira. The Yenikoy power station is expected to consume some 4 million tons of coal per year.

Speaking at the ceremony, Ulusu said that with the completion of the Yenikoy and Yatagan thermal power stations a rise of 25 percent was expected in the electric power production of the country. He concluded his statement by expressing his best wishes to the Turkish and Polish engineers and workers employed in the construction of the thermal power stations.

In a statement at the cornerstone laying ceremonies, Polish Under Secretary of State at the Ministry of Foreign Trade and Maritime Economy Ryszard Strzelecki recalled the long cooperation existing between Turkey and his country and added that the construction of the Yenikoy and Yatagan thermal power stations was a significant example of this cooperation. Strzelecki expressed his pleasure over his country's contribution to Turkey's development efforts.

Following the ceremonies, the prime minister and the delegation accompanying him flew back to Mugla by helicopter and attended a meeting in the office of the governor, in which he was briefed on the issues facing the province.

ARABS PRAISE GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE TOWARD ISRAEL

TA201852 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Arab mission chiefs in Ankara have assessed the reaction shown by Turkey in the face of the recent Israeli attacks directed against Palestine [as heard] and Lebanon as a positive attitude supporting Arab rights. The Arab mission chiefs today held a meeting in Ankara and discussed Israeli attacks against the civilian population in Lebanon. A statement issued after the meeting expressed the hope that the Turkish attitude will contribute to establishing an independent Palestinian state and to securing the right of the Palestinians to determine their own future.

BULENT ULUSU, TURKMEN SEND MESSAGES TO DENKTAS

TA201901 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu has sent a message to the President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, on the occasion of Peace and Freedom Day. In his message, Ulusu said that the peaceful solution of the Cyprus problem will be beneficial to the Turkish Cypriot community as well as Turkey. Ulusu noted that the Turkish Cypriots favor the establishment of a bizonal, bicommunal, independent and nonaligned federal state based on the principle of the equality of the two communities. Ulusu added that Turkey is in favor of intercommunal talks reaching a solution directed toward this end.

Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen, in a message to Denktas, expressed the hope that the Cyprus problem would be concluded in a just manner in line with the wishes of the Turkish Cypriot community.

CANADA

QUEBEC'S LEVESQUE, MITTERRAND AGREE TO MEET

PM201406 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Jul 81 p 3

[Bertrand de la Grange dispatch: "President Will Meet With Quebec Prime Minister 21 July"]

[Text] Montreal--Mitterrand and Quebec Prime Minister Rene Levesque will meet on 21 July following the summit of the seven industrialized countries in Ottawa. Levesque, who expressed the hope of "resuming personal contact" with Mitterrand in an interview to LE MONDE, confirmed that agreement on holding a meeting had been reached during a reception given by the French counsul general in Quebec to mark 14 July.

In keeping with a well-established tradition, the Elysee did not want to make a bilateral visit to Canada immediately after a multilateral meeting. Furthermore, the special relations which France has with Quebec complicated the organization of a visit to Canada since Mitterrand would have had to divide his time between Ottawa and the French-speaking province in order to accommodate both sides. It seems that Paris and Quebec have found a satisfactory solution by agreeing to hold a meeting "on neutral territory" in the French Embassy in Ottawa so as not to offend the federal authorities.

The French Government already has been called upon to specify its policy on Quebec during the June visit to Paris of Trudeau and Claude Morin, Quebec minister for intergovernmental affairs. Mauroy said that he hopes to go beyond the principle of "noninterference and non-indifference" defined in Giscard d'Estaing's day.

SWITZERLAND

9 JUNE GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR BOMBING

NC201737 Paris AFP in English 1728 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Zurich, Switzerland, 20 Jul (AFP)--Five people were slightly injured today by a bomb that went off in a parking area near a Zurich-Kloten airport entry hall, police here reported.

The bomb, the second planted on Swiss territory, caused about 40,000 dollars (270,000 francs) damage. Police do not yet know the explosive used.

Responsibility for the blast was claimed less than three hours later by the 9 June organization, which also had said it was responsible for the bombing yesterday of the Swiss parliament building.

Before yesterday, police had not heard of the group. On June 9, a man of Armenian origin was arrested in Geneva after a Turkish Consulate employee was shot dead.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 140 22 July 1981

CONTENTS

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

Reports on Industrialized Nations' Ottawa Summit A 1
Spadolini Consultations A 1
FRG Spokesman's Comment A 1

AUSTRIA

Leaders, Mexico's Castaneda Discuss Cancun Summit [DIE PRESSE 20 Jul] E 1
Number of Refugees Increases; Lanc Comments [WIENER ZEITUNG 18 Jul] E 1
Hungary Regrets 'Unintended' Airspace Violation [WIENER ZEITUNG 18 Jul] E 1

BENELUX

BELGIUM

Albanian Group Claims Responsibility for Attack F 1

NETHERLANDS

Government Negotiations '90 Percent Complete' F 1
[DE VOLKSKRANT 17 Jul]

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Banks Renew Negotiations To Finance USSR Pipeline J 1
Officials, Paper Refute U.S. Concern Over Gas Deal J 1
Ruhrgas Head Interview [SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG 21 Jul] J 1
Economics Minister Interview J 1
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Editorial [21 Jul] J 3
Austria's Kreisky Visits Berlin, Discusses Detente [WIENER ZEITUNG 21 Jul] J 4
Newspaper Suggests NATO Personnel Changes [FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 21 Jul] J 5

FRANCE

Mitterrand Pleased With Ottawa Unemployment Stance K 1
LE MONDE Reports on Gas Deal, Trade With USSR [16 Jul] K 1
Elysee Spokesman Comments on Lebanon Fighting [LE MONDE 19-20 Jul] K 2
LE MONDE Examines Mitterrand's East-West Policy [4 Jul] K 2
LE MONDE on U.S. Nuclear Proliferation Views [18 Jul] K 6

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Prosecutor Asks for Life Sentence for Agca L 1
Vatican Confirms Court Jurisdiction L 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Jorgensen: Scandinavians To 'Test' Brezhnev Plan P 1
[BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 16 Jul]

NORWAY

Brundtland Replies to CPSU Letter on Arms Talks [AFTENPOSTEN 8 Jul] P 1
Ministry Confirms Trade Mission Visit to Libya [AFTENPOSTEN 14 Jul] P 1

SWEDEN

Gustafssen Comments on Defense Bill, Budget [SVENSKA DAGBLADET 13 Jul] P 2
Firms To Be Indemnified for Polish Debt Default P 4

CYPRUS

Gobbi Leaves for New York; Talks Postponed [Ankara] R 1
Gobbi-Kiprianou Meeting R 1
Norch Spokesman Denies Reopening U.S. Bases [Bayrak Radio] R 1
Rolandhis on Missing Persons Committee Issues R 1
More on Greek Cypriot 'Invasion Anniversary' Rally R 2
Greek Delegation Departs R 2
EDEK Statement R 2
Denktas Response [Bayrak Radio] R 3
North Marks Anniversary of Turks' 'Peace Operation' [Bayrak Radio] R 3
DPP Denounces Israeli Raids Against Palestinians [Bayrak Radio] R 3

GREECE

NEWS Reports Agreement on Early October Election [21 Jul] S 1
Paper Comments on Ambassador Stern's Statement [I KATHIMERINI 21 Jul] S 1
Mitsotakis Leaves for Official Visit to Romania S 2
Expanded Armed Forces TV Network Inaugurated S 2
Part Three of PASOK Government Policy Declaration [TO VIMA 19 Jul] S 3

TURKEY

General Evren Observes Naval Exercises Near Erdek T 1
Arab Diplomats Thank Turkmen for Lebanon Stand T 1
Village Affairs Minister Returns From Iraq T 1
Denktas Arrives for Official Talks on Cyprus T 1

REPORTS ON INDUSTRIALIZED NATIONS' OTTAWA SUMMIT

Spadolini Consultations

AU211646 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Ottawa, 21 Jul (ANSA)--Italian Premier Giovanni Spadolini and American President Ronald Reagan consulted on relations between their two countries and East-West relations in a talk held on the sidelines of the industrialized nations economic summit here. Later in the day Monday, Spadolini met with the new French president, Francois Mitterrand in another bilateral encounter among the seven leaders participating in the talks at the Chateau Montebello, eighty kilometers from Ottawa.

Reagan and the Italian premier also reviewed the situation in Poland, the current state of the Middle East crisis and the problems connected to stability in the Mediterranean region. With reference to the North-South dialogue, Spadolini reconfirmed Italy's intention to work toward a revival of negotiations with developing countries and promote efforts to alleviate the problems of hunger, malnutrition and underdevelopment.

An Italian communique released at the end of the one-hour talk the premier had with Mitterrand disclosed that the leaders of the two neighboring states discussed their friendly relations as allies in the context of the East-West balance of power. The Italian note affirmed that the views of the two nations were very much alike on these matters. Spadolini and Mitterrand devoted special attention to Mediterranean problems and to events in the Middle East following the escalation of hostilities since the July 10 Israeli air assaults on Palestinian positions in densely populated areas of Beirut. The communique reported that the two men turned the final portion of their consultations over to the prospects for cooperation between the industrialized nations and the Third World against the background of the European initiatives outlined in the economic summit talks. The French president and the Italian premier, it was noted here, have known each other since 1958 when Mitterrand conducted a study trip to Florence.

FRG Spokesman's Comment

LD212115 Hamburg DPA in German 2006 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Ottawa, 21 Jul (DPA)--At the world economic summit in Montebello and Ottawa, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt spoke firmly against an "obligation to consult" in East-West trade. The disputed question of East-West trade relations occupied the seven heads of state and government right up to the final session which began this afternoon in the Ottawa parliament. Bonn Government Spokesman Kurt Becker stressed that there had been "no complete consensus" but also "no conflict."

According to Becker, the Americans expressed the desire to bring about in connection with East-West trade an agreement between the seven which would have formulated the concept of the export of strategic goods from the West and the import of raw materials from the East in such a way that in Schmidt's opinion "a considerable obligation to consult" would have arisen. At the same time, in the German view, the political importance which the Federal Republic attached to East-West economic relations would have been affected, he said. He said that at the summit Schmidt strove for a formula which would not change the continuation of trade with the Soviet Union and the GDR "in its substance as it exists to date." Becker stressed that the chancellor had not heard a word of criticism "from anyone" about his firm manner. It was intended to treat the topic, dealt with only briefly at the morning session in Montebello because time was short, in greater depth in the afternoon, together with the final formulation of the communique.

The West European-Soviet natural gas deal, which President Reagan and Schmidt already discussed privately, was brought up in this connection for the first time in the circle of seven. Becker again made it clear that the Federal Republic did not intend to drop the deal because it saw no political risk in it. But he also rejected press reports that there had been a "hardening in the mood."

LEADERS, MEXICO'S CASTANEDA DISCUSS CANCUN SUMMIT

AU201008 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 20 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] Vienna (APA)--Mexican Foreign Minister Castaneda had a long talk with Chancellor Kreisky on Saturday evening, which centered on the planned North-South summit conference to be held on 22-23 October in the Mexican city of Cancun. Castaneda, who has come to Vienna within the framework of a trip to Europe, also met with Foreign Minister Pahr.

NUMBER OF REFUGEES INCREASES; LANC COMMENTS

AU201425 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 18 Jul 81 p 2

[Summary] In the first half of this year, 7,403 refugees requested political asylum in Austria compared to 2,534 in the first half of 1980. As of 15 July 1981, the number of refugees requesting political asylum in Austria was 10,602. This total includes 7,302 Poles, 1,414 Czechoslovaks, 624 Hungarians, 622 Romanians, 52 Bulgarians, 36 Yugoslavs, 8 Albanians and 7 Russians, as well as 115 refugees from Vietnam and Kampuchea, 126 refugees from Latin America and 296 persons from other countries. About four-fifths of the Polish refugees would like to proceed from Austria to a third country.

At a Vienna news conference on 17 July, Interior Minister Lanc said that now that the United States has increased its imiigration quota for Poles by 2,400 persons, Austria is hoping for similarly favorable decisions by Canada and Australia by the fall. According to Lanc, Sweden and Norway, meanwhile, have also declared their readiness to help Austria cope with the refugee problem. Since the army has made available the Goetzendorf barracks for refugees from Poland, the situation will be somewhat improved and additional housing space and food will be provided for 2,500 refugees. In view of the fact that another 200 refugees are arriving daily from Poland, Lanc does not, however, expect that any large number of refugees can be transferred from their temporary accommodations in small hotels and inns to the Goetzendorf barracks.

Lanc pointed out that only about one-quarter of the refugees from Poland are political refugees while the others are "economic refugees." Persons recognized as political refugees are granted essentially the same rights as Austrians while the others remain foreign citizens or become stateless if they lose their original citizenship. Lanc added, however, that Austria would not send anyone back to his home country if he has to face punishment there.

HUNGARY REGRETS UNINTENDED AIRSPACE VIOLATION

AU201017 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 18 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] Through its ambassador in Vienna, the Hungarian Government has expressed its regret about what it calls the unintended violation of Austrian airspace caused by the crash of a Hungarian MIG 21 military aircraft in the Bergenland Seewinkel region on 7 July. According to a Foreign Ministry spokesman, Ambassador Friedrich Bauer, political director of the Foreign Ministry, accepted with satisfaction this statement submitted to him by Hungarian Ambassador Jeno Rande and declared that the Austrian side now regards the matter closed.

BELGIUM

ALBANIAN GROUP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR ATTACK

LD151508 Brussels in French to Africa 1500 GMT 15 Jul 81

[Summary] An Albanian Croat organization calling itself HDF [expansion not known] has claimed responsibility for the attack committed yesterday on two members of the Yugoslav Embassy in Brussels. In a telephone call to the West German news agency DPA in Stuttgart, a man said that the organization seeks independence for Croatia and the return of Albanian territory currently under Yugoslav control. He also said the group is preparing further actions against other Yugoslav diplomatic missions and against Yugoslav immigrant workers.

NETHERLANDS

GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATIONS '90 PERCENT COMPLETE'

PM210803 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 17 Jul 81 p 1

["Own correspondent" report: "Christian Democratic Appeal and Labor Party Both Want Education"]

[Excerpt] The Hague--The manning of the Education and Defense Ministries are the most significant remaining problems in the government formation negotiations. Both the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA) and the Labor Party (PVDA) have demanded the Education Ministry. On the other hand, the Democrats '66 (D'66) and the PVDA both refuse to take on defense.

Despite these differences, the three negotiators from CDA,PVDA and D'66 have reached significant agreement on the contents of a government accord. On Thursday [16 July], they began to discuss the allocation of ministerial posts.

The plan drawn up at the end of June by negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning is still being used--the CDA and PVDA would each have six ministers and D'66, three. This distribution of posts no longer is contested by any of the parties.

On Thursday, the three negotiators made their detailed wishes known. At the end of the afternoon session, PVDA negotiator Den Uyl said that, as well as deputy prime minister, he also wanted to be minister of finance, which, he said, is a central position from which the whole of cabinet policy can be influenced. The CDA has no objections to this.

In the previous plan by negotiation leaders Lubbers and De Koning, the PVDA was given the Foreign Ministry and the D'66, the Defense Ministry. D'66 negotiator Terlouw objects to this--he demands the Foreign Ministry for his own party.

That would mean that the PVDA would have to accept defense in the so-called "foreign affairs triangle" (defense, foreign affairs and development aid) while the CDA would retain development aid. This possible swap with D'66 would cause the PVDA great difficulties.

The distribution of the ministerial posts in the social-financial-economic triangle seems to be firm--the PVDA in the Finance Ministry, D'66 in economic affairs (Terlouw has been mentioned as a candidate) and the CDA in social affairs.

The CDA also would man the Justice Ministry and present PVDA negotiation leader Van Thijn is a possible choice for the Internal Affairs Ministry.

The three negotiators will meet on Friday [17 July] to further discuss the allocation of ministerial posts. There also will be discussion of a few policy points. "But these are no longer the center of gravity of the negotiations; they are more than 90 percent complete," spokesmen for the negotiation leaders said. The CDA, PVDA and D'66 intend to look at these results at the beginning of next week.

BANKS RENEW NEGOTIATIONS TO FINANCE USSR PIPELINE

LD211820 Hamburg DPA in German 1527 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Duesseldorf, 21 Jul (DPA)--Soviet representatives met with representatives of German banks in Duesseldorf today for renewed negotiations on a credit line of DM10 billion for the financing of the planned pipeline for natural gas between the USSR and German industry. The Deutsche Bank, which heads the consortium of 14 financial institutions, confirmed that talks were in progress with the Soviets, but refused any comment on the status of the negotiations.

OFFICIALS, PAPER REFUTE U.S. CONCERN OVER GAS DEAL

Ruhrgas Head interview

DW220629 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG In German 21 Jul 81 p 7

[Gerhard Hennemann report on an interview with Klaus Liesen, chairman of the board of the Ruhrgas Corporation]

[Excerpt] Essen, 20 Jul--Klaus Liesen, chairman of the board of the Ruhrgas Corporation, believes that the U.S. President's apprehension about too strong a German dependence on gas supplies from the Soviet Union, which Ronald Reagan expressed to Chancellor Helmut Schmidt once again over the weekend, is based on an erroneous assessment of the dependency on the USSR. The planned third gas delivery contract which, according to Liesen, is by no means yet ready to be signed does not constitute a serious threat to German energy supplies even in the event of a politically motivated halt to gas deliveries.

As far as the head of the Ruhrgas Corporation--the number one gas importing company in the world--is concerned, the planned new gas pipeline deal with the Soviet Union is, contrary to the view of the U.S. Government, unsuited for political blackmail. On the occasion of the world economic summit in Ottawa, President Reagan once again expressly underscored this concern and suggested to Chancellor Schmidt in the presence of Ministers Genscher and Lambsdorff that the agreement with the Soviet Union be reconsidered--an agreement which has not yet been finalized. Reportedly, the Reagan administration is determined to insist, if necessary, that the steel pipes necessary for the delivery of the natural gas be put on the Cocom list of strategic materials which may not be delivered to East bloc countries.

The planned third gas delivery contract with the Soviet Union, which is intended to ensure annual purchases of about 12 billion cubic meters of natural gas through a new pipeline to West Europe after 1981, would increase the Soviet share in the consumption of primary energy in the Federal Republic from the present 3 percent to roughly 5.5 percent. As far as Ruhrgas head Liesen is concerned, this constitutes a virtually negligible quantity in the German energy balance in case of an emergency. Still, the import deal with the USSR also has been analyzed from the viewpoint of a total delivery cutoff, but this analysis produced completely undramatic results, Liesen told newsmen. Even now, more than 50 percent of the German gas requirements are covered by domestic and West European sources, completely ensuring the supply to private households and small industrial consumers.

Economics Minister Interview

DW211531 Cologne Deutschlandfunk Network in German to East and West Germany 0410 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Excerpts from reporter Heribert Schwan telephone interview with FRG Economics Minister Otto Graf Lambsdorff; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] News agencies and the press are reporting discord between Reagan and Schmidt regarding the natural gas deal with Moscow. What is the situation? Is trouble in the offing?

[Answer] No, there is no trouble. Nothing has changed regarding existing positions.

[Question] America fears that the Federal Republic could become too dependent on Soviet natural gas supplies. Is this concern justified? Since when are the Americans so concerned about our energy sources?

[Answer] The concern is not justified. The cabinet decided a long time ago--it was probably more than 1 year ago--that a Russian natural gas supply of 30 percent of German consumption would not constitute a threatening dependence for us. The deal will be divided into two construction phases. In the first phase, the share of Russian gas will amount to 20 percent on our market. The opinion of the Federal Government remains that in no way does this risk a dependence of some sort. We have told the United States about this.

The United States considered this and invited us to take part in discussions. We gladly accepted this [words indistinct] whether cooperation will be possible in other fields regarding energy supplies to the Federal Republic--we discussed coal and cooperation in the nuclear energy field--I must say that we are willing to take part in all discussions. The Federal Republic is a country with practically no energy resources of its own. It must, therefore, be interested in obtaining as much energy as possible from as many sources as possible. We are always open for such talks.

[Question] In other words, the alternative offered by the United States, namely, American coal or liquefied gas, is no alternative for you at all?

[Answer] That is an additional offer which we will be happy to discuss. Liquefied gas, by the way, was not mentioned in the talks I held. No liquefying plants exist. The construction of such plants would take years.

[Question] All in all, does U.S. criticism of trade with the East--aside from the planned natural gas and pipeline deal--indicate a new political line?

[Answer] No, no criticism of trade with the East has been voiced so far. The issue will be on the agenda in a few hours, that is, on the agenda of today's conference. We know that the Americans want to be more reserved than before regarding the supply of [words indistinct] or militarily significant material to the Soviet Union. The Federal Government said in this respect after the invasion of Afghanistan by the Soviet Union that it does not want to obstruct a more strict handling of such supplies and that, quite the contrary, it wants to cooperate. I must say to my regret that work on these regulations has not made any progress so far. I say regrettably because it is important for the German economy to know clearly what can and cannot be supplied in this field. Procedures on so-called exceptional permits, which ran relatively smoothly in past years, now take time.

This situation is unpleasant for all involved. My discussion partners from the United States confirmed explictly today that they understand this criticism, that they share this opinion and that they will contribute to an acceleration of procedures.

[Question] We cannot avoid touching on the sore spot of the U.S. high interest rates policy. The U.S. President seems to be as inflexible here as the German chancellor when the natural gas deal is involved.

[Answer] It isn't a matter of the German chancellor or the U.S. President. All participants in the world economic summit pointed out that the high rates are a depressing burden for their economies. That is understandable in connection with high unemployment and low or even nonexistent growth rates.

The Americans explained their policy. They said that the high rates necessary to fight inflation in their country are a burden for them as well and that they hope to have lower rates in the foreseeable future. We said prior to Ottawa that we do not expect a change in U.S. economic policy to come about through the Ottawa talks. We will use the opportunity to point out to them our concern regarding this economic policy and its consequences [words indistinct]. The high rates naturally will bring influence to bear on the decisions we will have to make this week and next, namely, [words indistinct] cut down the German budget.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Editorial

DW220605 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 21 Jul 81 p 3

[Juergen Klotz editorial: "Bad Russians and Dear Soviets"]

[Text] The following poor joke is being told by the managers of German natural gas firms: We buy crude oil from the dear Soviets, but we get a considerable part of our natural gas supply from the bad Russians.

The bosses react with such sarcasm to the massive reservations expressed by U.S. President Ronald Reagan regarding the planned deal to exchange natural gas for pipes. These reservations also are being listened to in this country and the project is doubtlessly well suited to being dragged onto the political stage. The exposure to blackmail that allegedly will result and the economic dependence on Moscow provide very welcome material for slogans for Cold War advocates on both sides of the Atlantic.

That the planned deal is enormous is disputed by no one. An annual supply of 40 billion cubic meters of Soviet natural gas from Siberia's Yamal Peninsula to West Europe is involved. Of this amount, some 12 billion cubic meters are supposed to remain in the Federal Republic, with the rest slated for Australia, Italy, France, Belgium and Holland. To begin exporting the gas, Moscow wants to buy pipe for the 5,000 km pipeline system, pumping stations and other equipment on credit. The loan will be repaid with the foreign currency received from the sale of the natural gas.

This somewhat complicated construction deal is not so unusual in East-West trade. The first natural gas deal in exchange for pipe was made with the Soviets as early as in the 1960's. Three natural gas supply contracts still exist. They will expire by the end of this century.

Within the framework of existing agreements, Moscow's natural gas exports cover about 17 percent of FRG gas consumption. Should the Yamal project be concluded, the share would increase to 30 percent. This admittedly high percentage irritages the U.S. President as well as some people in the CDU/CSU opposition.

One could say that natural gas is a "model energy source" because it is convenient for consumers and kind to the environment. However, its significance in connection with percentages of supply is limited and all experts agree that it will remain limited over the long run. It covers only 16 percent of the FRG's total energy consumption. Even if all the ambitious expansionist plans of the managers were to be fulfilled, this share would not increase by more than 3-4 percent by the beginning of the next century. This means that if this hotly debated project is concluded, Soviet gas supplies will not exceed 6 percent of our prime energy consumption. Against this background, it is hard to believe that the American barrage represents more than economic envy--provided that the above facts are known to the U.S. President.

But not even this seems to be certain. The alternative suggestions made by Reagan at the beginning of the Ottawa world economic summit meeting--more imports from Holland and Norway instead of the new deal with the Russians--completely ignore economic and political realities: economically because the Netherlands energy sources will be exhausted by the end of this century; politically because for understandable reasons Norway has set itself a limit of the equivalent of 90 million tons of hard coal regarding natural gas and oil production. Even though this limit has not yet been reached, the social changes created by the oil and gas boom already created grave domestic political problems for the Scandinavians. The European energy importers would, therefore, be well advised not to press Norway for an increase in quantity limits.

What makes the quarrel about the Yamal project so unpleasant is its opponents' undisguised play with the fear that Moscow could some day close the tap. Even if one considered this to be a theoretical possibility, the Federal Republic would be much less affected by it than by the absence of oil supplies from Libya. We don't want to compare the loyalty of Colonel Qadhdhafi to his supply contracts with the loyalty of the Supreme Soviet, but such a comparison would expose the content of arguments regarding dependence and exposure to blackmail.

So far, West European gas buyers and suppliers have had no reason to complain about the Soviets as a discussion partner. Since th partner also has a vital interest in exploring the enormous energy reserves east of the Urals while simultaneously receiving "hard" currency for it, any political resistance to the project seems unwise. The advocates of a hard course toward Moscow also fear that the oil resources in the Persian Gulf could be endangered; this fear would in no way become more unlikely if the current gas negotiations were discontinued.

AUSTRIA'S KREISKY VISITS BERLIN, DISCUSSES DETENTE

AU211034 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 21 Jul 81 p 2

[Summary] Berlin--Chancellor Bruno Kreisky arrived yesterday in West Berlin for a 2-day visit. He was welcomed at Tegel Airport by Mayor Richard von Weizsaecker. In the afternoon, Kreisky addressed a 20 July 1944 commemoration meeting of the Berlin Senat and city assembly. Last night, he attended a reception given in his honor by Mayor Weizsaecker. Today, the chancellor will meet with leading representatives of the West Berlin Social Democratic Party.

In his speech at the commemoration meeting, Kreisky declared that the events of 20 July 1944--the German resistance fighters' attempt on Hitler's life--showed that the struggle to regain lost freedom is much more dangerous and sacrificial than the determined struggle to defend freedom. "Kreisky used that as an argument to support his view 'that only the balance of armament, the balance of terror can guarantee calm in Europe.'" Regarding the discussion about complementary armament, Kreisky said that, despite all objections, it must be said that the policy of detente is only possible owing to this balance. Detente in Europe is always endangered when this balance is 'irritated, let alone, upset,' he said.

"The Austrian chancellor, therefore, emphatically advocated negotiations about supplementary armament, negotiations in which it cannot be ignored, however, 'what has been caused by anticipatory armament.' It is necessary to take seriously the 'peace-mindedness' that is now evident in Europe, he said, but nevertheless one must try to make people understand that this peace-mindedness alone cannot guarantee peace."

NEWSPAPER SUGGESTS NATO PERSONNEL CHANGES

DW220625 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 21 Jul 81 p 3

[Dispatch signed HA: "Credibility"]

[Text] Brussels--It is possible that the oft-stated credibility of NATO deterrence against an attack by the East is unshaken. What has been shaken in any case is the credibility of the alliance's political and military leadership. Following the 11 May meeting of the NATO military committee, a so-called press release "quoted" alleged remarks by Soviet party boss Leonid Brezhnev which dealt unequivocally with Moscow's blackmail options against West Europe after 1983, but which were based solely on the free invention of a local American newspaper the Boston GLOBE. In any event, this is where the tracks of the report end as determined by an investigation triggered by SPD Bundestag Deputy Georg Schlaga through an inquiry with the Federal Government.

It is necessary to make personnel changes as a result of this information debacle if NATO press releases are to draw serious attention in the future. Required in the first place is the resignation of the chairman of the NATO military committee, Canadian Admiral Robert H. Falls, even if he did not personally cause this mishap. Obviously, it is necessary to look into the question as to what extent other officials and military people share in the responsibility for this careless dissemination of most weighty contentions of political slander. NATO Secretary General Joseph Luns shares no responsibility for this mishap although his final replacement also would improve NATO's credibility with the Western public.

The Western alliance certainly doesn't become superfluous just because some military and civilian officials carelessly adopt propagandistic contentions from sinister sources for public dissemination. But it is very important for Brussels' full credibility with our public to be restored.

MITTERRAND PLEASED WITH OTTAWA UNEMPLOYMENT STANCE

LD220850 Paris Domestic Service in French 0600 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Excerpt] The Ottawa summit is over. The seven heads of state and government of the main industrial democracies have just dispersed. Francois Mitterrand is returning to Paris. A success or a failure? In fact, Ottawa is like a Spanish inn where everyone found whatever he took with him. Reagan gave nothing away on the interest rates in spite of the pressure from France, Germany and Italy. The Americans are even asking the European governments to limit their budget deficits in order to put an effective brake on inflation. That is Washington being firm. On the other hand, Ronald Reagan did dilute his wine a little since he agreed that the final communique should put the fight against unemployment on the same level as the fight against inflation. This was the first reason for Francois Mitterrand to be pleased:

[Begin Mitterrand recording] I had the satisfaction of seeing that unemployment, the struggle against unemployment, was put down as a priority by the summit of the industrialized countries, not just by France. We discussed it and I stressed my reasons, in particular that all the best theories in the world didn't help and when a country has reached the threshold of intolerance on the unemployment of its workers, and especially the unemployment of its young people, you are faced with a social situation which disregards all the forecasts and all the nice theoretical economic policies, and this need has to be responded to, and urgently. I didn't go to the opposite extreme and claim that we would go into inflation. [end recording]

LE MONDE REPORTS ON GAS DEAL, TRADE WITH USSR

PM210920 Paris LE MONDE in French 16 Jul 81 p 32

[Our correspondent Daniel Vernet dispatch: "Will the Unblocking of Negotiations on Siberian Gas Be Sufficient To Revive Cooperation?"]

[Text] Moscow--The 13 and 14 July, Moscow talks between Freyche, director of the Overseas Economic Relations Directorate at the Economy and Finance Ministry, and Patolichev and Komarov, respectively minister and first deputy minister of foreign trade, and Skachkov, chairman of the State Committee for Foreign Economic Relations, are the first official economic contacts between France and the USSR since the elections. It was a question of examining and concretizing the implementation of the long term cooperation program signed during Giscard d'Estaing's visit to the USSR in April 1979.

However, the talks dealt mainly with deliveries of Soviet gas to West Europe and the construction of a new gas pipeline from the Yamal Peninsula in the north of Siberia. It seems that the situation could be unblocked as far as the French are concerned if the two partners could reach a rapid agreement on the new scheme proposed by Paris. France is ready to purchase 8 billion cubic meters a year as from 1984-86, which would be in addition to the 4 billion which the USSR now supplies. This proportion represents one-fifth of the total contract as against the one-fourth envisaged at the outset. French enterprises would supply equipment for the gas pipeline, mainly compression stations and control systems, worth a total of Fr10 billion.

The price of the gas, in the more or less long term, will be aligned with world oil prices. The credit terms will be those envisaged by the financial protocol signed between France and the USSR in February 1980, which expires on 30 September, that is, an interest rate of just under 8 percent. To profit from this rate, which obviously bears no relation to the present conditions of the financial market in the West, the contract must be signed before the end of September. However, the Soviets must pay an advance of 15 percent although they requested credit for all the equipment orders.

If the gas deal is concluded, it will guarantee French-Soviet exchanges for several years, but it will increase the deficit at France's expense. Yet, since last year, exchanges between the two countries have been severely out of balance. In 1980, French imports from the USSR increased to 15 billion as against 10 billion in exports. This year, the deficit should still be in the order of 5 billion.

Changes in the structure of French sales are no less worrying. Agricultural products make up the principle item, with 45 percent of the total in the first quarter of this year as against only 32 percent during the corresponding period for 1980. The proportion of producer goods shows an appreciable drop: 13.5 percent as against 26 percent.

After a year which finished well (with a global package of contracts worth Fr5 billion), 1981 began badly. With contracts worth Fr600 million signed in the first quarter, France is scarcely doing better than Britain which has been paying for its poor political relations with Moscow for several years now.

Internal Soviet considerations (finalization of the 11th plan at sector level and priority for technology and local equipment) do not explain everything since the FRG, Italy, Japan and Finland have signed contracts worth several billions during the same period. And what is more, the Fr1 billion-plus deals envisaged in the subsidiary protocols of the long term French-Soviet program have fallen into the laps of West German firms.

Admittedly, political reasons may be at the basis of this poor performance. Preelection uncertainties and then the change of administration may have prompted the Soviets to turn to other partners. But we cannot rule out the possibility that Moscow wants to penalize Paris for its hesitation in the gas pipeline affair and it is not certain that the probable unlocking of this project will be sufficient to revive all the other contracts.

ELYSEE SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON LEBANON FIGHTING

PM211111 Paris LE MONDE in French 19-20 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] On Saturday morning, a formation of Israeli aircraft overflew Beirut without, however, dropping any bombs. This Saturday, Israeli Deputy Defense Minister Mordekhay Tzipori, however, threatened to step up Israel's "strikes" against the Palestinians in Lebanon if the Fedayeen shelling of areas in northern Israel did not stop.

At the Elysee, Pierre Beregovoy, secretarygeneral of the presidency of the republic, made the following statement late Saturday morning:

"The president is closely following the development of the situation in the Middle East. Innocent populations on both sides, to whom France is anxious to express its sympathy, are being severely affected. This can only postpone the hour of the necessary reconciliation among the peoples of the region. It is not by force that an equitable settlement will be achieved guaranteeing both Israel's security within secure and recognized borders, Lebanon's right to live in peace and the Palestinian people's right to have a homeland. Dialogue and negotiation between all the parties concerned are the only means of achieving a lasting solution. France, for its part, is prepared to encourage any effort to achieve this, but it wishes to warn anybody who might give way to the temptation of a further escalation in the violence."

LE MONDE EXAMINES MITTERRAND'S EAST-WEST POLICY

PM210931 Paris LE MONDE in French 4 Jul 81 pp 1, 5

[Michel Tatu article: "Mitterrand and East-West Relations"]

[Text] Francois Mitterrand could well become a priority partner for the White House as the only representative of the European nations to have proved capable of reconciling God and the devil.

This opinion expressed by LE MATIN (26 June) has not been confirmed by the facts at a time when that same White House doesn't hesitate to assert that the presence of Communist ministers in the government will "affect" the two countries' relations. Things could change in this respect, but can it be supposed, as our colleague asserts, that the head of state now holds an "exclusive trump card" in the East-West confrontation since the Mauroy government "symbolizes the diplomatic expression of detente"?

True, the trump is indeed "exclusive" in the sense that France is alone in the world, alongside Finland and Iceland, in practicing this form of government and also in the sense that the coexistence of socialists and communists in the government can pass for a final reflection of what remains of East-West detente in international relations. In this respect, Mitterrand's gesture is clearly going against the stream. Just as the cooperation of the conquerors of Germany brought the communists to power in 1944-45, the Cold War polemics, Reagan's militant toughness and the alarmist approach of the Soviets (who do not hesitate to evoke the threat of a third world war) put us in the latter situation rather than in the former.

However, the analogy stops there. Unlike the situation in the late 1940's, the polemic is essentially between the United States and the USSR, each side's allies being more or less spared the other camp's attacks. Global tension results less from a real offensive unleashed against all bourgeois governments by a monolithic communist movement, as was the case 34 years ago, than from the increasing might of the USSR alone and the fears arising from classical expansionist conduct, illustrated in particular in Afghanistan.

In the West, on the other hand, the tone is set, as before, by the United States, which is engaged in a vast rearmament program. But in the economic sphere and even the military sphere, Europeans are far less dependent on their protector than they once were.

So this new situation gives French diplomacy more room to maneuver. All the same, since Mitterrand, as relayed by Cheysson, officially claims a position not between East and West but "in the West," marked by complete solidarity between the allies, it must be a question of a more or less difficult initiation into today's problems. And these problems are the same for the whole of the alliance.

1. Poland is perhaps the most urgent of these problems, but it is also the simplest. The PCF-PS agreement is unhelpfully ambiguous on this point, confining itself to expressing the "wish" that the Poles will themselves bring the renewal process to fruition. The Soviets have themselves been expressing the wish for some months that the Poles will take charge of their own affairs, even though the aim of the process is obviously not the same for them. A formula simply noting that the Poles "must settle their own" internal problems would have been preferable. But this nuance ultimately makes little difference. By signing the agreement on 23 June, Marchais made a moral commitment to condemn a Soviet military intervention in Poland, which explains his reticence. But if he rejected this, it is almost certain that the socialist government would, come what may, continue along the path of condemnations and sanctions. In other words, nobody wants to see government solidarity put to the test in this respect.

2. The Afghan problem is, despite appearances, the least controversial. Since no European government has taken upon itself to supply aid to the Afghan resistance--and in the case of France, this refusal goes back to Giscard d'Estaing (footnote--Mitterand, on the other hand, came out in favor of "recognition" of the Afghan resistance--LE MONDE, 31 July 1980)--the only thing the capitals of the old continent can do is to propose talks, without entertaining any illusions about their chance of success. That being so, the form of these talks is ultimately of little importance. It will be up to Moscow's good will to decide whether the conference on foreign interference is held, the plan of the Ten having the advantage of not inviting Karmal's government to take part in the debates at this stage and thus of delaying its recognition.

SS-20 and Talks

Apart from the diplomatic pressure which these various steps bring to bear on the Soviet leaders and the rejection of the fait accompli which they imply, it is no use expecting a political solution satisfying everyone for a very long time to come.

3. The question of the Euromissiles is much more complex. Mitterrand had been conspicuous, long before his election, for his interest in this question, which clashed with his predecessor's silence. But there are various ways of approaching it by virtue of the ambiguities of the decision taken on the subject by NATO in December 1979. Since that decision involved a "double approach," everyone in Europe can draw what he likes from it. Some people stress the military aspect--the deployment of 572 missiles in five NATO countries from the end of 1983--while others stress the diplomatic aspect--the opening of negotiations with the USSR on this type of weapons. In this second category, one can also distinguish between those who regard the talks as an inevitable byproduct of the military decision, without believing in their success, and those who, on the contrary, seize on them as an excuse for not deploying the missiles.

So, Mitterrand will have to decide on the degree of support he will give to the allied governments on this question since alignment with Bonn or with Brussels does not have the same significance as support for the U.S. position. He will have to assess the respective importance of the "deployment" and "negotiation" facets and, in the latter case, to specify what the talks should [illegible]ch on. The president and Cheysson hitherto have appeared to incline toward exchanging the future U.S. missiles forthe Soviet SS-20's, which accords largely with NATO's stance. But an ambiguity has emerged regarding the 23 June socialist-communist agreement sincethe formula signed by Marchais and Jospin corresponds largely to what Moscow wants: bearing "particularly" on present and future Euromissiles.

Naturally, people will interpret this definition as they please. It is well known that Brezhnev refuses in advance to exchange his SS-20's solely for the Pershings and cruise missiles; the only conceivable exchange, in his eyes, involves the U.S. forward-based systems in general, in other words, the network of NATO bases, aircraft carriers and even missile-carrying submarines already accounted for by SALT. As for France, it has good reasons for approaching such talks circumspectly: its deterrent force will sooner or later become the object of planned discussions--it should be recalled--between the two superpowers alone. Moreover, a Soviet-American agreement would bar the way to any change in the organization of the old continent's defense toward a more European orientation.

European Option?

Here, the remarks made by the head of state in these columns a year ago become very topical. Mitterrand demanded, in essence, a redefinition of the Atlantic alliance since, he said, "nobody knows what is its range, the reciprocal duties it entails and its degree of automatism." At the same time, he deplored the inadequacies of French strategic doctrine which "could in the long run draw the French into a kind of neutrality in world affairs, and particularly, with respect to our closest friends."

These remarks point to a problem of form, particularly today: After the reaction aroused in the United States by the admission of communists to the government, this could seem a bad moment to choose to launch a debate with Washington to redefine the alliance.

But after all, a first "shock" can be followed by another and it is a real problem: It is true that Article 5 of the North Atlantic Treaty is vague regarding the form of assistance which the allies will give each other in the event of war. (Footnote--This article assures us that an "armed attack against one or several of the parties will be regarded as an attack directed against all the parties" and that each one "will assist" the victim by "immediately adopting...whatever action it considers necessary, including the use of armed force." So, the assessment of the means to be used is left up to each government.)

People simply have become used to living with this equivocal situation for more than 32 years. Above all, the integrated NATO command system and the presence of 300,000 American servicemen in Europe, indeed, confirm the automatic nature of the response: The Americans will react, though it is not known to what extent. Paradoxically, it is France which, by withdrawing from the integrated command and maintaining its nuclear weapons within French territory, has remained closest to Article 3. Of all the allies, its commitment is the least automatic.

One way of emerging from the dilemna is to embark on the path of a more specifically European defense. Mitterrand was alluding to this in noting, in the interview already cited, that the Brussels treaty (concluded solely between Europeans' "Says rather more" about the allies' commitments. (Footnote--Article 4 of the Brussels treaty of 17 March 1948 [concluded at that time between France, Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and the United Kingdom and enlarged in 1954 to include the Federal Republic of Germany and Italy] states that in the event of aggression against one of the parties "the others will give it...aid and assistance by every means in their power, military and other.") He seems to have grasped the real French dilemna by pointing to the "contradiction" between a strategy "based solely on the defense of national territory" and a "strategy based on alliance." At the same time, it is inconceivable for him to return to the American bosom and the NATO apparatus. So what better means of escaping the dilemna than to revive the European option, in the same spirit of frankness that characterized the new French approach at the Luxembourg Council?

Naturally, it will be necessary to reflect beforehand on another old dilemna which has blocked plenty of other European enterprises over the last 20 years: nothing is possible without a unified political authority, but such an authority, which already poses the problem of supranationalism, cannot emerge in practice without a common political will having been defined beforehand. An again, which should be supported: those who want to create the institutions first or those who consider it preferable to impose restraints which will lead little by little, to the emergence of those institutions?

Less than a year ago, Mitterrand was in the former camp. Recalling how, along with all the members of the Mendes-France government, he abstained during the vote on the European defense community in 1954, he added: "With hindsight, I can see what a good thing it was to reject that Europe of marshals. Nothing can be built without political power." However, with still greater hindsight, one may wonder whether that political power doesn't have better chances of arising, in the 1980's, from a European defense organization which would raise the question of the shared use of at least part of the French or British nuclear arsenals. In that case, the sense of real joint responsibility on the part of the European governments would be combined with the sense of a destiny also perceived as common, but hitherto received passively.

People will say that the uncertain state of opinion in many European countries is not favorable to initiatives of that kind and that this is a bad time to "raise dust" around such sensitive issues. But it is always a bad time to administer shocks. And a new presidency offers an opportunity to at last "shift" a few very old problems.

LE MONDE ON U.S. NUCLEAR PROLIFERATION VIEWS

PM211235 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Reagan and Nuclear Proliferation"]

[Text] After being delayed for a long time by the uncertainties of an inexperienced team and then by the attack on Reagan, the new U.S. Government's foreign policy is finally beginning to take shape. After the rather more specific statements made in Washington recently on arms control, aid to foreign countries and arms sales, the White House chief has just presented a statement on his nuclear nonproliferation policy. It is no coincidence that this subject, which concerns energy policy and relations with the Third World, was discussed on the eve of the Ottawa summit.

At the start of his election campaign, Reagan said that the desire shown by some countries to acquire nuclear arms was, after all, "not our business." His accession to supreme power was to lead him to quickly abandon that stance. But although he has come a long way, the U.S. President has maintained a less maximalist approach than that of his predecessor in the White House, who led the United States into serious setbacks on this front.

Indeed, Carter tried to do too many things at once. He wanted to "block" the production of nuclear explosives everywhere but, at the same time, wanted to limit supplies of conventional weapons to the Third World countries in the name of a more "moral" foreign policy. Although he was not personally hostile to nuclear power for civilian purposes, he allowed that industry to stagnate in his country and tried to pursue all the ramifications of the "plutonium economy" in the world without, however, fulfilling the rash promises he made (creation of a fuel bank, acceptance of other countries' waste). The result is that the United States has not been followed by its friends and allies and has lost its credibility as a supplier among its many clients.

As he has indicated himself, Reagan intends precisely to "become a reliable partner once again." He will not even try to prevent or delay "sensitive" processes such as reprocessing or the development of breeder reactors at least "in countries which have advanced programs and provided it does not constitute a risk of proliferation." Like Carter, however, he will insist on strict guarantees in this latter sphere, which remains a "fundamental objective." He will remain faithful to the nonproliferation treaty and will even ask that the atomic agency in Vienna have increased resources and staff. Finally, his policy on the supply of conventional weapons should, in his view, reduce the risk by creating the conditions for better regional stability--as he is at present trying to show in Pakistan.

This policy, as it has been spelled out, shows a more coherent approach but it still remains very vague. Only its practical applications will make it possible to assess how stringent it is. An initial test at the Ottawa Summit could be what attitude Reagan takes toward the plan to rebuild Baghdad's reactor during the exchange of views he will very probably have with Mitterrand on this subject.

PROSECUTOR ASKS FOR LIFE SENTENCE FOR AGCA

AU211730 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 21 Jul (ANSA)--Rome Public Prosecutor Nicolo Amato today demanded a life sentence for Mehmet Ali Agca for the shooting of Pope John Paul II and of the two American tourists also wounded in Saint Peter's Square on May 13, Ann Odre of Buffalo, New York, and Rose Hall, now living in West Germany.

In his charge, delivered on the second day of the trial of the 23-year-old Turkish national, the prosecutor also asked for twelve years for the lesser counts. These charges are illegal possession of a firearm, the Browning nine caliber parabellum used for the attempted murder, and possession of a false passport.

Amato recommended that, because the twelve-year sentence would run concurrently with the life sentence, Italy's maximum penalty, Agca should be kept in isolation during the day for the first twelve months of confinement.

The self-styled Turkish terrorist, who confessed in court yesterday to the attempt on the life of the pope, did not appear in the courtroom today.

After an hour-and-a-half delay, today's session got underway when presiding magistrate Severino Santiapichi informed the court that the delay was due to the defendent's decision to stay in his cell to protest holding his trial in Italy and not in the Vatican State. The magistrate then read to the court a report filed by the Italian military secret service, SISMI, on some phases of the investigation into the movements of Agca in a number of European countries before he came to Italy.

In his charge, the public prosecutor glossed over the technical aspects of the case and launched into a rhetorical flight covering religious matters and psychological aspects of the probable motive for the act committed by the defendent he depicted as "a man armed with the most delirious fanaticism". The prosecutor recalled that Agca was only 21 years of age when he murdered the Turkish journalist, Abdi Ipecki, in 1979, and escaped from a military prison in Istanbul with the aid of "strange and numerous" accomplices. After his flight from the country, Agca was sentenced to death in absentia for the crime by a Turkish court.

To sustain what he identified as the violent and evil character of the defendent, the prosecutor cited the evidence turned up during the investigation of Agca's projects to assassinate one or more internationally famous figures, including Queen Elizabeth II of Great Britain, United States Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, the speaker of the European Parliament, Simone Veil, and Maltese Prime Minister Dom Mintoff.

Speaking of Agca's movements in Europe as traced by police investigators, Amato conceded that very little evidence was uncovered to link the defendent with those who assisted him earlier this year in the months leading up to the May 13 attack.

Moving on to another phase of the investigation the prosecutor said that, "it was not possible to ascertain anything concrete on the real existence of the international plot which was spoken of".

With reference to a possible motive for the crime, Amato told the court, "personally, I feel that we must recognize an oedipal antagonism, a symbolic parricide in the act". In this area, the prosecutor also mentioned "a narcissic drive which does not stop for anything, for anyone".

After his request for a life sentence and the twelve-year sentence, the hearing was recessed until tomorrow when Defense Attorney Pietro d'Ovidio will deliver his summation.

Vatican Confirms Court Jurisdiction

AU211645 Rome ANSA in English 1530 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Vatican City, 21 Jul (ANSA)--The Vatican today noted that on the basis of the Lateran Pact of February 11, 1929 the State of Italy has jurisdiction to "prosecute those responsible for crimes committed in the Vatican State" in reply to the protest made yesterday by Mehmet Ali Agca, the 23-year-old Turkish national on trial for shooting the pope.

In his statement to the court in Rome yesterday, the self-styled terrorist challenged the competence of Italy to hold a trial for the crime committed in Saint Peter's Square, within the Vatican State, on May 13.

The Holy See today said that the square is within the jurisdiction "and the powers of the Italian police and authorities" and added that a trial or proceedings against those responsible for crimes committed within the Vatican State are turned over to the State of Italy "by request or the delegation of the Holy See", as was the case for Agca.

The note also referred to press accounts according to which the death sentence was still on the books in the Vatican State and reported that capital punishment was removed from Vatican law on June 25, 1969.

DENMARK

JORGENSEN: SCANDINAVIANS TO 'TEST' BREZHNEV PLAN

PM210930 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 16 Jul 81 Part 1 p 5

[Text] Bonn--In Bonn yesterday, Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen received a direct request from former West German Federal Chancellor Willy Brandt to begin negotiations with the Soviet Union on a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe. Brandt was speaking at a meeting of the Socialist International at which he reported on his recent talks with Soviet leaders. Together with a number of other West European leaders, Ankers Jorgensen is taking part in the meeting in West Germany.

Brandt said that Soviet state and party chief Leonid Brezhnev had given signs of several "new nuances" in the Soviet position on the NATO decision on the deployment of new medium-range missiles in Europe. At the meeting, Anker Jorgensen stressed that Scandinavia does in fact comprise a nuclear-free zone, but that the Scandinavian countries have plans to "test" what lies behind the Soviet proposals.

NORWAY

BRUNDTLAND REPLIES TO CPSU LETTER ON ARMS TALKS

PM210927 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 8 Jul 81 p 18

[Text] "Negotiations on the reduction of nuclear arms in Europe must be held without prior conditions," a letter from Labor Party chairman, Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland, to the CPSU states. The letter is a response to a request received 2 months ago by the party chairman from the CPSU Central Committee. The prime minister stressed in her reply that there is now a great need to begin negotiations between East and West on disarmament and arms control. The letter from Gro Harlem Brundtland stressed that the Norwegian Labor party attaches great importance to ensuring a constructive dialogue on the security problems in Europe, and that it considers the letter from the CPSU to be an expression of a similar attitude.

"It is now important," the prime minister wrote, "that we concentrate on the solution to the remaining problems. In these questions, Norwegian policy is a balance between consideration of our own security and an attitude of reassurance toward the rest of the world, and this policy will be pursued in the expectation that it will be met by corresponding restraint on the part of other countries."

The reply points out that the basis for this attitude of the Labor Party on the question of Eurostrategic arms is the desire to ensure stability through approximate military balance. It is now of the utmost importance that real negotiations be started to ensure that this balance remains at the lowest possible level, Gro Harlem Brundtland wrote. The negotiations must be held without prior conditions, and must in the first instance be concerned with the medium-range missiles, since it is these in particular which threaten peace and balance in Europe.

MINISTRY CONFIRMS TRADE MISSION VISIT TO LIBYA

PM211247 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 14 Jul 81 p 4

[Terje Svaboe report: "Norwegian Contacts With Libya Intensified"]

[Excerpts] Neither Col Mu'ammar al-Qadhdhafi's internal policies in Libya nor his war on the neighboring state of Chad are enough to prevent under secretary Per Martin Olberg from leading a Norwegian delegation to Libya in August to discuss trade contacts.

According to information received by AFTENPOSTEN, civil servants in the foreign and trade ministries are puzzled that Norway with its limited resources is now electing to intensify its trade with Libya. The Foreign Ministry has approved the trip, the Trade Ministry informed AFTENPOSTEN.

Trade Ministry personal secretary Hanne Finstad told AFTENPOSTEN that Under Secretary Olberg will lead the delegation because Libya has what is described as centralized foreign trade. This means, Hanne Finstad said, that it is necessary for Norway to be represented by a deputy minister or similar if it wants to hold talks. She said that there is nothing unusual in this.

Hanne Finstad stressed that the trip has been approved by the Foreign Ministry and at the time of the decision, Colonel al-Qadhdhafi's rule and his war on Chad were not used as reasons to call off the trip.

According to information received by AFTENPOSTEN, civil servants in both the Foreign and Trade Ministries are amazed that Norway is choosing to give priority to a trade delegation to Libya. AFTENPOSTEN was told that it would be easy to think of a number of other countries better deserving such attention.

The delegation, which leaves 9 August, will include representatives of the Foreign, Trade and Oil and Energy Ministries. There will in addition be representatives of a number of Norwegian firms which have trading contacts with Libya. The delegation will comprise more than 30 representatives.

Norway's Athens Ambassador Kuell Rasmussen will also make the trip. As soon as the necessary papers are in order, it is intended that he will also be accredited to Tripoli.

SWEDEN

GUSTAFSSON COMMENTS ON DEFENSE BILL, BUDGET

PM211427 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 13 Jul 81 p 6

[Erik Liden interview with Swedish Defense Minister Torsten Gustafsson; date and place not given]

[Text] "It is of the utmost importance that the Social Democrats are aware of their responsibility for the next defense bill and do not hold out for an indefensibly low budget for political and tactical reasons," said Defense Minister Torsten Gustafsson (Center Party) after barely 2 months as defense minister. He stressed that confidence abroad in our defenses and our security policy is great, not least because of the broad political agreement which has been reached on these questions over the years.

"Today, Sweden's willingness to defend itself is very great. People are concerned about rearmament and world conflicts. I know that the unrest in Poland worries many people. The Swedish people want strong defenses and the Social Democrats must take this into consideration since 50 percent of the voters support them. The support for voluntary defense forces is, I think, ample proof of defense willingness."

Torsten Gustafsson also pointed out that the savings plans being prepared by the Budget Ministry could have a serious effect on the defense forces. "If a large part of the 12 billion kronor to be saved affects the defense forces, we will find ourselves in an untenable position. In my work on the defense budget, I will remind people of the objectives outlined in the government's declaration--an unchanged economic level for the defense forces for the next 5 years. Precisely because next spring's defense bill will cover 5 years, it is important that the cuts remain small."

Gustafsson also stressed that the defense forces are the only state institution to rationalize and reduce staff numbers during the 1970's. For this reason, it is impossible to make equal cuts over the whole spectrum of state organs, he said.

"The two most important questions before the defense bill next May will be those of a new aircraft and of the defense forces peacetime organization. It is important that the broadest possible agreement be reached on these questions in the Defense Committee before 1 December when it must publish its recommendations. Even though there is a certain amount of worry in political circles that a defense bill is too sensitive to be decided before the election, we in the ministry are working for a decision next spring.

"As far as the question of a new aircraft is concerned, we are still a little unsure. However, it is clear that the Swedish JAS proposal would be too expensive in the present economic situation. The industries, which have done a fine piece of coordinated work, must simply do some pruning on their bids. I suspect that they feel sure that they will win the order and nothing could be more incorrect just now."

Gustafsson also is worried about the missile philosophy which is spreading in various sections of the army, where great efforts are being made to convince the Social Democrats of the correctness of investing more in missiles than in aircraft. "I simply do not believe in this. We need aircraft and it would be best if they could be produced in Sweden."

Gustafsson declared that on this question too the Social Democrats can have all the information they want so that as unanimous an agreement as possible can be reached. Party congresses and the Defense Committee will be very important this fall, he said.

"We do not enjoy going out and making cuts in the defense forces peacetime organization. However, this is necessary to arrive at a reasonable defense budget. There must not be a free-for-all in the Riksdag; instead, the agreement from the "death patrol" [section of the Defense Committee investigating cuts in defense forces in various parts of Sweden] should be preserved. This agreement is a very good sign as far as defense is concerned."

Gustafsson is a little concerned that defense willingness could be adversely affected by the disappearance of the traditional local regiments, which are what the man in the street thinks of a defense. "This is a risk we must take," he said.

In the international political context, the defense minister is disappointed that rearmament is continuing, that there seems to be no progress in disarmament talks and that the peace march is going to Paris.

"If it has to go anywhere, it should go to Moscow. I also hope that idealist forces are behind the march and not political speculation. We need something to stop the lunacy of rearmament and, for this reason, I support a European disarmament conference in Stockholm."

On the question of a nuclear-free zone, Gustafsson simply thinks that the Nordic countries should act in unison. He also pointed to the UN agreements signed by the United States and the Soviet Union which state that nations which do not acquire nuclear arms will never be attacked with such arms. "Thus, it is really my opinion that a new agreement concerning the Nordic countries is not necessary."

The Swedish defense industry is reassuring, Gustafsson said. For this reason, it was a disappointment that the U.S. company ITT recently won the order worth 570 million kronor for the new air force and the navy radar on grounds of cost. "Their bid was 20 percent lower than L.M. Ericsson's and we could not pass it by. However, 50 percent of the work will be done by ITT in Sweden and by other Swedish firms.

"I have had to make many major difficult decisions since I became minister. For some reason, there were many questions pending after the government crisis. I have never been afraid to make decisions--If I had been I would never have entered politics, still less accepted an appointment as defense minister."

FIRMS TO BE INDEMNIFIED FOR POLISH DEBT DEFAULT

LD171522 Stockholm Domestic Service in Swedish 1030 GMT 17 Jul 81

[By radio correspondent Goran Skaansberg]

[Text] Poland will be allowed a respite in paying back the 500 million kronor that it owes Sweden. The money was to have been paid back this year but it will now take until 1986 before the repayment is started. This agreement was signed 2 days ago in Warsaw. It is not the Swedish companies that will have to bear this loss but the Export Credits Guarantee Board which insured the deals. This means that the Export Credits Guarantee Board will run at a great loss this year.

Many of the companies that have traded with Poland have taken out insurance against the risk of not being paid with the state-owned Export Credits Guarantee Board. Therefore, it will now be the Export Credits Guarantee Board that will have to pay the companies the nearly 500 million kroner that Poland cannot repay this year. But the Export Credits Guarantee Board has only 140 million kronor in reserve to repay this money to the companies and, to be able to manage this, the board must now go to the National Debt Office and borrow money at high interest ot cover the Polish deals. The intention is for the Export Credits Guarantee Board to recover the money from Poland later, but if Poland cannot pay, then it will be the government and the taxpayers who will ultimately be responsible for the private companies' deals with Poland, the general director of the Export Credits Guarantee Board, Axel Wallen, says.

[Begin recording] [Wallen] In the end, the type of support involving this system of export credit guarantees means that the Swedish state and ultimately the Swedish taxpayers are prepared to take on the risks of Swedish exports. But this is seen as a necessary step to support Swedish exports and to bring exports to the markets.

[Question] But the Export Credit Guarantee Board's poor finances--in the space of a few years it has been hit by big losses, among others in North Korea and Turkey--will hit Swedish exports, above all as regards developing countries with a limited ability to pay, where the Export Credits Guarantee Board in the future must show great restraint. And this is hitting Swedish industry which often finds it difficult to arrest itself in new markets. Can't industry take part by paying more of the Export Credits Guarantee Board's costs through higher insurance premiums?

[Answer] We are very seriously considering different methods to strengthen our reserve position and it is my opinion that this load should primarily fall on the exporters and the bankers.

[Question] So there will be an increased premium for [words indistinct]?

[Answer] Whether it will be through increased premiums or through increased excesses or whatever, I cannot yet say.

[Question] But the intention is for the companies to bear part of these costs.

[Answer] It is quite clear that without deteriorated reserve situation the companies will have to bear further costs. [as heard] [end recording]

GOBBI LEAVES FOR NEW YORK; TALKS POSTPONED

TA211926 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1900 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] The meeting of the intercommunal talks scheduled for Friday has been postponed due to the departure of the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Hugo Gobbi, for New York. The Turkish Radio and Television center in Cyprus reports that Gobbi departed Cyprus today in order to have consultations with UN Secretary General Waldheim. The date of the resumption of the intercommunal talks will be determined following Gobbi's return from New York.

Gobbi-Kiprianou Meeting

NC211305 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] The UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, Mr Gobbi, today departed for New York, where he will have consultations with Mr Waldheim on the intercommunal talks. Before departing, Mr Gobbi was received by President of the Republic Kiprianou. The meeting was attended by Foreign Minister Rolandhis, the Greek side's representative at the intercommunal talks Mr Ioannidhis, and advisers to the talks Mr Triandafillidhis and Mrs Souliotou. It is expected that Mr Gobbi will return to the island in a week.

NORTH SPOKESMAN DENIES REOPENING U.S. BASES

TA212102 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1930 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] The Turkish Cypriot spokesman has said that the U.S. stations in northern Cyprus which were closed down when the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] was established have not been reactivated since then. The spokesman described as absurd and unfounded reports in the Greek daily APOGEVMATINI that an agreement was reached to provide facilities to the United States in the TFSC. The spokesman continued: There are no U.S. activities in any part of the TFSC. This ugly lie published by APOGEVMATINI is an effort to camouflage the irresponsible stand of the Greek Cypriot administration which permits the functioning of various foreign bases on its soil.

ROLANDHIS ON MISSING PERSONS COMMITTEE ISSUES

NC211811 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1500 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Rolandhis today summoned to his office Mr Pilloud, the UN secretary general's representative at the investigatory committee for the missing persons, and announced to him a series of decisions adopted unanimously at meetings which Mr Rolandhis had today with the representative of the Greek Cypriot side in the investigatory committee, Mr Mikhailidhis, and with the Cypriot and Greek committees of relatives of missing persons and undeclared prisoners.

Mr Rolandhis announced to Mr Pilloud that the Cyprus Government and the committee of relatives of missing persons believe that the question of the manner in which the investigatory committee makes decisions has been settled satisfactorily following the statements by Mr Pilloud and Mr Mikhailidhis at the committee's initial meeting. At the same time, the government and the committee are satisfied with the arrangement under which the UN secretary general appoints an official of the International Red Cross as his representative in the investigatory committee as provided by the agreement.

Mr Rolandhis stressed to Mr Pilloud that both the official government side and the committee of missing persons insist that the agreement on the composition of the investigatory committee fully establishes the right of the representatives of the relatives of missing persons to participate in the meetings of the committee.

At today's meetings, it was also decided that, despite the Turkish Cypriot side's reneging on the question about participation of the committee of missing persons in the meetings of the investigatory committee, and in order to avoid any further delay in the work of the committee, the Greek Cypriot side will be represented in the investigatory committee only by Mr Mikhailidhis and one assistant. It was also decided that the committee of relatives of missing persons will not participate in the meetings of the investigatory committee--as a demonstration of protest against the Turkish Cypriot side's violation of the relevant agreement--until the issue is settled on the basis of what has been agreed upon. The government and the Greek Cypriot side are fully prepared to cooperate in starting a substantive investigation into specific cases of missing persons and, for this purpose, they call on Mr Pilloud to proceed without any further delay with the immediate activation of the investigatory committee.

The Government of the Republic will brief Mr Waldheim on the Turkish Cypriot side's reneging and the decisions made today.

MORE ON GREEK CYPRIOT 'INVASION ANNIVERSARY' RALLY

Greek Delegation Departs

NC211007 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 0900 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Minister to the Greek Prime Minister Konstandinos Stefanopoulos, who visited Cyprus to participate in the rally held to condemn the coup and the Turkish invasion, departed this morning for Athens. Stefanopoulos was seen off at the Larnaca airport by Minister to the President Katsellis, Greek Ambassador Zakharakis and other officials.

In a statement before his departure, the Greek minister expressed the wish that a correct and just solution to the Cyprus problem would soon be found so that the Greek Cypriot people and, more generally, all the people of the island may be able to live in a well-governed, independent, sovereign and territorially integral country. This wish, Stefanopoulos stressed, we shall not only express in words but it will be augmented with every possible effort by the Greek people, the political parties and the Greek Government. We shall augment it with the support that is unanimously and unreservedly being offered. I hope, the Greek minister concluded, that the next time we visit Cyprus, we shall be able to see that significant steps have been taken toward the pursuit of a solution which we all desire and seek.

In the morning, members of the Greek interparty delegation, who came to Cyprus to attend the rally condemning the coup and the invasion, also departed for Athens.

EDEK Statement

NC202000 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] A statement by the EDEK Political Bureau, issued on the occasion of the Turkish invasion anniversary, notes that the goal of Turkey and of those who sent it to Cyprus remains the imposition of a partitionist solution in the form of confederation. This solution would be used by Turkey toward its future conquest of all of Cyprus.

The EDEK statement goes on: In facing this threat, it is an urgent necessity to array an all-powerful popular front of national salvation. The statement adds: All patriotic, anti-occupation forces should rally to this front on the basis of a common, minimum program that would clearly define the targets and strategy for the liberation and reconstitution of a united, independent, sovereign, integral and nonaligned Cyprus Republic.

Denktas Response

TA211351 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1300 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] In reply to statements made yesterday by Greek Cypriot Leader Kiprianou and Greek Minister to the Prime Minister Stefanopoulos, President Rauf Denktas said today that the Turkish Cypriot community would not concede in the face of Greek Cypriot efforts to usurp the natural, lawful and undeniable Turkish Cypriot rights by hiding behind the concepts of the Cypriot state and the Cypriot Government.

Noting that, as they themselves also conceded, their statements were influenced by Cypriot Hellenism, President Denktas said that he had expressed the views on behalf of the Turkish Cypriot community. Thus, President Denktas added, the presence of two separate entities in Cyprus were acknowledged once more.

NORTH MARKS ANNIVERSARY OF TURKS' 'PEACE OPERATION'

TA200946 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] The seventh anniversary of the Turkish peace operation is being celebrated all over the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC] as the peace and freedom day.

In a statement at today's ceremonies in Lefkosa [Nicosia] President Rauf Denktas said: It would be wrong to assume that for the sake of a peaceful solution we shall bow to every Greek Cyrpiot demand, we shall let the Greek Cypriots be our masters, or we shall remove all frontiers to be administered by the Greek Cypriots. Recalling that the struggle is aimed at preserving the equal rights and freedom of the Turkish Cypriot community and at providing human conditions for the community, Denktas called on all concerned to acknowledge these realities.

Also speaking at the ceremony, Turkish state minister, Deputy Prime Minister and Turkish-Cypriot coordination council President Zeyyat Baykara said that there would be no return from the right to live peacefully in Cyprus under equality and freedom as well as with security of life and property which have been acquired in the struggle of 20 July through blood and sufferance. Noting that all good will is being exerted by the Turkish Cypriots in order to reach a real political solution that will guarantee all these rights, Baykara said that motherland Turkey would continue to support this stand. He added that such a real solution would be based on a bizonal system that would permit the peaceful living of the independent Turkish community under equality in which its rights and liberties are guaranteed.

Following the speeches a military parade took place at the end of the ceremonies.

DPP DENOUNCES ISRAELI RAIDS AGAINST PALESTINIANS

TA201625 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] The Democratic People's Party [DPP] issued a statement today denouncing the Israeli raids. The statement, issued by the DPP press spokesman, Ahmet Dagcioglu, said: The heavy Israeli air, naval and ground operations launched against the Palestinian refugee camps and settlements in Lebanon is increasing tension in our region and obstructing peace efforts. The DPP (?strongly denounces) Israel for these merciless and savage attacks against the Palestinian people. The statement added that the United States, which is supplying various types of arms to Israel, is equally responsible for the situation.

NEWS REPORTS AGREEMENT ON EARLY OCTOBER ELECTION

NC211713 Athens NEWS in English 21 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The president of the republic, Mr Karamanlis, yesterday received in audience the leader of PASOK Andreas Papandreou. Mr Papandreou informed Mr Karamanlis about his recent visit to West Germany and also expressed his views on Greek internal and external matters. Later Mr Papandreou said that he was very satisfied with the results of the meeting which was held in a friendly atmosphere.

The president of the republic made no decision as to the exact date of the upcoming elections, but both he and Papandreou agreed to the possibility of an October 4th or 11th election. Reliable sources said Mr Karamanlis is expected to invite Mr Papandreou back in order to discuss the matter further. Mr Karamanlis is expected to meet with Prime Minister Rallis before that time.

It is believed that the prime minister will agree to the elections taking place in the first two weeks of October. Once agreement is reached, Mr Karamanlis will announce both the date of the elections and the date Parliament will be dissolved.

PAPER COMMENTS ON AMBASSADOR STEARNS' STATEMENT

NC211935 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 21 Jul 81 p 5

[Editorial: "The Institutions and the Contest"]

[Text] The recent statement by new U.S. Ambassador Stearns before the Senate, that Washington will cooperate with any government which will emerge from the Greek election. can be described as a positive step which also reflects the deeper feelings of the Greek people. Perhaps for the first time the Americans recognize that the election of their own government is the exclusive and inalienable right of the Greek people and is unrelated to direct or indirect interventions from their "allies." This fact alone deeply elates the Greek people, who view improvement of relations with the United States only from this optical angle.

We do not know to what degree this Stearns statement is a maneuver or a new U.S. foreign relations and strategy policy toward Greece. This appears to us to be "too good to be true." For the time being, we are obliged to accept it as a fact and to express our satisfaction, because this is something to which the Americans have not accustomed us to date.

Naturally, recognition of the right of the Greek people to elect their own government by themselves without intervention from anyone is a fundamental and inalienable achievement of the Greek people themselves. During the past 7 years, democracy has functioned in Greece in an exemplary manner not only for our own country--about which many foreigners and, unfortunately, many locals have had a low opinion--but also by comparison to many other western countries.

The maturity and wisdom demonstrated by the Greek people as a whole can never be overshadowed by isolated occurances which only have a marginal character in Greece. This marginal character only further confirms the Greek's faith in and respect for the democratic institutions.

We do not believe that comparison of Greece with other countries which recently emerged from dictatorship has much to say. A single glance at Britain, however, is convincing about the quality of democracy in our own country. All provocations, no matter from which side they may emerge are dealt with by the Greek people with an admirable widsom and calmness. Perhaps this is because their own experience during recent decades has been so rich that they no longer want to further enrich it.

Perhaps this is also due to the fact that during the entire 7-year period since the political change, the country's political forces have also demonstrated the same admirable wisdom. This is something which the whole nation has fully appreciated in demonstrating its preference for personalities who recognized the people's maturity the most.

Today there is no discernible sign on the horizon that the Greek people are lacking in maturity by comparison to the two previous elections. On the contrary, everything shows that the Greek people's maturity today is perhaps even greater because the election fever is at a much lower pitch and debate is conducted in a mild tone and without the tensions and quarrels so usual in the predictatorial period.

Democratic institutions and their smooth function are considered firmly established by the Greek people. This is why the Greek people do not feel the need for concern.

The democratic institutions are an achievement of the entire Greek nation and not of its isolated representatives. This is the reason we firmly believe the people's judgment and evaluation will turn toward party programs, toward the solutions they propose for the urgent problems of the country. This is the field in which the contest of the parties will take place.

MITSOTAKIS LEAVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT TO ROMANIA

NC210954 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0900 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Beginning today, Foreign Minister Mitsotakis is paying an official visit to Romania in response to an invitation by his Romanian counterpart Stefan Andrei.

Mitsotakis departed for Bucharest at 0945 this morning.

EXPANDED ARMED FORCES TV NETWORK INAUGURATED

NC190753 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 0400 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] National Defense Deputy Minister Avraamidhis yesterday inaugurated the new 40 kw Armed Forces Information Service [YENED] television transmitter, the strongest transmitter in Greece.

The French-made transmitter, situated in Athens, will cover the greater portion of central Greece by transmitting and retransmitting the television signal through relay stations to all parts of the country, including frontier areas.

Installation of the transmitter implements the special YENED development program which provides for installation of five more similar transmitters at Kerkira, on Pangaion Mountain, at Evros, Lesvos and Rodhos, as well as 70 relay stations of small, medium and great strength to provide television coverage over the entire area of Greece, including the frontier areas.

As stated by the chief of YENED, Air Force Brigadier General Vavarousos, the YENED development program aims at covering 88 percent of the geographic area of Greece and at providing television service to 98 percent of the population.

PART THREE OF PASOK GOVERNMENT POLICY DECLARATION

NC192219 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 19 Jul 81 pp 7-9

[Part three of PASOK declaration of government policy--sections three and four, headlined: "Education: The Foundation of Change" and "The Economic Policy" respectively; All capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] 3. EDUCATION: THE FOUNDATION OF CHANGE

88. Education is not only an investment commodity but it is also an end in itself for man. The acquisition of knowledge throughout man's life is a benefit that the state has absolutely no right to deprive from anyone. Nothing is too little for education which is a national matter and has a catalytic importance for the nation's progress. Education, as the total spiritual wealth of the nation, incorporates the nation's cultural conquests throughout the nation's progress through history. For us, education is the foundation of change.

89. Both education and training--in other words the systematic transmittal of knowledge--are connected to society, the economic structure and with cultural and scientific tradition. The basic education options are directly related to the national, social, economic and cultural options of a government. In other words, they are basic political options.

90. The political options of the rightwing and its philosophy are clearly evident in the anachronistic content and the low grade and structure of its education. Private tuition and education have filled the place of the government's lack of interest and have commercialized education while, at the same time, they reproduce unacceptable class distinctions. The teachers and professors, the pioneers of education, have fought against these options from the one-class mountain village schools to the inadequate teaching halls in Athens. They fought for proper education for the nation's children.

The universities were handed over to favor-mongering, party exploitation and nepotism. Because of their feudal structure, anachronistic methods of teaching, lack of laboratories, there is continual and insurmountable crisis. Technical and professional education was established arbitrarily under unacceptable international obligations and without a correct direction. It was degraded and was unable to play the role of creating the leading personalities required by scientific application, technology and professional specialization.

The new generation, the fatherland's future, is competed in its search for a position at the universities under an unacceptable testing system in which anguish and luck dominate. It seeks a way out in foreign universities with unbearable economic and social consequences for itself, its parents and the country.

PASOK'S BASIC POLITICAL OPTIONS FOR EDUCATION

91. Our primary goal is to change the values, content and trends in education and studies.

Faith in human values, in man himself, will dominate education. The content of studies will be connected to the productive and social process and will be adjusted to the country's development and social needs in accordance to the various educational steps. Right from the first basic steps there will be cultivation of free and creative investigation, of overcoming of distinctions, of equality of the sexes, of acquaintance with democratic institutions and the democratic process.

Emphasis on patriotism and national independence will be accompanied by cultivation of faith in peace and friendship among nations. Historic knowledge will be transmitted on a broad basis, objectively, without restrictions and without any superior ideology theories. There will be a gradual introduction of meanings and the importance of our cultural heritage, of the country's wealth-giving resources, of self-supporting economic and social development.

At the higher steps, scientific knowledge will be combined with analysis and criticism of positions on all philosophical trends in order to enrich tradition, to achieve proper utilization of resources and to improve the standard of living.

The establishment of continuous training and constant advanced training of the working people satisfies the need for the people's continuous learning; it bases new orientation upon employment and binds the spheres of learning and work together, thus reducing the contrasts between academic and manual labor.

The development of postgraduate studies will take place hand-in-hand with research and the country's needs. Postgraduate studies are the kiln in which knowledge will be forged with research and worldwide scientific investigation. Theoretical and applied research in all fields promotes knowledge in theoretical, social and applied sciences as well as in the arts; it contributes to the creation of a correct substructure for option, assimilation and gradual development of national technology.

A basic innovation will be the introduction at all educational levels of special curricula that match with corresponding social government or local self-administration programs (such as preventative medicine, environment, town planning and so forth). In the first grades, the meaning and nature of problems will be taught, whereas in the three-level education the active participation of students in implementing methods for the solution of the problems will be sought.

The success of social programs will be enhanced by research support in postgraduate studies and research centers as well as with the participation of the employees from the institution of continuous training.

Finally, there will be a broad briefing about the special social programs through the institutions of parallel education, that is the free open universities, educational television, parents schools and so forth so that they become the concern of the entire people.

92. Education is the concern of all the people but the care for training is the concern of the state.

The participation of education in the gross national product and the state budget will constantly increase. Expenditures for education and national defense are of top priority. Only with a decisive financial strengthening of education we will be able to secure:

--A material-technical substructure with acceptable quality and correct geographical distribution (schools, libraries, classrooms, laboratories, seats of learning, gymnasiums and so forth) as well as a satisfactory ratio of teachers and students at all levels.

--Elevation of the educationist's role and the safeguarding of decent salaries and working conditions.

--A truly free training for all the people which will safeguard and expand the constitutional right of Greeks through an increased number and level of scholarships, special care for the working people and free meals (and transportation) for those students with low economic standards.

Private education, paraeduation, schools for the privileged and Greeks studying at foreign schools is against the constitutional order and have no place in a democratic society. Our goal is to abolish private education and schools for the privileged through measures that would aim at their harmonious integration into the national system of education. The radical changes in the educational system and measures such as abolition of the lyceum examinations and the present pan-Hellenic entrance examinations for AEI [senior education establishments] will eliminate paraeducation. For the needy students, additional educational aid will be granted in public schools.

93. The contribution of educational organizations to the administration as well as to the formulation of studies will be decisive, and social control will be imperative.

The government charts the general framework of the education policy on the basis of democratic programming.

The regional organs implement the policy. The people, through their social organizations, control the implementation. A decisive role will be played by the national education council with the participation of the local self-administration working people's organizations, social and political organizations and, naturally, educational organizations, university staff and students. This institution will help in the radical change of the content of studies.

The establishment of regional education councils will also be of a determining significance at the regional level.

Teachers organizations, like other social organizations, will participate in the decentralized elements of education and will be related to elements of democratic planning.

Teachers associations will have a definitive say in the administration of schools in which representatives of local self-government, parents associations and so forth also participate.

The role of students' communities in the life and operation of the school will become more fundamental, according to the student's age.

We will proceed to deep democratization and modernization in the senior educational establishment and in higher education. Their self-administration and economic self-sufficiency will be established. Collective work within the framework of a sector (of study) and abolition of the professional chair will mean collective programming control and coordination of the basic academic unit. This control will not suppress creative initiative, freedom and the satisfaction of the spiritual needs of the university tutor.

Participation of all organizations of the university community in administration and operation will be on a basis of equality without destroying knowledge and objective understanding of problems. Utilization of the entire educational potential of the country's universities will be promoted on proper evaluation criteria and in accordance with the needs of the higher educational establishments. Conditions will be created for the utilization of Greek scientists either living in the country or overseas.

There will be an apparatus for controlling the rotation of university tutors so that elections may be freed from the system of favoritism, nepotism, party exploitation and arbitration. A considerable part will be played by the student's own evaluation. The quality of the body will be controlled on a pan-Hellenic level on the basis of evaluation of educational and research work.

94. Relations between teachers and students, methods of teaching and controls of learning will be radically changed.

Establishment of dialogue and cooperation between teachers and students in the search for and transmission of knowledge will replace monologue from the professorial rostrum. Respect for personality will prevail, together with respect for the capabilities of the students, so that teachers will be established at all steps as representatives of an educational process and not as representatives of a totalitarian enforcement of knowledge.

The present-day system of examinations which turn the high schools and universities into arbitrary testing centers will be replaced by democratic and creative methods of continual checks and evaluation of learning.

Within the senior educational establishment and higher education, stress will be laid on the evaluation of scientific judgement, of ability to handle scientific methods and of problem-solving instead of tests which simply and exclusively rely on a mechanical recitation of subject matter. Allocation of grades will be based on the evaluation of the total efforts of the student throughout the university year (6-month period.) The just but strict control of learning presupposes proper context of studies, a material-technical substructure, special measures for working students, a proper proportion of teachers and students as well as a permament and continual presence of the university tutors.

95. Strict compartmentalization between educational steps will be abolished, technical professional training will be improved, and the method of entry to the senior educational establishments will be changed radically, particularly in respect of entry to higher education. The basic principle which will dominate the new system will be that entry to the next higher steps will be available from all steps of the education process. After compulsory education, a special process will be made available for and professional training and passage to the production sector. A process will also be made available for movement and transfer between branches and specializations. Unlimited opportunities will be provided so that under a system of just evaluation, possibilities will be provided for the transfer--at any given time--of the high school or university student from a professional training career to the higher educational establishments and to higher education either from previous educational steps or from the production sector.

No decision in respect to young children should be irrevocable and binding for their future.

On the basis of these principles: the pan-Hellenic entrance examinations for the lycea will be abolished. Pan-Hellenic examinations for entry into universities and higher education institutes also will be abolished.

The new system will be based on the performance of students within the school, and particularly in the lyceum classes, and primarily upon the establishment and fundamental operation of the system of professional orientation. This system will be in full harmony with the structural changes within the economy and society. The full success of the system presupposes, on a long term basis, the total improvement of the standard of high school education in which the point system and the degrading of the school itself will be abolished. It also presupposes a rise in the standard of professional and technical training as well as a new structure for it. Establishment of self-supporting economic and social development, emphasis on research and the effort for gradual development of a national technology will considerably increase employment positions for young scientists as well as gradually permit the important increase in the number of students in professional training within the universities and generally in higher education.

Abolition of the pan-Hellenic examinations will, on a short term basis, be based upon a series of preparatory lessons within the lyceum program with unlimited possibilities of tests of judgment and evaluation in the education sphere.

96. The institution of university asylum for all representatives of the university community, without falsification, will be adopted by legislative measures. Establishment of this institution is an elemental democratic and safety valve for the free movement of ideas and for scientific research.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENTS

97. The educational "reform," which at first was undertaken hesitantly and is now undermined by all sorts of falsifications, did in the end remain without any context. Certain improvements which were the results of the increasing pressure of the peoples movement during the first years of the political change such as the demotic language and 9-year compulsory education were either not completed or not even implemented. Illiteracy has not been hit at its roots.

Certain steps were completely ignored and the education system was never handled as a whole. Our own general political principles and basic political options as they have already been analyzed define our own positions and describe the quality and direction of measures on each special problem such as the following measures.

98. The demotic language will be established at all levels of the educational process. Spelling will be simplified and the monotone system of accenting will be introduced.

99. Preschool education will be generally adopted in all kindergartens incorporated in a unified comprehensive framework of children's homes, to be gradually established, and also will comprise nursery and kindergarten facilities. Senior schools within universities will be established to train nursery school and kindergarten teachers. Fast retraining of those existing today also will be implemented.

100. Sufficient and suitable public centers will be established to incorporate existing establishments which today host problem children. They will be staffed with specially trained personnel and special attention will be given to the subsequent transfer of problem children to regular schools so that the ghettos of isolation may be abolished.

101. Compulsory 9-year education will be enforced with the prospect of making it 10-year compulsory education with the ultimate goal of having 12-year compulsory education. The hiring of unemployed educators will, for this reason, be speeded up. Full coverage of the country's needs will start from the islands, mountains and valleys.

102. High school education will undergo radical changes. The mechanical and absolute compartmentalization, carried out under law 309/79, will be abolished. The necessary classification into cycle A (gymnasium) and cycle B (lyceum) must not break up the operational unity and the total revision of programs. Registration into cycle B will be voluntary.

The general and technical-vocational lyceum will be united into one composite lyceum with many directions. In the first grade, there will be a common curriculum with special emphasis on humanities. Through a special procedure, it will always be possible to change branches or trends. By studying an additional year of further specialization subjects, it will be possible for the lyceum graduates to safeguard professional direction.

The graduates of cycle A (high school) who do not want to attend cycle B (lyceum) can study in special technical and vocational schools. Their graduates are classified and safeguarded in a specific productive sector or can continue their studies on other levels through a special procedure.

The institutions of inspectors and supervisors are abolished and the institution of school counselor is established. The counselor cooperates, according to the type of school and group or cycle of subjects, with the corresponding association of educators and participates, together with a representative of the association, in the evaluation of the regional councils.

103. The measures aiming at the abolition of private education will secure this education for the working people and also will safeguard continued education for the students who are now attending. The just demands by the owners also will be dealt with in accordance with the Constitution.

104. An attempt will be made to unify the two large groups of general education tutors around an equal university standard and to provide constant and advanced training. In the first phase, senior pedagogical schools will be established and be placed under the universities.

105. New university schools will be established at the regional centers according to the needs of the area, and within the framework of decentralization and regional development.

Considerable efforts will be exerted for the development of school and university athletics. In this direction, special physical education academies will be established within the universities to replace the senior physical education establishments which will be abolished. Simultaneously, there will be provisions for the speedy retraining of physical education professors. The professors in the physical education establishments must not have any other duties apart from those periodically needed to serve the state or society as a whole and which, at the same time, assist in the relationship with the productive and social process. Leave without pay will be granted for as long as professors are involved in activities outside these schools. Special personnel will teach in their place for these periods.

106. Elevation of technical and professional education is a prerequisite for the total qualitative improvement of education to meet the needs of the production process and the services. Instead of the present technical training schools, new technical establishments will be set up for the applied sciences. The graduates of these special 3-year schools will be professionally trained and will have the opportunity for post-graduate studies or continuation of their studies.

107. Special emphasis will be placed on foreign language studies. The goal is to establish self-supporting foreign language schools in senior educational establishments and to introduce two foreign languages into the elementary and high school curriculum. One foreign language will be compulsory. An attempt also will be made to establish public centers for foreign languages with the gradual absorption of the personnel from private foreign language tutorial schools.

108. Parallel education will be institutionalized and strengthened through special programs for the illiterate with a basic function of educational television and strengthened local self-government to assist expansion of the institution of the local free open university.

109. A draft law on the senior educational establishments will be introduced, implementing the principles analyzed earlier which will take into consideration the views of university and community representatives.

4. ECONOMIC POLICY

A. FROM CRISIS TO SELF-SUPPORTING DEVELOPMENT

110. PASOK's development strategy sketched in the first part will lead toward overcoming the economic crisis, to self-supporting development and to the reconstruction of the national area. The foundation of this economic and social development and cohesive steps to this end combined with strategic goals are the only answer to the country's deep structural crisis.

This specific task will start simultaneously in all sectors. Time will be required before results can be seen on the measures aimed at freeing the country from foreign dependence, at structural changes, at development of strategic sectors of the economy and at a new policy. There are, however, problems which cannot wait. It is urgently necessary to deal with these problems with concrete harmonized measures within the general strategy, if the downhill slide of the Greek economy is to be stopped.

111. Inflation and recession are the country's immediate problems. In the face of these problems, the rightwing is reeling. On one day, it attempts to fight inflation with measures which prevent the recovery of the economy and, on the very next day, it stimulates the economy with measures which intensify inflation. The New Democracy government lost all control over the economy long ago. Inflation is galloping at a rate twice or three times higher than that of other European countries. Unemployment is continually increasing and the inequality in the distribution of the national income and wealth increases. The people's savings, instead of being channeled into productive investments, feed consumption of luxury goods and the illegal export of capital.

Inefficiency and a wrong diagnosis of the situation are neither the only or primary causes for this. The crisis is structural. The deadlock facing the rightwing is unavoidable because to extricate the economy from the crisis it will have to touch upon structures which are also the structures of its own authority--it must strike at interests which it has set itself to protect and to serve. The representatives of these interests, monopolistic capital, middlemen and profiteers, all aim at preserving and increasing their profits despite the increasing crisis. They make a profit out of inflation itself, which is a way of redistributing revenue at the expense of the workers. Tax evasion and the escape of capital through the well-known over and underpricing only go to complete the vicious circle.

112. In vain, the government expected an increase in investments, as a result of beneficial grants to large-scale business and the decrease of inflation through compactment of low incomes. This antipeople's policy of unilateral austerity in conjunction with heavy taxation considerably cut the purchasing power of the people's classes and led the small-to-medium businessmen to lose hope and, thus, increased recession. The result of this policy is the cut in investments, increased inflation and increased unemployment.

This situation is made even worse by the bureaucratic apparatus of the administration, the operation of the banking system and by taxation organized in such a way as to serve the interests of the few.

Theoretically, incentives for investment are available to all but in reality they favor only large business. Credit restrictions are enforced only on the small and medium businessmen while large-scale businesses are able to utilize the people's savings without any restriction on their profiteering transactions.

113. New Democracy's recent pre-election opportunist policy, the "scorched earth" policy, accelerates further deterioration of the situation. The deficit in the regular budget is increasing dangerously. This development, in conjunction with the important deficits in state enterprises, lead to a further increase in the inflationary pressures.

This deficit is, naturally, also due to the great loss in state revenues which is the result of legal and illegal tax evasion and the continued drop in economic activity. At the same time, a deterioration in foreign transactions also led to a speedy drain of foreign exchange deposits.

Day by day, the margins are diminishing. What is needed is a radically different policy. Regaining control over the economy requires adoption of immediate measures, the broadest possible support of these measures by the productive classes and all the workers and the determined and unshaken implementation of these measures.

114. PASOK's government will proceed with simultaneous and coordinated action on many fronts. Combatting inflation, which appears to be an immediate and dire necessity, can only produce results through total and simultaneous handling.

The dilemma between inflation and recession, which faces the rightwing is not only not unavoidable for PASOK but on the contrary it is a nonexistent dilemma. Our country is being subjected simultaneously to the pressure of both inflation and stagnation which feed each other. It is not expansion of credit in itself which brings about price increases. This is rather due to the unproductive expansion of credit. What is important in dealing with inflation is a cut in non-productive investments and not the investments which finance production. A cut in these last investments leads to further price hikes because of the shrinking availability of goods.

Structural weaknesses, the confused credit and public finance policy pursued by New Democracy to date, the fundamental abandonment of price controls, and the check on profits only increase the rate of inflation.

115. On the basis of the foregoing, the PASOK government will implement the following:

A. Effective price control for basic products and services. In a first stage there will be effective price control of certain basic products of popular consumption. The new forms of cooperative organization and the organizations at the popular base will contribute toward increased productivity and to reduced production costs. Especially, combatting the parasites and the middlemen within the cooperatives is a considerable weapon in setting the prices at acceptable levels, and this weapon will be used right from the very first moment.

Price controls will be systematized. To combat profiteering, a special service for costing will be established at the Commerce Ministry which will not limit itself to a simple check of invoices, but which will also collect the necessary information both from overseas and at home in order to establish, in every given instance, the proper price level. Especially, prices in the monopoly sector of the economy will be checked. Measures will also be taken to ensure regular supply to the market in case private commerce creates difficulties in this supply of the market. Toward this end an intervention organization will be set up to control the import trade.

B. Effective control of public spending. Not only current expenditures but also investment expenditure will be placed under strict control in an effort to avoid expenditure of low economic and social productivity. In no other sector is the squandering of the Greek nation's resources so obvious as in the state investments sector.

C. Measures for a drastic control of tax evasion to combat tax evasion and abolition of the para-economy within the framework of a new taxation policy which will also play an important role in the redistribution of the economic burdens and income.

D. Effective credit control which will guarantee the productive use of credit and reduce losses through financing of profiteering activities. The socialization of the credit system and the new credit policy with the policy of incentives are basic development levels, which will decisively contribute toward dealing with both immediate and long-term problems.

E. Promotion of productive investments within the framework of the goals of the development program. Priority will be given to investments of immediate and high productivity which will promote:

--speedy increase in the supply of consumer goods that are not in sufficient production today.
--replacement of imports, increase of exports in order to improve the balance of payments.
--increase of employment positions.

A new policy of incentives will be implemented in order to encourage investments. This will be based on programmed agreements for fulfillment of goals in the development program.

F. Stimulation of productivity by increasing the purchasing power of the workers and particularly the low income classes--the primary consumers of local produce. The redistribution of income, which will be undertaken in conjunction with the taxation policy, discourages overconsumption of imported luxury products. At the same time, if necessary, measures will be adopted to control imports, particularly in affected sectors.

G. Cleansing out the businesses which have problematic heavy financial obligations.

This cleansing process provides for:

--investigation of their viability based on production cost, potential, market prospects, number of employees etc., irrespective of the financial structure of the business.

--radical reorganization to improve productivity and reorientation of production for those businesses which are considered viable.
--social control of the businesses after conversion of bank loan capital into shares with a decisive workers particiation.

H. Radical tests and operational changes in state-controlled enterprises which will lead to a cut in production costs. These changes presuppose a flexible administrative apparatus that follows private economic criteria of productivity, as well as abolition of uneconomical state interventions. There will, however, be social control both for preventive purposes through connecting the business to state programming, and qualitatively on the basis of results achieved. Establishment of democratic management, in other words, decisive worker participation in the administration, planning and operation, will decisively contribute to increased productivity and the cleansing of state-controlled enterprises.

I. Measures for the decisive control of monopoly operations, simultaneous with socialization of strategic sectors of the economy--which is an antimonopoly measure aimed against dependence--and liberation and strengthening of the initiative of small and medium business will decisively contribute to overcoming the crisis and to establishing a new development policy. The cluster of direct measures aims at tangible percentage goals for 1982, which will bring about a logical increase of the national product and investments, a cut in the inflation rate and control of the balance of payments deficit.

The percentage goals are based upon the regulation of the most favorable combination for altering the course of the economy in its most vital sectors. Without disturbing the general balance, we will create the necessary prerequisites for a continual improvement over the next years through effective results from institutional and structural changes.

Naturally, the people will not judge policy on the basis of its percentage goals, which will be easy to exaggerate, but on the basis of the forces upon which it is based, on the basis of the means to be utilized and on the basis of its orientation.

B. LIBERATION FROM FOREIGN DEPENDENCE

116. The course toward self-supporting development leads to national independence on the economic front. As analyzed in our development strategy, this course has nothing to do with economic isolation and the utopia of self-satisfaction. Equal relations, however, are one thing and subjugation is another.

Economic intervention in our country has the character of capitalistic exploitation of the area, aimed at transferring the social surplus to the metropolis. This is the reason why our country, like most countries in southern Europe and the Mediterranean, has been unable to achieve a self-supporting development level in strategic sectors and lay the foundations for an economy with its own decisionmaking center and its own planning.

Control of the economy by multinational companies has led to robbery of wealth-producing resources, to unequal commercial transactions and to foreign investments with unacceptable conditions of short-term legal and illegal exportation of capital. At the same time, the rightwing's policy of economic dependence has led to a continual increase in the deficit in current transactions, to increased foreign loans and to a decrease of the country's foreign exchange deposits.

A) ACCESSION TO THE EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

117. Accession means transfer of national sovereignty to foreign centers in respect to critical issues of national economy. For example, decisions taken in Brussels on the price of agricultural products or on the amount of our production of olive oil, tobacco or sugar, can be forced upon us by the strong members on the basis of their own interest.

Our economy is bound by the treaties of the European Community under the promise that it has to function in accordance with the apparatus of capitalist economy. There is no need to refer to the consequences of this accession. We already have the results. The Common Market itself admits that its apparatus functions at the expense of the less-developed areas of the Community and that despite the subsidy funds, the poor have become poorer and the rich become richer.

Within the framework of its policy of dependence and faced with the hopelessness in which it finds itself, the rightwing government feels more comfortable by transferring the burden of many decisions out of Greece. The truth is that accession not only fails to ease the burden of the Greek people but, on the contrary, creates new problems and makes already existing ones more acute. The people have already had a taste of what the Common Market means, both through Market meat prices and through sales prices allowed to the farmers. Production of sugar and steel has been cut down. Unemployment is gaining dangerous proportions.

The small and medium businessmen are in a panic when they see these problems.

The New Democracy government does not even utilize the processes and any provisions available under the treaty of accession in order to protect Greek interests. A characteristic example is to be found in the fact that the New Democracy government gave up its right to deny the uncontrolled installation of foreign banks in Greece.

118. In accordance with constitutional procedures, the PASOK government will demand the conduct of a plebiscite so that after an objective and full briefing, the people may decide freely whether they want to continue this accession or whether their interest dictates, as we believe it does, signing a special agreement with the Common Market.

So long as we remain in the Common Market we will fight with all our strength through the organizations and processes of the Common Market to reduce the negative effects of our accession upon our economy. In every given instance, however, we will not sacrifice any basic points of our economic and social program whenever these clash with Common Market regulations.

B) FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

119. It is not only the more general intergovernmental agreements which define the country's rate of economic dependence. Similar effects can be brought about by private business agreements. It is well known that our country has become the target and the field of operations for large multinational monopolies which, directly or indirectly, influence and direct the trends of the Greek economy.

Large portions of our industry today, and particularly strategic branches of it, are controlled by foreign capital. Many of the foreign businesses operate in our country under the protection of scandalous agreements and, under the system of overpricing imports and underpricing exports, they avoid any effective control. In this way they become the means for the loss of foreign exchange at the expense of our economy and they ensure huge profits for themselves.

PASOK admits that foreign investments can contribute to the development of the country, but only under the following prerequisites:

--that they concern true industrial units and not commercial businesses which hide themselves under the cloak of industry.
--that they import advanced technology which can benefit our economy through a correct absorption of this technology.
--economic administration must be open and the loss of foreign currency capital must be made impossible.
--they must be under strong fundamental Greek control.

C) FOREIGN LOANS

120. Another form of economic dependence, to which the government of PASOK will direct its attention, is the sector of foreign loans. Foreign loans are permissible when they fall within a complete program of economic development. We do not agree with contracting foreign loans aimed at covering up mistakes and omissions in economic policy. We accept foreign loans, however, when they have a dynamic development character. The notorious "credit ability" of the country, which the New Democracy government so strongly advertises, is not the basic problem.

The success of a foreign loan policy is judged upon the terms on with which it restricts itself. Continued foreign loans at high levels, like those of today, will create serious problems for the country's economy.

Necessary loans will be guaranteed from sources and under conditions which presuppose no other obligation, economic or political, apart from the repayment of the loan itself.

C. STRATEGIC GOALS OF SELF-SUPPORTING DEVELOPMENT

A) ENERGY

121. The first concern of the PASOK government will be to work out a complete energy program, and it will plan its energy policy in conjunction with the main development goals. This policy will deal both with the production as well as with the consumption of energy and will basically aim at cutting down the country's reliance on foreign sources.

122. In reference to energy production, the PASOK government will exhaust every possible means for the utilization of known sources of energy and for the discovery of new ones. The country's hydroelectric potential will be utilized to the full through construction of dams which will be coordinated with irrigation projects, giving a dual benefit. The well-known lignite deposits and the hydroelectric power stations will also be fully utilized. Exploitation of the Thasos oil deposits will be intensified so that this source can increase its contribution to the country's energy source. Exploitation of the geothermal potential of the country will become the object of intensive study. In other words, we will systematically exploit even the smallest known source of energy available to our country.

123. PASOK does not view the question of local energy sources from a static position. It views it dynamically. Parallel to the registration of the country's energy resources, there will be an intensification of prospecting for the discovery of new ones. There are indications that the hydrocarbon deposits of the Greek area are more numerous than is known today. All the lignite deposits of the country are not yet fully known. The subsoil of the Helladic land and sea territory has not yet been systematically prospected and this is a grave responsibility of the rightwing governments, particularly in view of the unacceptable agreements it has in this sector with foreign multinational companies.

124. Research, however, will not be limited to the discovery of traditional sources of energy. The PASOK government will commence a systematic research program for the discovery of new sources of energy such as solar and wind energy. We will study and contribute to the scientific conquest in this sector by cooperating with research centers of other countries. Scientific achievements in the exploitation of new sources of energy will become the object of experimentation in order to establish the possibility of exploiting these sources under Greek conditions.

Guaranteeing supplementary raw materials for energy will be promoted through selective agreements. Coordination and technological cooperation between the countries of the Mediterranean basin are an immediate prospect interwoven with the prospects of the genuine, multifaceted foreign policy of PASOK and the close friendly relations it has with countries of the Third World and particularly the Arab nation.

125. Our position on the use or nonuse of nuclear energy is that, although nobody can deny the progress or the significance of intensified efforts for the utilization and exploitation of nuclear energy and technology, the installation of nuclear stations in Greece for the production of electric energy is not at present feasible for economic as well as for security reasons.

The upheaval of Greek public opinion over this question is justified. Under today's given facts of technology and cost for a fully secure installation of a nuclear power station, the seismological character of our country makes such an installation impossible.

For us there is the utmost priority for prospecting uranium bearing deposits and in the training of Greek technicians for basic research in nuclear technology.

126. PASOK's energy policy also covers the sector of supply and demand for energy. Our basic goals are to economize on the use of energy and the possible replacement of one form of energy by another, whenever conditions of supply and cost dictate it. Effective incentives will be offered for the industrial and agricultural uses of energy, aimed at decreased consumption of energy per unit produced. The factor of energy consumption will be a serious consideration in the selection and establishment of new productive units. The PASOK government will establish new insulation requirements in order to achieve energy economy in the heating area, both domestic and industrial. Utilization of solar energy in this direction will be encouraged through establishment of incentives.

Energy economy in the transportation sector will be pursued through development and modernization of mass transportation. This will also contribute toward solving the traffic problem. In this way, we will have a triple benefit; fuel savings, decreased pollution, and easier traffic circulation.

Decentralization and proper town planning will, on a long-term basis, play a decisive role to economy in energy consumption.

127. PASOK's energy policy will not be implemented through administrative measures but through economic incentives and discipline. Subsidies and a proper pricing policy will become the axis for economic incentives. The public will be sufficiently briefed on the advantages and methods of energy economy while simultaneous technical assistance will be provided to productive units for the same purpose.

B) MINERAL WEALTH

128. PASOK's policy is based upon the fact that the country's mineral wealth is a legacy of nature to our people and this is not renewable. This legacy belongs both to the current and to future generations. For this reason, there can be no robbing exploitation of our mineral wealth and there is no room here for narrow private-economic criteria. The cost of exploiting the mineral wealth is not only defined by the cost of production (mining) as is the case with other production sectors. It is also defined by the fact that deposits cannot be reproduced. A production process with such peculiarities cannot possibly be directed by private interests.

129. General trends.

--The basic goal will be socialization of the large-scale mining operations for our minerals. Units of lesser possible significance to our economy will operate within the framework of private initiative or on the basis of cooperative effort, but always under state control.

--Efforts will be made to establish a new institutional framework which will fundamentally classify mineral wealth as NATIONAL PROPERTY and will define the framework of cooperation with third parties for the supply of the necessary technology and the material-technical substructure with the national economic interest as the sole criterion.

130. The policy for the search and prospecting for mineral raw materials will have the basic goal of placing this search under national control.

The PASOK government will systematize the search for new deposits and will give considerable support to the projects or relevant reserach establishments. The goal will be a careful survey of the entire Greek territory and a detailed registration of the national mineral wealth. This search will not be strictly limited to the discovery of new deposits. It will be expanded to cover the entire spectrum of exploitation and processing for the purpose of promoting the country's self-sufficiency in this sector.

131. The policy of exploiting and utilizing mineral wealth is oriented toward serving heavy industry and to the development of new high technology industries. There will be promotion, organization and operation of those industries absolutely essential for the production of groups of products necessary for the development of industry.

Absolute control is essential over energy-producing minerals (oil, uranium etc.,) as well as over strategic small deposits (nickel, chrome, lead, etc.,) which must be used to strengthen our industry and in the acquisition of technology. Only minerals which exist in abundance will be placed on the world market in the form of raw materials for the purpose of helping our foreign payments balance.

Thus, instead of Greek minerals being exported in the form of ore, they will be processed into finished or semi-processed products for domestic use and for export. Increased foreign exchange benefits will not be the only gain from such a process. Decreased dependence upon industrial raw materials, development of technology, employment of scientific and other labor potential and the chain effects on other branches of the economy will have a special significance on the self-supporting development of the country.

C) INDUSTRY

132. The policy of dependence and of serving the interests of the economic oligarchy is strongly evident in the method of development of Greek industry. The absence of industrial capital equipment and of modern technology are basic structural weaknesses in the industrial sector. Our industry remains technologically dependent on overseas sources. This makes self-supporting development problematic.

Greek industry was not satisfactorily oriented toward the processing of our country's agricultural produce and mineral wealth. In this way, even today we have the sad phenomenon of exporting unprocessed raw materials which we then have to re-import as finished products at a much higher price at the expense of our foreign payments balance and at the expense of the labor potential of our country. In the sector of consumer goods production, Greek industry has basically remained static and it failed to respond to changes in demand.

Our industrial development was implemented without town planning and this led to overconcentration in the capital and to the destruction of the environment. The unplanned and uncontrolled industrial policy of the rightwing resulted in squandering valuable resources. Greek industry was further utilized as an easy channel for the escape of capital abroad.

133. The need for self-sufficiency and the structural weaknesses of Greek industry define PASOK's policy in this sector. The PASOK government will promote industrial development of the country on the basis of firm foundations and within the framework of national planning. The comparative advantages of the various industrial sectors will be studied in depth so that there can be development of those sectors which can contribute more to the continual and self-sufficient development of the economy.

134. The reorientation of industry will be carried out with the following priorities:

--To industries which have a chain effect on the entire spectrum of economic development.
-- to advanced technology industries such as electronics which require more human scientific potential and less capital or energy while they are at the same time key industries for national defense.
--to development of sectors such as the tool making industries which will support the effort to produce mechanical equipment.
--to industries which contribute to the strengthening of productivity and utilize local resources such as minerals and agricultural produce.

Support will be provided for the development of equipment related to social services such as education, public health, public transportation and construction.

135. The industrial policy of the PASOK government will be based upon a new investment policy, a policy of incentives and credit, on proper geographic distribution and regional development in full coordination with the energy policy and protection of natural resources and the environment.

136. Utilization of the human potential will play a decisive role in the achievement of goals under the proper prerequisites of pay, training and conditions of work, but also by the active participation of workers in large-scale industrial business.

137. Mobilization of the vast productive potential of the small and medium businesses, as well as close cooperation between the agricultural and industrial sectors, will have a decisive contribution to increased participation of the processing sector in earning the national product and will create new employment positions. The entire effort will be supported by research programs, technological development programs and continual training. Cooperation with developing countries and the promotion of joint programs of production will open up new horizons for our industry.

D) THE ROLE OF SMALL AND MEDIUM BUSINESSES

138. A decisive role will be played in the achievement of the goals of industrial policy by small and medium businesses, which will offer a new dimension and revival to business acumen through utilization of new forms of organization and cooperation. The small and medium businessmen and artisans are together with the farmers and the laborers the backbone of the country's economic system. While they are basic factors of economic and social development, they have, today, also been abandoned to their fate and they seek some alternative solution for their survival.

In many cases the small and medium businesses have a high degree of productivity in the manufacture of a large number of products. A series of measures for active state support will be taken in order to solve their problems.

139. The opening of a banking system for the supply of investment and movement capital will be one such decisive measure. Apart from such capital, however, the small and medium businesses also require help in order to utilize this capital productively.

Our program for the social strengthening and economic and technical support of the small and medium businesses is based upon:

--promotion of various forms of cooperation such as cooperatives associations and so forth. We attribute special significance to the establishment of supply cooperatives for the purchase of products and raw materials at a low cost.
--provision of the essential modern technology.
--training of business and cooperative officials in joint training centers.
--provision of assistance in the preparation of technical-economic studies on new projects or for expansions.

E) THE ROLE OF BANKS

140. The credit system will be socialized.

The banks handling the savings of the Greek people will cease to be factors helping to amass wealth for a few privileged people, and they will acquire a dynamic development character. The criteria, which they use today and the method with which they grant loans, are more related to dictates of the ruling party than to the goals of economic and social development. Provision of guarantees for the loan in the form of real estate property is the only, in the best cases, criterion for the issue of a loan. In this way the people's savings are given to those who already have much so that they may acquire even more. PASOK will turn the banks into the main lever of development policy in the service of the people. It will stop the flow of loans toward profiteering activities aimed at enriching the businessman because it leads to the bankruptcy of the businesses.

The credit establishments will review the basis on which loans are given. Primary criteria would be the investment productivity and its social suitability. Comparing expenditures to profits will be done on the basis of a specific category of work and not on abstract generalities.

The closed self-supplying circuits of banks and borrowers will break and new channels will be opened for the socially productive use of the people's savings. Thus the banks will open their doors widely to the small middle class businessmen and will truly support partnership efforts and people's organizations. Certain establishments that give credit will be orientated and will specialize in serving specific sectors.

D. THE REVIVAL OF THE GREEK COUNTRYSIDE--AGRICULTURAL POLICY

141. The Greek province is the backbone of our fatherland and nation.

For decades, our farmer upheld the burden of any development of the country, nourished the inhabitants of the cities and gave the first and decisive present to all national liberational struggles of the fatherland. The farmers watered their fields with perspiration but also shed blood on the Greek soil for our freedom. They have paid, and are paying, the heavy price of the unacceptable development that the foreign and local oligarchy of wealth has determined for our country.

On the altar of personal profits, the rightwing also sacrificed the long-term interests of the country and of the Greek countryside as well. The province has always been the blood donor to the opportunists and uncoordinated industrial concentration in the big urban centers. The countryside was abandoned in order to secure cheap labor. There are also figures--the indicators of economy--that prove the situation that prevails in the agricultural economy. However, figures have little importance before the unacceptable situation felt daily by the Greek farmer.

The lack of state care, economic oppression, lack of social care, cultural abandonment, immigration and the demographic problem contribute to the withering of the countryside. However, this withering did not cause the final abandonment of the countryside. The farmer struggled without help against the profiteers and the middlemen. He struggled against the estate owners as in the past. With unprecedented dynamism, the farmer struggled for the development of agriculture under difficult conditions. He was forced to irrigate his land from his savings when the public expenditures, particularly for land development projects, were diminishing year by year. Moreover, the agricultural bank's meagre financial aid was also diminishing while the interest of the loans was increasing.

In the past 3 years the cost of production, animal feed, supplies, fertilizers and fuel increased greatly while for agriculture income remained the same.

Inflation diminishes the income of the farmer's family which, while facing tension, has no medical care. The rightwing government spends for every Greek farmer only one-eight of what it spends for someone who is insured at IKA [Social Insurance Foundation], which is not a model of social care.

At the same time, drought, frost and floods have become the regulators of the farmer's life owing to the lack of ensuring plant and animal capital.

Unacceptable and unhygienic living conditions--without baths, sewers or water taps--have lately deteriorated in many regions owing to the earthquakes. The damage caused to housing as well as to storage for produce were dealt with off-handedly and without caring. No arrangements whatsoever were made for the agricultural debts of earthquake-stricken farmers.

When the time comes for the farmer to retire, he faced a starvation pension. The so-called increases in pensions are ridiculous because they have already vanished with inflation while nothing is being done to find a system to solve the problem gradually but firmly.

Before this unacceptable situation, the New Democracy governments had tried to deceive the farmers by promoting the so-called EEC paradise. However, from the first days of EC integration, our farmers have learnt all about it. They became acquainted with the cemetery heaps of oranges as in the past for peaches. The farmers are compelled to cut down important cultivation as directed by the rightwing. The EEC increases in prices for agricultural products were very much lower than inflation. Bound to the interests that they serve, the New Democracy government does not want to and cannot resolve the problems of the farmers.

PASOK has the political will to proceed with agricultural reform because it represents the interests of the farmers as well as the other workers in the villages and in the cities. Our agricultural economy has a great potential for development. It can guarantee basic food supplies to the Greek people and support the local production of materials and equipment required by agriculture. With a suitable selection of exportable products in qualitative varieties and out-of-season produce, it is possible to avoid one-sided foreign orientation and to develop the multilateral commercial relations of the country.

Agriculture and agricultural industries, utilization and exploitation of forestry resources and fisheries could contribute decisively to the development of the Greek economy. This very balanced development of the field and factory as well as a new quality of life in the rural areas will assist the revitalization of the rural areas, and at long last alter the fate and life of the Greek farmer. It is in this way that we will be able to start the reconstruction of our national area.

143. An intensive and long-term effort will start on decentralization, which will be the basic lever for the development and strengthening of local self-government, with cleansing the cooperative movement and with democratic planning--in other words, with the participation of the Greek farmer in the planning process. This will be done along the following lines:

The agricultural sector will develop in harmony with the other basic production sectors. Competition between agriculture and industry will at long last cease. Agricultural industry will open up new vistas for the rural areas and for our entire economy.

Industry and tourism will stop competing and will support and be supported by agriculture. The resources of an estuary lake will not be destroyed by industries, which must and can be situated at proper and suitable sites after exhaustive study.

The exploitation of the forests presupposes a forest industry and forest roads, not just a simple protection of forests.

A general all-national plan of cultivation options will provide solutions to the distribution program and will be drawn up with the participation of the farmers. It will be revised at regular intervals after evaluation of the prospects and possibilities offered by the domestic and foreign markets. Alternative solutions will be provided in order to deal with the cultivation of single crops.

A battle will be waged to supply a substructure for agricultural productivity. The necessary land improvement, drainage, irrigation and flood control projects will be planned on the basis of a program in order to increase the productivity of the soil.

The regional development program, which will be prepared with the help of the farmers, will determine time priorities and the order of the projects. Entrusting the regional investments program to local self-government will make these projects a matter of popular concern and will considerably cut down both the time of construction and their cost. At the same time, regional development will diminish income differences and inequalities within the agricultural sector itself.

The national land registry office and the detailed registration of water and land resources will considerably help agricultural development.

Guaranteeing the country's self-sufficiency in basic food commodities will be a basic portion of PASOK's policy.

Full social insurance, guaranteeing the quality of life and work and cultural revival presuppose a continual and responsible effort, over and above measures for social justice, in order to keep the population in the countryside and in order to support the development policy.

144. The basic means for achieving the goals, the cornerstone of PASOK's agricultural policy, will be the productive agricultural and agricultural-industrial cooperative. It will offer new employment opportunities to the rural population, it will join the field to the factory and it will promote the development of the region. We will proceed to an immediate liberation and cleansing of the cooperative organizations with the implementation of a new law guaranteeing their democratic organization and structure as a first step.

There are two basic principles that will govern the cooperatives:

--sovereignty of the farmer over his land.
--voluntary participation.

The state and semistate expediency controls are abolished. The control for legitimacy is conducted only by the judicial authority. The cooperatives will actually undertake the entire task of acquisition of supplies, marketing of products, transportation and sales. There will be a decisive cooperation between the cooperatives and local self-administration at all levels so as to promote the broader interests of the village and the district and assist the cooperatives with the essential projects of substructure.

145. Within the framework of more general directions, there will be a first series of measures concerning social justice, foundation of the new agricultural development, reorganization of agricultural production and the utilization of land. Pensions, social care, education, cultural renaissance will be the first goals, primarily in Greek rural areas, and also in the rest of the country.

As PASOK has repeatedly declared, there will be a radical improvement of farmers' pensions and their amount will be adjusted to the cost of living. At the same time, a firm and lasting system of supplementary insurance will go into oepation with its own resources so the total pension will not be less than the pension of the other working people. The female farmer will acquire her own substantive and self-sufficient pension. The National Health Organization will start its efforts in the rural areas where medical services in the villages will be combined with district health centers. Special emphasis will be put on preventive medicine.

Priority will be given in meeting the educational needs in the mountains, valleys and islands. The PASOK government will care for the catering and transportation of students. The establishment of additional teaching aid in public schools for students who need it will reduce the present unequal treatment of the district youth.

The school will become the cultural cell of the village and will be linked with cultural centers and the free open universities of the local self-administration in urban centers. Literature, theater, music and art will reach every corner of the country.

PASOK will directly protect the true income of the farmer and help him to raise it. The securing of satisfactory prices with national subsidies is only one measure in this direction. At the same time, the farmer's income will be increased with measures to reduce production costs and increase productivity, thus contributing to the agricultural development in general. Decisive help toward this purpose will come from aid for agricultural equipment, agricultural machinery, fuel, pesticides, animal feed and fertilizers, as well as from constant guidance in the field by the agriculturist, forester and veterinarian.

The increase of productivity will also be assisted by public investments that will cover, to a certain extent, the electricity charges for irrigation as well as the maintainance of irrigation projects.

Finally, there will be full insurance of production as well as of the vegetal and animal stock and measures for preventive protection. A special organization under the jurisdiction of the Agriculture Ministry will undertake these insurance activities concerning the productivity of agriculture so that OGA [Farm Insurance Organization] may unimpededly be devoted to the social welfare of farmers. Agricultural loans, particularly for reorganization purposes, will be granted under favorable terms. Agricultural debts in disaster areas will be settled.

The agricultural bank will actually become a cooperative bank. In addition to cooperative organizations, its administration will also include representatives of local self-administration and the state as well as representatives of the working people. The bank's role in agricultural development will be safeguarded and strengthened.

The property of monasteries and privileged farms will be socialized and mainly utilized for common cooperative cultivation in conjunction with resolving the problems of farmers without land. The real estate of public arable land and of NPDD [Corporate Body of Public Law] will be utilized as model research and cultivation centers as well as for collective agricultural cooperative exploitation.

146. Training and research in senior educational establishments and special institutes will become the foundation stone for agricultural development. Specifically, the establishment of centers for agricultural training for the youth--as well as for older farmers--will open up new horizons for Greek agriculture. At the same time, parallel centers for practical specializations in various agricultural sectors (agrotechnology, tree husbandry, beekeeping and so on) will also operate. Cooperative training will also play an important role in the cleansing and development of the cooperative movement.

147. The farmers and the cooperatives will be supported by a genuine, uncontrolled, nonparty, mass unifying agricultural trade unionism. The established agricultural associations will not discontinue their operations. They will continue to claim and to defend the interests of the agricultural class, but at the same time and through democratic planning they will also participate in the development process for a development which will, at long last, alter the life of the farmer and the farming woman in vibrant Greek countryside, a beehive of creativity and civilization.

E. THE ROLE OF THE MERCHANT MARINE AND OF TOURISM

A) THE MERCHANT MARINE.

148. PASOK considers the merchant marine as one of the most dynamic sectors of the country and sets the speediest possible development of this sector at a policy goal. At the same time, however, it will try for its greatest possible connection to the national economy.

Our country, and Piraiers particularly, could become an international maritime center.

Our goal is to create a Greek maritime market and to deal with maritime credit and insurance within the framework of a joint insurance organization.

149. Priority will be given to the development of the ship repair industry with the small- and medium-size repair enterprises as the backbone. These businesses--which employ thousands of workers--could operate cooperatively and they will be assisted with credit measures. Bans against the installation of floating docks, which are the privilage of large ship-building industries, will be lifted.

It is of equal importance, however, to establish such units in different parts of the country--Salonica, Patrai, Volos, Kriti, etc.--so that there is geographic decentralization of their activities and so that the labor force is not concentrated in Athens and Piraievs, as is the case today.

Measures are also essential for the further development of industries parallel to shipbuilding, and the modernization of telecommunication stations.

The country's port installations will be fundamentally improved and the smooth transportation of commodities will be guaranteed together with satisfactory conditions of work for port workers.

It is also necessary to modernize and draft all provisions of maritime legislature. Special weight will also be given to the decisive improvement of maritime training.

150. PASOK attributes special significance to the solution of the multiple problems faced by workers in the merchant marine industry. The problem of crew shortages, which appears today among Greek crews, is related to the existence of insufficient incentives for merchant seamen--such as unhealthy accomodation on the ships, problems of remuneration, pensions and so forth.

There is also the probelm created by the bipartite agreements for the hiring of low paid alien personnel. For PASOK the hiring of aliens only has meaning when this concerns supplementary personnel, in other words, only when all possibilities of hiring personnel from our country have been exhausted. Toward this end it is essential to establish priority in the hiring of Greek crews through the establishment of suitable incentives.

PASOK has already proposed the establishment of a joint organization of employers and employees which will:

--propose suitable incentives.

--guarantee automatic priority in the hiring of Greek merchant seamen.

--promote the establishment of a special fund for the temporary relief of Greek merchant seamen who wish to be hired but who, for objective reasons, cannot be hired immediately.

B) TOURISM

151. The rightwing has dealt with tourism only as a source of foreign exchange and not as a sector with economic, social and cultural dimensions. At the same time, the true importance of the contribution of foreign exchange from tourists was not evaluated with the direct and indirect foreign exchange expenditures for services and for the importation of products used by the tourists or required by tourist installations.

Tourist development was carried out one-sidedly and often in competition with other productive activities, particularly with domestic tourism which was left on the sidelines. The large hotel complexes tie down huge investments and loan funds without creating a large number of employment positions due to their seasonal operation.

The multinational companies have penetrated the entire tourist sector--from the foreign travel agency, to the foreign airline company, to the foreign-owned tourist installation--with the result that a large portion of the benefits are transferred overseas.

At the same time, in many areas of the country there is no tourist development, while other areas rely exclusively, and dangerously, on tourism.

152. The basic trends of PASOK's policy are the following:

The tourist sector will be harmonized with the development of the other productive sectors of the economy. At the same time, it will be coordinated with the preservation and presentation of our cultural heritage.

Local tourism and group tourism will also be developed through incentives for vacations and a more productive scheduling of workers vacations.

An effort will be made to strengthen the substructure for the expansion of the tourist season, for development of winter tourism and for the geographically balanced distribution of tourist activities to the greatest possible degree.

A stop will be put to the uneconomical establishment of tourist behemoths, and private initiative will be strengthened--particularly in the form of tourist units for family use--together with the encouragement of municipal tourist enterprises with the participation of the workers.

A systematic effort will be undertaken to improve basic services for tourists instead of spending vast sums on shop-window projects which offer little and only embellish the local area. Particular emphasis will be given to the improvement of transportation and to the protection of native buildings and the cultural environment.

A special effort will be made to improve training in tourist services.

The role of local self-government in the planning, control and implementation of tourist policy will also be strengthened.

In conclusion, decisive measures will be taken to prevent the selling of Greek land to aliens.

GENERAL EVREN OBSERVES NAVAL EXERCISES NEAR ERDEK

TA211507 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1500 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Erdek, 21 Jul (AA)--Head of State Gen Kenan Evren was near Erdek Tuesday to observe naval exercises by a flotilla. Evren, accompanied by the other members of the National Security Council, watched from a gunboat as Norwegian-made "Penguin" rockets were used in shooting exercises.

ARAB DIPLOMATS THANK TURKMEN FOR LEBANON STAND

TA211829 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] The ambassadors and charge d'affaires of the 12 Arab diplomatic missions in Ankara paid a visit to Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen today to express their gratitude for the Turkish Government's reaction in the face of the recent Israeli attacks directed against Lebanon. The Arab mission chiefs expressed their hope for the continuation of this stand. Turkmen expressed Turkey's indignation in the face of the latest Israeli attacks on Lebanon and said that his government denounced these acts. Turkmen added that support on this issue to brotherly and friendly Arab countries would continue.

VILLAGE AFFAIRS MINISTER RETURNS FROM IRAQ

TA212042 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Village Affairs and Cooperatives Minister Munir Raif Guney, who was in Baghdad to participate in ceremonies to mark the anniversary of the Iraqi revolution, returned home today. In a statement at Istanbul's Yesilkoy Airport, Guney said that he conducted constructive talks with Iraqi Government officials on the subject of further promoting the existing economic and technical cooperation between the two countries.

DENKTAS ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL TALKS ON CYPRUS

TA212030 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT Jul 81

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus [TFSC], Rauf Denktas, arrived in Ankara today for an official visit. Deputy Prime Minister and Cyprus Coordination Committee President Zeyyat Baykara, who was in the TFSC participating in celebrations to mark the anniversary of the Turkish peace operation, also returned home on the same airplane. President Denktas was received at Esenboga Airport with military honors. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen welcomed Denktas on behalf of Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. Other officials were also present at the airport.

In a statement at the airport, Turkmen said that during talks with President Denktas, views would be exchanged on the future developments of the intercommunal talks in Cyprus as well as the economic issues of the Turkish Cypriot community. Turkmen expressed his conviction that the talks, as in the past, would be beneficial for the common objectives.

In reply, President Denktas said that he was in Ankara in a bid to conduct an assessment of the Cypriot problem. Denktas continued: The essence of the problem is to formulate an agreement that will permit the two entities in Cyprus to live in liberty and equality in a climate that will not allow the dominance of one entity on the other. Both the Turkish Government and the Turkish Cypriot community have done their best in order to take constructive steps that would lead to this goal. Though the Turkish Cypriot community would continue to exert efforts with good will in order to reach such an agreement, Denktas said, this should not mean that concessions would be made from Turkish Cypriot rights. Denktas will begin tomorrow his official talks in Ankara.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 141 23 July 1981

AUSTRIA

Kreisky Says Begin Now 'Playing With Fire' [ARBEITER-ZEITUNG 22 Jul] E 1
Palestinian Group Seeking To Kill Chancellor E 1
Briefs: New Portuguese Ambassador; Ambassador to Cape Verde; Outgoing Danish Ambassador E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Government Calls Israeli Air Attacks Unjustified J 1
Foreign Minister Reiterates Policy on Poland J 1
Chancellor Schmidt Returns From Ottawa Summit J 1
SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG Examines Ottawa Outcome [22 Jul] J 1

FRANCE

Mitterrand Comments on Ottawa Summit Communique K 1
Budget Minister Outlines Economic, Fiscal Policy [LE MONDE 17 Jul] K 1
Communists Charge Leadership With 'Opportunism' [LE MONDE 17 Jul] K 2
PCF Refutes AFP Dispatch on Leadership Differences [LE MONDE 19-20 Jul] K 4
PCF Aide Criticizes Israeli Bombing of Beirut [L'HUMANITE 18 Jul] K 4
LE FIGARO Views Mitterrand's Euromissile Stance [8 Jul] K 5
Mitterrand, Niger President Discuss Economics [LE MONDE 12-13 Jul] K 7
LE MONDE: Mauroy Program 'Idealistic Gaullism' [10 Jul] K 7
LE MONDE Considers Reagan Latin American Policy [11 Jul] K 8
LE MONDE Scores Begin's 'State Terrorism' [19-20 Jul] K 9

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Premier Spadolini Comments on Ottawa Summit L 1
Red Brigades To Release Cirillo for Ransom L 1
Sandrucci To Be Released L 2
Craxi on Trends in European Left, Other Issues [L'EXPRESSO 5 Jul] L 3
Rome: Agca Found Guilty, Give Life Sentence L 5

PORTUGAL

Pinto Balsemao Criticizes Council of Revolution [DIARIO DE NOTICIAS 20 Jul] M 1
PCP Sends Greetings to PZPR Ninth Congress [AVANTE! 16 Jul] M 2
EXPRESSO Cites Concerns Over Spain's NATO Entry [11 Jul] M 3
Trade Union Plans Possible Strike Action M 8

SPAIN

PSOE's Gonzalez Reports on Paris Meeting [LA VANGUARDIA 19 Jul] N 1
Spanish, Mauritanian Foreign Ministers Confer [LA VANGUARDIA 12 Jul] N 1
PSOE Leader Comments on Autonomy Discussion [EL PAIS 11 Jul] N 2

SWITZERLAND

More Bomb Blasts Rock Lausanne, Geneva O 1
Lausanne Department Store O 1
Geneva Station O 1
Second Explosion at Station O 1
Armenian Group Suspected O 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

East Bloc Naval Activities Reported Off Coast P 1
[BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 18 Jul]

NORWAY

Opposition Leaders Comment on Nordic Zone Issue [AFTENPOSTEN 13 Jul] P 1
Frydenlund Consults With Netherlands Counterpart [AFTENPOSTEN 20 Jul] P 2
Oil Minister Seeks Closer Contacts With Mexico [AFTENPOSTEN 10 Jul] P 2

SWEDEN

New Ecology-Oriented Party Prepares Program P 3
[SVENSKA DAGBLADET 17 Jul]

CYPRUS

Missing Persons Committee Holds Second Meeting [Ankara] R 1
CYPRUS MAIL Report [23 Jul] R 1
Kiprianou Address at 'Invasion Anniversary' Rally R 1
[PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICE 20 Jul]
Paper Claims U.S. Uses Kyrenia Radio Stations [APOGEVMATINI 17 Jul] R 3
Turkish Cypriot Denial [BOZKURT 22 Jul] R 4
CSSR Deputy Minister Arrives on Official Visit R 4
Meets Kiprianou R 4
Soviet Proposal on Conference Deemed 'Utopian' [O AGON 22 Jul] R 5
EDEK Party Sponsors Anti-Israel Demonstration R 6
North Administration Condemns Israeli Raids [Bayrak Radio] R 6
AKEL Leader Departs for Sofia, Moscow Visits R 6
Socialist Party EDEK Leader Departs for Paris R 6
Denktas Replies to Greek Cypriot Allegations [Bayrak Radio] R 6
Denktas Intransigence Scored [I ELEVTHEROTIPIA 22 Jul] R 7

GREECE

Gunmen Kill 2, Injure 50 in Piraievs Attack S 1
Government Protests Hungarian Statement on Szabo S 1
Minister Averof Announces New Economic Measures [AKROPOLIS 19 Jul] S 1
KKE Sends Congratulatory Cable to Poland's Kania [RIZOSPASTIS 22 Jul] S 4
KKE-Interior Paper Comments on PASOK Platform [I AVYI 21 Jul] S 4

TURKEY

Denktas Begins Contacts, Meets Prime Minister T 1
Meets Evren T 1
Paper Comments on Cyprus 'Operations' Anniversary [TERCUMAN 18 Jul] T 1
Directorate Changes Collective Wage Agreements T 2
Command Begins Trial of 81 Religious Militants T 2

KREISKY SAYS BEGIN NOW 'PLAYING WITH FIRE'

AU221500 Vienna ARBEITER-ZEITUNG in German 22 Jul 81 p 1

[Peter Pelinka report on interview with Chancellor Kreisky in Berlin 21 July]

[Text] Berlin (AZ)--"Begin is playing with fire." That is how Chencellor Bruno Kreisky commented on the latest armed clashes between Palestinians and Israels in Lebanon in an interview with ARBEITER-ZEITUNG: "That is a genuine war." Thus the painstakingly initiated attempts to stabilize Lebanon will be foiled.

Kreisky sees the main responsibility for this development in "Begin's very aggressive policy." Apart from all humanist objections to Begin's attitude, Kreisky said, it is also a completely nonsensical policy. "Certain Israeli circles have repeatedly turned against the UN peace forces or against the proposals contained in the Vance-Gromyko paper with the argument that they would also bring the Soviets more into this region. But if there is anything which has actually brought the Soviet Union into this region, if Soviet ships are now cruising off Syria, then this is the result of Begin's policy.

In the interview, granted shortly before his return flight from Berlin to Vienna, Kreisky reiterated his appeal to all Western states, featured on the front pages of Berlin newspapers, to make increased efforts for a peaceful solution of the Middle East conflict: "All democracies carry the most grave responsibility for the fact that an undeclared permanent war is being waged in the Middle East--they have not sufficiently succeeded in using all their weight to achieve a peaceful settlement."

PALESTINIAN GROUP SEEKING TO KILL CHANCELLOR

LD190839 Hamburg DPA in German 0708 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Vienna, 19 Jul (DPA)--The Austrian authorities are looking for eight members of the extremist Palestinian splinter group "Al-Asifah" who are believed to be determined to kill Chancellor Bruno Kreisky. In an interview with the Vienna news magazine PROFIL, prereleased to DPA, Austrian Interior Minister Erwin Lanc said: "We have believable but unproven information that Al-Asifah members have been in Europe, perhaps already in Vienna, since 18 June, and they are trying to become active." Their first target was Chancellor Kreisky, who is especially well guarded by security forces.

Another PROFIL article produces written proof as evidence for the claim that Moscow provides direct logistic support for the Abu Nidal group. According to PROFIL, the Soviet Union is not at all interested in a solution to the Palestinian problem in which it is not directly involved, and for that reason supports organizations competing with Fatah.

BRIEFS

NEW PORTUGUESE AMBASSADOR--On 15 July Tomas de Melo Breyner Andresen, newly appointed ambassador of the Portuguese Republic to Austria, presented his credentials to Austrian President Rudolf Kirchschlaeger in Vienna. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 16 Jul 81 pp 1,2 AU]

AMBASSADOR TO CAPE VERDE--Ambassador Dr Helmut Schurz, Austrian mission chief in Dakar, has recently presented the letter of accreditation which also accredits him as ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the Cape Verde Republic to President Aristides Maria Pereira in Praia. [Text] [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 11 Jul 81 p 3 AU]

OUTGOING DANISH AMBASSADOR--Yesterday President Dr Rudolf Kirchschlaeger received for a farewell visit Joern Stenbaek Hansen, ambassador of the Kingdom of Denmark, who will be leaving Austria soon. [Text] [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 11 Jul 81 p 1 AU]

GOVERNMENT CALLS ISRAELI AIR ATTACKS UNJUSTIFIED

LD221624 Hamburg DPA in German 1333 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 Jul (DPA)--The Federal Government expressed "extreme concern" today over the continued fighting across the Israeli-Lebanese border and again condemned all acts of violence in the Middle East. After a cabinet meeting in Bonn, government spokesman Lothar Ruehl told journalists that the government found Israel's air attacks on Beirut "in no way justifiable or acceptable." According to the spokesman, the government warned that further escalation of the clashes could have unforeseeable consequences for peace.

FOREIGN MINISTER REITERATES POLICY ON POLAND

LD221510 Hamburg DPA in German 1433 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 22 Jul (DPA)--With the conclusion of the Polish party congress, the Federal Government feels that its policies on Poland have been justified. Vice Chancellor and Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher reminded the federal cabinet in Bonn of FRG hopes for a continuation of a moderate policy of reform, government spokesman Lothar Ruehl said at a news conference today.

Genscher emphasized the fact that German policy on Poland still stands. He reiterated the most important points: 1. Strict noninterference in Poland's internal affairs--this will also be observed by other states. 2. Economic support of Poland "within the framework of the possible" which must be continued in the interests of European security. 3. Positive establishment of an external framework for overcoming Poland's internal problems. This includes the use of East-West relations of all other European states as well as the constructive development of the CSCE process.

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT RETURNS FROM OTTAWA SUMMIT

LD222054 Hamburg DPA in German 2022 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Hamburg, 22 Jul (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt returned this evening to the Federal Republic from the Ottawa world economic summit. Schmidt left the Luftwaffe special plane at Hamburg-Fuhlsbuettel airport while the delegation accompanying him flew on to Bonn. Before leaving Ottawa, the chancellor announced as one of the results of the conference new thinking by the Federal Government as a consequence of the U.S. adherence to high interest rates. These measures include increased efforts to cut public spending and reduced state borrowing on the capital market.

SUEDDUTSCHE ZEITUNG EXAMINES OTTAWA OUTCOME

DW221017 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 22 Jul 81 p 4

[Commentary by correspondent Franz Thoma: "Between Discord and Accord"]

[Text] Ottawa--Anyone expecting something definite from the Ottawa economic summit instead of a particularly spongy communique will leave with disappointment. He may condemn the monstrous meeting and ask himself: Was it worth it? And what do the people who were isolated for days in the Montebello log castle know about real life anyway? These and similar thoughts miss the crux of the matter--unfortunately, we are tempted to add. This world is so incomprehensible because it has become so difficult and simple, patent recipes cannot be given from a summit either.

We must, therefore, limit ourselves to the concept that the coordination of the powerful of this world is the actual value of such meetings. Since the outbreak of the energy crisis and particularly since the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, such meetings, which after all have caused some things and prevented others, have also become a forum of political coordination. This was demonstrated in Venice in 1980--and confirmed in Ottawa--when for example, the debate on NATO's dual decision resulted in Ronald Reagan's preparedness for arms control negotiations. But even so, he has sensed latent European mistrust because of his demand to limit exports of technology to the Soviet Union. Other topics were Namibia, Lebanon and considerations about what would happen if the Soviets intervened in Poland.

These issues were as important as fighting inflation and unemployment. French President Mitterrand did not succeed in changing the sequence, but he did succeed in attributing equal importance to all aims. This would be quite acceptable if it were not accompanied by thorough Socialist doubts regarding the validity of the most correct formula--expressed by Helmut Schmidt at the 1977 London summit--to the effect that inflation does not eliminate, but creates unemployement.

In the long run, particularly if France's budget reserves are exhausted some day, a new conflict potential is developing among the 7 here and the 10 in Europe, no matter how much the chancellor aims for tactical concessions. That serves cooperation with partner Mitterrand, who is rather determined regarding his development policy preferences, particularly the implementation of both parts of the counterarmament decision. It is a question of whether other "achievements" such as the European currency system, a logical miscarriage in itself anyway, will come off unscathed in view of the contradictory German-French economic philosophy.

But the final document contains a bitter pill for Mitterrand as well. What the participants in the summit meeting are doing is intruding directly in budget policy with their thesis that the industrial nations are experiencing an interruption in growth rather than a recession and that they must overcome this interruption with a shift of public spending from consumption to investments. The chancellor, incontestably the moderator of the Ottawa round, will be able to refer to this in the Bonn budget discussion as a valid argument against all those who incorrigibly, and in their failure to see the facts, still propose overcoming the economic slump, unemployment and the overall trade deficit by a policy oriented toward demand. The fact that in addition Reagan did not or could not promise to reduce the U.S. interest rates will even increase the move toward austerity and credit will remain expensive. To that extent, one may even be satisfied with the results of Ottawa, seeing it as being devoid of illusions.

This is less true for the concerted European wailing over the high exchange rate of the dollar attributable to the interest level, in which Schmidt seconded Mitterrand regarding Reagan "without any sharpness." Why have summit meetings been established, anyway? After all, they had their start at Rambouillet in 1975 with the concern of the Europeans over a declining dollar; at that time, President Ford was supposed to leave the banknote printing press alone. This is what Reagan has done. This and nothing else is the policy of a restricted money supply with its definitely high interest rates being the result. Now again, the Europeans do not like it. In this respect, they turn out to be quite shortsighted. Even after the Ottawa summit, there is no such thing as an economic policy of the industrial nations that is uniform or at least shows a trend following a basic scheme. The quarrel over the natural gas deal and Reagan's demand for intensified embargo policies toward the East at the very time when he himself lifted the U.S. grain embargo against the Soviet Union without any coordination with the allies are but two points substantiating this lack of uniform economic policy. Everybody is sinning, even where they, much to the joy of the Germans, conjure up lofty principles in the question of free world trade in which the Federal Republic is bound to be interested. But at least they will be sinning after Ottawa with an even worse conscience. Perhaps they will desist from one sin or another. This is in itself something, although not much. But whoever deems this to be too little must find a different world for himself.

MITTERRAND COMMENTS ON OTTAWA SUMMIT COMMUNIQUE

LD221358 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Excerpts] The end of the Ottawa summit--the leaders of the seven big industrial powers have now gone home and it seems that everyone is happy.

A short time ago President Mitterrand arriving back from Ottawa at Roissy also declared himself very satisfied:

[Begin recording] As far as the defense of France's interests are concerned, I can say that not a single element in the final communique detracts from our priorities and on most points, we are moving forward, sometimes not enough, but at least in the direction I would have wanted. So I have come home satisfied. But now we have to deal with and master concrete facts at home, together with the premier and the government. [end recording]

BUDGET MINISTER OUTLINES ECONOMIC, FISCAL POLICY

PM221517 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Jul 81 pp 8, 9

[Excerpt] On 15 July, the National Assembly began the debate on the adjusting finance bill for 1981.

Budget Minister Laurent Fabius stated: "The previous team was forced out of government because it was not always able to understand that, aside from dry figures, it is important to be concerned with people." He added: "Consequently, I would like the debate which is about to be started to open a period in which budgets will take on a more humane aspect." Fabius assessed the economic situation, stressing: "The results are very mediocre. Industrial production dropped by 8 percent during the first quarter of 1981 compared with the first quarter of 1980. Gross domestic production was down 2 percent. The number of people unemployed, however, increased by 200,000. Furthermore, the inflation rate reached 14 percent and although it slowed down during the first quarter of this year that was because the previous government had omitted to reflect the increase in energy costs and to adjust public service charges. Finally, in foreign trade, things are no better. We have seen an increase in the level of foreign industrial products entering our country."

Turning to the "auditing of past accounts," Fabius observed: "In the initial finance law, the deficit forecast for 1981 was set at Fr29.4 billion. When I took office, I did the accounts again. I observed that the sum of FR29.4 billion was really Fr51.3 billion. The additional amount was Fr22 billion." Expanding on this subject, the budget minister stated: "In the previous government's forecasts, the unemployment figures predicted for 1981 were exactly the same as the 1980 figures; from the viewpoint of benefits that resulted in an underestimation of around FR3.5 billion. Was that a mistake? Similarly, they 'forgot' to forecast FR650 million for the iron and steel convention which was nonetheless already in force. Was that a mistake? They also 'forgot' the donation of Fr900 million capital for the maritime navigation company and the state chemical company. I very much doubt whether that was a mistake!"

After listing the provisions included in the finance bill, he noted: "once this adjusting finance bill has been passed, the deficit forecast will be equal to less than 2 percent of gross domestic production. It will be essentially financed by borrowing and, as far as the rest is concerned, in conditions ensuring that the printing of money is less than the increase in gross domestic product." This law," he continued, "is an adjusting law on two counts: It adjusts an economic policy which, in our view, was not the right one. It adjusts a certain view of austerity which meant that the same people always bore the brunt of the effort."

Fabius then described the "economic factors which will prevail between now and the end of the year." In this connection, he stated: "According to the official figures put forward by the nation's accounts commission on 3 July, the rate of inflation will be around 14 percent, the increase in commercial gross domestic product should be a little more than 0.5 percent with a strong increase in the second half of the year; unfortunately, there will be 200,000 more unemployed people and the balance of current payments deficit will be around Fr30 billion. The way the situation developed in the first half of the year, in which there was a considerable recession, will be very different from the second half of the year in which industrial production will increase by between 5 and 6 percent.

The budget minister also stated that "our tax system is old-fashioned, unjust and plagued by fraud," adding: "We do not have any model to follow but one to avoid: that of the previous 7-year term or at least a great deal of what it did." He continued: "Gone are the days of legislation which is designed to be incomprehensible to ordinary people and can at best be assimilated only by the administration and also by those who wanted to thwart it." Fabius confirmed that in the fall session he will put forward a bill on wealth tax and announced that the government accepts the amemdment of gifts of property adopted by the Finance Committee. "Henceforth," he asserted, "any major fiscal law will come into force only after a test simulation" and the government will submit to the assembly a simulation report on a possible change in the way in which the labor tax is levied.

Turning next to tax fraud, he stated: "The attitude to tax fraud must be changed. Stealing taxes is robbing other people and such theft deserves no indulgence...but there is no question of establishing an inquisitorial system or of turning every taxpayer into a suspect. The taxpayers' guarantees will be scrupulously respected and the information available to them improved."

The budget minister called for a "real mobilization against unemployment" and stated: "We are told that our policy will be costly; people warn us to pay attention to the important balances and some of those who asked us to wait 500 days before judging their actions are not giving us 50 days before condemning ours.... Nobody can predict the social consequences which an increase in unemployment would have. Everybody is thinking about recent dramatic events like the eruption of violence in Britain and, going further back into the past, the terrible consequences which unemployment had on freedom elsewhere in Europe." "Mobilization for employment," Fabius concluded, "means mobilization for democracy and peace and everything else comes later. This finance law marks a first step in that direction. It isn't yet 'the' change but it is 'a' change."

COMMUNISTS CHARGE LEADERSHIP WITH 'OPPORTUNISM'

PM221018 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Jul 81 p 7

[Patrick Jarreau report: "PCF Participation in Government Generates 'Antiopportunist' Criticisms Within the Party"]

[Text] The policy pursued since 10 May by the PCF which, after campaigning for the legislative elections in the name of the presidential majority, signed a political agreement with the PS and joined the government, is generating criticisms within the party. A certain number of cadres, of party "functionaries" and militants were hostile to the appeal made by the Central Committee between the two rounds of the presidential election to vote for Mitterrand on 10 May. This hostility manifested itself at the section meeting which preceded the second round of the election (LE MONDE of 3-4 and 7 May) and -- among officials of the Central Committee in particular -- among certain officials of the Communist press (LE MONDE of 8 July).

The report delivered by Georges Marchais to the Central Committee, which met on 25 and 26 June, by criticizing the "form" of the unitarian path pursued by the PCF up till 1977 and by pinpointing this as the cause of the "serious reverse" which the party had just suffered, was in keeping with the positions of this kind of cadre and militant. At the same time, the belief that the PCF failure should be attributed to the antiunitarian line pursued for 3 years was rejected out of hand and the main spokesmen for this belief, that is, the prime movers of the Communist Encounters group, were censured.

Despite the gestures thus made by the leadership to the antiunitarian trend, the PCF participation in the government and the political bases of this participation are provoking reactions among the circles which have been fighting for a long time against what they consider to be the opportunism of the party leaders. Thus, the publication LE COMMUNISTE DES BOUCHES-DU-RHONE in its July issue condemns the PCF participation in a "bourgeois government." It says: "The PCF had its justification in the class struggle carried to its conclusion, in the dictatorship of the proletariat. As soon as that raison d'etre was abandoned, it was inevitable that this organization, deprived of its justification, would be put in jeopardy.... For the working class, it is a balance sheet of political bankruptcy from which all the consequences must be drawn."

LE COMMUNISTE DES BOUCHES-DU-RHONE adds: "The militants who understand that government participation is class collaboration must assume their responsibilities. To continue to resist in isolation in order to be beaten each in his own corner is the same as throwing in the towel. It is in their capacity to fight against the tide, to establish contacts and organize themselves in appropriate forms that the chances of reforming a real communist party depend." In this regard, the Marseilles opposition publication voices its interest in a "manifesto of veterans" dated 22 June and mailed to a certain number of Communists.

This text asserts: "The presidential elections of 26 April and 10 May and the legislative election of 14 and 21 June set the seal on one of the greatest defeats the PCF has recorded in France for 60 years. A policy is judged on its results. This then is the result of the policy of the 22d and 23d congresses. This setback tends to nullify the gains of the struggles waged, the efforts made and the sacrifices of the tens of thousands of militants who have fallen to make the PCF what it once was."

It adds: "If today tens of thousands of opportunists and reformists feel at home in the PCF instead of being in the PS, it is because the reformist current has seized hold of the party leadership.

"Contrary to what the party leadership asserts, the present crisis marked by unemployment, inflation and the increased threat of war is not merely the consequence of Giscardian rule but has its origin and development in the nature of capitalist society. Otherwise, how can we explain the 10 million unemployed in the EEC?

"In any case, the solution cannot be found in contemporary society, but only in the march toward socialism. Any participation in power in these conditions is a policy of class collaboration. It is aimed at asking the working class to accept the consequences of the management of capitalist society by social democracy and thus to suffer a policy of austerity which it ought on the contrary to fight with all its might. It is the consensus much sought by the bosses. The watchwords 'make change succeed' is no more than camouflage to obtain acceptance of ministerial participation and a new capitulation."

In conclusion, the authors of this manifesto (Note: The only reference given is Maurice Harmann, 139 Rue Pelleport, 75020 Paris) demand that the next PCF congress be prepared on the basis of two reports, "the report of the leadership and the report of the supporters of the Marxist-Leninist line."

PCF REFUTES AFP DISPATCH ON LEADERSHIP DIFFERENCES

PM230844 Paris LE MONDE in French 19-20 Jul 81 p 5

[Text] On 17 July, the PCF Press Office issued a statement describing as a "tissue of polemical lies" an AFP dispatch published 2 days previously, 16 July, and entitled "Dissidence Within the PCF."

The Press Office explains that Transport Minister Charles Fiterman's statement disputing the idea that the PCF's participation in government could have the effect of "binding it" the better to "weaken" it was not a reply to internal criticism but to journalists' commentaries.

The PCF Press Office then states: "There must be a radical change in the running--and probably also the status--of AFP." It adds: "It is unacceptable that AFP should publish lucubrations unworthy of professional journalists working in an agency whose vocation is so important... AFP employs 800 journalists in France and in the world. The vast majority of them undoubtedly want to shoulder their responsibility. It is, therefore, appropriate to create in AFP the conditions of independent management and administration which would enable them to do so in the best possible way."

The AFP dispatch stated that "pro-Soviet elements in the (PCF) leadership, notably, Gaston Plissonnier, Georges Gosnat and Maxime Gremetz, who were hostile to the entry of Communists into the government, might eventually demand their withdrawal." The PCF Press Office denies that these three leadership members (note: Plissonnier a d Gremetz belong to the Central Committee Secretariat and Gosnat, a Central Committee member and deputy for Val-de-Marne, is the PCF's treasurer) are the "leaders of a 'pro-Soviet faction'" and that they "opposed the participation of Communist ministers in the Mauroy government." "These are both complete lies," the Press Office states.

The Press Office then lumps together two separate elements in the AFP dispatch. The first was a reference to the communique published by the PCF after the meeting between Gremetz and Vadim Zagladin, deputy chief of the CPSU Central Committee International Section. The second element was a report on "several petitions signed by longstanding party members," which allegedly constitute "factional initiatives." The Press Office writes: "What is the factual basis for the assertion that the recent meeting between Maxime Gremetz and Soviet leadership member Vadim Zagladin is part of this 'pro-Soviet' current which is going so far as factional efforts within the PCF? None. It is invention, machination and extrapolation."

AFP's chief editor points out that he refuses to argue publicly with other press agencies.

PCF AIDE CRITICIZES ISRAELI BOMBING OF BEIRUT

PM220939 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 18 Jul 81 p 5

[Report on 17 July statement by PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz: "An End to the Israeli Aggression in Lebanon"]

[Text] "For several hours Lebanon has been subjected to an attack of unprecedented scale. Downtown Beirut itself has been bombed and several residential districts are burning. Hundreds are dead and wounded. While southern Lebanon is being savagely attacked, the air force, navy, artillery and every possible means are being used against the civilian populations and the country's economic potential. This is, therefore, a systematic attack," PCF Politburo member Maxime Gremetz said Friday evening. He added:

"First, I would like to express my emotion at this massacre and my solidarity with the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples, with the Lebanese national movement, the Lebanese Communist Party and the PLO. I also would like to express the PCF's indignation at these indescribable actions. I also would like to stress that they come at a time when a degree of detente could be expected in Lebanon and an initial agreement among the various forces seemed possible.

"Lebanon has just asked for an emergency UN Security Council meeting. We are bound to support this proposal which may end the attacks immediately and enable Lebanon to progress on the path of national understanding.

"Once again peace in the region is at stake; this therefore confirms our conviction of the need for an all-embracing settlement in the Near East which includes the Palestinian people's inalienable rights.

"I call on all democrats, all freedom and peace-loving men to express their indignation to the Israeli Embassy--an end to the Israeli aggression in Lebanon."

LE FIGARO VIEWS MITTERRAND'S EUROMISSILE STANCE

PM201542 Paris LE FIGARO in French 8 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Paul-Marie de la Gorce article: "France and Euromissiles"]

[Text] Everybody feels that the present debate in the Western countries on what are called the Euromissiles and in particular those which the United States wants to deploy in the European countries that are members of the Atlantic military organization (in other words, not in France, of course) is of considerable importance. But it must be said that the obscurity and technicality of the debate confuse the exchanges of ideas and arguments. Nonetheless, it is important to see the significance and consequences of this matter if only for a very recent reason: The new French Government feels it appropriate to become involved and to adopt a stance. And this, as will be seen, is bound to have repercussions on the country's political and strategic interests.

Some historical and technical facts should probably be recalled to clarify the discussion. We are talking about medium-range nuclear weapons, in other words, those which, launched from Soviet territory, would strike West Europe or, launched from West Europe, could strike European Russia. They were first and almost exclusively American. After the Thor missiles based in Turkey and northern Italy, which were withdrawn after the Cuban missile affair in 1962, came the F-4's and F-111's deployed in Britain and the aircraft carrying nuclear arms aboard the U.S. Mediterranean fleet. The U.S. lead was such that Washington refused for a long time to include this type of weapon in the SALT agreements, especially since they played a crucial role in the "graduated response" scenario which is, as everybody knows, NATO's official strategy.

From 1975, the Soviets began to deploy the SS-20 missiles. This missile succeeded the SS-4 and SS-5, which entered service in 1957 and were extremely inaccurate. This new mobile missile with a range of 4,500 to 5,000 km and packing 150 to 300 kilotons is principally effective by virtue of its accuracy. In a preemptive strike, this accuracy would enable it to destroy in one or two salvos the bulk of NATO's conventional forces and their logistical infrastructure, at least when the scheduled program has been completed. There are now 220 SS-20 missiles, two-thirds of which are deployed in the West.

In response, the Americans had NATO decide on 12 December 1979 to deploy 572 Pershing II and cruise missiles, the Europeans obtaining an agreement that this deployment would depend on the result of negotiations on all theater nuclear weapons--which heralded the current controversy.

Those are the bases of the debate. When all the facts of the debate are not known, mistakes occur. For instance, it is not true to say that the NATO decision would increase the alliance's nuclear potential because there are plans to withdraw 1,000 tactical nuclear weapons and as many Pershing I missiles as there will be new Pershing II missiles. On the other hand, nobody can seriously deny that the redeployment of the Pershing II and cruise missiles brings about a strategic and even political change in Europe. Hitherto, the United States had never deployed on the European Continent missiles capable of striking the heart of Soviet territory. That, therefore, means an important change in the conflict scenarios.

In addition to this, there are the technical objections to the December 1979 decision. It is impossible to believe that the U.S. Euromissiles will really be mobile, in other words, invulnerable. In the highly urbanized and industrialized areas of West Europe--so much so that we already know the bases where they would be deployed in Britain. If these missiles are not fired "first," their efficacy will also be considerably reduced owing to the mobility of the targets which they would then have to hit since the Soviet forces would be on the move. In addition, the relatively slow speed of the cruise missiles give the Soviet air defense system a good chance.

Three new facts have now emerged, which complicate the controversy and make the outcome uncertain. First, the growing opposition: Belgium is still reserving its final agreement; The Netherlands' agreement is more than uncertain following its recent elections; the British agreement would be called into question by the Labor Party's possible arrival in power. In addition, Chancellor Schmidt only obtained the support of his own party by promising the announcement of Soviet-American negotiations on all theater nuclear weapons. Thus, he has made his position dependent on a decision by U.S. diplomacy, which, judging from some signs, doesn't yet seem to have made up its mind about such negotiations and over which he has no hold. But above all, the plan itself is being discreetly called into question by some U.S. military leaders who, according to reliable sources, are backing down in the face of the technical difficulties of perfecting the Pershing II missiles and are moving toward a sea-to-ground cruise missile.

French About-Face

It is in this general context that the French about-face should be placed and assessed. President Mitterrand has, in fact, decided to give French backing to the deployment of U.S. Euromissiles in Europe. His predecessor had not done so. The reasons were easy to understand: In so doing, France maintained a position apart in the controversy over the Euromissiles and maintained a margin for maneuver which would give it full freedom of action should it wish to intervene in general negotiations; it maintained its authority by not becoming involved in a quarrel in which, to say the least, not all the political, strategic and technical arguments were on one side; finally and most importantly, since it had a different strategy and was not to receive U.S. Euromissiles on its territory, it did not play the ridiculous role of the adviser who would not foot the bill.

The present government's behavior seems to be part of a new line which it is tempting to describe as more "Atlanticist" and which is also illustrated by its decision to reduce the level of French-Soviet relations and its agreement to Spain's membership in NATO.

Many people probably will be tempted to believe that this is an appropriate response to the present resurgence of international tension. Nonetheless, it is important to see what the new stance on the Euromissiles affairs could mean. It is not only an abandonment of the arguments and advantages which have just been mentioned, it is also the adoption of a stance by France in the framework of a strategy which is fundamentally a strategy of counterforce confrontations or nuclear war. It could be thought to be suited to the capabilities of the United States and the USSR. It is certainly not France's strategy.

Is this an initial, disguised attempt to call France's strategy into question? Nobody wants to cast this suspicion on the government but its attitude raises the question. Furthermore, by becoming involved in the question of theater nuclear weapons in Europe, it is likely to give a new argument to the Soviets who have always demanded that these weapons be included. This would not be in keeping with the interests of France which must be able to freely develop its research and to manufacture nuclear arms at a level sufficient to ensure its security.

These questions are too serious for public opinion not to be fully aware of all their implications.

MITTERRAND, NIGER PRESIDENT DISCUSS ECONOMICS

PM211614 Paris LE MONDE in French 12-13 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] Economic questions and development aid were the main points discussed at the meeting which Niger President Kountche had with Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee on 10 Jul.

The Niger president stated that the talks "took place in an atmosphere of confidence which will enable us to work together in our development action." "Relations between France and Niger are full of hope and promise," Kountche said. He is the second African head of state, after Houphouet-Boigny of the Ivory Coast, to be received by Mitterrand. "We are aware of France's limits; it is not alone, and it has its own development problems even if it is one of the so-called developed countries," Kountche added.

Mitterrand, for his part, after paying tribute to Niger's efforts to ensure its economic stability, condemned the "threats" hanging over its economy, which are caused by "speculation in raw materials and the general imbalance in the international monetary system."

Mitterrand asserted that over the coming months and years relations between Paris and Niamey "can only be strengthened for the good of our two peoples."

LE MONDE: MAUROY PROGRAM 'IDEALISTIC GAULLISM'

PM171546 Paris LE MONDE in French 10 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial : "The Third Rose"]

[Text] Mauroy's government statement could not add many new elements in foreign policy after the relatively complete explanations given over the past few weeks by Mitterrand and Cheysson. At least the exposition has the advantage of putting forward an overall philosophy.

If we had to find one word to sum up the major concepts put forward by the premier it would be appropriate to talk of "idealistic Gaullism." The aspects of Gaullism which the government retains are attachment to the country's independence, the desire to "hold its place in the world," confirming this principle by a very clear pledge in favor of not only maintaining but constantly perfecting the deterrent force. The idealism is reflected in the emphasis given to human rights, to international solidarity and even to the "example" which France feels entitled to present to the world, on the basis of numerous historical precedents.

Certainly, General de Gaulle did not fail to "state what was right" and even to strongly reprimand his best friends and allies. But he did so frequently for the sake of "realpolitik"--a concept which he found appropriate in leading France amid what he called the "cold monsters" of the nation-states. His successors went further in that direction sometimes to the extent of giving the impression of a France which was egotistical and even petty in the defense of its immediate and frequently commercial interests. Mitterrand and Maurdy clearly intend to change that image.

Will they succeed? The emphasis placed on the need to improve employment and on the organization of a European "social area" herald difficult contests in the Communist bodies, not to mention the difficulties heralded by the expected "moralization" of arms sales.

It is probably a good thing to condemn the "egoism of the big industrial nations" which "keep billions of men in slavery." But it will be even more difficult to find the means of allocating 0.7 percent of the gross industrial product to Third World aid out of the resources of a crisis-ridden economy. Mauroy is right to warn that the declared aim of making these underprivileged nations into real partners will mean "harsh industrial or agricultural redeployments."

Finally, although there were no Eastern bloc refugees at the 21 May ceremonies--Latin Americans were invited--it should be noted that Mitterrand invited Mrs Shcharanskaya, the wife of the imprisoned USSR dissident, to the Elysee on Thursday, although Giscard d'Estaing had refused to meet with Andrey Amalrik. This audience comes at an appropriate time to illustrate Mauroy's appeal to all exiles and to "gagged men."

Although the premier reaffirmed the interest shown in Latin America and Africa, condemning foreign interference, the ambiguities which characterized the attitude of previous governments in some East-West problems have been fully dispelled, be it with regard to Afghanistan or Poland. This is a good start for "stating what is right" in Europe and making the "third rose" to which Mauory referred bloom.

LE MONDE CONSIDERS REAGAN LATIN AMERICAN POLICY

PM201540 Paris LE MONDE in French 11 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Washington and the South"]

[Text] The policy adopted by the Reagan administration from the day it took office toward the countries, powerful or small, of the southern hemisphere is an abrupt change from the previous team. The about-face was particularly spectacular in Central America where Carter's vacillation coincided with an escalation of tension. It was El Salvador, portrayed as a kind of bridgehead of Soviet-Cuban interference, that Reagan and Secretary of State Haig took as a test of their determination for change.

The military and economic aid supplied to the junta has certainly not produced all the desired results. The case, hastily drawn up, did not convince all U.S. allies, even in Latin America, and Washington was forced to admit that the "proofs" of "Nicaragua's intervention" in El Salvador were not sound. The U.S. military backing for the Duarte junta's forces (at least 50 "advisers") has so far not produced a reversal of the military situation.

A political solution is essential. The new French Government, which several times clearly criticized Washington's policy in Central America, is recommending an agreement between the parties involved to end the horrifying daily killing in this little country that is being crushed in a spiral of violence. In the United States itself, hostility to U.S. involvement in El Salvador is growing in the universities, in Congress and in business circles. In the INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE on Thursday, George Ball condemned this return to the "Foster Dulles mentality" and the obsession of the Reagan administration, which is trying to blame the USSR for all the U.S. "troubles."

Nonetheless, Reagan is planning to revive this "hardline" policy in Latin America on two levels. First, he is planning a new diplomatic offensive on the "Salvadoran case" to try to counterbalance the adverse effects in the United States and abroad of the criticisms in some quarters of the justification for an involvement which, pushed to its extreme limits, could lead to a mini-Vietnam on U.S. doorstep.

Second, he is instructing Washington's representatives in the international development finance bodies, starting with the World Bank and the Inter-American Development Bank, to approve plans for loans to four countries featured on Carter's "blacklist": Chile, Argentina, Paraguay and Uruguay. Indeed, those four countries obtained considerable sums despite the former president's "instructions," which were feebly implemented. The same was not true when Washington wanted to "punish" regimes like those of Gen Velasco Alavarado in Peru or Salvador Allende in Chile. Reagan's lifting of the ban also will necessitate approval by Congress in Washington. But this decision, although in keeping with a policy aiming to reestablish contact with "friendly and allied" regimes even if they are apt to violate basic human rights, is already sparking off protests, especially in Congress.

LE MONDE SCORES BEGIN'S 'STATE TERRORISM'

PM211143 Paris LE MONDE in French 19-20 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "State Terrorism"]

[Text] There can no longer be any doubt that the fierce bombing of Beirut is a deliberate act of state terrorism rather than a reprisal operation. Begin himself virtually admitted as much when he stated, just a few hours after the bombing of the capital, that areas of civilian population in Lebanon would no longer be spared during Israeli operations against Palestinian targets.

There is reason to wonder what prompted the Israeli prime minister to decide on this operation. Was it necessary to avenge the deaths of three innocent Israelis in Nahariyya by organizing a positive massacre of equally innocent Palestinian and Lebanese civilians? Friday morning Jerusalem's newspaper editorialists, feeling some resentment of Begin's irresponsible action, expressed their fear of an "escalation" which was very likely to get "out of control," urging him to "keep a sense of proportion, not to stoop as low as the enemy" and to "rule out any operation which is not exclusively for security purposes." The Likud leader decided to act differently.

All indications are that Begin has decided to close the door to any reasonable political solution to the Palestinian problem. Hasn't he stated on many occasions that the only place he is prepared to meet with the "PLO terrorists" is on the "battlefield"? In addition, the prime minister seems to have interpreted his narrowly won election victory as a popular mandate to adopt a tougher policy toward the Palestinians, against the whole world and primarily against Washington which, despite the relative moderation of its reaction to Friday's operation, is not far from thinking that the raid on Beirut, carried out the very day there was to be an official announcement of the lifting of the embargo on the delivery four F-16 aircraft to Israel, constitutes a provocation by Jerusalem. Was Begin's intention to destroy what little credibility the U.S. Government still enjoys in some countries in this region after the Tammuz operation, carried out, like the Beirut raid, with aircraft supplied by the United States?

The Beirut raid also has embarrassed President as-Sadat who, despite the affronts regularly administered by his "friend Begin," is calmly pursuing the process of normalization with Jerusalem despite increasingly virulent internal opposition. Be it simple coincidence or Machiavelian intention, the agreement on the multinational force in Sinai, which "seals" the Israeli-Egyptian peace, was initialed in London a few hours after the fierce bombing of Beirut.

Indeed, the main political victim of Friday's raid could well have been the Camp David agreement, already moribund and which its Arab critics have always described as a smokescreen intended to conceal "Israel's aggressive intentions toward the Arab nation" under cover of the peace between Cairo and Jerusalem.

PREMIER SPADOLINI COMMENTS ON OTTAWA SUMMIT

AU221542 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Ottawa, 22 Jul (ANSA)--In his final remarks at the seven-nation economic summit here, Italy's premier, Giovanni Spadolini underscored that this year's parley coincided with one of the most serious periods in Western economy and after a series of leadership changes in some of the West's biggest nations. In a brief span of years, Spadolini said, the societies we have built have gone from the security of the certainty of their values to doubt and uncertainty.

The premier told the leaders of the other participating nations that "it is our specific responsibility to interpret and understand the perturbations of our society in order to restore vitality to our economic system, to broaden trust and consensus around our institutions and political democracy which are inseparable from economic stability and civic progress".

Spadolini went on to say in part: "We are convinced that there is no possibility of stable growth if the two monsters, inflation and unemployment, are not defeated.

"The Italian Government illustrated its anti-inflationary policy, aimed at a gradual and controlled containment of inflation through cutbacks in public spending and a labor-management accord. The summit also dealt with energy problems and North-South relations. We are aware that developing nations' debts have become unbearable. There is the urgent problem of supplying assistance to various nations so that their debts will not increase further.

"We must attribute suitable priority to harmonious development of North-South relations; otherwise, international policy will be weakened and we will renounce our specific responsibility towards nations dominated by hunger and underdevelopment".

In this light, Spadolini granted an interview to "ANSA" in which he announced that the Italian Government will promote, in cooperation with the European Economic Community and the Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO) a series of concrete steps aimed at alleviating the problem of hunger in the world. The Italian Government leader said all the governments welcomed the Italian initiative.

Spadolini also told "ANSA" that the summit's positive results will make themselves felt in time.

"There are divergencies over monetary policies and we discussed them frankly. The United States expects that the success of its policy will make it possible to lower high-interest rates by the end of the year. This is the most that the joint European initiative achieved".

Turning to concerted European efforts to fight inflation, Spadolini said one of the key points is to contain public spending and draft a social pact which widens consensus on basic economic policy. With respect to east- est negotiations on nuclear weapons, Spadolini said that the Ottawa summit has given a "clear signal: the West wants to resume negotiations with the East and relaunch detente as long as the talks start from a basis of certain equilibrium of forces."

RED BRIGADES TO RELEASE CIRILLO FOR RANSOM

AU221716 Rome ANSA in English 1635 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Naples, 22 Jul (ANSA)--The Red Brigades urban guerrilla organization today announced it will release Naples Regional Councilman Ciro Cirillo who was kidnapped on April 27.

The announcement was contained in a leaflet found by a newsman of a local paper after he received an anonymous tip. The communique said "we are giving you back the hangman Cirillo".

The document also said that they have "expropriated" from Cirillo, his family and the Christian Democrat Party one billion 450 million lire (about one million two hundred thousand dollars). Should this be confirmed, this will have been the first time the terrorists have demanded a ransom for the release of one of their hostages.

Cirillo is a Christian Democrat councilman in the Campania region and a member of the Committee for the Reconstruction of Naples, which suffered considerable damage in the November killer quake. In the kidnapping nearly three months ago, the Red Brigades killed two of Cirillo's bodyguards and injured his driver.

As a condition for releasing Cirillo--who had been sentenced to death by the captors' "people's tribunal"--the Red Brigades demanded government-subsidized compensation for the unemployed in Naples and confiscation of all empty apartments in the area for those left homeless by the quake, as well as publication of their documents on the "Cirillo campaign".

The 31 thousand registrered jobless in Naples will receive unemployment compensation, six thousand lire a day (about five dollars), as soon as the Labor Ministry gets the procedure under way. The trailer camp which had been set up after the November earthquake for the homeless is being dismantled. The quake victims are being transferred either to requisitioned apartments or to prefabricated homes.

The decision to issue unemployment compensation and to dismantle the camp were taken before the Cirillo kidnapping, according to the city administration. Authorities have categorically denied that there have been any negotiations with the Red Brigades.

As for the captors' documents, they have not been published in their entirety in any major newspaper but have been summarized. The only paper to carry the documents unexcertped was the Socialist Party paper L'AVANTI and a leftist weekly. Excerpts of the "Cirillo trial" appeared in the French leftist daily LIBERATION.

Sandrucci To Be Released

NC221834 Paris AFP in English 1827 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Naples, Italy 22 Jul (AFP)--The Red Brigades terrorist group announced today they would shortly free two hostages, prominent Christian Democrat Party official Ciro Cirillo and Alfa Romeo motor car firm director Renzo Sandrucci. The announcement in Milan of Mr Sandrucci's release came soon after word here by the Red Brigades that they would shortly "turn over the executioner Cirillo", who was kidnapped on April 27. Mr Sandrucci was kidnapped on June 3. Both announcements came in communiques found after anonymous telephone calls.

It was not stated precisely that the politician, who had earlier been condemned to death by the Red Brigades after interrogation in his "people's prison", would be returned alive, but police believed the tone of the message indicated he would be. No sentence had been announced for Mr Sandrucci.

The Naples communique said the kidnappers had obtained a sum of 1,430 million lire (more than one million dollars) from Mr Cirillo's family and the Christian Democrat Party for his release, "which they would know how to put to good use."

The statement added: "The Cirillo campaign has opened a new area of strategic struggle; the reappropriation by the proletariat of the social wealth taken from it by the bourgeoisie." The son of the politician, Bernardo Cirillo, refused to comment on the announced ransom payment. The Milan communique relating to the Alfa Romeo director said: "The Sandrucci trial is over. The accused will shortly be provisionally released."

CRAXI ON TRENDS IN EUROPEAN LEFT, OTHER ISSUES

PM220836 Rome L'ESPRESSO in Italian 5 Jul 81 pp 4-13

[Paolo Mieli roundtable discussion with PSI Secretary Bettino Craxi, philosopher Lucio Colletti: "The Italian Is Socialist and Now He Knows It"]

[Excerpts] Rome--Colletti: A few days before the latest elections, the following statement, not without an ironical allusion, emanated from PCI headquarters: "Italy's Mitterrand is Enrico Berlinguer." Before that, as deputy Craxi will undoubtedly recall, Berlinguer said, when the PCI's polemic with him and the PSI was at its height, that with its new leadership the PSI was in danger of placing itself outside the workers movement. Now, however, [PCI Secretariat member] Giorgio Napolitano is talking in terms of a "left-wing victory" in France (as if everything had gove well for Marchais too); while others are making observations from a unitary angle on the Italian election results too. Alberto Ronchey, on the other hand, has insistently and I believe rightly stressed the so-called "K factor," namely the fact that an alternative will only become possible if the Socialists advance and the Communists lose considerable ground. On the other hand, the call for leftwing unity obviously evokes the old concept of class unity. But the unity of the classes and even of the "working class" has been smashed by the development of modern industrial society, which has replaced the homogeneous 18th century "class" with a multiplicity of highly mobile social strata and stratifications which challenge the whole of classical Marxist analysis....

Craxi: Your first point concerned the identification with Mitterrand. In my opinion, people in our country must be judged and assessed, for better or worse, for what they are and not for what they could be compared to. If a competition is underway to nominate an Italian Mitterrand, I will not be taking part. I see in this competition above all a propagandist expedient to exploit the spectacular electoral success of a leftwing force in France by claiming some kind of shared ownership of it. Moreover, there is the old habit of the part of the Italian left afflicted with a kind of provincialism with ancient roots, which consists of seeking myths, symbols and guidance outside the national context. Sometimes, it is Stalin, next time Mao Zedong, another time Che Guevara, and now a pontifical role for Mitterrand is being envisaged. It is a habit which also affects groups regarded as critical and vanguard intellectual elites of the left. I am referring to the "manifesto" group, for instance.

With regard to the second point, there is a contradiction in terms in the PCI's stance. On the one hand, the Communists, especially Berlinguer, solemnly announce: "We are and will remain Communists" and claim their "specificity" as an original Communist pole, while rejecting or issuing a potentially very negative verdict on the European socialist and social democratic parties' experiences; on the other hand, and at the same time, they long to be a kind of alter ego of the French PS which, however--with its ups and downs, successes and defeats, vices and virtues--belongs entirely to the European socialist family; and has since the 1920 Tours congress.

The third point concerned the "united left" which won the elections. I will merely point out that in France there was in fact a victory for Socialist policy and a defeat for Communist policy. When Mitterrand stood as a candidate for the presidency of the republic bound closely to the Communist Party by a political and policy pact, he was defeated. Now, having adopted an independent stance openly challenged by the Communists, he has become the rallying point--in accordance with a non-Manichean view of social groups and ideological trends--for forces originating from profoundly different areas. Thus the French Communists, having lost a substantial share of their vote and having observed that Mitterrand was still in the race with Giscard, found themselves obliged to change their positions radically, from one week to the next.

As for Italy, we have seen that in the mid-election campaign the PCI reasserted the validity of the Salerno statement, a brief document published on 27 November (you see, I even remember the date) introducing the new "democratic alternative" strategy, without mentioning the PSI even in passing. An attempt was subsequently made to remedy this extraordinary omission. But it was enough to demonstrate what an enormous error of viewpoint and strategy and how much ideological and political ambiguity were inherent in this stance on the PCI's part.

The fourth point was the K factor. I have always believed and still believe that in Western Europe there is no possibility of a communist-led leftwing alternative. It would not even exist in Eastern Europe where, if it were possible to vote, the communist parties that have realized communism would risk being excluded. It is enough to recall the results of an opinion poll carried out by a French organization in Poland a few months ago, which gave the Polish communist party 3 percent of the vote. In Italy, the modification of the balance of forces within the left is certainly a precondition for eventually building an alternative, apolitical balance radically different from the one that has exercised hegemony in the country for over 30 years.

L'ESPRESSO: Meanwhile, what is the nature of PCI-PSI relations? [Colletti answer omitted]

Craxi: We do not presume to submit the PCI to examinations, just as we refuse to submit to them ourselves. Among all the current mistaken ideas, the most mistaken of all is that the Socialist Party can confine itself to an auxiliary role, subordinate to the Communist Party--or the DC, of course. A few months ago there was a very interesting PCI Central Committee meeting, which discussed relations with the Socialist Party. And it was precisely one of the people normally identified with the Communist Party's orthodox, unadulterated tradition, namely, Gian Carlo Pajetta, who made a just criticism of some of his party comrades. Basically, what Pajetta said was this: Forget the idea of being able to exert the kind of pressures that were once exerted on the Socialist Party or to split it internally so as to subjugate it; we must be realistic and strive to understand the new socialist reality. Like it or not, we must recognize it for what it is. Pajetta's remarks seemed to me the most realistic and honest observation to emerge from that debate and seemed designed to correct a line too heavily burdened by the negative canons of tradition.

Be that as it may, I repeat; we do not presume to submit the PCI to an examination. We are raising issues. For instance, when we raised the issue of Leninism we did not do so to prompt humiliating abjurations. We wanted to discuss the topicality and validity of the whole or part of this doctrine, which for decades formed the body of communist doctrine, so as to reach conclusions for the present and the future. I will not go into the question of the third path. I will leave that to Norberto Bobbio, who has already resolved it according to the old principle of the syllogism ["tertium non datum"]. In any case, I do not undervalue this quest for a different path that the Communists are talking about. I note that on one fundamental issue, the matter of power, the PCI is still influenced by the full weight of its traditional stance. The PCI has a manipulatory view of alliances; it moves from the tactical flexibility typical of Leninist revolutionaries, who are always ready to make any compromise to gain power, to violence, which is also typical of Leninist revolutionaries. I am referring, of course, to polemical violence in the approach to problems, the unscrupulous way in which relations with other political forces are trampled....

Colletti: Are you referring to the kind of polemic conducted against the DC and the manipulation of the scandals?

Craxi: Partly, but not only that. As I see it, democracy is a system of coexistence in which conflicts must always reflect some moderation. Especially in a democracy such as Italy's, which is a highly articulate democracy.

Another substantial vestige of communist tradition is the highly bureaucratized structure of the PCI's political organization. The party of directed or interconnected mechanisms embodies in itself the idea of a highly bureaucratized society. However, I repeat, we are raising issues and seeking a thorough revision in various fields not in order to gain a polemical advantage (there is always time for polemics, within certain limits) but because this is the principal desire of the progressive forces.

L'ESPRESSO: Let us talk about foreign policy. [Colletti answer omitted]

Craxi: Mitterrand has an absolute majority in the National Assembly and therefore fears no conditioning by the PCF. It was fairly logical and predictable that he would decide to settle his accounts with the Communist Party, which granted him its votes in the second round. In exchange, as you have pointed out, the PCF has stated its full acceptance of the PS foreign policy line, which is the clearest point in the French Socialists' platform. It must not be forgotten that on the most thorny issue, which has split and still splits even the European socialist movement, the PS adopted a line of clear support for the decisions adopted by us and the SPD comrades (even though the problem does not directly affect France, which has its own independent nuclear capability).

Be that as it may, in Italy the Communists entry into the government does not seem to be a very topical issue. Indeed, having changed its line, the PCI is pursuing--or so it says--a democratic alternative without the DC. And since in this Parliament, in the eighth legislative period, no majority can exist without the party with the relative majority, it merely remains to draw the conclusions and to state that the question of the PCI's government entry does not arise.

As for international issues, there is a fundamental line on which socialist and communists agree; everything must be negotiated. They differ, however, in their assessments of the various values involved. We Socialists believe that the USSR has a policy inspired by the principle of expansionism. It is enough to look back through history to see that it is (as even Marx observed) a constant characteristic of Russia, which has always been a major nation and which is now a major military power. Therefore, when negotiation time comes, we want Italy to place itself clearly on the Western side....

L'ESPRESSO: On the European or the U.S. side?

Craxi: Neither Europe nor the United States can negotiate with the USSR alone. Therefore, when I say on the Western side I mean that we must ensure that the Western alignment remains united and solid, taking into account each country's diversities, independence and autonomy and the need to surmount incomprehensions and conflicts.

ROME: AGCA FOUND GUILTY, GIVEN LIFE SENTENCE

AU221705 Rome ANSA in English 1630 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 22 Jul (ANSA)--The six-member jury of a Rome Court today found Mehmet Ali Agca guilty of attempting to assassinate Pope John Paul II and ruled for a life sentence. The prosecution had called for a life sentence for the Turkish national who on May 13 shot the pope in St Peter's Square. The young Turk was also charged with attempted murder of two American tourists who were in the Vatican square at the time. Agca admitted before the trial that he fired the shots that wounded the pope and the two women, but he refused to appear in court Tuesday because he wants to be tried in the Vatican City.

In his summing-up speech this morning, court-appointed defense lawyer Pietro d'Ovidio asked the jury to carefully consider the evidence which he said confirmed the defendant's paranoid personality both before and after the shooting, and asked for a lighter sentence.

Yesterday, state prosecutor Nicolo Amato described Agca as a "salesman of death" obsessed with killing the pope as a symbol of a system he hated.

PINTO BALSEMAO CRITICIZES COUNCIL OF REVOLUTION

PM230727 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpt] Francisco Pinto Balsemao criticized the Council of the Revolution's activity in an extremely vehement manner in Aveiro yesterday, even maintaining that it is jeopardizing freedom, especially when, despite "not being a body elected by the people," it interferes in the activity of state bodies such as the assembly and the government, "which are elected by the people."

The prime minister, who at the time was speaking in his capacity as Social Democratic Party [PSD] chairman during a lunch commemorating the seventh anniversary of the party's founding in the Aveiro district, maintained that the Council of the Revolution vetoed the law delimiting the public, cooperative and private sectors solely for reasons of a political nature, accusing that state body, moreover, on the basis of the opinion it expressed through a communique making public the grounds for its rejection of that law, of raising the "specter of fascism when it says that the law would support a system maintained by the previous regime."

In the Social Democratic leader's opinion, the Council of the Revolution "exists solely for the defense of personal interests and to prevent the government from governing." For this reason, he issued a "condemnation," while paying tribute, on the other hand, to the four council members who voted against the veto.

In addition, again in connection with that law, Pinto Balsemao criticized the president for the stance which he adopted, comparing it with that of Pontius Pilate--"an historical figure and we all know why." Later, he also said that "the president's stance does not reassure us."

Democratic Alliance Does Not Relinquish Mandate

"We do not relinquish the mandate which we received from the people," the PSD chairman asserted at one point in his lengthy speech. He concluded: "We will not allow the Democratic Alliance's disintegration."

After maintaining that the holding of an interim election would constitute an "attack on democracy," Pinto Balsemao asserted that it is necessary to maintain the "Democratic Alliance's cohesion," warning immediately afterward that "critical support is not sufficient; we demand solidarity and commitment." "The offense of omission is as grave at present as that of opposition." he added.

But the prime minister issued further warnings when addressing the scores of Social Democrats taking part in the lunch. One of them apparently addressed some members of his party: If there is anybody who advocates holding an early election, let him say so clearly "since he will be expelled." "I am not agreeable to heading the party and the government while there are centers of indiscipline," he concluded.

Almost at the conclusion of his speech, Balsemao criticized Mario Soares and the activity of his governments, concluding that as prime minister and PSD chairman, "I will not desist from taking the vessel to its destination, even against the current."

In addition, Pinto Balsemao told DIARIO DE NOTICIAS that the cabinet will analyze the situation resulting from the rejection of the law delimiting the sectors on Tuesday, deeming it premature for this reason to say whether the government will put forward a new bill. The prime minister adopted a similar stance when urged to comment on the government's possible resignation.

PCP SENDS GREETINGS TO PZPR NINTH CONGRESS

PM221537 Lisbon AVANTE! in Portuguese 16 Jul 81 p 11

[Apparent text of 10 July PCP Central Committee greetings message to PZPR Central Committee]

[Text] Dear comrades, on the occasion of the holding of the Ninth Extraordinary Polish United Workers Party [PZPR] Congress, the PCP Central Committee expresses to the PZPR Central Committee and, through it, to the communists, the working class and the working people of socialist Poland the Portuguese Communists' sentiments of fraternal solidarity.

The Ninth PZPR Congress is taking place in a particularly difficult situation for Poland. Exploiting mistakes and weaknesses in the PZPR's activity and the process of building socialism, internal antisocialist forces, enjoying imperialism's direct and indirect support, are attempting to destabilize the situation and intensify the crisis, to undermine the party's cohesion and prestige, to paralyze the authority of the people's power, to weaken Poland's ties of friendship and cooperation with the USSR and the other socialist countries and to create a counterrevolutionary situation.

Expressing our solidarity to the Polish communists in their activity to correct the mistakes and shortcomings which have occurred, to strengthen the cohesion of their ranks, to strengthen the party's leading role and to intensify its ties with the working class and the masses, we hope that the Ninth PZPR Congress decisions will contribute decisively to surmounting the crisis confronting Poland, will isolate and defeat the antisocialist forces, dispel the counterrevolutionary threat and defend and consolidate socialism's gains.

The evolution of the complex and difficult situation in your country, as well as its repercussions on the international situation, have been followed by the Portuguese Communists and workers with great concern but also with a high sense of solidarity.

Socialist Poland enjoys great esteem and prestige among Portugal's Communists and workers. The sufferings and destruction inflicted on the Polish people by Nazi-fascist barbarism, the joy of liberation achieved with the Soviet Army's fraternal assistance, the heroic work of national rebuilding, socialism's historic successes and achievements and the role played by Poland as a staunch member of the community of socialist countries in defense of peace in Europe and in the world have not been forgotten.

In the days of the clandestine struggle against the fascist dictatorship and following the 25 April 1974 revolution, the Portuguese Communists always regarded the achievements of Poland and of the other socialist countries as an encouragement and a contribution to their own struggle. Today, the reactionary forces and their government, which are engaged in a dangerous offensive against the Portuguese revolution's gains, are seeking to exploit the events in your country to combat our party, weaken the PCP's influence and prestige among the masses, intensify the attacks on democratic freedoms and other workers' rights, justify Protugal's servile alignment with imperialism's warmongering policy and take an active part in international reaction's anti-Soviet campaigns and subversive activities. Facing up to these campaigns and activities, the PCP is asserting before the Protuguese people its principled internationalist stances snd expressing its confidence that the Polish communists and people, enjoying the fraternal solidarity of the international communist movement and of the progressive forces, will surmount the current difficulties and proceed along the path of building socialism.

The defense and consolidation of socialism in Poland is not only in the interest of the Polish workers and people and of the defense of your country's independence and territorial integrity but in the interest of the entire communist and revolutionary world movement and of all the anti-imperialist and peace-loving forces.

Because of their achievements, their economic and defense potential, the power of attraction of their example and their policy of peace and internationalist solidarity, the socialist countries represent a decisive factor for the defense of peace and the progress of the world revolutionary process. In the current situation, in which imperialism--and, in the first place, U.S. imperialism and NATO's most warmongering circles--is setting in motion an extremely dangerous militarist and aggressive counteroffensive, attacking detente and threatening peace, the defense and consolidation of socialism in Poland take on even greater political importance.

Imperialism and international reaction, which have always made the struggle against the socialist countries a principal target for their strategy, are seeking by all means--both the most overt and the most insidious--to exploit the economic, social and political crisis which your country is experiencing in order to undermine socialism's positions in the hope of changing the correlation of forces in their favor and of dealing the workers movement and the national liberation movement a severe blow. We express our confidence that this will not happen and that, as in the past, Poland will remain a staunch member of the community of socialist countries.

Dear comrades, once more we hope that your Ninth Congress' decisions will lead to the strengthening of the PZPR and of its leading role, to the surmounting of the difficulties and to the strengthening of socialism in your country.

Strong ties of friendship, cooperation and fraternal solidarity, based on the principles of Marxism-Leninism and proletarian internationalism, were forged between the PCP and the PZPR in the course of many years of joint struggle. We will continue to work to ensure that those ties are intensified even further in the future, in the interest of the peoples' struggle for freedom, independence, peace and socialism.

Long live the friendship between the PCP and the PZPR!

Long live Marxism-Leninism!

Long live proletarian internationalism!

EXPRESSO CITES CONCERNS OVER SPAIN'S NATO ENTRY

P"221141 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 11 Jul 81 pp 4-5

[Miguel Almeida Fernandes article: "Military and Political Parties Concerned About Spain's Entry Into Atlantic Alliance"]

[Text] On the day Spain decides to enter NATO (political observers believe that membership could occur as early as September), Portugal is in grave danger of finding its national independence threatened if it is not able to safeguard its own interests in advance.

It is sufficient to recall Article 3 of the treaty signed in 1976 between the United States and Spain to ascertain that we will be reduced to the status of a beach on the Iberian Peninsula....

Let it be emphasized that, according to that provision, Spain is responsible for controlling the joint intervention zone (sic) created at the time, which includes our waters in the exclusive economic zone and our airspace.

If we add to this situation the possible formation of a military command in Madrid to which Portugal could become subordinate and if we bear in mind that the neighboring country's military potential is greatly superior to our poor arsenal, the concern will be greatly intensified. Imagine, for instance, Spanish aircraft regularly flying through our airspace or submarines defending our ports....

But is Spain even prepared to join the Atlantic alliance? As is common knowledge, that country is deeply split on this issue. On the one hand, the PCE and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party support the continuation of a policy of nonalignment, while, on the other hand, the Union of the Democratic Center and Fraga Iribarne's [Democratic] Alliance are aiming at the NATO challenge.

But underlying the aiming at this challenge is the passport which Spain wishes to acquire at any cost for its total and complete entry into the EEC.

This is the quid pro quo: Will Spain join NATO if its entry into the Common Market is facilitated?

The answer to this question has, apparently, already been given with the French and FRG foreign ministers' recent visits to Madrid. They both declared themselves in favor of Spain's entry into the alliance and this makes the stance of the Spanish Socialists more difficult.

Moreover, the magazine CAMBIO 16 reports that the Spanish Government is firmly determined to seek entry, even if it is not to do so formally. The tactic to be adopted will be initially to send a message to the alliance so that the latter can extend an invitation. This invitation will have to be confirmed by the organization's 15 members, including Portugal, which has no alternative. If everything is confirmed, Spain will soon be the 16th state to join NATO.

The Portuguese Armed Forces and the principal political parties--specifically, the Social Democratic Center Party, the Social Democratic Party and the Socialist Party--are viewing Spain's likely entry into NATO with great concern.

This very thing was ascertained during a recent meeting held within the framework of the assembly, which was attended by various military personalities who showed themselves to be concerned about the prospect of the neighboring country's membership of NATO, because of the consequences which this could have. There was even somebody belonging to one of the Democratic Alliance parties who allegedly stated--when the Spanish military attache appeared at the meeting--that "the presence of a PCP delegation would be preferable." "At least," he said, "we would all be Portuguese." It is within this context that the armed forces and the political class view Spain's entry into the alliance.

The national authorities have outwardly declared themselves in favor of its entry, but actually they are well aware that this could pose grave dangers for our country and relegate Portugal to a secondary level on the international scene and, more specifically, within NATO.

It is to be emphasized that Portugal is currently an extremely important geostrategic area as a result of its geographical location, while at the same time the mainland-Azores-Madeira triangle makes it possible to control the major lines of communication across the ocean.

According to some Portuguese military personnel and deputies, national independence itself could be threatened if our country becomes subordinate to a command located at the center of the Iberian Peninsula--more specifically, in Madrid; a command headed, obviously, by a Spanish officer.

As if that were not enough, the 1976 agreements signed between Spain and the United States granted the neighboring country the right to control Portuguese airspace; something which imposes great restrictions on our air force.

Last, the situation at sea will not be very reassuring either since we are in danger of finding our ports defended by Spanish vessels, in view of the poverty of our fleet.

Thus, the situation with respect to Spain's possible entry is rather controversial, although nobody has in mind a new Spanish invasion of Portuguese national territory. "It is simply necessary," according to what an expert on defense affairs told EXPRESSO, "to follow the principle that prevention is better than cure" and to acquire the means to enable Portugal to secure the necessary infrastructures making it possible to resist any foreign threat.

Three Viewpoints in Armed Forces

Three viewpoints with respect to Spain's possible entry and the stances to be adopted have been particularly prominent among our armed forces. Each of the theories expounded has been upheld by each of the three services.

Thus, sections of the navy recently championed Portugal's Atlantic vocation, according to which our country should turn again toward the sea and hence, in 1981, the United States and the autonomous regions. This viewpoint could even cost Portugal's possible entry into the EEC (which would have to be abandoned) as a condition for preserving a relative independence from the neighboring country.

The historical justification for this viewpoint lies in the fact that Portugal has always maintained close relations with the colonized territories or else with Britain. "The only time we broke with Britain," they add, "and turned toward the continent, we lost national independence."

This theory is obviously out of keeping with the current situation since Europe and the world in 1981 are not the same as in the 16th century.

The air force and the army have a coincident stance on the matter, both of them pointing out the need for us to play a double game. On the one hand, these two services say, we should maintain our intention of joining the Common Market and, on the other hand, we should be an "open window" on the Atlantic at the edge of West Europe, preserving our contacts with the United States and the Atlantic islands.

For it to be possible for this theory to be confirmed--its proponents add--it is imperative for a program of reorganization of our armed forces to be intensified in the near future and really implemented and for Portugal not to become subordinate to an Iberian command based in Spain.

Spanish Demands

Spain's entry will necessarily pose a number of problems which could bring about significant changes in the Atlantic alliance's current organizational structure.

According to Spanish experts on the matter, Spain will demand as a quid pro quo (or the price for its joining) entry into the EEC without further delays, and, in strictly military terms, priorities are aimed at the setting up of a military command in Madrid or in its vicinity.

To this end, the neighboring country is prepared to demand the integration of the entire territory of the peninsula, including Portugal, into a single command within the framework of ACE [Allied Command Europe] under the commander in chief of allied forces in southern Europe.

Obviously, this command, headed by a Spanish officer, would have a serious chance of absorbing the Portuguese Army. This very thing was mentioned recently by a prominent officer in the Portuguese Armed Forces, who drew attention to the danger represented by Spain's entry into NATO.

This command also would include the IBERLANT and west Mediterranean areas.

Another of Spain's demands, which is highlighted, moreover, by commentator Sanchez Gijon, is the reintroduction of the west Mediterranean command, placing a Spanish admiral in charge of it. This command was eliminated with France's withdrawal from NATO's military structure. The matter was apparently already debated in the Western Europe union 5 years ago when its restoration and inclusion in the surveillance of the Strait of Gilbraltar were advised.

The third demand concerns the possibility of the command of the IBERLANT area, located in Oeiras, being assigned in rotation to Spanish and Portuguese admirals. In addition, the Spanish authorities advocate the formation of a command identical to the Madeira command for the Canary Islands area. This structure should also be headed by a Spanish officer.

It should be recalled that COMIBERLANT (Iberian-Atlantic Command) in Oeiras has a commander, a deputy commander and a chief of staff with the rank of general officer, the posts being assigned to admirals of U.S., Portuguese and British nationality, respectively.

This situation will be changed very soon since NATO has for the first time agreed that a Portuguese naval officer should become senior commander. With Spain's entry, a further change is expected, one of the most plausible hypotheses being that the senior and deputy commanders will be Portuguese and Spanish in rotation, the post of chief of staff being reserved for the Americans and British.

NATO Supports Command in Madrid

In the meantime, everything suggests that the NATO authorities in Brussels will approve Spain's demands. Reliable sources have discussed to EXPRESSO that the alliance's military commanders have received the neighboring country's demands favorably since they will make NATO's strength inthe Iberian peninsula more cohesive and effective.

Portugal Is Under COMIBERLANT

In NATO's present organizational structure, the mainland territory and the autonomous region of Madeira are under COMIBERLANT, which in turn is subordinate to SACLANT (South Atlantic Command). Only the independent mixed brigade, based in Santa Margarida, is under SACEUR (Central Europe Command) and the Azores are directly under Norfolk in the U.S. state of Virginia, which is SACLANT's base. Thus, it transpires that the NATO command in which Portugal has some influence does not cover the Azores archipelago and this has cuased some unease in relations between our country and the United States. In fact, that country has demanded since World War II that the Portuguese archipelago remain under Norfolk in view of its strategic importance. However, the national authorities have pressed NATO and the Reagan administration over the last few months for the situation to be changed, specially if Spain joins the alliance.

Portugal Could Be "Steamrolled"

It is within this context that Portuguese military personnel have expressed great reservations about the neighboring country's entry into NATO. In their opinion, Portugal could be "steamrolled," on the one hand, as a result of the disparity in the potential of the two states' armed forces, and, on the other hand, insofar as a change in the alliance's present organizational structure and the possible formation of a command in Madrid would reduce our voice and presence in the organization even further.

Various experts on national defense affairs have thus formulated some strategies aimed at strengthening our position. Prominent among these is Brigadier Firmino Miguel, currently in command of the southern military region, who asserts at one point in his book "Portugal, Spain and NATO" that "the Portuguese Armed Forces in absolute terms and in light of Spain's entry into the alliance, display grave weaknesses which could directly and immediately affect national independence."

It is therefore within the framework of the so-called Portuguese strategic triangle (Portugal, Azores and Madeira) that our country should--according to the military experts--strengthen its independence and unity.

Thus, there is an agreement of viewpoints among the various services concerning the importance which this triangle could represent. Specifically because it will make it possible to control the major lines of communication across the ocean. Moreover, its angles make possible the formation of bases of operations aimed at the maritime security of a vast area extending from Bermuda in the west to the Canary Islands in the south. In addition, this triangle provides platforms of logistic support and stopovers for aircraft refueling, despite the recent innovation represented by the KC-10's, which will make possible direct flights by the C-141's and C-5A's to West Europe.

The Lages base in the Azores also functions as a support center for U.S. security within its "forward defense" strategy.

With respect to mainland Portugal--which is included in SACLANT but responsible for its own defense--its area is of crucial importance for logistic support.

A general officer quite recently asserted that the three main aims for the mainland and for COMIBERLANT are "mine warfare; maritime patrol and antisubmarine warfare; air support for combat and search rescue."

However, the fact is that neither COMIBERLANT nor Portugal have operational means to enable them to take action with respect to those aims. "This situation," the above-mentioned general stated, "endangers one of SACLANT's priority concerns in the area--keeping the principal Portuguese ports and airports open and defended and ensuring access to them under conditions of security."

Portuguese Strategy

At any event, everything suggests that Portugal's strategy with respect to Spain's entry into NATO involves various demands, namely, "guaranteeing the retention of the current SACANT/SACEUR terms of reference and continuing to accept IBERLANT's subordination to SACLANT, creating an entirely Portuguese area, seeking to bring the Azores within that command; strengthening our armed forces' "equipment."

The retention of the current terms of reference will prevent Portugal from becoming subordinate to the land, naval and air commands to be set up in Madrid. To that effect and in the specific instance of the navy, IBERLANT's subordination to an Iberian naval command (to be set up), which would be headed by a Spanish officer, would be averted.

In addition, the Portuguese strategists deem it extremely important not to allow IBERLANT to be transformed into the zone of common interest stipulated in the 1976 agreements between Spain and the United States. Such an area would allow Portugal to be covered by Spain at peninsula level, largely reducing our navy's access to the Atlantic.

As for the setting up of an entirely national area, including the three services, which could be designated "COMPORTLANT," everything suggests that it may soon come after being suggested to NATO by the Portuguese authorities.

The setting up of that command would guarantee the defense of the national territory and would lend support to Portugal's demanding the recovery of the Azores from the United States. In fact, the formation of that command would pave the way for that autonomous region's being militarily subordinate again to the mainland and not to Norfolk, as is now the case.

The advantages of such an integration would be obvious in the event of the neighboring country's entry since they would be reflected in the strengthening of our territorial unity. And this could be the first step toward our authorities deriving possible dividends from Lages' geostrategic position.

In return, Portugal would be prepared, according to military sources, to contribute with greater consolidation of NATO.

End of Treaties Between Spain and NATO

Thus, the entire strategy mapped out by the armed forces is aimed at the defense of the national territory and at maintaining two air, sea and land areas in the peninsula, one belonging to Portugal and the other to Spain.

At any event, national experts believe that Portugal, to guarantee its sovereignty, will have to demand the revision of, or else opt for nonacceptance of, the treaties of friendship between Spain and the United States so as to prevent superimpositions of any kind with respect to the defense of the COMPORTLAND area to be set up for our territory.

However, the entire Portuguese strategy depends on the reequipping of the armed forces. Without that, it will be virtually impossible to ensure national independence with respect to a Spain committed to NATO.

TRADE UNION PLANS POSSIBLE STRIKE ACTION

NC221222 Paris AFP in English 1009 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Lisbon, 22 Jul (AFP)--The Social Democrat General Labour Union (UGT) plans "an early global offensive, possibly including strike action" later this summer, its Secretary General Torres Couto said.

The campaign would be designed "to make the government govern or resign," he said. The union, to facilitate labour negotiations, wants the government to reconsider some price rises it announced recently.

The UGT is the second largest in Portugal, and has so far not been publicly critical of the center-right government led by Pinto Balsemao.

But its secretary general said last night the UGT believes that the programme of the ruling Democratic Alliance coalition has failed, and that "the finance minister is protecting the interests of big business and not the workers."

He also attacked "the hegemony of the Communist Party" over the country's leading trade union, the Portuguese General Labour Confederation (CGTP).

PSOE'S GONZALEZ REPORTS ON PARIS MEETING

PM230848 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 19 Jul 81 p 9

[EFE report: "Problems With France Should Be Parceled Out"]

[Excerpt] Madrid, 18 Jul--"The date for my next meeting with Calvo-Sotelo has not yet been set. I believe that it will be soon since we wish to complete the planned negotiations on autonomy, municipal and administrative problems by 31 July, "Spanish Workers Party Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez stated on his return today from his journey to Bonn and Paris.

With respect to his meeting with the French premier, Felipe Gonzalez said that he visited Paris at Pierre Mauroy's invitation and that "yesterday I met with him for 4 hours, from 1900 hours to 2300 hours. We discussed on a private basis all the bilateral issues between Spain and France, also analyzing the situation in the two countries. We analyzed international policy, especially the situation in Africa and Latin America."

Concerning the meeting with Mauroy, he added that "I did not seek to hold a meeting to draw conclusions, in view of the meeting's unofficial nature. The impression which I had here of Calvo-Sotelo's visit, through the information which he himself gave me, was a favorable impression, like that which I received from the French Government."

Making Everything Clear

"I believe that the importance of the French stance with respect to Spanish policy," he stated, "lies in the fact that they sincerely want to place the problems on the table without excluding any of them, and to make them perfectly clear. They want to tackle them in a spirit of cooperation. This doesn't mean that there are no problems, but there is a new spirit in relations which should be taken advantage of by Spanish diplomacy and by the authorities in order to draft a joint blueprint for relations between Spain and France, both with respect to the problems of terrorism and to the bilateral problems of an economic and commercial nature, and indeed, with respect to Spain's entry into the Common Market."

"It would be a mistake," he asserted, "to parcel out the problems. They are prepared to work, but this does not mean that there will be no difficulties since France has very grave economic problems with Spain; we have even graver problems than they do and this is what I pointed out to Mauroy. And so, if it is a matter of defending each side's interests, we have graver and more serious interests to defend."

"I visited Bonn," he continued, "to attend a meeting of the Socialist International Presidium. An exciting topic--the North-South dialogue--was broached with the Cancun meeting, for which Lopez Portillo and Bruno Kreisky were preparing and from which Spain is regrettably absent."

SPANISH, MAURITANIAN FOREIGN MINISTERS CONFER

PM220840 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 12 Jul 81 p 14

[EFE report: "Spanish-Mauritanian Talks"]

[Text] Madrid, 11 Jul--Spanish Foreign Minister Jose Pedro Perez Llorca met for 90 minutes this morning with his Mauritanian counterpart to analyze the consequences of the conclusions adopted at the latest OAU summit.

As will be recalled, in the course of the summit, held at the end of June, a resolution was approved which recommended a cease-fire in the former Spanish Sahara, the holding of a subsequent referendum and the setting up of a commission of wise men to monitor it which would comprise representatives of countries such as Nigeria, Sierra Leone and Tanzania.

In addition, the Spanish and Mauritanian foreign ministers analyzed the current state of relations between the two countries. The Mauritanian minister was accompanied at the meeting, which was held at the Santa Cruz palace, by his country's ambassador to Spain.

PSOE LEADER COMMENTS ON AUTONOMY DISCUSSION

PM211616 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 11 Jul 81 p 19

[Text] The prime minister and the leader of the opposition yesterday reaffirmed their desire to achieve a complete autonomy pact by 31 July, making the efforts necessary to surmount the difficulties which have arisen--principally in the electoral sphere--and tackling immediately the technical negotiations on the financing of the autonomous communities and relations between the central government and the local authorities.

In Felipe Gonzalez' opinion, the government and the Spanish Socialist Workers Party [PSOE] should sign the pact even if other political forces refuse to do so--a matter concerning which the socialist leader leaves it to history to prove who is right.

At the conclusion of the meeting at the Moncloa Palace with the prime minister, which was also attended by Professor Garcia de Enterria, Felipe Gonzalez emphasized the importance of having the autonomy problem completely resolved and the legislative timetable for it fully laid down for the next session.

He pointed out to journalists several times over the importance of reaching agreements on issues such as this "which make it possible to approach the time when the Spanish Government, of whatever complexion, will be able to devote itself to really governing without being perpetually obsessed by the very grave problems which are currently affecting its entire conduct."

Within this context, the PSOE leader commented that next year the government will have a legislative program for implementing the autonomy agreements fully laid down, as well as the reassurance that its contents have been studied with the Socialist Party and other political forces, "and thus it will have far more time for tackling the problems stemming from public order, terrorism and putschism." A considerable part of yesterday's conversation between Felipe Gonzalez and Leopolo Calvo-Sotelo was devoted to reviewing the current state of these issues and to exchanging information on the matter, although the PSOE secretary general was specifically reticent about what was discussed during this part of the meeting.

With respect to autonomy, Felipe Gonzalez gave a systematic account of what has been done so far and of the negotiations which have still to take place. The negotiations between commissions of the political forces and of the government, which have not yet resolved some problems stemming from the first Garcia de Enterria report, will be resumed next week; during the following week, study of the second report--on the financing of the autonomous communities--will begin and this should give rise to two kinds of negotiations, political agreements on that financing, and matters directly transferable to legislative measures, such as the interterritorial compensation fund and the bill on Spain's economic planning.

It is the latter which should guarantee "Spain's existence as an effective economic unit," Felipe Gonzalez said. Two complementary problems also will be broached over the next few weeks. Issues concerning the reform of the administration, which are unavoidable if there is a desire to achieve the autonomy pact, and the government's cooperation with local government.

MORE BOMB BLASTS ROCK LAUSANNE, GENEVA

Lausanne Department Store

NC211522 Paris AFP in English 1507 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Geneva, 21 Jul (AFP)--An explosion ripped through a department store in the Swiss city of Lausanne today, injuring several people, police announced. It was the third explosion in three days in various cities of Switzerland. The first two, at the Federal Parliament building in Bern and at Zurich's Kloten airport, were claimed by an apparently pro-Armenian group called the June 9 Organization.

On June 9 this year, a man of Armenian origin was arrested in Geneva after a Turkish Consulate employee was shot dead.

No one was hurt in the Bern blast Sunday. Five people were slightly injured in the Zurich explosion yesterday.

Geneva Station

NC221602 Paris AFP in English 1553 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Geneva, 22 Jul (AFP)--An explosion rocked Geneva's central railway station today, reportedly injuring several people in the fourth blast in as many days in various Swiss cities, police said. Twenty people were injured yesterday by a bomb that went off in a department store in Lausanne. A group called the June 9 Organization, believed to be pro-Armenian, claimed responsibility. The explosion took place in the baggage registry area, police here said.

Second Explosion at Station

LD221800 Hamburg DPA in German 1710 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Geneva, 22 Jul (DPA)--Almost at the same spot where four people were injured late this afternoon when a bomb exploded at the central station in Geneva, a second explosion occurred just 1 hour later. Police stated that no one was injured because the area had been sealed off. According to police, one of the four injured is in "almost hopeless condition."

Armenian Group Suspected

LD221654 Hamburg DPA in German 1608 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Geneva, 22 Jul (DPA)--An as yet unknown number of people were injured this afternoon when an explosive device went off at Geneva station. Police blocked off the area around the station. Many ambulances are at the station.

It is probable that this attack too was carried out by the Armenian 9 June Organization. On Sunday a bomb exploded at the headquarters of the Swiss Federal Government in Bern without causing damage. On Monday five people were injured at Zurich-Kloten airport when an explosive device went off. Fifteen injured people had to be taken to hospital on Tuesday after a bomb went off in a Lausanne department store.

The Armenian underground organization claimed responsibility for these three attacks.

On Wednesday they threatened to continue their attacks on Swiss establishments until the Armenian detained on 9 June in Geneva is released. He had shot a Turk in broad daylight.

DENMARK

EAST BLOC NAVAL ACTIVITIES REPORTED OFF COAST

PM220932 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 18 Jul 81 p 5

[Mogens Auning report: "Eastern Bloc Force in Danish Waters"]

[Text] As the political debate on the nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries continues, a Warsaw Pact naval force, which includes several units which could carry nuclear arms, has passed through Danish waters. It is the force consisting of Russian, Polish and East German ships which has been on exercises for a good 2 weeks around the Shetland Islands and the Faroes.

Yesterday a combat group consisting of an East German frigate with a Soviet admiral on board, and two Russian missile destroyers passed through the Great Belt and into the Baltic. It was accompanied by a support group consisting of a Russian tanker, a Polish tugboat and an East German supply ship.

On Thursday a third group [as published], consisting of a 16,000-ton Russian Sverdlov class cruiser, entered Aalbaek Bugt. Here the cruiser was refueled by the Russian naval tanker Yakhroma, before the group set sail for the Great Belt on Friday evening. In addition to this large exercise force, two large Russian Alligator class landing craft were on their way towards Skagen. These are ships which have hitherto been stationed with the Russian Black Sea Fleet.

The Danish Navy follows the passage of Warsaw Pact ships through Danish waters very closely. Navy operational command yesterday said that both naval cutters, surveillance ships, had been deployed to follow the Eastern bloc units when they passed through Danish waters.

NORWAY

OPPOSITION LEADERS COMMENT ON NORDIC ZONE ISSUE

PM211609 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 13 Jul 81 p 4

[Thorleif Andreassen report: "We Must Not Forget That We Are in NATO"]

[Text] "In today's situation there is special reason to stress that Norway must act within a coordinated NATO strategy on security questions. This was made clear in the joint statements from the Conservative, Center and Christian People's Parties commenting on the government's long-term program." Spokesmen for the three parties told AFTENPOSTEN in connection with Church and Education Minister Einar Forde's, talks in Moscow. "A guarantee that the Soviet Union will not use nuclear arms against a possible future nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is totally without value," it was said.

Conservative Party Chairman Jo Benkow thought that it was remarkable that church and Education Minister Einar Forde should hold talks on a possible nuclear-free zone with Soviet leaders. He also said that he has trouble seeing how it would be possible to combine such negotiations with joint NATO action and consultations on a Nordic plane. "Despite everything, Finland's situation is special and Sweden is neutral. A major prerequisite for our security policy is the NATO alliance. Let us not forget that we are members of this alliance," Benkow stressed, saying that it is about time the government came to its senses.

"Brezhnev's demarche is due to nothing more that the fact that he wants a deadlocked situation, which would give him a considerable advantage. In other words, this is a natural attempt by Brezhnev to fish in troubled waters.

"Among socialist leaders it is President Francois Mitterrand and Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt who have expressed the most realistic appoach to the zone question. Their statements reflect my views entirely," Jo Benkow said.

Christian People's Party Chairman Lars Korvald said that it was still unclear what the government and Labor Party position was on the problems surrounding a Nordic nuclear-free zone. "They say that work must continue to bring about an isolated Nordic zone, but that this must also be seen in a broader European context," Korvald said, strongly regretting the government's one-sided actions on the issue. He pointed out that there must be broad political agreement on Norwegian foreign, security and detente policy.

"It is only when the superpowers--those which have nuclear arms--reach agreement that the policy of detente can arrive at any meaningful results. A guarantee from Brezhnev in this connection is totally valueless. Norway is a member of the NATO alliance. This membership guarantees our security," Korvald pointed out.

Center Party Chairman Johan J. Jakobsen said that reports that the Soviet Union is willing to guarantee that they will not use nuclear arms against a possible future nuclear-free zone is nothing new. "It goes without saying that for Norway and the Nordic countries this is not satisfactory. Such a guarantee, as the only concession from the East, is of limited value since the Soviet Union has broken nonaggression pacts with other countries in the past. We have the invasion of Afghanistan fresh in our minds. It is of greater interest that the Soviet Union, according to its own statement, could consider including its own territory and Soviet nuclear arms," Jakobsen said, claiming that this was further support for the Center Party demand that a possible future nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area can only be considered as one phase of a broader negotiated solution to control and reduce the numbers of nuclear arms in Europe.

"In my opinion, the earlier Norwegian position on reciprocity, balance at the lowest possible strength levels, and preserved security for all countries must be absolute conditions in any disarmament measure," Johan J. Jakobsen said.

FRYDENLUND CONSULTS WITH NETHERLANDS COUNTERPART

PM221223 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 Jul 81 p 13

[Text] The proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area was one of the topics discussed by Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund and his Netherlands counterpart Christoph van der Klaauw on Lofoten at the weekend. The visit was part of Norwegian contacts with the EEC countries in the field of foreign policy.

"We were both agreed on the enormous importance which must be attached to the negotiations which will soon begin between the United States and the Soviet Union on nuclear arms in Europe. At present the Netherlands' view of the nuclear-free zone is that it must be seen in a broad European context and is also a matter for consultations with the other NATO nations," Frydenlund told the Norwegian Broadcasting Corporation's Dagsnytt program Sunday evening. The talks also touched on the situation in the Middle East and Afghanistan and on other foreign policy initiatives the EEC has taken recently.

OIL MINISTER SEEKS CLOSER CONTACTS WITH MEXICO

PM220836 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 10 Jul 81 p 9

[NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA report: "Johanson in Mexico"]

[Text] Mexico City, 9 July--Norway wants to have closer contacts with Britain and Mexico to expand cooperation in the oil sector, Norwegian Oil and Energy Minister Arvid Johanson said in Mexico City Wednesday.

Earlier in the day Johanson met Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo.

According to the Norwegian oil and energy minister, Norway and Mexico have common interests since both countries stand outside OPEC. Both countries would benefit from strengthening cooperation on prices and markets, he said.

Johanson did not want to be too categorical with regard to the oil market situation in coming years. But he pointed out that there is reason to expect increased demand for oil because of industrial trends in the Western nations.

SWEDEN

ECOLOGY-ORIENTED PARTY PREPARES PROGRAM

PM220931 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 17 Jul 81 p 6

[TIDNINGARNAS TELEGRAMBYRA report: "In Balance With Nature"]

[Text] Malmoe--Balance with nature. This is the rubric over the first item in the draft party program now ready for the future-and-environment party which will be formed in September.

One of the people behind the new party is former Liberal Party Riksdagsman Per Gahrton. The draft program will now be circulated among supporters for their consideration in preparation for the party's constituent meeting in Orebro, when the party will also choose a name.

The draft program is characterized by a belief in ecological balance, but does not deal solely with environmental questions; it covers the whole of the political field. "We will not be a one-issue party," Gahrton said when the program was made public in Malmo on Thursday. "There are now basic proposals for all areas affected by the political decision-making process."

The introduction to the party program makes much of crisis--both economic and political crisis. According to the program committee, Sweden is now facing threats to democracy, environment and world peace. "We are in a period of dissolution," Gahrton said. "The present political parties cannot manage the economic and political crisis and this could be catastrophic in the long term."

"We are deeply worried," said Eva Aakesson, who has also taken part in the work on the program proposal. "We have seen several danger signals and threats to the fundamental premises of our existence. It is sufficient to mention the arms race and the destruction of the environment."

The program states that people's mental and physical health should be given priority over material growth. Gahrton said that the party cannot be fitted into the tradition right-left spectrum. The program also contains several concrete proposals such as the establishment of directly elected regional citizens councils, 50-percent representation for employees on company boards, variations in the rates of value added tax, measures to promote small-scale ventures, new cooperatives and a successive transition to a 6-hour working day.

There is also a call for an immediate rundown of nuclear power. Contacts with environmentalist groups were made when the program proposal was drafted. But there has been no organized cooperation and Gahrton thinks that the new environmentalist groups will continue to be politically independent. The new party has as yet not made any particular efforts to recruit members and today has around 1,500. Only after the Orebro meeting on 18-20 September will the work for the 1982 election start properly.

MISSING PERSONS COMMITTEE HOLDS SECOND MEETING

TA221645 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] The joint committee which will investigate the issue of missing persons in Cyprus held its second meeting in Lefkosa [Nicosia] today. The committee, which is composed of the Turkish Cypriot representative Latife Birgen, the Greek Cypriot representative Fricos Mikhailidhis, and an International Red Cross official, met at the Ledra Palace Hotel. The Turkish Radio and Television [TRT] Cyprus bureau reports that the meeting lasted 2 and 1/2 hours. A statement issued after the meeting said that regulations regarding the committee's working system and the method to be followed were discussed. The committee will meet again on Friday.

CYPRUS MAIL Report

NC230805 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 23 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The investigatory committee for the missing persons held a meeting lasting two and a half hours yesterday morning. The three members of the committee--the Swiss representative of the U.N. secretary-general Mr Claude Pilloud and the representatives of the two communities, Mr Fricos Mikhailidhis for the Greek Cypriot side and Dr Latife Birgen for the Turkish side--took part without any assistants.

It was the first meeting of the committee after the Greek Cypriot side informed Mr Pilloud that despite the retreat of the Turkish Cypriot side from the agreement for participation of relatives of missing persons, it would like to see the investigatory committee start its work without delay. After that, Mr Pilloud had separate meetings with both sides and an early meeting was arranged.

It is recalled that the investigatory committee agreed that there will be no chairman and the meeting will be directed by rotation for one month by each member, it being Mr Pilloud's turn to direct the meeting during the first month.

KIPRIANOU ADDRESS AT 'INVASION ANNIVERSARY' RALLY

NC220833 Nicosia PUBLIC INFORMATION OFFICE in English 20 Jul 81 p 1

[Text of 20 July speech by President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou at the all-party mass rally at Eleftheria Square in Nicosia to denounce the coup and Turkish invasion]

[Text] Unsubdued people of Cyprus, we have once again gathered at this historic square to denounce the twin crime committed against our country and our people seven years ago. We have gathered here to denounce the treacherous coup and the Turkish invasion and to declare once more our determination never to accept the legalisation and consolidation of the results of this twin crime.

Our people have gone through many hardships as a result of the treacherous coup and the invasion. Many were those who believed that Cyprus and its people would collapse. However, our people have not bowed, but with admirable endurance, perseverance, patience, dignity and determination are continuing their struggle. Neither the drama, nor the tragedy, nor the existence of so many refugees and missing persons, nor the blood that has been shed have made them bow. Our people within endurance march on the road of sacred duty, which is none other than the one leading to the restoration of justice and the rights of our people, the restoration of freedom throughout Cyprus.

I should like at this meeting the evening to deal somewhat more with the future. And I should like in particular to stress that we are inspired by good will and readiness for an honourable solution but one should never hope that the Cyprus people will ever allow the creation of conditions similar to those that have led to the treacherous coup.

I wish to state categorically that whoever dares to disturb peace and order and democracy will be stamped out mercilessly. There is need for unity and concord if we are to continue our course leading to the end of our struggle. However, when I speak of unity and concord I wish to make it clear that the unrepentant coupists and junta supporters have no place in our struggle. The coup dossier must certainly be opened. It is an imperative need for the present and coming generations to be informed of the crime committed against the Cyprus people, a crime comparatively unprecedented in world history.

In our difficult struggle we are not alone. We have the support of all freedom-loving peoples of the world. We have the undivided support and all-sided solidarity of democratic Greece, its government, its political world and its people. Distinction should always be made between the junta, which brought Greece itself to the brink of catastrophe, and the present Greece of democracy which is struggling with us for the resoration of our rights.

I welcome the presence at this gathering of the Minister of the Presidency of the Greek Government Mr Stefanopoulos, and the members of the all-party delegation of the Greek Parliament which shows the universal support of the government and the whole political world of Greece for the struggling Cyprus people. I also welcome the representatives of the Union of Municipalities and Communities of Greece. Their presence here this evening proves one thing, that is, that Greece is completely on our side in our sacred struggle.

Seven years of tragedy have gone by without any progress in the direction of an honourable solution to the Cyprus problem. This blame rests squarely with the Turkish Cypriot side. For a long time a dialogue has been conducted which unfortunately has led to no result so far, despite the good will shown by the Cyprus Government and the Greek Cypriot side. The dialogue has always come up against the intransigence of Turkey. For, when we speak with the representatives of Turkish Cypriots, we in reality speak with the conqueror. What is needed for progress to be made in the dialogue is a radical change in Turkish policy and submission of meaningful proposals, particularly on the territorial aspect of the problem. If no such proposals are submitted, it will be very difficult for the dialogue to survive. And if the dialogue breaks down, the blame will rest squarely with the Turkish side. For this reason let those interested in an early solution to the Cyprus problem turn their attention to Ankara and exert their pressures on it so as to change its attitude radically.

Parallel to the efforts we are making in the dialogue, we shall continue our efforts in all directions in order to create the appropriate international climate for the necessary pressures to be brought to bear on Turkey in order to abandon its expansionist and partitionist policy on Cyprus. We have no choice. We shall continue to knock on all doors to secure the necessary support for the restoration of our rights.

I wish to declare once more than we shall never betray the inalienable rights of our people and the right of the refugees to return to their ancestral homes, just as we shall not betray all other human rights and fundamental freedoms of all citizens. The Cyprus people and their leadership will never accept the faits accomplis or partition of Cyprus.

We want to have a completely free and independent Cyprus, a territorially integral Cyprus, a federal but united Cyprus, a demilitarized and nonaligned Cyprus, where all its people will live happily and be able to shape a better future for coming generations. This is our duty to our history, to our ancestors and the victims of the Cyprus tragedy. We have a duty towards those killed during the coup and the Turkish invasion to hand down to coming generations a truly prosperous Cyprus. It is not difficult for one to realise that only in conditions of unity of the state and the people could Cyprus become prosperous.

We are seeking an honourable solution to the Cyprus problem based on the United Nations resolutions and the high level agreements. Such a solution is possible, provided Turkey shows good will and takes the political decision to abandon its negative expansionist policy.

We shall continue our efforts in all directions for the maximum internationalisation of the Cyprus problem. I declare once again that at the right moment we shall press for an international conference because at such a conference it will be much more difficult for Turkey to use blackmail and act at the expense of Cyprus. I know that this is difficult and that there is opposition to such a proposal, but as long as it is necessary we shall continue to promote the proposal for the holding of an international conference on Cyprus until we succeed in doing so.

Faithful to the justice of our cause, let us declare once again our determination to resist any attempt to impose an inadmissible solution to the Cyprus problem. Let us declare once again that we want an early solution to our problem. However, what is of greater importance to us is the substance of the solution. No matter how long it will take and no matter how many more sacrifices will be necessary we shall continue our course until we achieve what we are entitled to, until we obtain for our people what other peoples are entitled to, until we obtain for our country and our state what other independent states of the world are entitled to. Let us declare once again our determination not to allow other treacheries and that we shall continue our struggle until we achieve our physical survival and find vindication.

Our struggle is not easy. We shall encounter obstacles, but as in the past, difficulties will not make us yield. We shall continue our efforts for the tracing of the missing persons, for the ensuring of the right of refugees to return to their homes, for the withdrawal of the occupation troops and for a truly free and prosperous Cyprus. If a bad solution is given to the Cyprus problem, this will have wider repercussions and will affect developments in the whole area.

I want you to know that we are handling the national problem with a deep sense of responsibility, with prudence, but with determination as well. I wish to declare what Ethnarch Nakarios used to declare from this platform in the first years after the invasion: Upright on the bastions we shall carry on and shall not yield, shall not bow and shall not capitulate, but united and undivided we shall continue our struggle for survival, until the whole world recognizes our just cause and makes Turkey abandon our sacred soil, so that our people, like all other peoples in the world, may live happily in conditions of democracy, justice and freedom. Long live the unsubdued people of Cyprus.

PAPER CLAIMS U.S. USES KYRENIA RADIO STATIONS

NC221244 Nicosia APOGEVMATINI in Greek 17 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Americans from bases in southern Turkey are regularly coming to and going from Kyrenia where they are silently working on their spying installations in Karavas which, in fact, it seems they are expanding. This is mentioned by authoritative reports from well-informed sources. At the same time, other reports speak about the frequent movement of Americans in the area of Xeros where the installations of C.M.C. [as published] are to be found. It seems that there is a tacit agreement between the Americans and the Denktas administration (naturally at Ankara's suggestion) for the use of the radio station at Karavas and for some other facilities.

Recently, the movement of American "technicians" in the area of Kyrenia has been more pronounced. The Americans arrived from Adana on the ferryboats. It is recalled that in the past, members of the U.S. Embassy in Ankara had gone directly to the occupied territories, something that caused an uproar and resulted in protests on the part of the Cyprus Government. At the time, it was stated that it concerned experts who had arrived to inspect the U.S. radio stations in Mia Milia, Yerolakkos and Karavas.

Supposedly after the invasion, the radio stations remained inactive, but there are reports that some installations with strategic significance in Karavas are being used to some extent--naturally for unknown reasons--by the Americans who come from the bases in Turkey.

Turkish Cypriot Denial

NC230818 Nicosia BOZKURT in Turkish 22 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Text] Nicosia--In a report published by the Greek Cypriot paper APOGEVMATINI on 18 July 1981, it is alleged that Americans stationed at the U.S. bases in southern Turkey keep entering and leaving Kyrenia quite freely, that they work at the monitoring station in Karavas and that the Americans are also engaged in intensive activity in the vicinity of Xeros. The report also alleges that the Americans have silently reached an agreement with the TFSC to operate the radio station in Karavas and also to be granted further facilities. Commenting on this matter, the TFSC spokesman said: "These allegations are totally ludicrous and unfounded. As is known, before 1974, the Greek Cypriots had authorized the Americans to establish and operate monitoring stations on the republic's territory. But when the TFSC fully established its sovereignty in northern Cyprus, it terminated the activities of all such stations in the north and did not permit them to operate. This ban is as valid today as it was on the day it was imposed. The report that other facilities are also being extended to the Americans in the north is a complete lie. The Americans are not engaged in any activity in any part of the north. This ugly lie must have been fabricated by APOGEVMATINI to camouflage the irresponsible acts of the Greek Cypriot administration which permits the use of the territory in the south as some kind of base by several foreign countries."

CSSR DEPUTY MINISTER ARRIVES ON OFFICIAL VISIT

NC201726 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] Czechoslovak Deputy Foreign Minister Jablonsky has arrived on a 3-day official visit to Cyprus at the invitation of the Foreign Ministry.

During the talks held today between Mr Jablonsky and Foreign Ministry Director General Pelayias, they discussed the Cyprus issue, developments in the Middle East issue, various international and bilateral questions. The talks were also attended by the Czechoslovak Ambassador to Cyprus, Mr Hejc, and senior officials from the Foreign Ministries of the two countries.

The Czechoslovak deputy minister has given his country's assurances of unreserved support for the policy followed by President Kiprianou for just Cyprus solution based on the four guidelines of the Makarios-Denktas agreement and the relevant UN resolutions.

Meets Kiprianou

NC222022 Nicosia Domestic Service in English 1630 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] The president of the republic today received the Czechoslovak deputy foreign minister, Mr Jablonsky, who is on an official visit to Cyprus. President Kiprianou also received the ambassadors of the Federal Republic of Germany and Israel, Mr Soehnke and Mr Gil'adi, who took their leave of the president in view of their departure from Cyprus.

SOVIET PROPOSAL ON CONFERENCE DEEMED 'UTOPIAN'

NC221126 Nicosia O AGON in Greek 22 Jul 81 p 1

[The "My Opinion" column by "The Observer": "The Proposal for an International Conference Is Destined To Remain on Paper"]

[Text] The Soviet Union's suggestion to convene an international conference on the Cyprus problem is correct and acceptable, but unfortunately it is also utopian and a chimera as it is destined to remain just an idea and can never be realized.

The reasons for this are very simple:

1. Supported by the West, Turkey refuses and will continue to refuse to participate in such a conference, and without Turkey's presence the decisions of such a conference, even if convened, will have no practical significance.

2. The Soviet Union, the author of the suggestion, is unable or does not want to pressure Turkey to the extent of compelling the latter to participate in such a conference.

3. Cyprus is unable to achieve the convening of an international conference. Furthermore, although Cyprus says and declares officially that it accepts the suggestion, in essence it seems not to be interested.

Consequently, the president's declaration at the rally 2 days ago that the Cyprus Government will promote the implementation of an international conference "at the proper time" is destined to remain a mere declaration and will share the fate of the suggestion, that is, both will reamin on paper.

It has been made clear repeatedly that an international conference on the Cyprus problem will aim at resolving only the international aspect because the internal aspect is being discussed and should be resolved through the intercommunal talks. But how can we promote the solution of the problem's international aspect at an international conference when the internal aspect remains unsolved.

It will be incongruous to seek the solution of the international aspect first and later the solution of the internal aspect.

Finally, it is not possible to have the international conference as an alternative for the intercommunal talks. The intercommunal talks precede the international conference. First, an effort must be made for an agreement on the internal aspects, and later an effort for the convening of an international conference to resolve the Cyprus problem's international aspect.

Consequently, we believe that instead of speaking grandeloquently and dealing with utopian suggestions, it would be more useful to deal with more tangible things and pursue means that in principle will allow a more substantive development of the intercommunal dialogue, or--if we fail in this--the promotion of the Cyprus problem through other practical means.

Unfortunately, judging by the president's statement on promoting the proposal for an international conference, we must reach the conclusion that no serious efforts are being made to rescue the dialogue and that there are no serious preparations for dealing with ensuing developments in case of a failure. We are fatalistically expecting the deadlock, countering this only with vague declarations for internationalization, convening of an international conference and recourse to the United Nations, while Denktas and Ankara already have their plans ready and follow specific programs seeking concrete goals. They are guiding developments and we are following. They know where things will be guided while we suffer in the dark and stop at declarations.

EDEK PARTY SPONSORS ANTI-ISRAEL DEMONSTRATION

NC212040 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1900 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] On the initiative of EDEK, a placard demonstration was held in Nicosia this afternoon to protest the Israeli bombings of refugee settlements in southern Lebanon.

The demonstrators passed a resolution condemning the bombings and expressing full solidarity with the struggling Palestinians and progressive forces of Lebanon. The resolution also expresses sympathy with the victims of the Israeli bombings. Finally, the resolution demands the closing of the Israeli Embassy in Cyprus.

NORTH ADMINISTRATION CONDEMNS ISRAELI RAIDS

TA221156 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] The Israeli attacks on Lebanon have been condemned by the Foreign Ministry of the Federated State. The spokesman of the ministry said that there had been an escalation in the recent irresponsible Israeli attacks in the area. He (thought) they would increase tension in the area, leading to a hot war. He called on Israel to immediately halt the attack.

AKEL LEADER DEPARTS FOR SOFIA, MOSCOW VISITS

NC192015 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 19 Jul 81

[Text] AKEL Secretary General Papaioannou today left for Sofia and Moscow at the invitation of BCP and the CPSU. According to an AKEL statement, Mr Papaioannou will exchange views on the Cyprus issue and other international problems.

SOCIALIST PARTY EDEK LEADER DEPARTS FOR PARIS

NC211307 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 21 Jul 81

[Text] Chairman of the socialist party EDEK Lissaridhis today departed for Paris, where he will have talks with the leadership of the French Socialist Party on various international issues, especially on the Cyprus problem. During his stay in the French capital, Lissaridhis will also have talks with government officials.

DENKTAS REPLIES TO GREEK CYPRIOT ALLEGATIONS

TA201652 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 20 Jul 81

[Text] President Rauf Denktas has sent a letter to UN Secretary General Kurt Waldheim and has replied to Greek Cypriot allegations. In his letter, which he requested be circulated as a General Assembly document, Denktas said that the allegations made by the Greek Cypriot UN representative in a recent letter sent to Waldheim were unfounded. Noting that the Greek Cypriot representative criticized his various statements, Denktas added that he was forced to make the statements in questions following Greek Cypriot demands that Guzelyurt [Morphou] be returned to them and Greek Cypriot protests for purposes of propaganda--against the violation of their airspace by Turkish planes.

Noting that his statement to the effect that Guzelyurt cannot be returned to the Greek Cypriots reflects realities and Turkish Cypriot rights, Denktas added that in accordance with the population exchange agreement, Turkish Cypriots have been living in the area for the last 7 years.

Noting that the territorial issue is being discussed at the intercommunal talks, Denktas said that Greek Cypriot demand that Guzelyurt be given to them is creating unrest among the Turkish Cypriots who have thrice become refugees as a result of the enosis policy pursued by the Greek Cypriots. Denktas added that such allegations cannot be left unanswered.

Referring to unfounded Greek Cypriot allegations--for purposes of propaganda--that Turkish planes have been violating Greek Cypriot airspace, Denktas stressed that Turkish planes are flying within the Federated State airspace with the permission of the Federated State authorities. Noting that the Turkish Armed Forces are in Cyprus in accordance with the 1960 guarantor agreement and upon the invitation and as the protector of the Turkish Cypriot community, Denktas said that it would not be very difficult to guess what would happen to the Turkish Cypriot community had the Turkish Armed Forces not been on the island.

Drawing the secretary general's attention to Kiprianou's views that were expressed in the letter in question, Denktas said that the fact that Kiprianou denies the existence of the borders and the fact that he insists on regional autonomy is a provocation.

The letter in question described as a provocation a statement by Denktas in which he referred to borders to be set between the two regions. Denktas concluded by saying that the Greek Cypriot attitude is disrupting the atmosphere of the intercommunal talks.

Denktas Intransigence Scored

NC221040 Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 22 Jul 81 p 5

[From the column: "Exacerbation of Intransigence"]

[Text] A fresh exacerbation of Turkish intransigence was noted these days by reason of the seventh anniversary of the Attila invasion in Cyprus. Turkish Cypriot leader Denktas appeared especially provocative and intransigent in a speech during celebrations for the achievements of the Turkish "pacifiers" when he spoke about "borders" which, as he said, will not be open to the Greek Cypriots.

We consider Denktas' statements to be inopportune because they are being made at a time when various efforts try to create an atmosphere that will enhance the intercommunal dialogue for the pursuit of a just and permanent solution of the Cyprus problem, and also provocative and intransigent, undermining every effort that pursues a solution. Because, when Denktas speaks about "borders" which will not be open, it means that he sticks to the faits accomplis of arms, and that he is in no mood to discuss, let alone accept, a solution that will upset these faits accomplis.

We denounce the Turkish Cypriot leaders' new unacceptable statements and ask the United Nations, under whose auspices the intercommunal dialogue is being held, to assume its responsibilities by asking Denktas to avoid torpedoing the effort for the pursuit of a just and permanent solution of the Cyprus problem by making such statements.

GUNMEN KILL 2, INJURE 50 IN PIRAIEVS ATTACK

NC221253 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1130 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Two dead and more than 50 injured is the result of the bloody incident that took place at 1130 today in Piraievs which has shaken the citizens of the country's main port.

According to press reports, two unknown persons armed with revolvers entered the shipping and tourist agency of Evyenia Angelikousi on the corner of Filon and Filellinon streets. After shooting dead the employee of the agency, Dhimitris Malandasi, 30, they disappeared in car driven by a third accomplice. Police patrol cars and ambulances arrived on the scene. But before their arrival, a strong bomb explosion occurred inside the tourist and travel agency office, almost destroying it. The owner of agency, Evyenia Angelikousi, was killed and more than 50 persons were injured, some of whom have been taken to the Tzaneion hospital in Piraievs and those slightly injured to the first aid station.

According to unofficial reports so far, the perpetrators of the attack are most probably Lebanese. The car in which they sped away had Lebanese number plates. It also appears that they used revolvers equipped with silencers. It has not yet been established whether the explosion was caused by a bomb or a hand grenade. No list of the names of those injured is available as yet. The police have not issued an official statement on the incident and the motives of the culprits are still unknown.

GOVERNMENT PROTESTS HUNGARIAN STATEMENT ON SZABO

NC222010 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis at noon today summoned Hungarian Ambassador Dobos and handed him a strong, written protest from the government over the Hungarian Embassy's statement concerning assistant professor Kalman Szabo. Mr Rendis also asked for an explanation as well as the refutation of the inaccuracies contained in the statement. The Hungarian ambassador reserved to himself time to study of the text of the Greek protest. The Greek ambassador in Budapest has also made a similar demarche to the Hungarian Foreign Ministry.

MINISTER AVEROF ANNOUNCES NEW ECONOMIC MEASURES

NC222028 Athens AKROPOLIS in Greek 19 Jul 81 pp 1, 14

[Excerpts] The government's first set of new economic measures was announced yesterday by Deputy Prime Minister Evangelos Averof-Tositsa. It aims at the economy's reactivation through loans to individuals and businesses and control of inflation through the curtailment of the public sector's expenditures.

The text of the deputy prime minister's statement reads as follows:

The administration of the whole economic sector will be retained by my always worthy colleagues, as I also retain the administration of the National Defense Ministry. However, since I have undertaken the general supervision of economic policy, I considered it my duty to appear before you, men and women of Greece, to say a few words on this issue, which greatly concerns us all.

The entire world is passing through a deep and peculiar economic crisis. Almost all countries are enduring this crisis with very serious upheavals, regardless of their socio-political regime. For the first time in decades, rich and advanced countries with an economic structure incomparably stronger than ours are suffering sizable unemployment, large foreign exchange deficits and interest rates, which from 3 and 4 percent, have reached or surpassed 20 percent.

They are suffering other phenomena that are shaking even public and private economy and causing great apprehension. It was natural that this crisis would also strike our country.

It is impossible to influence the more profound and international causes of this crisis. However, if we all, and above all the public sector, act carefully and with caution it will be possible to confront more dynamically the internal reasons which are aggravating the crisis in our country.

We can do it, provided we want to. The country's potential is such and the abilities of the Greek people so many that by being orderly, by avoiding waste--especially in foreign exchange--by making an increase in all our productive efforts, we may slowly-slowly curb inflation and, barring a serious international imponderable, overcome the repercussions of the international economic crisis.

Previously I said "slowly-slowly" because miracles do not happen in the economy's complex mechanism; quick spectacular results are not achieved. Only orderliness and small but many productive investments, which are the principal medicine against inflation, can overcome our difficulties, overcome them and lead us again into a strong ascending course like those we knew in more normal periods of the recent past.

With these convictions, after meetings under the prime minister, we decided together with my responsible colleagues for the time being to take the following measures:

1. The investment program has been revised in such a way that the financing of certain large projects (like, for instance, the Spata airport) be executed at a slower to thus facilitate the taking of some of the measures which I will mention subsequently. It is estimated that in the coming months credits between 5 to 10 billion drachmas will be saved.

2. For this purpose, within the coming days, all public services will be asked to reduce their expenditures (except for salaries and the servicing of loans) by 2 percent and state organizations and enterprises with deficits by 5 percent. Senior officials who within 2 months do not achieve these goals will be strictly censured.

3. With the exception of hospitals, schools, the security corps and strictly specialized scientific or technical projects, appointments to the civil service, organizations and state enterprises with deficits are banned. The ban includes those on contracts and on wages as well as those who would fill positions already approved by the competent government committee. No responsible official is allowed to pay a salary or wages to any appointee although he may fall within this ban. [sentence as published]

With the prospect of this decision, some days ago the National Defense Ministry postponed for 6 months a test for filling 140 approved positions.

4. Banks will be free, on the basis of banking criteria, to increase the financing of small- and medium-size merchants and professionals from 500,000 to 1,000,000 drachmas without supporting documents and from 2,500,000 to 5 million drachmas on the basis of turnover.

5. The basic limit for housing loans by the Greek housing organization will be increased from 600,000 to 1,200,000 drachmas and correspondingly in the other categories. Typically, I mention that with this increase, in the best of cases (that is, for the construction of a private building in the C zone for a citizen with four dependent children) the housing loan that will be possible will clearly exceed 2 million drachmas.

6. The grace period for housing loans is being extended by 1 year.

7. The Agricultural Bank, which in 1981 could give villages housing loans up to 4 billion drachmas, will have the facility of giving housing loans of up to 5 billion drachmas.

8. The program for the Agricultural Bank of Greece is being increased by 2 billion drachmas for loans to purchase land and transformation of rain watered farms into irrigated farms.

9. For 1981 the Agricultural Bank of Greece is being enabled to give loans to communities up to 1 billion drachmas for the execution of communal irrigation projects.

10. In order to accelerate the use of these especially useful loans, after consultations with my colleagues in the Agriculture Ministry, I requested the Agricultural Bank to specify simpler procedures for giving loans. The Agricultural Bank proposed the following procedures, which will come into effect on 1 August :

A. For loans to municipalities and communities, the quick procedure in force for cooperative organizations will be valid.
B. For loans up to the sum of 20 million drachmas to buy land and irrigate, only the signature of the bank's branch manager will be required without the intervention of the bank's head office, but in accordance with the general instructions which the head office will give to its branches by 1 August.
C. The ceiling for loans for cultivation to be given by bank branches has been doubled.

I am sure that people who make their living in agriculture will immediately understand the usefulness of these measures.

11. Loans (for 1981 up to the aggregate sum of 2 billion drachmas) are being introduced for graduate engineers and electricians, to graduates of agricultural schools and higher technical and vocational education centers and to engineers and electricians and agriculturists of higher educational institutes so they can establish their own businesses, provided these are established outside the Athens region. The conditions for the loans will be the same as those to small businesses.

12. With the decision by the monetary committee made on the 16th of this month and already published in the newspapers, financial incentives are being given to strengthen businesses that have suffered more from the consequences of the crisis but still continue to be viable.

The measures I have just announced are nothing spectacular. Our intention was not to be sensational. Our intention was through orderly means, through practical thoughts drawn from experience and from knowledge by technocrats to seek the following:

An enhancement of trust in the country's potential and the procedures of private economy; the relative curbing of inflationary pressures through the curtailment of some public expenses so that increased resources could be allotted to the private sector; the allocation of these resources in such ways that both the people to be served will be many and their productivity will increase.

In conclusion, through these measures we want to help our economy rebound.

Men and women of Greece. Economic crises do not pass away with spectacular leaps under any sociopolitical system. If you do not pay attention to them, if you do not resist, if within the euphoria of waste you expect miracles, you will be swept into a slide and the more your advance the more difficult it will be to stop.

If, on the contrary, you pay attention to the crisis in good time and accept that only through persistent and small but many efforts you can confront it, then it is absolutely certain that you will overcome it.

The government is convinced that through the measures I have announced to you it is helping for small but many, sure and serious steps to be taken in this direction.

Other measures are under study and will be announced as soon as we have reached positive conclusions.

Meanwhile, the government asks you to leave miracles to demagogues, great leaps to fanciful people, accusations to those people who do not take difficulties into consideration, and all of us look forward to the job with faith and optimism.

KKE SENDS CONGRATULATORY CABLE TO POLAND'S KANIA

NC221508 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 22 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The KKE Central Committee has sent the following congratulatory cable to Comrade Stanislav Kania, first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee:

Dear Comrade Kania: On the occasion of your reelection as first secretary of the PZPR Central Committee, the KKE Central Committee extends its congratulations and best wishes for a steady socialist future in Poland. The Greek Communists will also in the future stand on the side of the Polish Communists. [signed] KKE Central Committee

KKE-INTERIOR PAPER COMMENTS ON PASOK PLATFORM

NC211923 Athens I AVYI in Greek 21 Jul 81 p 6

[From " I AVYI" column: "The PASOK Program"]

[Text] The three parts of the PASOK government program which have been released thus far clarify that party's present positions on the most critical problems facing the country and the people. It is a detailed text which shows how the PASOK leaders realize not only how to overcome the deadlocks created by the rightwing policy but also how to reach the road to a deeper change.

Of course, we do not aspire to take a position, within the framework of a note, on all the problems tackled by that text. This is especially so since PASOK is numerically the strongest of all the forces supporting a change, and a discussion of its positions demands a specific analysis with all the necessary elements so that a constructive dialogue may be promoted before the people.

As a general observation on PASOK's government program, it can be said that the program consists of unequal parts. While it is very analytical in a series of issues that one could say--however serious they may be--concerns a better and more effective administration and management, the program is very general on critical issues that concern the detachment of the true power from the monopolistic urban class which is based on international imperialism. So, for instance, there is vagueness on the problems concerning the restriction of power and action of the monopolies (the relevant subsection actually remains a title without any content) or about those problems that concern our country's international position in the present world, given the fact of PASOK's hostile attitude (which is repeated in its program) toward the EEC and the prospects for European unity.

With all this, we do not like to underestimate the positive elements contained in the program, such as declarations of PASOK's intentions in the event it forms a government. One such positive element is the concept of viewing all changes in all fields based on the direct participation of the masses in the decisionmaking centers. One could say that such a promotion of the masses, to the extent that it might be realized in all sectors, constitutes a revolutionary change that would be effected progressively and deal in a revolutionary manner with all the problems of a democratic and socialist developement.

However, such an emancipation and promotion of the masses demands, in addition to declaring that it is necessary, appropriate application in all spheres. It demands the protection and safeguarding of the autonomy of mass movements and mass organizations in a front against any attempt at "suppression." It demands the development of a free and equal democratic dialogue without any party claiming absolute and "excessive" truth. It demands that those political organizations, which advocate the masses participation in the decisionmaking centers, themselves function democratically with an internal dialogue, a fact that is essential in establishing democratic relations with the broader people's masses.

We believe that PASOK, with all its practice thus far, is seriously lacking in realizing these demands. From this point of view, there undoubtedly exists discord between the declarations in its program and the trait it has shaped by merely calling on the masses to vote for it. Of course, the aim of putting the people at the decisionmaking centers is something much different from the aim of conquering these centers by the representatives of a party, whichever this party may be. Even with this meaning, the PASOK understanding that it is the only expression of the change does not jibe with the reality represented by the Greek people or their demand for free options in all sectors on the basis of an equal democratic dialogue. The march toward the development of democracy, toward a true socialism, is inconceivable outside the equal cooperation of the democratic and socialist forces which view the problems of the people and the nation autonomously and without any dependency, out of the procedure of incessant democratization in the internal functioning of the corresponding political organizations.

We are noting these indisputable truths for which the KKE-Interior has been struggling, not in order to conduct any polemic against PASOK, but to stress the need to strengthen in the next elections, within the framework of a more general democratic development, the forces of renewal with the KKE-Interior being the axis, as a decisive contribution to the cause of promoting the united people to power and of realizing the change.

DENKTAS BEGINS CONTACTS, MEETS PRIME MINISTER

TA221118 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] TFSC President Rauf Denktas has begun his contacts in Ankara. This morning, Denktas laid a wreath at the Ataturk Mausoleum and signed the special book. He later met with Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu. State and Deputy Prime Minister and Cyprus Coordination Council President Zeyyat Baykara and Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen also attended the meeting. In a statement before the meeting, Ulusu said that the Turkish Government wants the intercommunal talks to be concluded in a way that will bring lasting peace to Cyprus.

In his statement, Denktas noted that the Turkish Cypriot community is waging a struggle in order to live in peace and said that the current atmosphere of peace was secured through Turkey's support. Denktas said: It is also our wish to live side by side in freedom and in peace with the Greek Cypriots within the framework of a settlement. Since we are struggling for peace, we cannot want anything other than this. Naturally, our entire concern is that peace should be balanced that all we have gained through great sacrifices should not be wasted under the banner of peace. Denktas will meet with Head of State Gen Kenan Evren in the afternoon.

Meets Evren

TA221644 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1600 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] The president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas, who is holding talks on the Cyprus problem in Ankara, met with Head of State Gen Kenan Evren this afternoon. On his arrival at the Chief of the General Staff headquarters, Denktas was received by Deputy Chief of the General Staff Gen Necdet Oztorun with a military ceremony. In a statement before the meeting, General Evren recalled that this was Denktas' first visit to Turkey following his election as president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus. Evren said that views will be exchanged on the Cyprus problem and that the policy to be pursued from now on will be discussed. Denktas said: I am especially happy that I was able to come on the week of 20 July, because during this historic week I found the opportunity to reiterate the heartfelt thanks of the Turkish Cypriot community to the glorious armed forces and the motherland. Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen was also present at the Evren-Denktas meeting.

PAPER COMMENTS ON CYPRUS 'OPERATION' ANNIVERSARY

NC211420 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 18 Jul 81 p 2

["Putting It Briefly" column by Rauf Tamer: "The Seventh Anniversary of the Peace Operation"]

[Text] Seven years ago today we all turned our eyes to the young fatherland [Cyprus] by displaying an exemplary national unity and solidarity and by unanimously brushing aside all our resentments....

Not long afterward, we were confronted with an embargo. This was not a mere military embargo. An economic embargo was also imposed on us. Then a tourist embargo, a musical embargo and even a sports embargo followed, to say nothing of the martyrs we have suffered and the billions we have buried in Cyprus.

Why all this? Naturally, for the purpose of establishing a righteous and humane order in Cyprus, for the peace and comfort of our Cypriot brothers as well as for their independence and freedom. But we now see that Cyprus [the Turkish Cypriot community] has copied not our best but our worst characteristics.

Separatist slogans, dangerous emblems, plans, provocations and disgusting scenes pertaining to international communism...all these are now in Cyprus, where the minority [presumably the leftists] is dominating over the "silent majority" and where a small part of the game being played for the past 10 years is being repeated.

This was not the aim of our intervention in Cyprus. This is not why we suffered so many martyrs. We did not put up with embargoes only to face such an outcome. This is not why we have endured anti-Turkish campaigns.

We will not allow ourselves to be disillusioned at the place we got at such a high cost. We will not hand over the young fatherland to a handful of separatists. It is painful that we should have to write this on the seventh anniversary of the peace operation. But this is the most appropriate time for measures to be taken. These measures are:

To face as a nation all the ugly things, not to be intimidated or cowed, never to make concessions to the anarchists, the communists and the separatists, and finally, to enable the "silent majority" to maintain a firm, lively and vigilant stand. If Turkey has managed to survive after having stood at the edge of the precipice for years, this was the outcome of farsightedness and courage. There will be no problem if the young fatherland, which has copied our bad characteristics, decides to emulate our lofty characteristics instead. All these treacheries would then hit the bosom of the Turkish Cypriot community, which is full of faith and belief, and melt away.

We congratulate all our patriotic Cypriot brothers on the occasion of the seventh anniversary of the Cyprus peace operation, and we invite them to exercise vigilance against all the intrigues being plotted against them. "Cyprus is Turkish and it will stay Turkish," but staying Turkish is not enough. It must also "protect the pride of the Turk."

DIRECTORATE CHANGES COLLECTIVE WAGE AGREEMENTS

TA221200 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Statement No 16 issued by the General Staff Martial Law Coordination Directorate]

[Text] 1. Certain collective wage contracts carry stipulations that vacations be declared on days other than the national holidays and the general vacation days and additional payments be made for these days.

2. In renewing the expired collective wage contracts in accordance with Law No 2364, the High Arbitration Council is not including such stipulations.

3. As the national holidays and general vacation days are clearly determined in law No 2429, no vacations will be declared outside these days and therefore no additional payments will be made.

COMMAND BEGINS TRIAL OF 81 RELIGIOUS MILITANTS

TA221912 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Summary] The trial of 81 administrators and members of the Vanguards and the Vanguard Youth [Akinci Gencler] associations has begun at the Ankara Martial Law Command First Military Court. The suspects are being charged with transforming legally formed associations into armed gangs with the aim of changing the constitutional system by force. The indictment said that the suspects were carrying out activities aimed at establishing in Turkey a state in which religious rules would be prevalent. The indictment added that the Vanguards and the Vanguard Youth, that was established following the closing down of the Vanguards, were supported by the National Salvation Party. Prison sentences no less than 10 years were demanded for the 81 members, 43 of whom are under detention.

DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 142 24 July 1981

AUSTRIA

Students Create Incident in Iranian Embassy E 1
Arab Ambassadors, PLO Criticize Austrian Media E 1
[VOLKSSTIMME 23 Jul]
Briefs: Hungarian Soldiers Defect; East Berlin Visit E 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Chancellor Schmidt, Newspaper View Ottawa Summit J 1
Schmidt Interview J 1
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Article [23 Jul] J 3
Paper Reports Reagan Assurances to Schmidt J 4
Official Defends Planned Gas Purchase From USSR J 5

FRANCE

Cabinet Deplores Escalated Violence in Mideast K 1
LE MONDE on 'Timid' U.S. Reaction to Israel [22 Jul] K 1
LE MONDE: Ottawa Summit 'Frankly Disappointing' [23 Jul] K 2

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Red Brigades Release Alfa Romeo Executive L 1
Announce 'Clemency' for Peci L 1
New Primate of Poland Arrives on Private Visit L 1
L'UNITA Sums Up Results of CCP Delegation Visit [13 Jul] L 1
PCI Paper on Contacts With Indian Marxist Party L 2

PORTUGAL

Soares To Visit Yugoslavia in August M 1
Papers Report Expected Government Changes M 1
Briefs: Angola Energy Minister M 1

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Prime Minister's Remarks on Zone Issue Criticized P 1
BERLINGSKE TIDENDE Article [18 Jul] P 1
BERLINGSKE TIDENDE Editorial [19 Jul] P 2
Party Spokesmen Comments [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 20 Jul] P 2

FINLAND

Valmet Sells Small Heat-Power Units to USSR [HUFVUDSTADSBLADET 5 Jul] P 3

NORWAY

Prime Minister Reports on Talks With Schmidt [AFTENPOSTEN 16 Jul] P 4
Frydenlund: Work on Zone Proposal Will Continue [ARBEIDERBLADET 16 Jul] P 4
Politicians View U.S. Stand on Nuclear-Free Zone [ARBEIDERBLADET 16 Jul] P 5
ARBEIDERBLADET Editorial [16 Jul] P 5
Norway, Mexico Agree To Coordinate Oil Prices [AFTENPOSTEN 20 Jul] P 6

CYPRUS

Downed Argentine Plane Flying Supplies From Israel [CYPRUS WEEKLY 24 Jul] R 1
Kiprianou Receives New Ambassador From Iraq R 1
Spokesman Reaffirms Close Cooperation With UN R 2
TA NEA Sees Propaganda Working for U.S. Interests [22 Jul] R 2

GREECE

KKE Issues Election Program Declaration for 1981 [RIZOSPASTIS 19 Jul] S 1

TURKEY

Government Lowers Representation Level in Kabul T 1
Police Quell Disturbance at Iranian Embassy T 1
General Evren Goes to Erzurum for Celebration T 1
Gives Speech T 1
Denktas, Turkmen Hold Joint News Conference T 3
Government To Extend Medical Aid to Lebanon T 4
Directorate Puts 4-Week Ban on Istanbul Magazine T 4
Authorities Begin Proceedings Against Militants T 4
Martial Law Authorities Ban Certain Books T 4
VOTCP Reviews Role of Turkish Troops in Cyprus T 5

STUDENTS CREATE INCIDENT IN IRANIAN EMBASSY

AU240925 Vienna Domestic in German 0900 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] This morning, the Iranian Embassy in Vienna's third district on Jaurezgasse was the scene of a spectacular action by some 50 Iranian students. The Iranians wanted to cast their votes for today's presidential election in Iran. Subsequently, several of them refused to leave the embassy building. In that situation, at the ambassador's request, the Vienna police intervened. Requested to clear the building, the alert unit intervened. There was a scuffle and a shot was fired. It is not clear whether the shot was fired by an Austrian policeman or by an Iranian security officer. Eight people were injured, one man shot through the hand. Some 50 minutes ago, the Iranian Embassy was cleared by the police and 23 people were taken into custody.

Political observes point out that Iranian Ambassador (Junin) is considered to be a partisan of Shi'ite leader Khomeyni whereas the embassy personnel feel more in solidarity with deposed State President Bani-Sadr.

ARAB AMBASSADORS, PLO CRITICIZE AUSTRIAN MEDIA

AU230954 Vienna VOLKSSTIMME in German 23 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] Vienna--On Wednesday, the Arab ambassadors in Vienna and the PLO delegate in Austria, Husayn, criticized the pro-Israeli reporting by the Austrian mass media.

A statement they submitted to APA says "After a series of Israeli attacks on southern Lebanon, Israeli aircraft launched further attacks on the Lebanese capital of Beirut. On this occasion, over 300 civilians were killed and more than 900 persons were injured, most of them children and women.

Rather than documenting the cruelty of the Israeli air raids which involve mass destruction of the civilian population, it seems that the Austrian mass media justify the attacks by depicting them as "retaliatory strikes." Thus, these mass media are taking over Israeli propaganda and are adopting a pro-Israeli and anti-Arab position.

It would, indeed, be interesting what attitude the Austrian mass media would take if Arab aircraft were to launch an attack on Tel Aviv, killing more than 300 civilians and injuring more than 900 persons--if they were to do to Tel Aviv precisely what Israeli planes did to Beirut, the statement says.

BRIEFS

HUNGARIAN SOLDIERS DEFECT--Two Hungarian border soldiers Wednesday night crossed the Hungarian-Austrian state border near Scharndorf in the Oberwart district, Burgenland. The two soldiers, both in uniform but unarmed, entered the first house they encountered on Austrian territory and asked for political asylum. They were taken to the Traiskirchen refugee camp. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 23 Jul 81 p 2 AU]

EAST BERLIN VISIT--Minister for Science and Research Hertha Firnberg is visiting East Berlin with an Austrian delegation from 20 to 22 July at the invitation of Prof Hans-Joachim Boehme, GDR minister of university and technical school matters. Mrs Firnberg is scheduled to have working talks with Boehme, with GDR Science and Technology Minister Herbert Weiz and with GDR Minister of Culture Hans-Joachim Hoffmann. Yesterday morning, an Austrian-GDR agreement was signed on mutual recognition of secondary school graduation certificates. [Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 21 Jul 81 p 2 AU]

CHANCELLOR SCHMIDT, NEWSPAPER VIEW OTTAWA SUMMIT

Schmidt Interview

DW231255 Mainz ZDF Television Network in German 1815 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Hans Albert and Friedhelm Ost interview with FRG Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in Ottawa; date not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] You said prior to the conference that what matters most is the chance to get to know and understand each other. Was this, in retrospect, not too modest an expectation?

[Answer] No, this is not a modest expectation and it was not certain that even this would be feasible. Look, there is a new U.S. President, a new French president, a new prime minister in Italy and a new prime minister in Japan. It is, after all, not so simple to approach frankly and openly important people from important states at such a meeting and to tell them what one is thinking and then listen to what the other has on his mind. Being isolated from the outside world, as it were, makes this a bit easier because no camera teams, newsmen or news photographers are there. You have the feeling of not being observed and this also contributes to making things easier. But on the whole, our frank conversation about the gigantic problems in the relations between East and West; in North-South relations; in matters pertaining to the Middle East and the Near East, for example; and economic problems was quite successful. It was successful and I don't think it should be underrated. On the contrary, I value this quite highly.

[Question] Differences of opinion or divergent opinions cropped up in connection with East-West trade, the economic relations between the West and the East bloc and, above all, with the European-Russian gas pipeline deal. Did you, in this particular instance, succeed in convincing the U.S. President of the political and economic necessities of these economic relations between the West and the East bloc?

[Answer] I don't know whether we convinced the U.S. President, but he clearly realizes that the FRG, just as the other European states which wish to procure natural gas from the Soviet Union, considers this deal necessary for a number of reasons--it is in keeping with our economic interests and with our desire to share and distribute the political risks inherent in the procurement of energy supplies from foreign countries, be it oil, nuclear fuel or gas. In this respect, the imports from one single source must not be allowed to become too voluminous; that is clear. And we will see to that, just as the French will. I don't know whether we convinced President Reagan, but he surely no longer intends to dissuade the French, the Germans and others from this project.

[Question] Both the U.S. and German Governments regard trade with the East as a political instrument in addition to a purely business matter. You probably do so with the confidence-building network in mind. The new U.S. administration presumably does so as a means of pressure. Isn't this difference bound to cause great concern on your part?

[Answer] This is true; and I might add to the point you mentioned that we have a long term economic agreement with the Soviet Union and that economic cooperation has been devised on a long term basis. Besides, we are cooperating economically with the rest of East Europe in general and wtih the GDR in particular. And we have good reasons to do so, reasons which are not attributable to geography alone. After all, we are much closer geographically than are, say, Japan and Germany or Canada and the United States and Germany. We also have political and humanitarian reasons. You are right. We just could participate in making trade with our East European neighbors into a political instrument, as it were, or a sort of water faucet which you can turn on and off at will, depending on the prevalent political situation. On the contrary, the more uninhibited and the broader the development of the economic exchange is, the more justified the hope is that this also will elicit a positive response regarding political relationships.

[Question] With respect to the NATO dual decision, you have the word of the U.S. President that negotiations will be opened soon. Are you satisfied with that, considering that one could well have the impression that President Reagan approved of the schedule out of regard for the allies and their domestic situation rather than out of political conviction?

[Answer] All Europeans, including the French president, the British prime minister, the Italian prime minister and the German chancellor told him again what he already knew, namely, that negotiations are necessary and that they need to begin as soon as possible. We in Germany must not allow ourselves to be scared all the time by noises made by third, fourth and fifth-rate people in Washington. I have always relied on Reagan's word and I fail to see any reason why I should stop doing so. He has committed himself quite clearly.

[Question] Mr Chancellor, world economic perspectives were thoroughly discussed here. It was determined that high inflation rates and sometimes increasing unemployment can even lead to social unrest in some countries. Has a formula been found to lift the world economy from this low point or are we as helpless as before after the Ottawa summit?

[Answer] I think there is a difference between the word finding a formula and helplessness. This was the seventh world economic policy meeting in 7 consecutive years. Actually, they all were successful in a certain way. I believe that the Ottawa summit also will be successful in as much as the governments will withstand the temptation raised by parliaments, certain industrial branches, environmentalists or certain trade unions to take protective measures for their own trade, thus depressing employment in other countries, and to close their borders. If this had happened when we experienced the first oil shock, high unemployment figures would have quickly developed throughout the world and even more so when the second shock took place.

We succeeded in making it clear to each other here that this cannot be done. We developed so much mutual confidence that we all believe that no one will do this. This summit conference in Ottawa actually showed that the main differences in viewing the economic-political situation exist between the United States and France. The United States is under a very strong money supply influence--if I may say it that way--while France is very much under Keynesian influence--if I may use another term.

[Question] This means that the Americans will continue their high interest policy, which leads to an extremely strong dollar with consequences for other states, particularly in Europe. Were you somewhat disappointed that no change will take place and that you could not convince the U.S. President after all?

[Answer] All of us--the Germans, French, Italians, English, Japanese and Canadians--naturally would have welcomed it very much if the U.S. Government had said: Next month, another interest rate policy is in sight in our country. But we all knew that the U.S. Government could not do that. It has adopted a concept and is in the middle of implementing this concept. The United States cannot be expected to change and nobody really expected it to.

Prior to leaving Germany, I pointed out in several interviews that this could not be expected. But we now must draw the consequences from this fact. I believe that the Americans well understand that other economies are suffering from the high interest rates now prevailing worldwide. I learned from the U.S. President, by the way, that the U.S. economy is also suffering from the high rates.

[Question] A short question on another subject--many of us have wished for a long time for a strong U.S. President who could exercise leadership in office. Has this wish been fulfilled or maybe even overfulfilled?

[Answer] No. I feel that the U.S. President took part in the talks of the seven in what I would term an exemplarily fair way.

[Question] You said that we must draw the consequences. What will this mean specifically for German economic and finance policies once you have returned to Bonn? Will the high U.S. interest rate policy serve as a scapegoat for you for financial-political cruelties?

[Answer] I don't intend to commit cruelties and we don't need scapegoats. We will not make the Americans a scapegoat at all. It is correct, however, that the high interest rate policy has changed the situation for all budgets--the German federal budget, the German laender and communal budgets, the budgets of the entire world. It has changed the basic economic data, as the professors sav, the basic situation of the world where all this takes place. The high rates destroy market conditions and reduce employment levels. It is, therefore, urgently hoped that the high rates will be abandoned.

The Federal Bank will achieve some freedom for a downward development of rates only if fewer people ask for credit on the capital market in the future. So the state, the laender and communities must curtail somewhat their demand for credit. To do this, they must limit their expenditures because credits have been used so far to finance expenditures. This is how it all its together. If there were no policy of high interest rates, the budget problems my colleague Hans Matthoeffer must master in 1982 would be somewhat less grave than they are.

[Question] This means that everybody must tighten his belt?

[Answer] At any rate, it means restraint for everybody. I assume that we will succeed in involving really all people and not just a few. We expressed very clearly at this summit that we will draw this consequence because the high interest rate policy obviously will not be ended within the foreseeable future.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Article

DW231431 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 23 Jul 81 p 3

[Rolf-Dietrich Schwartz Ottawa dispatch: "Much Wind, No Updraft"]

[Text] The West has a leader again. For years, the United States had to be pushed almost against its will into this role by its allies. The economic summit of the seven most important Western industrial states concluded in Ottawa on Tuesday has brought to light that old actor Ronald Reagan who cannot get enough of this leadership role. Gone are the times when U.S. Presidents like Gerald Ford or Jimmy Carter allowed the learned economist and government chief of the Federal Republic, which is a political middleweight anyway, to tell them how to do things right. The newcomer to the White House showed determination to turn the tables.

Granted, in the wooden palace in Canada's forests, this did not go so far as one of the participants calling the shots while the others obeyed orders. Yet, the far too simple approach to world problems by the old gentleman from California largely determined the topics at the summit: his interest rates will stay high so that prices will drop; trade with the East should be reduced so that the Russians will become angry; and funds for development should go to friends exclusively so that they will not desert to the enemy.

By painting this black-white picture, President Reagan made it easy for the other six summit partners to be in agreement, to react in unison. Even for the British governing lady, Margaret Thatcher, who is Reagan's ideological bridgehead in the old world, this simple pattern of politics was too much to take. She had words of praise for the middle line preferred by Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

The real difficulties in the economic relations, however, will actually come after Ottawa. Granted, the final protocol was totally tailored to cohesion and is intended to indicate harmony. Yet, in its flat fundamentalism, it leaves room for interpretation as to detail. All parties can recognize themselves: the United States with its high interest policy; Great Britain with its policy of supply; France with its policy of demand; Japan with its export policy and the Federal Republic, finally, with a conglomerate of all the above. However, it would be grotesque to talk about a common line as existed after the preceding six world economic summits. As far as the Federal Republic is concerned, this kind of harmony in the dreadful 7th year of the short history of the world economic summit meetings is cause for alarm, after all, more than every fourth job in the German economy owes its existence to the export business.

If the Reagan administration cannot think of anything better just before the conclusion of the gas pipeline deal with the Soviets than to clumsily offer bait to foil the project, every responsible person in Bonn must ask himself what else will come from Washington if the Federal Government sticks to its firm will to develop East-West trade. There are not enough Olympic Games for Bonn to boycott to demonstrate to the United States its loyalty to the alliance depsite the prosperous German-Soviet trade.

Not only in this country, but also in neighboring states, the United States is about to destroy much of the confidence in the farsightedness of its leaders with its monetary policy and obvious attempts to interfere. France's newly elected Socialist President Francois Mitterrand was most outspoken at the summit with his refusal to allow himself to be ruined in 1 year by the dominance of the U.S. economy.

So far, however, his attempt at detachment has not had the success with which he wanted unilaterally to develop demand in order to fight unemployment and to keep the borders open for free trade and capital exchange. If Mitterrand's experiment failed, it would entail not just the "end" of the European Monetary System and mean a grave burden for the Common Market, it also would have a negative influence on political relations with the United States. Reagan has "passed the buck" in Ottawa although this doesn't bother him because of his exaggerated self-confidence.

Schmidt also will be involved in this game that is dangerous for the West if he says--after his return home--that the painful cuts of state support were caused by people in the U.S. White House. Anti-Americanism by leftist intellectual circles about which the federal chancellor has complained recently would then be supported by people who cannot simply be ignored.

Not only Reagan but also experienced statesmen of the other summit countries demonstrate surprising shortsightedness by considering such a snowballing of feelings, touched off by the counterarmament decision, as some fashionable global foolishness. As long as Washington rules according to the formulas, "what is good for America is good for the West," compromises as at the Ottawa summit must substitute for real formulas on agreement. Only a little breeze remained in Ottawa from the summit upswing 7 years ago.

PAPER REPORTS REAGAN ASSURANCES TO SCHMIDT

LD231924 Hamburg DPA in German 1719 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Stuttgart, 23 Jul (DPA)--U.S. President Ronald Reagan has now assured Chancellor Helmut Schmidt in a letter that the United States is very determined to negotiate with the Soviet Union on a limitation of medium-range weapons in Europe "between mid-November and mid-December." This is reported by tomorrow's edition of the STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN.

The newspaper said that it obtained a reliable report on the letter in Bonn. Schmidt already cited Reagan's written assurance at the end of the Ottawa economic summit, but without naming any date. In response to a DPA inquiry, the Federal Press Office said that the letter was "nothing new." Reagan told Schmidt in a letter: "I have made this decision personally and I want to take this opportunity to assure you in the clearest possible way that I have absolutely committed myself to the implementation of this decision." The letter was given to Schmidt immediately prior to the Ottawa economic summit.

In the opinion of the chancellor's office, this is an assurance "that could not be clearer or firmer," the newspaper says. Now absolutely no doubts can exist that Reagan personally stands behind the relevant statements made by U.S. Secretary of State Haig to the NATO states, it adds. The chancellor's office also considers it politically significant that Reagan expressly contradicts the suspicion that the United States could in its security policy be pursuing a course of detaching itself from the interests of the European allies and, for this reason, has little interest in successful talks with the USSR, the paper says.

According to the STUTTGARTER NACHRICHTEN, the most important passages of the Reagan letter, which begins "Dear Mr Chancellor," are:

"Secretary of State Haig informed the NATO foreign ministers in Rome in May that we wish to start negotiations on medium-range weapons with the Soviets by the end of the year. I made this decision personally and I want to take this opportunity to assure you in the clearest possible way that I have absolutely committed muself to the implementation of this decision. The fact that Soviet weapons systems which are concerned here can reach the European allies but not the United States in no way diminishes our determination to do our utmost, in a broader sense, to limit and to reduce the common threat. I am determined to guarantee thorough consultations between us before the start of negotiations. I believe that we will be in a position to begin formal negotiations between mid-November and mid-December. I have the greatest admiration and esteem for the courage, the firmness and the clarity with which you have publicly proclaimed your support for the decision of December 1979. For its part, the United States will implement both aspects of the decision of December 1979."

OFFICIAL DEFENDS PLANNED GAS PURCHASE FROM USSR

LD231546 Hamburg DPA in German 1311 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 23 Jul (DPA)--The conclusion of the pipeline-natural gas contract with the USSR does not endanger the security of the Federal Republic, according to the president of the German Association of Chambers of Industry and Commerce, Otto Wolff von Amerongen. Wolff, who is also chairman of the East Committee of German Industry, said on Thursday in Bonn, with reference to the critical American voices during the Ottawa summit, that the trade with the East so far has created no special dependence on Moscow. He supports the opinion of the Federal Government that trade relations with other countries "should not be allowed to be degraded to an accessory of foreign policy, as a matter of principle."

Wolff expressly welcomed East-West cooperation in energy matters, including FRG dependence on the planned 12 billion cubic meters of natural gas from the Urals. This level of dependence would be acceptable. A withdrawal of the Soviet Union and with it unavoidably the other smaller East European countries from world trade neither makes economic sense nor is it politically desirable. The proposition that a reduction of trade with the East would brake the expansion of Soviet military power is not sound. In his words, the Cocom [coordinating committee] list banning delivery of strategically important goods has proved itself in an exemplary manner so far. It is necessary to warn of an overall limitation of whole areas.

At present, the negotiations of German banks with a Soviet delegation on the credits for the German deliveries of pipelines connected with the gas contract are running at full speed. Banking circles say that the changed form of financing--the bank credits reduced from DM10 billion to DM5 billion and the intended manufacturers' credit of the same amount--have increased the chances of success.

CABINET DEPLORES ESCALATED VIOLENCE IN MIDEAST

NC231607 Paris AFP in English 1534 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 23 Jul (AFP)--The French cabinet today deplored the escalation of violence in the Middle East and called for the United Nations peace-keeping force in Lebanon to "fully execute its mandate."

In an official communique, the cabinet said that it was determined to support the Beirut government in reorganizing its army and gradually regaining control of its territory.

A French medical team is on its way to Beirut, the communique said.

LE MONDE ON 'TIMID' U.S. REACTION TO ISRAEL

PM231043 Paris LE MONDE in French 22 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "The Punishment"]

[Text] For the time being, Israel will not receive either the six F-16 fighter bombers which were to be delivered on 21 July or the four other aircraft of the same type retained in the United States last month after the destruction of the Iraqi reactor in Tammuz. This decision, announced by Haig in Ottawa on 20 July, is the U.S. response to the Israeli raids on Beirut and southern Lebanon.

From a military viewpoint, the temporary lack of 10 aircraft will scarcely weaken Israel's capability. Some 53 of the 75 F-16's ordered by the Jewish state were delivered before June, not to mention 25 of the 40 even more powerful F-15's ordered. All the other current orders, notably for surface-to-air and surface missiles, will be honored normally. The Jerusalem leaders, therefore, have ample means with which not only to defend themselves against any Arab army but also to pursue their attacks on Lebanon and the Palestinians.

On the political level, there is ambiguity in the absence of a formal link between this sanction and "any specific action by the Israeli Government," as Haig said. Furthermore, by simply indicating that the delivery of aircraft will depend on the "degree of violence in the region," the secretary of state removed the possible precondition of a cease-fire in southern Lebanon. In so doing, he is supporting the position held by Begin who rejects that cease-fire in favor of a broader agreement.

Finally, it will be noted that Israel has been "punished" without being condemned; neither the United States nor its six partners meeting in Ottawa went any further than the customary calls for mutual "restraint," drawing no distinction between the five Israelis killed and the hundreds of civilian casualties in Lebanon.

Cheysson regretted that the "excessive" nature of the Israeli reprisals was not "more effectively emphasized." But neither the Quai d'Orsay nor the Elysee went further than urging against an "escalation" on Friday and Saturday.

The American leaders are, nonetheless, humiliated and embarrassed by the latest Israeli initiative. Begin is clearly doing his best to destroy the famous "strategic consensus" which, in Reagan's view, should mobilize Israel, Egypt, Saudi Arabia and other moderate Arab states against the Soviet threat. Instead, the Israeli prime minister wants to be recognized as Washington's only real friend in the region: Anything which makes the United States look like his accomplice and destroys its image among Arab opinion serves his ends.

The timid reactions of Reagan and the Western world as a whole should certainly not worry him too much.

LE MONDE: OTTAWA SUMMIT 'FRANKLY DISAPPOINTING'

PM231215 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "An Inconclusive Summit"]

[Text] The Ottawa summit's results were frankly disappointing in the economic and financial sphere, which is really the object of this type of meeting, and were more positive concerning political and military solidarity.

In view of the threat of a further aggravation of the recession which would increase unemployment and the growing tensions in the international banking system, the fact that the crisis is being tackled in disarray paves the way for dangerous conflicts.

It isn't surprising, therefore, that it was Mitterrand who most clearly expressed the desire to restore the balance of forces with the Soviet Union. This statement is in keeping with the new French diplomacy. The firmness with which it was made seems to have stemmed the vague fears which the left's arrival in power initially inspired.

Unfortunately, it is no more surprising that, despite the unshakable confidence Reagan has in his own program, the seven seem just as devoid of convincing means to overcome the difficulties they all denounce after the summit as they were before. It isn't enough to proclaim, in a spirit of compromise, that the struggles against inflation and unemployment must be given equal priority if a policy acceptable to all is to be drafted.

The U.S. Government chief certainly won a personal victory by warmly defending the action being taken by his administration and the Federal Reserve system to bring more stability to the United States, "which is in the interests of all." The text of the communique largely satisfies Washington's ideas and the central "monetarist" argument since it expressly recognizes that it is by taking direct action on the growth of the money supply (an amount which is, in fact, elusive until after the event) that the authorities will be able to control inflation.

There is also a recommendation, as is desirable, to reduce budget deficits. Bonn is to announce a very strict program to that end (which will certainly pose problems of adjustment with French policy). Meanwhile, the world will continue to experience very high interest rates, forcing governments to resort to fairly obvious subsidies to bolster falling investments, while the international market is the scene of unbecoming struggles, mobilizing vast amounts of capital, to gain control of a particular group. The prayers for "greater stability on the stock markets and financial markets" will not make up for the lack of any plan for an overall reform of the system.

While accepting the idea of a possible conference of GATT signatories, Mitterrand warned the Americans that the continuation of financial chaos would make the use of the bad solution of protectionism inevitable.

Thanks to Mitterrand's efforts and to the efforts of Schmidt, Trudeau, Suzuki and Spadolini, President Reagan agreed to launch a "mutually acceptable process of all-embracing negotiations" with the Third World.

RED BRIGADES RELEASE ALFA ROMEO EXECUTIVE

AU231920 Rome ANSA in English 1910 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Milan, 23 Jul (ANSA)--Alfa Romeo executive Renzo Sandrucci was a free man once again this afternoon after a close to two-month ordeal in a Red Brigades "prison." He turned up in a car parked outside a factory complex shortly after 1600 GMT and was taken to police headquarters for questioning.

Announce 'Clemency' for Peci

AU231544 Rome ANSA in English 1520 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 23 Jul (ANSA)--The Red Brigades announced late last night that they would show "clemency" toward Roberto Peci, brother of Patrizio, the first leading member of the organization to turn state's evidence. The announcement came a few hours after two other communiques were found in Milan and Naples announcing the release of two other hostages, regional councillor Ciro Cirillo, a leading Christian Democrat figure in the Campania region kidnapped on April 27, and Alfa Romeo executive Renzo Sandrucci, who has been in their hands since June 3.

Peci, nabbed last month, was "convicted" as a "police spy" and sentenced to die by a so-called peoples tribunal while in captivity. The Red Brigades called on their sympathizers to pass judgement on the verdict.

The message announcing "clemency" said in part, "We believe that traditional revolutionary clemency can be applied to Roberto Peci, who has recognized his misdeeds and made a self-criticism before the entire proletariat."

In statements issued from captivity, Peci purportedly admitted that he had cooperated with police to secure his brother's arrest.

NEW PRIMATE OF POLAND ARRIVES ON PRIVATE VISIT

AU231644 Rome ANSA in English 1550 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 23 Jul (ANSA)--Poland's new primate, Cardinal Josef Glemp, arrived in Rome today from Warsaw for a ten-day private visit. He was welcomed at Rome's airport by the rector of the Polish Pontifical Institute in Rome, Msgr Francis Maczynskie, and the diplomatic counsellor of the Polish Embassy to the Holy See, Rosalic.

Shortly after his arrival, Glemp said he came to Rome for "a period of rest" and hopes to meet with Pope John Paul II, who is recovering from surgery in a Rome hospital. The Pope appointed Glemp primate of Poland on July 7, after the death of Cardinal Stefan Wyszynski, who died on May 28.

L'UNITA SUMS UP RESULTS OF CCP DELEGATION VISIT

PM231239 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 13 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Rome--Yesterday saw the departure from Rome, following a 10-day visit at the PCI's invitation, of a CCP delegation headed by Comrade Peng Chong, member of the CCP Central Committee Politburo and Secretariat, and composed of the following comrades: Feng Xuan, Central Committee member and deputy director of the Central Committee International Liaison Department; Zhu Dacheng, chief of one of the same department's sections; and Su Zinan, Gu Linfang, She Meng Xiao and Zhang Zhi Yu, Central Committee aides.

The CCP delegation had a series of talks with a PCI delegation led by Comrade Gerardo Chiaromonte of the Directorate and chief of the Economic and Social Department, and composed of the following comrades: Aldo Tortorella, Directorate member and chief of the Cultural Activities Department; Antonio Rubbi, Central Committee member and Foreign Section chief; Roberto Vitali, Central Committee member and secretary of the Milan

Federation; Erias Belardi, Central Committee member; and Renzo Foa, L'UNITA foreign desk chief. It also met with Comrade Giorgio Napolitano, Directorate member and chief of the party problems department.

These Chinese guests had meetings with PCI Secretary General Comrade Enrico Berlinguer, who last year led the PCI dlegation to China--an event which marked the resumption of relations between the parties. During their stay in Italy, the Chinese comrades were received by President of the Republic Sandro Pertini, Senate Speaker Amintore Fanfani and Lower House Speaker Nilde Jotti. The delegation also paid a visit to Milan, Venice, Bologna and Florence, during which--in its meetings with local PCI organizations, mayors and local administrators and with representatives of other political forces--it was able to extend its acquaintance with the Italian situation and the communists' work to extricate the country from the crisis.

Moreover, in Bologna the CCP delegation took part in a public meeting during which Comrade Peng Chong delivered a speech.

During their cordial conversations the PCI and CCP delegations were able to extend their mutual acquaintance, discussing a broad range of matters concerning the international framework and the situation in both countries. In particular the CCP delegation reported on developments in its own country and on the tasks being tackled by the party in accordance with the indications of the recent sixth plenum of the CCP Central Committee. With regard to the world situation, both delegations presented the respective foreign policy lines that they are pursuing and their own stances and assessments in the peace struggle.

At the end of the talks both parties agreed to continue to develop their relations on the basis of mutual autonomy and respect, with a view to helping safeguard peace and coexistence and facilitating the extension of relations between Italy and China and between the Italian and Chinese peoples.

PCI PAPER ON CONTACTS WITH INDIAN MARXIST PARTY

PM221402 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 17 Jul 81 p 12

[Text] Rome--Comrade Harkishan Singh Surjeet, member of the CPI (Marxist) Politburo and senator in the Indian Parliament, met yesterday at PCI Directorate headquarters with Comrade Antonio Rubbi, PCI Central Committee member and Foreign Section chief, and Comrades Laura Diaz and Remo Salati of the Foreign Section.

Comrade Surjeet provided a full report on the situation in India and on the development of the CPI (Marxist), which in recent years has further extended its influence among India's workers and people's masses, enabling it to increase its representation in the Indian Parliament to 49 members and to join the governments of three important Indian states: West Bengal, Kerala and Tripura.

The two parties' representatives also had an in-depth exchange of opinions on some of the major issues of international life. At the end of the cordial conversation, it was agreed to impart a new impetus to PCI-CPI (Marxist) relations.

SOARES TO VISIT YUGOSLAVIA IN AUGUST

LD232102 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] The secretary general of the Portuguese Socialist Party, Dr Mario Soares, will be paying an official visit to Yugoslavia on 10 and 11 August at the invitation of the Yugoslav president. On 8 and 9 August Soares will take part in a meeting of socialist leaders from southern Europe to be held in Rhodes and then go to Yugoslavia.

PAPERS REPORT EXPECTED GOVERNMENT CHANGES

LD232132 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Two Lisbon evening papers, A TARDE and A CAPITAL, reported this evening that the parliamentary group of the Social Democratic Party has confirmed, through statements made by Carlos Macedo, that there will be a major government reshuffle this August.

BRIEFS

ANGOLA ENERGY MINISTER--The minister of energy of the People's Republic of Angola, Pedro Van Dunem, left for Luanda early this afternoon after a week-long visit to Portugal. Speaking to the Portuguese news agency, Pedro Van Dunem stressed that the of the results visit had surpassed his expectations. He said he had not expected to find in Portugal the technical know-how and capacity which he found and which will make it possible to resolve several problems that have arisen in the energy sphere. The Angolan energy minister also stated that increasingly broader prospects for intensifying cooperation between Angola and Portugal are opening up, especially in the electrical energy sphere. He further stated that he is certain that yet another step forward has been taken in the process of improving relations between the two countries. [Text] [Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 11 Jul 81 LD]

DENMARK

PRIME MINISTER'S REMARKS ON ZONE ISSUE CRITICIZED

BERLINGKSE TIDENDE Article

PM231455 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 18 Jul 81 p 5

[Solveig Rodsgaard report: "Anker Jorgensen To Clarify His Views on Nuclear-free Zone"]

[Text] Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen will now explain to the Folketing Foreign Affairs Committee whether the Danish Government has changed its views on the desire for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries. This comes after the prime minister expressed at a meeting of the Socialist International in Bonn similar views to those of Norwegian Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland on a nuclear-free north as an element in a long term European detente and disarmament plan.

The question of the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone was raised by the Norwegian Labor Party. And at the Socialist International meeting, the Danish prime minister said that he agrees with the Norwegian prime minister and that the U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig's antipathy was an expression of Haig's view alone.

Foreign Affairs Committee Chairman Henning Christophersen, a former foreign minister, said that it is bound to cause uncertainty about Danish foreign policy when the prime minister independently makes an obvious change in Denmark's attitude toward the Soviet-inspired proposals for the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone.

"When the Foreign Affairs Committee meets next week, the prime minister will have to explain the government position on this question. The parties which for a number of years have stood alongside the Social Democrats in their support for Danish foreign and security policy have a reasonable right to ask for a clarification," Henning Christophersen said.

Folketing Defense Committee Chairman Palle Simonsen (Conservative Party) said that when Anker Jorgensen and Gro Harlem Brundtland seek to give their approval to the topic of a nuclear-free north "they give the so-called peace groups a lot of arguments of which to make further use."

"The peace groups want to use the debate to delay and obstruct the modernization of the tactical nuclear arms in West Europe so that NATO is weakened," Palle Simonsen said. He added that statements like those made by Anker Jorgensen are a danger to Denmark's reputation.

"With his statements, Anker Jorgensen is trying to conciliate the rebels in his own party. He knows very well that the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is being used in both Norway and Denmark as a conciliation to these rebels. It makes it difficult to take Denmark seriously when such internal conditions exist within the Social Democratic Party. There is growing mistrust of what Denmark is doing, in part caused by the government's attitude toward defense."

Palle Simonsen is also of the opinion that the problems which really cause uncertainty and imbalance in the Nordic countries are the deployment of Soviet nuclear arms on the Kola Peninsula and the strong Soviet submarine force in the Baltic.

BERLINGSKE TIDENDE Editorial

PM231456 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 19 Jul 81 p 8

[Editorial: "Dual Personality"]

[Text] One of the recurrent problems for Danish security policy goes under the name of Anker Jorgensen. Whenever he feels himself called upon to do some yelling on the sidelines of the government's security policy the country is in danger.

The problem is that Anker Jorgensen is both prime minister and Social Democratic Party chairman. When as prime minister, he suddenly launches into changes of course in Danish foreign policy, it is often because there is something he wants to patch up as party chairman. One remembers his powerful intervention with a special Danish position when the NATO Council last winter was about to make the dual decision to strengthen missile defenses and simultaneously to offer missile negotiations to the Soviet Union. When everything was ready for the decision to be made, Denmark called for a 6-month postponement--to the amazement of all concerned--because President Brezhnev's peace offensive, with the withdrawal of troops from Berlin, had at the time made an impression on the Social Democratic Party's leftwing.

Brezhnev has once again started a letter campaign, inspired by the pacifist leftwing debate on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries, in which he uses as bait the hint that it might be possible to make the zone even bigger. Straightaway, Anker Jorgensen proclaims from Socialist International headquarters in Bonn that this is something which Denmark wants to pursue. The fact that the U.S. secretary of state already indicated his government's concern that this could cause complications for the missile negotiations with Moscow, well, that can only be his own personal opinion. The idea is not dead simply because of this, and Haig, like everyone else, must note that this is something which Denmark is still interested in discussing," the party chairman said on behalf of the prime minister.

Anker Jorgensen should have taken a look around while he was in Bonn, ideally before he made any statements. There the Social Democrats have a party chairman, Willy Brandt, who can take care of the flower children on the party's leftwing with a few nuclear-free speculations, and a government head, Helmut Schmidt, who can look after the country's security policy. Things can be quite complicated when they both speak at once, giving different views on the same subject, but no one can mistake who is responsible for what. Anker Jorgensen has only himself to talk. When the party chairman says something about what Denmark wants, the rest of the world hears the prime minister say it.

It cannot seriously be Anker Jorgensen's serious intention to send Denmark on a picnic of Nordic talks about a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe. This is a central alliance issue he is playing with, not a private concern for the Danish Social Democrats. And the sooner he makes this clear to himself and to the rest of the world, the better.

Party Spokesmen Comments

PM231457 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 20 Jul 81 p 5

[Solveig Rodsgaard report: "Anker Jorgensen's Statement Endangers Defense Negotiations"]

[Text] The important next round of defense negotiations risk running into problems as a result of Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen's statements on a nuclear-free north because, in the opinion of a number of the parties taking part in the negotiations, the prime minister is creating uncertainty surrounding Danish membership in NATO.

The defense negotiations among the Social Democrats, Conservatives, Liberals, Christian People's Party, Center Democrats and the Radical Liberals will continue on 7 August and this meeting is considered to be the 'make or break' meeting. The other parties in the negotiations also have noted that the statements are unfortunate because the Social Democrats seemed to show frankness in the last defense negotiation meeting.

Conservative spokesman Erik Ninn-Hansen said that the prime minister's statements cast doubts on Denmark's commitment to NATO and that it was the worst possible time to make them on the eve of the next round of defense negotiations.

Arne Christiansen, Liberal Party: "The prime minister's statements will damage Denmark's standing abroad. As far as the defense negotiations are concerned, I hope that these statements will not prove an embarrassment. I have high hopes of a clarification before the defense negotiations take place, both to the Foreign Affairs Committee and to the rightwing of the Social Democratic Party, which also has asked for a clarification. The defense negotiations on 7 August are important and I had the impression that progress was beginning to be made in the last round of talks."

Christian Christiansen, Christian People's Party: "The prime minister's statements have come at a very unfortunate time and they could wreck the negotiations. On the other hand, I see the reaction of the rightwing of the Social Democratic Party as something positive. It could perhaps mean that the Social Democratic Party will come to its senses and realize that we risk finding ourselves in a situation in which many people hold the view that we are on our way out of NATO. I find it impossible to understand how Anker Jorgensen could use a forum like the Socialist International to discuss the internal problems of his party. He must know that he speaks as Denmark's prime minister."

Rene Brusvang, Center Democrats: "The prime minister has chosen an unfortunate point in time for his statements and I hope that they will not embarrass the atmosphere of the defense negotiations. However, I don't expect the negotiations to break down."

Tomorrow the prime minister will clarify his statements on the nuclear-free zone to the Foreign Affairs Committee and there will also be a debate in the Social Democratic Folketing group, in which a number of rightwing members are nervous about the prime minister's method of pursuing foreign and security policy.

FINLAND

VALMET SELLS SMALL HEAT-POWER UNITS TO USSR

PM210955 Helsinki HUFVUDSTADSBLADET in Swedish 5 Jul 81 p 10

[Text] The Valmet AB Linnavouri factory in Nokia has received an important order from the Soviet Union. It is for a total energy unit which simultaneously produces electricity and heat. The purchaser is the Soviet Mashinoimport, which arranged the deal with Valmet at the Finnenergia exhibition in Moscow.

A Valmet spokesman said that the value of the deal at present is relatively small; the price of one unit is a little over 200,000 markkaa. However, the importance of the deal as a breakthrough in the Soviet market is much greater. The Soviet Union already has shown interest in acquiring 150-200 units per year.

The electrical output of the total energy unit in question is 76 kw and its heat output, 107 kw. The unit has been especially constructed for Siberia's cold climate and can be started at temperatures as low as minus 50 degrees centigrade. The unit can be transported and used in extreme weather conditions.

NORWAY

PRIME MINISTER REPORTS ON TALKS WITH SCHMIDT

PM231214 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 16 Jul 81 p 8

[Terje Svaboe dispatch: "Time for Reflection for Government on Zone Issue"]

[Excerpt] Bonn, 15 Jul--The time for reflection and summing up has come for the government on the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area. This seems certain after Prime Minister Gro Harlem Brundtland's talks with West German Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt on Wednesday [15 July] and Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund's talks with his U.S. counterpart Alexander Haig in Washington. In an interview with Norwegian journalists today, the prime minister said that the government will now evaluate the objections to the zone proposal which have now been made. However, she rejected the suggestion that the proposal is now dead. Prime Minister Harlem Brundtland is in Bonn in connection with a meeting of the Socialist International.

In the course of the day, she also had a separate 40-minute meeting with Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt at which the two discussed the proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area among other topics.

Schmidt has made it clear in the past that he has little enthusiasm for such a proposal, but the prime minister said in an interview with Norwegian journalists after the meeting that Schmidt had not spoken as strongly against the proposal as Secretary of State Alexander Haig had done to Foreign Minister Frydenlund.

Gro Harlem Brundtland said that, in the talks, Schmidt showed great concern over the total negotiating situation between East and West. In this connection, he mentioned both SALT and the CSCE in Madrid. Schmidt attaches great importance to the consideration that proposals which could harm these negotiations should not be put forward.

Harlem Brundtland stressed to Norwegian journalists that this is also Norwegian policy. She said it is most important for Norway that real disarmament negotiations start between East and West.

"We are behind this view and give it our full support, but our proposal for a nuclear-free zone must be seen as a supplement to it. I would like to stress that our position has always been that the zone question must be solved within a European framework," the prime minister said.

FRYDENLUND: WORK ON ZONE PROPOSAL WILL CONTINUE

PM231028 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 16 Jul 81 p 7

[Thor Viksveen report]

[Excerpt] After his return from New York, Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund stressed that work on the [nuclear-free zone] proposal will continue.

"The U.S. secretary of state was skeptical of the plans for a zone because he feared they could hamper the negotiations starting at the end of 1981 which are intended to prevent the deployment of new nuclear arms in Europe. Alexander Haig also feared that the zone affair could create problems for defense cooperation in NATO," Frydenlund said.

He stressed that the government in its further work on the zone proposal "will, of course, attach importance to views and objections from our allies."

"The government attaches very great importance to the coming negotiations and it is with great satisfaction we can now state that talks will begin. The outcome of these negotiations will be of crucial importance for continued security policy development in our part of the world," Frydenlund said, stressing that Norway would do nothing which might complicate this work.

"As far as the chances of enshrining a nuclear-free zone in a treaty are concerned, I have never suggested that this would be an easy matter. On the contrary, it is incredibly complicated because the question affects the vital security interests of other countries."

"Our basic motive for launching the proposal is to contribute to reducing the nuclear threat in our part of the world. Work toward this goal is a duty and it goes without saying that it is also perfectly legitimate work," Frydenlund told ARBEIDERBLADET.

POLITICIANS VIEW U.S. STAND ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

PM231033 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 16 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] Lars Roar Langslet, Conservative Party, Storting Foreign Affairs Committee member: "It is no surprise that the United States views the proposal with skepticism. The question has been handled unusually clumsily on the Norwegian side with little clarity about the actual objectives. It would have been an advantage if the government had discussed the question with our allies at an earlier stage rather than giving priority to talks with the Soviet Communist Party."

Kaare Kristiansen, Christian People's party chairman: "We should not be surprised that the U.S. Government has strong objections to the proposal. The government has handled the matter clumsily. When a country within NATO goes in for solo intitiatives while the alliance is busy with wide-ranging negotiations on much more important questions than nuclear-free zones, we run the risk that the Soviet Union might not be interested in participating in disarmament."

Berge Furre, Socialist Left Party chairman: "The fact that the United States does not want a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries is neither new nor unexpected. A nuclear-free zone is a crucially important matter for Norwegian security and for detente in the area. The government should now put Norway's interests and sovereignty before those of the United States and draw up a plan for the further pursuit of the proposal on a Nordic basis."

Johan J. Jakobsen, Center Party chairman: "It has long been known that the United States has a reserved attitude toward plans for a nuclear-free zone. Thus, the negative reactions are not surprising. The reactions show that at present the United States is giving priority to the imminent negotiations on medium-range missiles in Europe. When Norway's allies are critical of the proposal, we must not take bilateral initiatives with regard to the Soviet Union."

ARBEIDERBLADET Editorial

PM231031 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 16 Jul 81 p 4

[Editorial : "The Zone Affair"]

[Text] The negative U.S. response to the proposal for a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area can come as no surprise. It would, of course, have been pleasing if the idea had aroused sympathy in Washington, but the opposition from the Reagan administration must not be an obstacle to continued work on the proposal.

The most important factor in developments in the area of security in the next few months will be the chances of reaching positive results in the coming negotiations on the nuclear arms in Europe. All other considerations must give way to this all-important objective. Unlike the United States, however, we cannot see that the work for a nuclear-free zone would complicate this.

NORWAY, MEXICO AGREE TO COOPDINATE OIL PRICES

PM230927 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 20 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] Norway and Mexico will begin cooperating to stabilize and raise the price of oil. In its initial phases, the cooperation will take the form of an exchange of information and experience on oil prices and marketing, Oil and Energy Minister Arvid Johanson told AFTENPOSTEN. He pointed out that if Mexico now succeeds in raising the price of its oil by $2 this could alleviate the pressure on the price of Norwegian crude oil.

"Today Norway and Mexico are the largest oil exporters outside OPEC and have a common interest in maintaining oil prices at a stable level," Johanson said. He said that a prominent official from the Mexican Oil and Energy Ministry will be coming to Oslo in the fall to discuss what forms the oil price cooperation will take.

[Question] Is this cooperation intended to be a sort of small-scale OPEC?

[Answer] No, it cannot be described as such. At present, the cooperation will take place at an informal level. The talks I had in Mexico took place just when the director of the state oil company, Pemex, was dismissed. The reason for this is that oil prices have fallen by $4. This is probably also part of the reason why oil price questions were central in the discussions I had with the Mexican oil minister, among others. [answer ends]

After his Mexican visit, Oil and Energy Minister Arvid Johanson traveled to the United States to brief U.S. Energy Secretary James Edwards on Norwegian oil policy. There was a certain amount of tension about this meeting because in June last year the Americans sent a letter to the Norwegian Foreign Ministry, criticizing the price increase on Norwegian gas from the Statfjord field. The Americans also previously criticized the rate of expansion of Norwegian gas production.

Oil and Energy Minister Arvid Johanson told AFTENPOSTEN that there was no criticism at the meeting of the Norwegian price for Statfjord gas. I have the impression that the Americans understand our view that there must be some conformity between gas and oil prices," Arvid Johanson said. He also said that the Americans take a positive view of the Storting's decisions to increase production of Statfjord gas.

DOWNED ARGENTINE PLANE FLYING SUPPLIES FROM ISRAEL

NC240942 Nicosia CYPRUS WEEKLY in English 24 Jul 81 pp 1, 28

[Excerpt] A gang of international gun-runners has been using Larnaca airport as an intermediate stop to fly military supplies from Israel to Iran, an avowed enemy of the Jewish state.

The CYPRUS WEEKLY discovered this important international development following inquiries about the mysterious crash of an Argentine-registered cargo plane inside the Soviet Union, close to the Iranian border, while on a flight from Tehran to Larnaca.

A Cyprus civil aviation official confirmed to the CYPRUS WEEKLY last night that the Argentine plane had carried out four flights earlier in the month, using Larnaca as stopover point between Tel Aviv and Tehran. The source said this was normal practise for aircraft flying from Tel Aviv to the Arab states or Iran, countries that do not reconise Israel and would not otherwise accept a direct flight from Tel Aviv to any of their own airports.

The gun-running involvement was revealed by reports that the only passenger aboard the crashed Argentinian plane was a mysterious Briton listed by foreign governments as an international arms merchant. The Briton's involvement in gun-running operations is currently being investigated by Scotland Yard, the CYPRUS WEEKLY learned from London last night. He and the three Argentinian crew aboard the plane were all killed, according to reports from Moscow.

Despite its publicly avowed pro-Palestinian and anti-Israeli stand, Iran's revolutionary government has been repeatedly charged by Iraq of receiving spare parts for its U.S. made jets and other military equipment, as well as other military supplies from Israel, to enable it to continue its 10-month-old war against its neighbouring Arab state.

The confirmation of the Iraqi accusations by the fact that a cargo plane has carried out several flights between Tel Aviv and Tehran will inevitably create a crisis between Iran and the Arab world, particularly the Palestinians and those anti-Iraqi Arab states like Syria and Libya that support it in its war against Iraq.

KIPRIANOU RECEIVES NEW AMBASSADOR FROM IRAQ

NC222032 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Text] President Kiprianou has stated that the Cyprus issue is going through a very delicate period, adding that despite the Greek Cypriot side's good will, there has been no progress whatsoever owing to the Turkish side's stand.

In accepting the credentials of the new Iraqi ambassador to Cyprus, Mr 'Abd ar-Razzaq Muhmmad Laftah, President Kiprianou expressed doubts that the Turkish side will submit, in accordance with the many promises given lately, substantive proposals on the very important territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem. He also remarked that Denktas' repeated statements are completely contrary to the promises given in various directions. Mr Kiprianou then said that if there is going to be a lasting peace in Cyprus, there must be a viable solution that will secure a completely independent country, without foreign interference and intervention, and ensure the territorial integrity, sovereignty, unity and the nonalignment of Cyprus. He also said that Cyprus must be completely demilitarized, stressing that this will be to the benefit of Cypriots and will contribute toward international peace and security.

President Kiprianou said that the Cyprus issue is not one of religion, but a clear problem of invasion, occupation and outside intervention.

This is why, he concluded, we firmly believe that the Greeks and Turks of Cyprus can live in a united state and prosper and work together for better days.

In presenting his credentials, Mr Laftah said that the Iraqi Government, faithful to the principles of justice, peace and what is right, does whatever it can to contribute in finding a solution to the Cyprus issue that would secure peace and the freedom of all the Cypriot people. Present at the credentials ceremony were Foreign Minister Rolandhis, Minister to the President Stavrou, and Foreign Ministry Secretary General Pelayias.

SPOKESMAN REAFFIRMS CLOSE COOPERATION WITH UN

NC231237 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Commenting on a press report, the government spokesman has stated that the Government of the Republic and the Greek Cypriot side are in close cooperation with the UN secretary general and his representative in Cyprus for the promotion of the Cyprus problem. The spokesman also stated that the government appreciates the continuous efforts that the UN secretary general and his associates are exerting under difficult conditions toward achieving progress in the Cypris issue which, he added, is and will remain within the UN framework.

TA NEA SEES PROPAGANDA WORKING FOR U.S. INTERESTS

NC220950 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 22 Jul 81 p 1

[The "Positions" column by Renos Prentzas: "The U.S. Interest"]

[Excerpts] This paradox happens in Cyprus: A systematic propaganda begins each time Western pressure and Turkish strategy drive the Greek Cypriot side into a corner compelling it to say "yes" or "no"--a "yes" that means new concessions or a "no" that acquires content and significance if it signifies the end of good natured indiffernce, inactivity and passivity--propaganda such as:

"Nobody cares about the Cyprus problem. The Americans do not care. They do not care what happens to Cyprus. They did us a favor by giving us the U.S. plan. Had we accepted it, they would have had a solution of their own. Had we rejected it they would have had a good excuse to cease caring. We did not accept it. They did not get the solution they wanted and they lost interest. Now we are at Turkey's disposal and nobody cares what happens. The Turk does not care either. Nobody is pressuring him and nobody is annoying him. He will do what he wants when he so decides."

But why this propaganda at a time when the Cyprus Republic is being asked or pressured to make critical and determining decisions? The answer is not difficult. The brains behind the propaganda know that by propagating it they are escalating a psychological war with two targets. The people's morale and the government that is prone to concessions.

We must reveal this propaganda to the people as it is actually another expression of the U.S. "interest" and at this particular time it is intense and compelling. It is intense and compelling because: PASOK is ascending in Greece, a junta cannot be perpetuated in Turkey, events are rapidly developing in the Middle East and dramatic developments are in the offing. Islamic processes inside Turkey and a burgeoning of Kurdish and Armenian resistance are creating an uncertain situation; Iranian internal developments are uncertain; the Persian Gulf is the focal point of tough competition; pro-American regimes in the area are tottering; and the Rapid Deployment Force needs bases and springboards.

This interest is "hostile" to Cyprus, and the people should know this and they should also know that this interest has never stopped--nor will it stop until such time when a subjugated Cyprus will suffer partition--covert or otherwise. Resistance to the U.S. "interest" is resistance to Attila.

KKE ISSUES ELECTION PROGRAM DECLARATION FOR 1981

NC192055 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 19 Jul 81 pp 3, 4

[KKE election program for 1981: The KKE must be stronger among the people and in the Chamber of Deputies; the KKE must be represented at the second distribution of seats--passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Excerpts] The 4 years between 1977 and 1981--4 years of administration by the rightwing--have been a period of subjugation to imperialist dependence, authoritarianism and unilateral austerity. Under the policy of subjugation to the imperialists, the rightwing, with its enslaving agreements, has been selling off the country's sovereign rights and national independence. Greek territory has been placed in the service in imperialist war adventures in the area and is becoming the field for a possible nuclear confrontation, with the danger of total annihilation.

At the same time, these 4 years were also years of struggle and mobilizations by the workers. The rightwing ignored the voice of the people. Its answer to the people's demands were special riot police and their armored cars, persecutions and dismissals, new restrictions on the freedoms and rights of the people, slander of the people's struggles, and intensification of anticommunism.

Changes of a historic significance, however, demand equivalent opportunities. They presuppose a powerful people's movement; they presuppose rallying, unity and a firm orientation of all the anti-imperialist antimonopoly democratic forces. The KKE is firmly dedicated to this line and offers all its strength to this end.

Today our people do have the possibility and the strength, through their vote, to put their own seal on the country's future developments and prospects. The election is a great opportunity and it must not be lost as it was lost in 1963 and 1967.

This election program is the basis of the program of the democratic government, because implementation of its basic measures and directives is a necessary prerequisite for a democratic turn in the country's life. Without this, the whole affair will be limited to a change in government within the framework of the present establishment. By presenting its program, the KKE asks for the people's basic support in the election.

GREECE NEEDS AN INDEPENDENT PEACE-LOVING FOREIGN POLICY

Patriots, men and women: More than ever before there is a need today to rid our country of the ties of Americanocracy, Atlantism and subjugation. It must completely and finally withdraw from NATO; all U.S. bases must be abolished; all agreements which violate its sovereign rights must be abrogated; the consequenses from its accession to the EEC must be combatted and it must be detatched from it. Only in this way will Greece's national affairs cease to be regulated from outside and in the interests of the imperialists.

The KKE demands the withdrawal of nuclear weapons from Greek territory and supports the proposal of Leonid Brezhnev for the signing of an agreement between the Soviet Union and our country against the use of nuclear weapons between them.

It fights against the installation of cruise and Pershing-II missiles in Western Europe and in Greece and for the conversion of the Balkans and the Mediterranean into zones of peace. It fights for the cessation of the armaments race for general and total disarmament, for the prevalence of the principles of peaceful coexistence in international life. It supports the proposals of the Soviet Union for averting the danger of a nuclear war, for easing international tension whch was created by the imperialists, for decreasing the armaments competition and for strengthening world peace.

The KKE will fight for handling the Aegean problem through peaceful processes without NATO and U.S. intervention on the basis of international law and practice with respect for territorial integrity and in accordance with the Final Act of Helsinki.

It is in support of an independent, sovereign, territorially integral, united and nonaligned Cyprus Republic; it supports the withdrawal of Turkish and all foreign troops and the demilitarization of the Megalonisos. The KKE was the first to ask and continues to ask for the opening of the dossier of treason. The KKE supports the solution of the Cyprus issue on the basis of UN resolutions.

OUR COUNTRY IS IN NEED OF A TRUE DEMOCRACY WITH THE DEVELOPMENT OF DEMOCRATIC FREEDOMS AND THE RIGHTS OF ALL WORKERS

Democrats, by voting KKE you vote for:

The abolishing of all antipeople and antidemocratic laws and measures. The abolishing of dossiers and the certificates of social-political affiliations. The ending of police control and terrorism.
The ending of human rights violations.
The promoting of democratization and the decentralization of state machinery. The removing of junta elements from their key positions. The striking at bureaucracy. The dissolving of fascist and parastate organizations. The dissolving of TAE [Criminal Investigation Department].
The ending of state intervention in workers' and employees' trade unions, in the agricultural partnerships and associations and the other people's organizations. The reversing of democratization of the trade union movement.
The firm securing of the workers' participation in the administration of state enterprises and social organizations.
The establishing of the simple proportionate system as a permanent election system. The permitting of people to vote at the age of 18. The legal and practical securing of the right to vote of immigrants, merchant sailors and students abroad.
The revising of the constitution to abolish all the antidemocratic provisions and the president's superauthorities as well as the provisions that concede colonial privileges to foreign and local monopolies.

The KKE will struggle so that the Chamber of Deputies role becomes substantial, its operation democratized and so the antidemocratic discriminations against parties will be ended.

The people's and nation's interest requires the armed forces to become true defenders of national independence and the people's democratic freedoms. The KKE will strive to abolish the strict separation between people and army and to secure the Chamber of Deputies' substantive control over the armed forces. It rejects the determining of military expenditures on the basis of NATO's pursuits and aggressive plans. It strives for a truly national defense policy based on the safeguarding of the country's independence and integrity, the cutting down of the expenditures with the true needs of national defense as a criterion, and the diversification of the sources of armaments supply.

The KKE will struggle for the immediate modernization and democratization of military regulations and the whole system of training and educating the armed forces, so that the democratic rights and the personality of the soliders, noncommissioned officers and officers may be respected. [It will struggle] for the improving of living conditions and substantial increase of their incomes, for the stopping of anticommunist feelings in the armed forces, and for the diminishing of the length of service in the national service.

The KKE will struggle for the democratization of the structure, operation and the mission of the seucrity forces. It will strive for the abolition of special departments that persecute the people's movement, and the improving of the salaries and working terms of troopers and officers of the security forces.

The KKE will demand the democratization of the mass media means, the safeguarding of its equal use by all parties and the assurance that people are objectively informed. [It will demand] the abolition of any press restrictions and the ending of the democratic press persecution and assurance of its free circulation.

FOR THE HIGHER STANDARD OF LIVING OF WORKERS FOR THE ERADICATION OF MONOPOLISTIC IMMUNITY

The KKE calls on all workers to provide more than the minimum votes for its proposals so that its struggle for another economic policy may become more decisive and, thus, a control may be imposed on prices and profits. [It calls for] the combatting of inflation, high prices and the galloping increase in rents; for the lowering of taxes of goods consumed by the people; for adopting measures against profiteering; for the readjustment of the income tax scale toward easing the burden on people's income and increase the taxes on big incomes; and for the confining the antiproductive expenditures.

The KKE will struggle to develop our economic relations with all countries, particularly the socialist, Arab and other countries in our region, on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. This would allow the increased problems on foreign trade and balance of payment to be dealt with and would help secure additional means for economic development.

The KKE will struggle to solve the burning problems of the working class, as related the people's homes and the sewage and transport systems that are connected with improving the quality of life of the working class.

The KKE considers it imperative to struggle: for the democratization of the country's economic sector and to broaden it by nationalizing the entire energy supply and other enterprises of national importance, in an effort to encourage substantial regional development; for a purge of public enterprises to attain productive handling; for creating the necessary conditions to develop local technology; for planning the country's industrialization by supporting heavy industry, particularly in the field of machinery production, metallurgy (nickel, aluminium, forged steel and others), chemical industry (petrochemical and others); as well as in achieving energy economy with the utilization of local energy sources and the country's ore riches. In general, it is important to create the necessary substructure for the productive employment of the population and the self-supporting economic development.

TO DEAL WITH THE IMMEDIATE PROBLEMS OF THE WORKING PEOPLE

The KKE will demand: FOR THE WORKERS AND EMPLOYEES

--a general increase in salaries and wages to cover the needs of the families of workers and employees.
--automatic cost of living adjustment every 3 months.
--increase in pensions and fixing the lowest limit of pensions, equaling 80 percent of the wages of unskilled technical workers.
--lowering the age limit for pensioners to 60 years for men and 55 for women.
--utilization of deposited insurance funds to improve pensions.
--substantial general application of social aid.
--special measures to stop discharges from service, the combating of unemployment and the security of employment.
--expanding and increasing unemployment subsidies.
--preserving law 2112/20 and extending it to technical workers.
--preserving a 5-day work week of 40 hours for all, and 35 hours for the tenure and students.
--instituting protective measures for workers in all places of work and particularly in unhygienic industries.
--amending the workers' legislature to the interest of the workers and employees.
--respecting trade unions rights of workers and employees.
--abolition of the Organization of the Management of Labor Union Special Funds (ODEPES).
--free collective agreements.
--true respect for the right to strike.
--radical ammendment of laws 3239/55 and 330/1976.
--permanent employment of all special civil servants.

--expansion of all rights and gains of salaried workers in agriculture and those of foreign workers in our country.
--securing work to dockers and protecting them from unemployment.
--abolition of the "bipartite agreement for foreigners' and shipowners' privileges over dockers."
--improved medical welfare of families of dockers.
--training of merchant marine personnel under auspices of the education ministry.

FOR THE FARMERS

The KKE, consistent supporter of the farmers' interests, is struggling:

--to secure prices for all agricultural products based on the production cost and a reasonable profit.
--to preserve and extend subsidies as well as strengthening direct incomes to the farmers.
--cheap fertilizers, animal feeds, pesticides and other commodities.
--to suspend interest-free debts, particularly for farmers having suffered disasters.
--lower credits to the samll and medium sized households; similar credits to agricultural cooperatives.
--to accelerate production, processing and marketing of agricultural produce.
--to strike at profiteering by the middleman and capitalists.
--to secure full insurance of production as well as for agricultural produce and livestock in case of disaster.
--abolition of checks; payment in cash to farmers on delivery.
--to double the present pensions of farmers.
--abolition of the outdated tax for moving agricultural produce in favor of OGA [Farm Insurance Organization].
--progressive taxation on the net agricultural income.
--male farmers to receive pensions at the age of 60, females at the age of 55; equal pensions to both sexes.
--to distribute to non-land owners and small landowners private large areas of land, the land owned by monasteries and the church, and arid land.
--to construct the necessary irrigation projects and other land improvement projects as well as road construction projects.
--to abolish law 921/79 and a vote on a new one that would safeguard the democratic operation of the cooperative organizations.

FOR THE PROFESSIONALS, ARTISANS AND SMALL TRADESMEN

The professionals, artisans and small tradesmen are facing serious problems that are attributed to the domination of monopolies and the "New Democracy" policy. With integration into the EEC, these problems are increasing. The KKE supports and will do whatever it can to resolve their little-publicized specific claims by:

Participation in the distribution of financing in proportion to their role in production and employment; the strengthening of the forms of their cooperation.
Substantive protection of professional premises; suspension of evictions.
A minimum limit on pensions for the professionals, artisans and small tradesmen equal to 80 percent of the basic salary of private employees.
Fixing of a timetable without restrictions.

The KKE favors the general control of prices, particularly for professionals, artisans and small tradesmen. The KKE supports the control of prices and raw materials, whether imported or locally produced, as well as the correct determination of the profit percentages between the wholesale and retail trades.

FOR THE SCIENTISTS AND TECHNICAL EXPERTS

Today, our country has a notable potential in scientists and technical experts. In order that this potential can be utilized, it is necessary to take measures to secure permanent work--in contrast to their underemployment or part-time employment--for their balanced utilization and the continued renewal and raising of their scientific level.

FOR THE WOMEN

For women workers, employees, farmers, housewives, scientists and youth, the KKE will support equal rights at work, in education, in the family and in the society. This means:

Women will have equal opportunities with men in remuneration, in specializing and in professional careers. They will be able to harmoniously combine their duties as mothers, workers and citizens. They will have free time for social activities, rest and recreation. The building of state nurseries throughout Greece, preferably in the people's neighborhoods and especially in the countryside.

FOR THE YOUTH

The KKE is struggling so that the new generation may find a position in life commensurate with its expectations and worthy of its great struggles.

The KKE is asking for the vote and support of the youth in its program delcaration for:

Securing the youth's protection from unemployment with the creation of new jobs, the control of employment dismissals and the improvement of technical and professional training. Putting a stop to the unaccountable superexploitation of youths by the monopolies; abolishing discrimination against youths; safeguarding equal renumeration for equal work; taking protective measures for the youths' health stemming from unhygienic and difficult working conditions; instituting a 6-hour workday and leave for working students so they can take examinations.
Giving all youths the possibility of creative utilization of their free time; creating areas for sports and recreation; putting a stop to youths being corrupted by the so-called "American way of life."
Securing the equal and total participation of youths in social and political life.

FOR EDUCATION

The submission of education to monopolistic interests, its obsolete content and its authoritarian organization and operation have led to a deadlock. Our country's intergration into the EEC has brought new aggravations.

The KKE is struggling for the democratization and modernization of the content and organization of the educational system so that education may be in the service of the people.

The KKE is struggling to abolish class obstacles, to implement the unified 9-year compulsory education and to secure equal opportunities for educating all youths; to secure the necessary infrastructure in buildings and laboratories and in educational and other personnel.

The KKE will demand a substantial increase in state expenditures for education, all teachers not appointed be appointed and secure conditions that would safeguard the teachers' positions and would allow them to properly perform their duties.

PEOPLE'S HEALTH

The KKE will struggle: To reform the health system so that health may stop being the object of exploitation and secure true medical and hospital care for the people.

To improve the equipment in provincial hospitals and create new ones.

To organize medical care in the provinces; to improve existing medical outstations and build new ones supplied with the required equipment and personnel to deal correctly and in time with urgent incidents.

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION

The issue over environmental pollution has reached a deadlock. Daily the seas are being polluted and the plant and animal wealth as well as the monuments are being destroyed. The people's health and life is in immediate danger.

The KKE struggles for the taking of substantive and radical measures for the protection and rejuvenation of the environment.

The KKE will particularly struggle for taking substantive measures to restrain and control environmental pollution by industry; for restricting the expansion of new industries in areas already badly polluted; for removing "dirty" industries from inhabited areas; for reorganizing transportation with the aim of lowering environmental pollution, for promoting solutions to the big problems of the cities, like the sewage, the green-belt and the town planning problems; for instituting limits for pollution in the sea, land and air and imposing strict sanctions on violating industries.

The KKE proceeds to the election battle with optimism because it relies on its inexhaustible, long-standing ties with the people. Life has taught it that: a vote for KKE means a vote for the most consistent defender of the people's claims. It means a vote for the most steadfast opponent of every antidemocratic deviation, for the most progressive and creative factor in the country's political life. It means a vote for the standard bearer of change, for the party whose active participation is essential to any specific change in favor of the people.

The only vote that will never be lost for the working class is the vote that will be cast for the KKE. This is more valid in these elections which, with the KKE's participation in the second distribution of seats, will guarantee the removal of the rightwing from government.

GOVERNMENT LOWERS REPRESENTATION LEVEL IN KABUL

TA231514 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1510 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 23 Jul (AA)--Turkey will reduce her diplomatic mission in Afghanistan to charge d'affaires level when the Turkish ambassador in Kabul departs on July 29.

POLICE QUELL DISTURBANCE AT IRANIAN EMBASSY

TA241029 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] A fight broke out between two rival groups at the Iranian Embassy in Ankara today during the voting for the Iranian presidential elections. Security forces detained 49 Iranians who were involved in the fight. A Turkish Radio and Television correspondent has learned that a group supporting Bani-Sadr, the former Iranian president, began arguing with pro-Khomeyni officials in the embassy. The security forces requested by the Iranian Embassy to intervene in the argument which turned into a fight, detained 49 Iranians. Some damage was caused in the consular department of the embassy. The ballot box was broken and several persons were slightly injured.

A statement by the Foreign Ministry on the incident says: The Turkish Government's regrets in connection with the incident that occurred at the Iranian Embassy in Ankara have been conveyed to the Iranian charge d'affaires. All necessary security measures have been taken in Iranian missions in Turkey. Turkey has always expressed its opposition to such incidents against diplomatic missions and has denounced them.

GENERAL EVREN GOES TO ERZURUM FOR CELEBRATION

TA231226 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1200 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Head of State Gen Kenan Evren has left for Erzurum to attend the 62d anniversary of the Erzurum congress. General Evren will also attend the unveiling ceremony of the Ataturk monument and a conference at the congress building. Tomorrow he will observe in Askale the military exercise codenamed "Either Independence or Death" organized by the 3d Army command. He will then leave for Trabzon where he will inspect the 48th Infantry Brigade command and visit the Black Sea technical university. General Evren will return to Ankara tomorrow evening.

Gives Speech

TA231651 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Head of State Gen Kenan Evren's public address in Erzurum on 23 July on occasion of the unveiling of the Ataturk monument--recorded]

[Excerpts] I am very happy to greet you in Erzurum--the symbol of courage and valor and [words indistinct due to cheers]. As you know, 23 July, which was the first day of the Erzurum congress [in 1919], occupies an important place in our war of liberation.

Dear citizens of Erzurum: As I stated in my speeches over the radio and television on 12 September, in speeches I delivered in various parts of our country and in my statements made to members of the foreign media, we are implementing, step by step, our work to reestablish democracy within the framework of our program. If you notice, I did not say restore democracy, I used the term of reestablishing democracy. Since restoration would signify a return to the situation prior to 12 September, I did not use this terminology. The pain of those days still hurts our hearts. This nation suffered greater casualties than in the Sakarya battle [in 1921 during the war of liberation], until 11 September in the name of a degenerated democracy, only the name of which has remained.

Moreover, these casualties were caused by people who carry the same blood, live on the same soil, share the same religion and speak the same language killing each other. This nation does not want to return to that situation and live those terrible days. The blood of our citizens can only be shed in a bid to protect the integrity of the land or independence of the nation. Only then is it legitimate. The self-sacrificing mothers of the Turkish nation can only endure the bloodshed for these purposes and only such persons can [words indistinct]. This is why we are taking every step with care and precaution and we are not hurrying. As I noted in my Diyarbakir speech, if past mistakes are repeated and the country returns to the past conditions, then the nation will curse us. We are advancing with determination on the road that we and the nation believe is right.

As you all know, we took another step on this road and ratified the constituent assembly law. In the 13-month period prior to the date when the constituent assembly will assume its activities, we gave priority to security, tranquillity and peace in the country, and we were to a large extent successful in this. The medicine of that illness was the revitalization of the spirit of unity and solidarity and the restoration of the prevelance of law and order. We achieved these. Now, those who are uneasy about this are undertaking various detestable moves in a bid to weaken this administration. Naturally, we did not allow this and we will not do so in the future.

Dear citizens, the second priority was given to legislating the laws, which could not be enacted for many years, and amending the laws that do not comply with the needs of the present days. While enacting these laws, we were not plagued with the worry of losing votes. We implemented whatever was good for the future and the perpetuation of our nation.

Our next priority was to prepare the law on the formation of the constituent assembly. In accordance with my word of a soldier given to our nation, the ratification of the draft bill on the constituent assembly proposed by the members of the National Security Council constitutes another significant step in the establishment of genuine democracy in Turkey. As we stated in the preamble of this law and as I stated in my speech over radio and television on 12 September, we promised that the governing of the country will be handed over to a democratic and secular administration that will secure human rights and freedoms, accord priority to national solidarity, implement social justice, and be based on the rule of law. This will come after the preparation of a constitution that will prevent the degeneration of the democratic parliamentary system and that befits the Turkish nation, and after a law on elections and a law on political parties and all the procedures concerning these are concluded. Another phase of this promise has thus been fulfilled.

Dear citizens of Erzurum, education is one of our major efforts directed towards development. One of the most important reasons we have not yet reached the level of modern civilized countries is the fact that we could not sufficiently educate the nation. We can observe in our everyday life the big difference between the job performed by an ignorant person and the job performed by an educated person.

According to a recent decision, mandatory religious classes will be started in primary, secondary and high schools. Your children will receive their religious knowledge in these schools. Religious classes are given in most Western countries today. I declared on numerous occasions that secularism does not mean irreligiousness. We are not acting contrary to secularism by instituting obligatory religion classes on schools. In the past, our children could not acquire religious education or were abandoned in the hands of ignorant persons. This is why we will institute religious classes in our schools. However, we will struggle relentlessly against illegal Koran courses.

DENKTAS, TURKMEN HOLD JOINT NEWS CONFERENCE

TA231641 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1440 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 23 Jul (AA)--President of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, Rauf Denktas said today they will submit new proposals to the talks underway with the Greek side.

In a press conference here today Denktas told reporters he was in Ankara to exchange views with Turkish officials on the attitude to be adopted in intercommunal talks. He said he was satisfied with his talks here, as the Turkish Cypriot side and Turkish Government leaders were in full agreement. He stressed, though, that the proposals to be submitted will not mean they have abandoned their stand completely. "Our basic policy is well known" he said.

He also said the new proposals should not be taken mistakenly as they should depart from their basic policy line. "We have (?some) concrete proposals. We shall try hard to obtain positive results by altering certain former proposals and by making additions" he said.

Expressing hope that intercommunal talks would start in August, he said Greek Foreign Minister Konstandinos Mitsotakis' expected visit to (?the island) might prove useful to reach an agreement, and therefore he asked Turkish Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen to visit northern Cyprus at the same time. He said his invitation had been accepted.

On a question whether he is thinking of any concessions to the Greek Cypriots in the course of talks, he referred to his earlier answer that they were going to submit new and broadened proposals. If the proposals and counter proposals balance each other they could reach agreement, he said.

On Maras (Varosha) Denktas said they had made their view clear on the issue and the matter would be renegotiated. Denktas accused the Greek Cypriots, encouraged by the Greek Government, of stalling the talks.

Answering a question on the reported establishment of an arms factory in the Greek Cypriot town of Limassol, he reminded that the Turkish Cypriot Federated State had already lodged a protest. There are some elements among the Greek Cypriots who do not want peace in the island he charged. "If they disturb the peace in the island, they will not catch us unprepared. They must know that we shall not allow violation of peace," he added. Denktas said he was absolutely pleased with his talks in Ankara and in full agreement with the Turkish leaders on the future course he would take.

The Turkish Cypriot leader said that AKEL (Greek Cypriot Communist Party) should be taken into consideration. If Greek Cypriot leader Kiprianou would reach an understanding with AKEL and then with the Turkish Cypriots only then would peace prevail.

On the formation of the new government, Denktas said a strong government should be established to solve problems. "If a strong government cannot be established, the problems will stay unsolved" he said, adding his National Unity Party is expecting and counting on the support of all parties whether in the government coalition or not, in order to attain success in intercommunal talks. "The formation of a coalition is in the (?goal) of the prime minister and I do not intend putting pressure on him" he said, adding, "but a national front government may comprise leftist, social democrats, and also the socialists, with the exception of Marxist-Leninists."

Asked to comment on a recent statement by Greek President Constandinus Karamanalis that "July 20 is a date of shame for Turks and a date of pain for Greeks" Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen said it was rather (?distasteful) for a statesman adding "it is very well known in the world by now, to whom the shame belongs."

Turkmen said the Turkish Government and President Denktas of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus were in full agreement on all issues.

GOVERNMENT TO EXTEND MEDICAL AID TO LEBANON

TA231525 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1525 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 23 Jul (AA)--The Turkish Government has decided to give medical aid to Lebanon for treatment of the people wounded in the Israeli air attacks, the Foreign Ministry announced.

The Ministry spokesman said the aid would be sent by Red Crescent organization as soon as possible and some of the wounded Lebanese children, women and elderly people would be taken to Turkey for treatment.

DIRECTORATE PUTS 4-WEEK BAN ON ISTANBUL MAGAZINE

TA221837 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Statement No 18 issued by the General Staff Martial Law Coordination Directorate]

[Text] The publication, distribution and possession of more than one of the magazine GIRGIR [fun and cartoons magazine] which is published in Istanbul, has been banned for the duration of 4 weeks starting from 18 July 1981.

AUTHORITIES BEGIN PROCEEDINGS AGAINST MILITANTS

TA231656 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1540 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 23 Jul (AA)--Ankara martial law authorities started lawsuits against 115 persons affiliated with three leftist illegal organizations, namely, THKP-C. Partizan and TDKP. The prosecutor demanded death penalties for 20 of the defendants.

In the eastern province of Erzurum, a similar suit was started against 540 members of illegal "Dev-Yol" organization with the prosecutor demanding death penalties for 90 defendants, for trying to overthrow by force the constitutional order. In Istanbul, (?death) penalties were demanded for 9 defendants out of 23 against whom lawsuits were formally introduced today in the THKPC-Dev Yol (another illegal leftist faction) case for the same crime.

Meanwhile, in Ankara, the trial of Akincilar (The Raiders), youth organization of the Muslim fundamentalists, members charged with having tried to overthrow the constitutional order to establish religious order, started today.

In the southern province of Adana, security forces caught 34 Central Committee members of an illegal leftist organization called "Turkey's Revolutionary Communist Party", local authorities announced. The 34, in whose possession firearms and dynamite sticks were found, are being charged with wounding a lieutenant and staging unauthorized demonstrations.

MARTIAL LAW AUTHORITIES BAN CERTAIN BOOKS

TA221155 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 22 Jul 81

[Statement No 17 issued by the General Staff Martial Law Coordination Directorate]

[Text] The publication, distribution and possession of more than one copy of the following publications has been banned: name of the book, (Mem Uzim); author, (Ehmede Yani); name, Ogluma Hikayeler [Stories to My Son]; author, Yilmaz Guney; name, Temel Gorusler [Basic Views]; author, Alpaslan Turkes; name, Dokuz Isik [Nine Lights]; author, Alpaslan Turkes; name, (Risaley Nur Ve T.C. Mahkemelyn) [presumably religious publication].

VOTCP REVIEWS ROLE OF TURKISH TROOPS IN CYPRUS

TA230938 (Clandestine) Voice of Turkish Communist Party in Turkish to Europe and Turkey 0600 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Station commentary: "The So-Called NATO Solution for the Cyprus Problem"]

[Excerpts] The Western imperialist campaign of plots and aggression directed against the sovereignty and independence of Cyprus is continuing. The U.S. efforts are increasingly intensifying in a bid to transform this green island located at an important crossroad in the eastern Mediterranean into a NATO military base.

In demagogic statements made on the occasion of the seventh anniversary of the invasion of northern Cyprus by the Turkish Armed Forces, the representatives of the military rule in our country and the Denktas clique tried to deny that they are involved in these imperialist plans designed to transform first the northern part and then the rest of Cyprus into a military base and espionage center against the national liberation movements in the Near and Middle East as well as against the Soviet Union, our greatest neighbor.

The celebrations taking place in the occupied regions of Cyprus to mark the so-called peace and freedom day are another clear indication of the military junta--the representative of the ruling Turkish bourgeoisie--intentions to prolong the invasion of northern Cyprus--a situation that completely contradicts the vital interests of both the Turkish and Greek Cypriot communities. The message sent by General Evren, the National Security Council president, and the latest declarations by the junta State Minister and Deputy Prime Minister Zeyyat Baykara in Cyprus, are the newest proofs of this fact.

What are the intentions of the U.S. imperialists and the NATO leaders in Cyprus? The answer to this vital question cannot be hidden behind racial and chauvinistic moves or words like peace and freedom, motherland, financial aid and support.

The reason Western countries seem to be interested in the fate of the Greek Cypriot refugees does not stem from their humanitarian feelings but rather from their wish to maintain the divided status of Cyprus and to eliminate the establishment of a unitary, sovereign and nonaligned Republic of Cyprus. The real aim of the Western imperialists is to provide for the occupied forces in northern Cyprus to remain there and to present these forces to the public as NATO forces. In this way, NATO, whose real boss is the United States, will de facto have the means of establishing a military base in the Turkish sector of northern Cyprus.

What will the stationing of the aggressive NATO forces in northern Cyprus and the establishment of a military base there mean? The reply to this question is obvious. This will in fact mean the stationing of the aggressive U.S. Rapid Deployment Force in Cyprus in a bid to serve the U.S. imperialism's Gulf policies consisting of plundering the oil and other natural resources of the region, and crushing the national and social liberation movements in the area.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 143 27 July 1981

INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS

MBFR Begins Summer Recess Without Agreement [WIENER ZEITUNG 24 Jul] A 1

AUSTRIA

Special Security Precautions for PLO Representative [KRONEN-ZEITUNG 23 Jul] E 1
Abu Nidal Said in London [KRONEN-ZEITUNG 24 Jul] E 1
Foreign Policy Council Raps CSSR on Hodic Case [DIE PRESSE 24 Jul] E 1

BENELUX

NETHERLANDS

Parties Agree on Distribution of Ministries [NRC HANDELSBLAD 21 Jul] F 1

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Schmidt Underlines Need for Expenditure Cuts J 1
Discusses Austerity With DGB J 1
Banker Reports Conclusion of Gas Deal Talks [SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG 24 Jul] J 1
Genscher Comments on Disarmament Negotiations J 2
Appeals to CSCE J 3
SPD Executive Groups Support Brandt's USSR Trip J 3
DIE WELT Views U.S. President's Letter to Schmidt [24 Jul] J 4

FRANCE

Claude Cheysson Gives Details on Foreign Policy K 1
Cites 'European Dimension' [LE MONDE 18 Jul] K 1
President, Socialist Party Comment on Lebanon [LE MONDE 24 Jul] K 1
Cease-Fire Lauded K 2
Assembly Set To Debate Sahara Recognition [LE MONDE 18 Jul] K 2
Libyan Foreign Minister Arrives, Secretary Departs K 3
Soviet Diplomat, Family Granted Asylum in France K 3
Mitterrand Notes Plans for New Nuclear Submarine K 3
External Relations Minister To Visit Poland [LE MONDE 24 Jul] K 3

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Government Approves Bill Outlawing Secret Societies L 1
Polish Primate Says Relations With Government Good L 1
PSDI's Longo Adovcates Firm Stand Against Soviets L 1

PORTUGAL

Angolan Delegation Arrives To Meet With PCP M 1
Eanes Reminds Army of Role of People M 1
Socialist Party Rejects PCP Proposals on Talks M 1
CDS To Continue Working Within Alliance M 1
[DIARIO DE NOTICIAS 20 Jul]

SPAIN

Carrillo Surveys Prospects for PCE Congress [EL PAIS 19 Jul] N 1
No Deterioration Seen in Relations With UK N 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Parties Issue Declaration on Nuclear-Free Zone [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 21-22 Jul] P 1
Solidarity Official Visits Red Cross Headquarters [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 17 Jul] P 2

FINLAND

Foreign Minister Comments on Talks With Haig P 2

NORWAY

Poll Shows Majority Favors Nuclear-Free Nordic [ARBEIDERBLADET 17 Jul] P 3
ARBEIDERBLADET Warns Against Anti-Americanism [17 Jul] P 3

CYPRUS

VOA Criticized for Anti-Cypriot Propaganda [O ANEXARTITOS 27 Jul] R 1
Spokesman Denies Arms Cargo in Downed Plane [CYPRUS MAIL 26 Jul] R 1
Paper Claims Turkish Movements on Green Line [O KIRIKAS 25 Jul] R 1
Spokesman Denies Claim R 2
Denktas Returns From Turkey, Makes Statement [Bayrak Radio] R 2
Government Source Comment [I DHILINI 24 Jul] R 2
Press Reactions R 3
Kiprianou Makes Statement, Departs for London R 4
CSSR Deputy Minister Concludes Visit, Departs R 4
Missing Persons Committee Meets in Nicosia R 4

GREECE

Karamanlis Comments on Democracy Restoration Day S 1
Mitsotakis Statement Upon Return From Romania S 2
Spokesman Replies to Turkmen on Turkish Invasion S 3
Government Denies Permission To Repair Soviet Ship [RIZOSPASTIS 25 Jul] S 3
Three Turks Swim River, Seek Political Asylum S 3

TURKEY

Soviet Freighter Collides With Local Ferryboat T 1
More on Collision T 1
General Evren Observes Erzurum Army Exercise T 1
Addresses Public in Trabzon T 1
More on Speech T 3
Sources Comment on Downed Argentine Cargo Plane T 3
Denktas Departs Ankara After Talks on Cyprus Issue T 3
Iranians in Turkey Vote at Embassy, Favor Raja'i T 4
Erbakan, NSP Colleagues Released; Trial Continues T 4
About 130 Political Prisoners Begin Hunger Strike T 4

MBFR BEGINS SUMMER RECESS WITHOUT AGREEMENT

AU241512 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 24 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] The 24th round of the East-West negotiations on troop reductions in Central Europe, which have been going on since the autumn of 1973, ended Thursday in Vienna without any sign of progress. In a concluding press conference, representatives of both sides agreed only that the Vienna conference is at present making no headway. After a summer break of 2 months, the 25th round of talks will resume at the end of September.

As the speaker for the Eastern delegations, Polish Ambassador Tadeusz Strulak, who leaves Vienna with the end of this conference round, criticized the West for "inflexibility" and a lack of readiness for a constructive dialogue on disarmament. The question of troop strengths, played up by NATO, is based on an "overrating" of Eastern troop strength by the Western side and is considered by the East to be of only secondary importance, Strulak said. Proposals by the Warsaw Pact to first clarify the main points of future agreements and conclude an interim agreement on a mutual "freezing" of troop strengths have been rejected by the West so far. NATO's assignment of absolute priority to the question of troop strength has resulted in the deadlock in the Vienna conference, Strulak said.

Willem de Vos Van Steenwijk, head of the Netherlands delegation, who in a separate press conference discussed the West's viewpoint, was, however, of the opinion that an agreement would be suitable only if it can be based on "figures that have been agreed upon and that can be checked." The position of the Warsaw Pact nations that the information requested by the West for clarifying the discrepancy in the figures would reveal the organizational structure of the Eastern military alliance is not valid, De Vos stated.

De Vos said that the West has proposed new procedures for the discussion on troop strengths.

The Soviet delegation head, Nikolay Tarasov, charged the NATO countries in the final meeting of the 24th round--the 280th meeting since the start of the conference--with trying to conduct the negotiations from a "position of strength." The West is trying to force the Warsaw Pact nations to "unconditionally accept" its proposals, he maintained.

SPECIAL SECURITY PRECAUTIONS FOR PLO REPRESENTATIVE

AU241400 Vienna KRONEN-ZEITUNG in German 23 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpts] Vienna--There is a new turn in the affairs of the Arab killer team of chief terrorist Abu Nidal. The chief himself is in Europe. Abu Nidal's AL-'ASIFAH, as has been reported, has confessed to the Nittel assassination and has even threatened to assassinate Chancellor Kreisky.

But it is not only Austrian security authorities that have been alerted; in Romania, where the Abu Nidal group has charged President Ceausescu with having played a mediator's role in the Egyptian-Israeli peacemaking, it was possible only with great efforts to foil a terrorist attack against a large industrial complex.

Now a similar danger is also expected for Austria. In the opinion of security quarters, Abu Nidal, who can rely on a certain Arab regime, has completely lost all sense of proportion in his new terrorist campaign; he is threatening Ceausescu and Kreisky and now has put the Vienna PLO representative, Ghazi Husayn, at the top of a "liquidating list."

In the past few days the house of the PLO representative has been turned into a virtual fortress. Vienna Interior Ministry specialists have worked out a "defense plan." Electronic security devices have been installed. Units of the Austrian antiterror force, equipped with Israeli submachine guns, patrol the building. PLO chief 'Arafat has sent men from his personal bodyguard to protect his representative in Vienna and has also offered Kreisky similar protection.

Abu Nidal Said in London

AU241410 Vienna KRONEN-ZEITUNG in German 24 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpt] Vienna--Yesterday's KRONEN-ZEITUNG exclusive report about Arab chief terrorist Abu Nidal and his plans against Austria has now been confirmed by official quarters in Vienna. It has been learned from Austrian security police quarters that the matter is far more serious than had been assumed. Abu Nidal has declared a regular terror war on Austria.

The chief terrorist, who can rely on the support of the Syrian regime, has set up his headquarters in London, where he is allegedly undergoing medical treatment for heart disease. At any rate, Abu Nidal can be reached by telephone at a London hospital.

FOREIGN POLICY COUNCIL RAPS CSSR ON HODIC CASE

AU241343 Vienna DIE PRESSE in German 24 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] Vienna--A session of the Austrian foreign policy council ended Thursday evening with unanimous condemnation by all three political parties represented in this body of the attitude of the CSSR Government regarding the Hodic case. The parties also fully approved the steps taken by the Foreign Ministry regarding this case to date. The session, chaired by Chancellor Kreisky, was convened at the request of the Austrian People's Party.

Commenting on the visit to Austria of CSSR President Husak, slated for this fall, Foreign MInister Pahr declared that it was necessary to wait and see how the relations between the two states develop until then. Should they be negative, one would have to ask oneself whether the appropriate prerequisites for this visit still exist, he said. People's Party Chairman Mock stressed that the party's demand for a firmer position regarding the provocative and unfriendly attitude of the CSSR Government has been met through the council's unanimous disapproval.

Austrian Socialist Party parliamentary floor leader Fischer declared after the council session that trials of so-called dissidents have been scheduled in the CSSR in August and September. At these trials facts could come to light that may not be without importance for the planned Husak visit, he said.

NETHERLANDS

PARTIES AGREE ON DISTRIBUTION OF MINISTRIES

PM241343 Rotterdam NRC HANDELSBLAD in Dutch 21 Jul 81 pp 1, 3

[Text] The Hague, 21 Jul--Negotiation leaders Lubbers, De Koning and Van Thijn last night arrived at an agreement for the distribution of ministerial posts and a policy program for a cabinet comprising the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA), the Labor Party (PVDA) and Democrats '66 (D'66). PVDA parliamentary group leader Den Uyl will take the post of minister of social affairs, and will also be given additional responsibility for job creation policy. He will be first deputy prime minister and "coordinating minister" for the social and economic sector and will also be responsible for Netherlands Antilles affairs. The Ministry of Education will go to the PVDA and finance to the CDA.

Van Agt and Den Uyl have declared their willingness to defend the draft accord for a new Van Agt cabinet at their parliamentary group meetings today. However, Van Agt has expressed one reservation about the defense paragraph in the document. The CDA finally seems to be prepared to give education to the PVDA if finance remains in the hands of the CDA.

D'66 parliamentary party leader Terlouw would not commit himself to accepting the accord. As a candidate for economic affairs minister, he has major objections to handing over job creation policy to the Social Affairs Ministry.

This morning Terlouw said he would first have to hold more detailed consultations with Den Uyl on the demarcation lines between their two areas of responsibility before his parliamentary group would be able to agree to the accord. On Monday night D'66 were given a third secretary of state as compensation and it was agreed that Terlouw would be second deputy prime minister.

This morning negotiation leader Lubbers said that the negotiation leaders found the accord a sufficient basis for the cabinet that is to be formed. "The way has been prepared so well that we can see no likelihood of failure," he said.

If the parliamentary parties approve the accord the negotiation leaders will advise the queen to appoint Van Agt and Den Uyl as the new cabinet's formateurs.

This afternoon Den Uyl said he was satisfied with the draft program and the allocation of ministerial posts, especially the PVDA's filling the Education Ministry. He thought that the program had been improved throught the dropping of the link between the deployment of cruise missiles and nuclear arms limitation and through the increase in the state's share of gas production.

The draft government accord's nuclear arms paragraph proposes that a decision be made by the end of the next government term on reductions in the six existing nuclear-armed units in the Netherlands. But this would be after consultations with NATO partners.

The passage from the negotiation leaders' original draft stating that such a decision would have to be taken "in the context of" the final decision on the deployment on Netherlands soil of nuclear cruise missiles has been dropped.

As far as this deployment decision is concerned PVDA negotiator Den Uyl has indicated that his party will reach a decision when the time comes "in the light of the election manifesto," which categorically rejects this deployment.

Today the negotiation leaders proposed that a decision on the deployment of the cruise missiles only need be made "if the course or the outcome" of the negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union on medium-range missiles "make it necessary."

SCHMIDT UNDERLINES NEED FOR EXPENDITURE CUTS

LD261056 Hamburg DPA in German 1037 GMT 26 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jul (DPA)--Speaking to national and laender SPD politicians in Bonn on Sunday, Chancellor Helmut Schmidt underlined the need for drastic expenditure cuts to readjust the national finance situation. In a report on the Western economic summit in Ottawa and the lessons deriving from it for the Federal Government's finance and economic policies, the chancellor said that these cuts are connected with the continuing high U.S. interest rate policy. Schmidt spoke at the opening of a joint session of the SPD Executive, the executive of the SPD Bundestag group, the SPD laender heads of governments as well as the group chiefs from the regional parliaments. Next, Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer explained the guidlines of his proposals for readjusting the budget.

The chancellor emphatically denied a report in WELT AM SONNTAG on the alleged resignation threat by Defense Minister Hans Apel and speculations about a split in the SPD/FDP coalition as a result of the cuts. It was learned that Schmidt referred to the newspaper report as "balderdash."

Discusses Austerity With DGB

LD261854 Hamburg DPA in German 1705 GMT 26 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jul (DPA)--Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt this evening met DGB Chairman Heinz-Oskar Vetter and other trade union leaders for a discussion on the proposed austerity measures designed to place the federal finances on a sound footing. His discussion represents part of a series of conferences in Bonn on the eve of SPD-FDP coalition talks on the cuts. In a letter to the chancellor some days ago, Vetter called on him to spare employees and families.

BANKER REPORTS CONCLUSION OF GAS DEAL TALKS

DW240945 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 25 Jul 81 p 21

[Ernst Eberens report on an interview with F.W. Christians of the Deutsche Bank]

[Text] Duesseldorf, 23 Jul--The German-Russian negotiations on financing the pipeline-natural gas deal will be concluded for the time being on Friday night with a boat ride on the Rhine and large-scale fireworks on the occasion of the "biggest town feast on the Rhine." F.W. Christians (Deutsche Bank), the spokesman of the consortium of German banks, said in an interview with SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG that he believes that the "modalities for a framework agreement" have now been found. Just 6 months ago when he visited Moscow, it still seemed as though the whole deal would fail because of the interest rate problem.

What is involved is for the Soviet Union to deliver 40 billion cubic meters of natural gas a year to central Europe--Austria, the Federal Republic, Belgium and the Netherlands--effective 1985 from a field yet to be opened on Siberia's Yamal Peninsula. For this purpose, however, the banks must grant considerable credits to finance the required pipeline network (5,000 km) including the compressor stations. In the beginning, there was talk of over DM20 billion of which the German group would provide 50 percent even though the German long-distance gas supply companies headed by the Ruhrgas Corporation in Essen intended to purchase just 12 billion cubic meters a year. The essential suppliers of the pipelines and compressors would be the Mannesmann, AEG, Salzgitter and Hoesch Corporations. But the Japanese also are involved in these deliveries and their advance financing.

Different Interests

Christians termed the whole planned transaction unprecedented in economic history. It is extremely complicated with respect to both technology and political aspects, as well as with regard to the logistics, meaning the reconciliation of the most divergent interests and trains of thought from Tokyo to Moscow, to Paris and Rome. German interests in the Siberian natural gas emerges from the absolute need to guarantee the security of energy supplies through the broadest possible dispersion of the supplier countries and the types of energy. Unfortunately, the Americans so far have been unable to comprehend this state of affairs becasue they are more self-sufficient in their energy supplies.

The "modalities for the framework agreement" are, to begin with, the fact that the whole deal with be stretched out and the costs will be only 75 percent of the original estimate. In keeping with this, only one pipeline will be installed for the time being, and using conventional technology. This means that the pipes will be designed for an atmospheric pressure of 75 kilograms/square centimeter and not, as earlier planned, for 100 kilograms/square centimeter. Consequently, the Soviets will not receive this "new technology" and, thus, an essential objection of Washington will probably be removed. The second pipeline will be isntalled as required.

Only 8 Percent Interest

Moreover, the German banks will provide a credit of only DM5 billion. It is essentially intended for the compressor stations and other projects. The pipe deliveries, in contrast, will be negotiated from one year to the next as to quantity, price and conditions, a Mannesmann spokesman confirmed when asked. It is in this field and within the pricing system that the interest rate difference will be absorbed with Christians estimated at 4-5 percent. At the beginning, the Soviets will be paying an interest rate of only 8 percent. It was particularly hard for the Germans and Japanese to make it clear to the Russians, in their rigid way of thinking, that they must not pay subsidized market rates. Being tied down to their 5-year plans, the Russians can reckon only in fixed interest rates.

The spokesman of the consortium of German banks in this interview with SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG called the talks, which had been going on since the beginning of the week, "reasonable and realistic again." Now it looks as if everybody is getting his money's worth in this hitherto unprecedented transaction.

GENSCHER COMMENTS ON DISARMAMENT NEGOTIATIONS

LD251020 Hamburg DPA in German 0839 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 25 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has asked that the 1980's be turned into "a decade of disarmament." In an interview for Bavarian Radio on Saturday, Genscher underlined Bonn's special responsibility in this question, emphasizing that the FRG "out of its sense of responsibility must leave no stone unturned so that any conceivable contribution can be made toward a change in the area of security policy."

Genscher appealed to Moscow to improve the prospects for negotiations "not only through willingness to negotiate but also through willingness to disarm." According to Genscher, the USSR could make a contribution toward this by stopping further medium-range missile arming, by dismanlting armaments already set up and "above all" by declaring its willingness now to allow the negotiation results to be checked. Declaring the willingness now to allow the negotiation results to be checked mutually by the other side could be the Soviet Union's major contribution toward a positive influence on the negotiating climate and, thus, an important step toward confidence-building.

In view of U.S. President Ronald Reagan's willingness to negotiate, as stated once again in his letter to the chancellor, he asked the lower house parties to actively support the Federal Government in preparing the negotiations. Genscher once again underlined that the Federal Government has never doubted the Americans' attitude. He entertained the hope that Reagan's letter also will convince those who still have doubts in our country. It has to be admitted that a number of voices in the United States, indeed, had fed such doubts.

The interview was prereleased to DPA.

Appeals to CSCE

LD261242 Hamburg DPA in German 1147 GMT 26 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jul (DPA)--Federal Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher has appealed to the CSCE review member-states in Madrid to use the 3-month recess starting on Tuesday to try actively to bring the conference to a successful conclusion in late autumn. In particular, it would be necessary to set up a European disarmament conference. In a statement published by the Foreign Ministry on Sunday, Genscher emphasized that "constructive attitudes by all sides" are required in order not to disappoint the hope for effective and, hence, confidence-building disarmament measures. The Federal Government will do everything in its power to bring about such a conference success.

Genscher added that Bonn would have welcomed an earlier successful conclusion of the review conference in Madrid in view of the positive work done during the past months and toward which all participants from West and East and from the neutral and nonaligned states contributed. He expressed the hope that the negative first Soviet statement on the "constructive Western proposal" concerning the area of application of the confidence-building measures--which was a concession toward the Soviet Union intended to facilitate agreement on a disarmament conference for the whole of Europe--would not be Moscow's last word.

SPD EXECUTIVE GROUPS SUPPORT BRANDT'S USSR TRIP

LD262050 Hamburg DPA in German 1711 GMT 26 Jul 81

[Text] Bonn, 26 Jul (DPA)--The SPD Executive and Parliamentary Group Executive praised party Chairman Willy Brandt's mission to Moscow as an important contribution to the improvement of East-West relations at a difficult time. In a unanimous resolution which they adopted today after hearing a report from Brandt, both bodies said that such frank talks, in keeping with the serious situation, are valuable because they create trust and could help avoid dangerous misunderstandings. The impressions and assessment of Brandt and his deputy, Hans-Juergen Wischnewski, who went with him to Moscow, deserve a sober and meticulous examination to make use of possible points for progress in East-West relations.

The two executive committees discussed the proposed budget cuts. In their resolution, they attach great importance to President Ronald Reagan's letter to Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt, in which Reagan committed himself to starting negotiations on European medium-range weapons this year. Regarding the massive CDU/CSU criticism of Brandt's visit to Moscow, the resolution says that the polemic from sections of the opposition shows that large parts of the CDU/CSU still do not support the treaty policy. It is clear once again that the Federal Republic would suffer if security policy were entrusted to people who are not prepared to argue factually.

With regard to medium-range weapons, Brandt told the two SPD bodies that the Soviet leadership expects new weapons to be deployed on the Western side unless negotiations produce an effective result. The Soviet Union already is considering countermeasures but is evidently prepared "to make a substantive offer in negotiations and to help secure a result acceptable to both sides."

DIE WELT VIEWS U.S. PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO SCHMIDT

DW240900 Bonn DIE WELT in German 24 Jul 81 p 1

[Bernt Conrad editorial: "A Clear Word"]

[Text] The written statement by Ronald Reagan that he has committed himself "absolutely" to starting negotiations with Moscow on medium-range arms this year is an extraordinary gesture. After all, the agenda for these negotiations was decided by the NATO foreign ministers conference in Rome and signed by Secretary of State Haig. If Reagan decided anyway to add to the binding decision a confirmation in the form of a letter to the chancellor, he must have had serious reasons for doing so.

These reasons are obviously rooted in the fear that public opinion in the FRG and other West European states could become so affected by Moscow's purposeful propaganda and by increasing pacifism and neutralism that the rug could be pulled out from under NATO's dual decision. This concern pertains particularly to the chancellors' party, the SPD, where there are politicians who believe Soviet accusations more than U.S. statements. They have received additional ammunition lately through contradictory statements from the ranks of the Reagan administration.

Now the President has clarified the situation in the strongest possible form. Those who still doubt his will to negotiate expose themselves as partisans to the Soviets.

One thing must not be forgotten in this connection--something on which two so differently structured politicians as Reagan and French President Mitterrand agreed in Ottawa--negotiations with Moscow on arms limitation and control must never be a purpose in themselves. They make sense only if the West simultaneously works to overcome its current inferiority and to achieve a state of military equality.

This means that NATO's counterarmament decision must be implemented as persistently as the wish for negotiations in the near future. Only the prospect of deploying Pershing II missiles in West Europe can cause the Soviets to prepare to negotiate and to make concessions.

CLAUDE CHEYSSON GIVES DETAILS ON FOREIGN POLICY

LD251351 Paris Domestic Service in French 1100 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Francois Foucard report on an interview with External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson by the CENTRAL PRESS AGENCY; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] One can summarize Claude Cheysson's statements giving details on our entire foreign policy into four chapters.

1. The Ottawa summit: The first thing is to reiterate the elements of unity while at the same time speaking of the disagreements. Thus, Ottawa is not the Bible. Ottawa announced our common elements but we French are in no way limited by the results of the summit. We do not have to be aligned.

2. The Euromissiles: It would be interesting to see (?how long) the opening of genuine negotiations between the Americans and Russians will take. In the meantime, the fact of the existence of Soviet SS-20's has completely altered the stratgical balance and the Russians will not withdraw these missiles. The interesting question then becomes: when NATO in turn irreverisbly deploys the Pershing missiles, will that represent the right moment for negotiations?

3. French-Soviet relations are not normal at the moment because of the presence of Soviet troops in Afghanistan. Cheysson said: This, moreover, is why I did not go to Moscow when it would otherwise have been logical to do so. Also, someday there will perhpas be a summit meeting between Mitterrand and Brezhnev but the meetings which ought to occur normally and regularly cannot take place at the rate envisaged.

4. The Middle East: In Claude Cheysson's view, the Israeli Government is capable of anything at the moment because Begin is less sensitive then before to what is being said in the United States. The bombing of Tammuz while Francois Mitterrand had just come to power, the raid on Beirut, all these are new facts and we cannot see very clearly what the Europeans can do. As for France, it is particularly concerned about Lebanon and about what useful things we could do.

Cites 'European Dimension'

PM270730 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] External Relations Minister Claude Cheysson addressed the National Assembly Foreign Affairs Committee on 16 July, stating that he would seek "the opportunity to use the European dimension in several new spheres of economic activity as well as in building a European social area. In this connection," he add, "it is important to involve public opinion more in European life, especially the trade union organizations." He advocated stepping up France's bilateral relations with its European partners.

PRESIDENT, SOCIALIST PARTY COMMENT ON LEBANON

PM241625 Paris LE MONDE in French 24 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] Mitterrand said on French radio channel 1 on 22 July that he took the initiative of including the paragraph devoted to Lebanon in the Ottawa summit communique. He said that "France is a friend of Lebanon and wishes to act and to contribute to any action that will enable Lebanon's unity to be restored and the Lebanese people's options to be established."

However, the president refused to take sides in the current crisis. "I do not presume to judge; I do not say: It was this side or that which started it; I don't blame the escalation on Israel or the Palestinians; I say that this escalation must be stopped or at least that its efforts must be attenuated," he said.

"It is necessary to prevent," he added, "the occurrence of events as tragic as the bombardment of Beirut, which reached a level that exceeds anything experienced in this part of the world in recent years. I want an end to this sacrifice of human lives, both in Israel and in Lebanon, among both the Israelis and Palestinians," he concluded.

The PS stated in a communique published on Wednesday evening that it "is assessing the extreme gravity of the confrontations presently taking place in Lebanon and on the Israeli border. It condemns bombings by whichever side and particularly deplores the very large number of casualties among the Lebanese civilian population." It "denounces the policy of refusing any dialogue being pursued by the Menahem Begin government. It joins all those demanding the immediate introduction of a cease-fire until Lebanon's security and sovereignty and, above all, the inviolability of its borders and airspace have been guaranteed."

Cease-Fire Lauded

NC242029 Paris AFP in English 2011 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 24 Jul (AFP)--The French Government today expressed its satisfaction over the cease-fire in southern Lebanon.

A government spokesman recalled that the cessation of hostilities there came in response to a Security Council appeal supported by France, adding that what mattered now was "that the return of calm be used for extending security to all of Lebanon, for the benefit of all Lebanese and those to whom that country is offering asylum"--the latter a transparent reference to the Palestinians.

"Taking advantage of these new conditions," the spokesman added, "the Lebanese Government should now be in a position to pursue its action towards the reestablishment of its authority over the totality of its territory so that the sovereignty, independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon be respected."

"The French Government," the spokesman concluded, "recalls that it is ready to contribute its assistance to the legal Lebanese authorities with a view to reinforcing the means at the latter's disposal in accomplishing that task."

ASSEMBLY SET TO DEBATE SAHARA RECOGNITION

PM270728 Paris LE MONDE in French 18 Jul 81 p 7

[Text] The National Assembly will examine the question of recognizing the Saharan Democratic Arab Republic [SDAR] in the fall, Alain Vivien, PS deputy and chiarman of the study group on West Sahara problems, announced on 16 July at the press conference held by the Association of Friends of the SDAR.

Like Vivien, Jallaud, secretary general of the association, expressed the hope that the new French Government will act to restore peace by reconciling the two sides in the conflict. They also advocated the suspension of French military aid to Morocco. Jallaud suggested that a Polisario office be opened in Paris.

Finally, Salim Ka'id, who was representing the Polisario at the conference, reaffirmed his organization's desire to open direct negotiatons with Morocco as soon as possible.

LIBYAN FOREIGN MINISTER ARRIVES, SECRETARY DEPARTS

NC231701 Paris AFP in English 1648 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 23 Jul (AFP)--Libyan Foreign Minister 'Ali 'Abd al-Salam at-Turkayki arrived here today from Rome, two days after the arrival in France of Libya's other leading diplomat, Foreign Secretary 'Abd al-'Ati al-'Ubaydi.

At-Turayki refused to make any comment about the purpose or duration of his visit, which was believed, according to a reliable source, to be merely a simple stopover. It was not known if he would have any official contacts while in France.

The minister is responsible for relations with countries where Libya still has conventional embassies, essentially in Africa and Eastern Europe, while Mr al-'Ubaydi is responsible for those where they have been transformed into people's bureaus.

The French Foreign Ministry today refused to make any statement on talks Mr al-'Ubaydi had yesterday with French Cooperation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot. Mr al-'Ubaydi left Paris today before Mr at-Turayki's arrival.

The French Government decided last week to ease commercial contacts with Libya, which had been perturbed, but demanded withdrawal of Libyan troops from Chad and restoration of the French Embassy in Tripoli, sacked last year, as a condition for political normalisation.

SOVIET DIPLOMAT, FAMILY GRANTED ASYLUM IN FRANCE

NC241452 Paris AFP in English 1447 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 24 Jul (AFP)--Soviet diplomat Alekseyevich Pleshakov and his family have been granted political asylum in France, a well-informed source said today.

Mr Pleshakov, 42, has worked at the Paris-based Secretariat of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO). The request for asylum was made three weeks ago, the source said. During early June, Mr Pleshakov was given the order to return to Moscow. He then reportedly decided to seek permission for himself, his wife and his son to stay in France.

MITTERRAND NOTES PLANS FOR NEW NUCLEAR SUBMARINE

LD241548 Paris Domestic Service in French 1500 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] There will be a seventh French nuclear submarine between 1985 and 1990, intimated Francois Mitterrand after his visit onboard Le Terrible at Ile Longue base near Brest. Hinting at the capability of this seventh nuclear submarine, Francois Mitterrand stated this would undoubtedly represent a sufficient deterrent force for France. He confirmed that a second nuclear attack submarine would be launched on 1 September.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS MINISTER TO VISIT POLAND

PM241615 Paris LE MONDE in French 24 Jul 81 p 6

[Text] According to informed circles, External Relations Minister Cheysson has agreed in principle to a visit to Poland, which is to take place in the first 2 weeks of September, after the tour of Central America, which has already been announced, and before the start of the UN General Assembly in New York. It is the only visit to the Eastern bloc so far planned by the external relations minister who has stated that relations with Moscow cannot be considered "normal" while Soviet troops are in Afghanistan.

GOVERNMENT APPROVES BILL OUTLAWING SECRET SOCIETIES

AU241555 Rome ANSA in English 1540 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Rome, 24 Jul (ANSA)--The Rome government approved legislation today outlawing secret societies like the Propaganda-Two Masonic Lodge, the issue of the biggest scandal in Italy's post-war history.

The bill approved by the government today, which becomes effective only after receiving Parliament endorsement, was once of the key points on Spadolini's platform, the part in which he pledged to clean-up the public administration.

According to the terms of the new law, anyone who has "promoted or directed" a secret society may be punishable with between one to five years in jail and will be barred from public office for the same period. The same sentence was also provided for members of secret societies or anyone caught proselytizing for them.

The bill specifically calls for the disbandment of the P-2 lodge and outlaws any attempts to recreate it once it is disbanded.

Justice Minister Clelio Darida disclosed today that the bill, once it is turned into law, will not be retroactive and therefore will not cover the suspected misdeeds of P-2 leaders or civil servants associated with the lodge.

POLISH PRIMATE SAYS RELATIONS WITH GOVERNMENT GOOD

AU251532 Rome ANSA in English 1513 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 25 Jul (ANSA)--The situation in Poland is very difficult but the Polish Episcopacy is faithful to the policy of Cardinal Wyszynski, to the gospel, to the holy father and to the teachings of the church, the bishop of Warsaw and primate of Poland, Msgr Josep Glemp, told the Vatican Radio today. The Polish Episcopacy, he added, "must look to the signs of the time to always be near the people of God and the working class."

Msgr Glemp, who is in Rome for a period of rest, also said that contrary to Wyszynski, who was well accepted by Polish authorities only towards the end of his life, he has "begun well, without difficulties. I am ready, however, to take the cross, because it is possible that this situation will change" Glemp concluded.

PSDI'S LONGO ADVOCATES FIRM STAND AGAINST SOVIETS

AU261935 Rome ANSA in English 1845 GMT 26 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 26 Jul (ANSA)--Italian Social Democrat Party Secretary Pietro Longo said Sunday that the latest Soviet proposal for a reduction of its SS-20 missiles confirms the validity of the 1979 NATO decisions.

Commenting on the proposal made by Soviet Marshal Dimitri Ustinov Saturday in PRAVDA, Longo said the call for a reduction in Soviet European theater missiles "confirms the validity of the decisions reached by NATO in 1979, that engotiations can be held with the Soviets only from a position of real strength." According to Longo, the Italian Government did well to constantly follow this line and reiterate it clearly at the recent Ottawa summit.

The PSDI secretary also launched a broadside at Italian Communists whom he charged accept the Soviet attitude without discussion. "Had it been up to them, the Soviet Union could have calmly continued to install SS-20 missiles and NATO would have fallen into the supine condition of passivity and dangerous inferiority, a serious risk for detente and peace in Europe," the secretary concluded.

ANGOLAN DELEGATION ARRIVES TO MEET WITH PCP

LD251540 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1300 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] A delegation of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola [MPLA] has arrived in Lisbon at the invitation of the Portuguese Communist Party [PCP]. The delegation is headed by Lucio Lara, a leading member of the MPLA, who will be one of the main speakers at a PCP-sponsored friendship rally to be held at the Lisbon's sports pavillion tomorrow. PCP Secretary General Alvaro Cunhal is also due to address the rally.

EANES REMINDS ARMY OF ROLE OF PEOPLE

LD251551 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1500 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Speaking at the headquarters of the Lisbon Light Artillery Regiment this morning at a ceremony marking army day, the president of the republic said that in times of crisis--whatever the crisis may be--it is the people who in the final analysis dictate the solution: [Begin recording] The Portuguese people have shown, against all the elitists in various political quarters who sought to call into the question the people's own political maturity, that they know what they want. Above all they have shown that they know that the power they delegate in the elections is temporary and can be revoked when necessary, in accordance with the constitution. [end recording]

President Ramalho Eanes also seized the opportunity to stress again that it is the armed forces' duty to take part in the democratic regime: [Begin recording] There is no more room, either in theory or in practice, for the military institution or any group of military men to claim the role of interpreter of the people's will when the people, in discernment of the democratic rules, find their own expression with no need for any intermediaries. [end recording]

SOCIALIST PARTY REJECTS PCP PROPOSALS ON TALKS

LD261120 Lisbon in Portuguese to Timor Macao and Australia 1000 GMT 26 Jul 81

[Text] The Socialist Party has rejected the Portuguese Communist Party's proposals for political negotiations on the grounds that the proposals were neither realistic nor acceptable since they were made, quote, for publicity purposes and were not based on democratic principles and constitutional provisions. According to a communique issued at the end of a meeting of the Socialist Party's national committee, the Communist Party's proposals to negotiate on a possible alternative to the present government were aimed at a monotonous repetition of slogans for exclusive consumption by the less enlightened sectors of the party's own political clientele.

The Socialist Party's national committee condemned on the other hand the campaign against the country's democratic and parliamentary institutions which has been waged from various quarters and not always with the same goals.

The socialists' communique also criticizes the government's economic policies, stressing the cabinet's weakness in the economic sphere and its inability to respond adequately to the present international situation and overcome successfully the legacy of the first government of the Democratic Alliance.

CDS TO CONTINUE WORKING WITHIN ALLIANCE

PM241117 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpt] Freitas do Amaral asserted in Aveiro yesterday the absolute need for the existence of the Democratic Alliance, in which, he maintained, the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS] has a leading and essential role. In addition, in a communique distributed at the conclusion of the national council meeting which took place in that city over the weekend, the CDS asserts its readiness and disire to continue to share the Democratic Alliance's government responsibilities.

Moreover, the centrist leader said in statements to Portuguese radio-television [RTP] that he has no doubts that "the Democratic Alliance alone is the solution for the 1982 local elections, the 1984 legislative elections and the 1985 presidential elections."

Speaking at a public meeting commemorating the CDS' seventh anniversary at the Aveiro theater, the Christian Democratic Leader said that, like his party, he is deeply committed to maintaining the coalition and unity of the three parties comprising the Democratic Alliance.

However, this public stance on the part of the centrist chairman did not prevent Freitas do Amaral's having unequivocally expressed his dissatisfaction with the current government's prime minister and activity during the national council meeting on the previous day. According to what DIARIO DE NOTICIAS learned from a prominent centrist leader who took part in the proceedings, the CDS chairman even disputed the line of argument of Basilio Horta, who earnestly defended the government.

Despite concluding after 0300 hours, the CDS national council meeting, which, as is known, took place on Saturday, did not get beyond debating the first item on the agenda--analysis of the political situation.

In a communique distributed at the conclusion of the meeting, the CDS national council states that it is aware of the need to respond to the Portuguese people's expectations, and acknowledges "the existence of difficulties--which the spirit of the Democratic Alliance requires be rapidly surmounted--believing that the Social Democratic Party, the CDS and the Popular Monarchist Party will commit themselves totally to this."

In addition to expressing "complete political solidarity" with the CDS parliamentary group, the national council "vigorously" condemns in the communique the Council of the Revolution's repeated rejection of the law delimiting the public and private sectors, maintaining that the council's stance "means in practice a grave abuse of power contrary to the people's will and the country's development."

The communique also states that that the national council decided to praise especially "the work, dedication and merit of the CDS members of the government."

For his part, Freitas do Amaral told RTP yesterday that the CDS "does not advocate electoral coalitions with third parties outside the Democratic Alliance, does not accuse its partners of adopting stances similar to those of the Communist Party, nor does it threaten government alliances with the Socialist Party to gain room for tactical maneuvering against its Democratic Alliance partners." In the Christian Democratic leader's opinion, the CDS' aim "is the maintenance, strengthening and expansion of the Democratic Alliance."

CARRILLO SURVEYS PROSPECTS FOR THE PCE CONGRESS

PM241618 Madrid EL PAIS in Spanish 19 Jul 81 p 11

[Article by PCE Secretary General Santiago Carrillo: "Eurocommunism Means Being More Communist and More Democratic"]

[Text] Two fundamental tasks confront the 10th PCE Congress:

The first is how to help to develop and consolidate the process of democratic change, that is, to tackle the economic crisis, the autonomy process, antiputschist and anti-terrorist action and the democratization of the state.

The second is how to strengthen the party, renewing it without losing its distinguishing features.

The debate on this set of issues is proceeding in the most open and free manner: so much so that the press has been able to convey the image of a communist party in a state of crisis, stemming from the traditional cliches which present us as hermetic, authoritarian and monolithic, although the experience of the transition indicates quite the contrary.

In my opinion it is beyond doubt that the 10th congress will confirm the Eurocommunist strategy, which means independence, pluralist and democratic socialism and full sharing of responsibility in the Spanish process of change.

The debate on the party will be more complex. Its real essence will not be the issue of more or less renewal or more or less democracy but that of what kind of party we are going to build.

A party which will be a reflection of the society in which we live, or a party which will be the political instrument of the working class and of the social sectors united with it which wish to transform society?

The choice which is made determines the rest. The idea of a party that is a reflection of society could cause a policy to be made by and for the sake of those at the top, in which the principal link between the party and the masses would be the elected officials and not the grassroots organizations and work in the mass movements; it could also lead to several distinct political groups--let them be called tendencies or currents--functioning within the party, while the great mass of members remain passive and remote, not taking part and acting at most as a mass of voters who vote for one or another group according to the circumstances, as happens in party-voter relations in society.

Obviously this concept contradicts the idea of a vanguard party in which all members are in varying degrees protagonists in a joint revolutionary blueprint with which we all identify; it creates a dynamic of internal confrontations whose consequences we have seen in the attack on Jordi Sole Tura in Catalonia, and which could cause splits; it brings into the party all the defects of the worst customary politics--behind-the-scenes pacts, logrolling and unprincipled agreements for sharing out power.

Under present conditions, the abandonment of our concept of a vanguard party would lead not so much to another kind of party as to the disintegration of the party which we have, shaken on the one hand by the attraction of power, luring it toward aligning itself with one of the big blocs, and on the other hand by what we might term the Mitterrand syndrome, or, in other words, the idea that the PCE is an instrument historically superseded by social democracy.

Hence if the issues concerning the party are not resolved, preserving its concept of a vanguard party, inspired by creative revolutionary Marxism--not by dogmas--which is the instrument of the transformation of society, with a great breadth of discussion and nuances, but without splitting up into subgroups and maintaining its cohesion and its discipline in action, it will be of little use for the general resolutions to repeat over and over again that we are Eurocommunists, because in fact we will be burying the possibility of a strong Eurocommunist party.

But, moreover, the phenomenon of the disintegration of the political parties of the constitutional spectrum in the midst of a society with the problems which Spanish society has would simply contribute under these circumstances to helping those who are nostalgic for the dictatorship and are dreaming of a coup.

The PCE is an essential component of the Spanish left. Its distinguishing features have deep historical roots: opposition to imperialist war, defense of the Great October Socialist revolution and criticism of social democracy, which, having attained power in many countries, had confined itself to being the faithful manager of capitalism. We fully accept these historical roots.

At the same time, the PCE's tradition confirms us as a party which has defended democracy by all means in changing historical situations and which has worked for unity between socialists and communists.

It is for this reason that our differences with the existing models of socialism center today on the problem of democracy, which for us is essential, and the concept that in order to effect the socialist transformation of society in industrialized Europe it is necessary to defend and enhance democracy and surmount the split in the working class, achieving unity of the left and among all the progressive forces, and that currently the essential aim is to maintain peace and head toward a new world economic order which will surmount the tremendous disparities bequeathed to us by colonialism and imperialism.

Another feature of our party is its organization, its militant nature and its fighting spirit, which are condensed in the principle of democratic centralism.

Without the component of such a party, the Spanish left would fall under the lethal influence of social democratic ideology.

I am confident that the 10th congress will confirm all these features; that is, essentially, those which make up Eurocommunism.

NO DETERIORATION SEEN IN RELATIONS WITH UK

LD231959 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 23 Jul 81

[Text] The diplomatic incident that has arisen between Spain and Great Britain as a result of the announced stopover by Prince Charles in Gibralter after his wedding will not mean a deterioration in relations between the two countries nor will it affect the negotiations for Spain's possible entry into NATO. Statements to this effect were made by the director of the Diplomatic Information Office, Inocencio Felix Arias, to EFE.

The Spanish Foreign Ministry spokesman has forestalled newspaper reports that the incident could have an influence on the present negotiations on Spain's entry into the Common Market and the Atlantic defense organization.

Arias added that although it is hoped that neither bilateral relations for Spain's European aspirations will in any way be affected, it is clear that the gesture by King Juan Carlos not to attend the wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana is completely justified and applauded by all Spaniards.

DENMARK

PARTIES ISSUE DECLARATION ON NUCLEAR-FREE ZONE

PM241107 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 21-22 Jul 81 p 5

[Solveig Rodsgaard report: "Joint Conservative-Liberal Declaration on Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Text] "There is nothing new. I only stated the views--which are the government's views--on the question of investigating the possibility of an expanded nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries in the broader European context. There were some questions about this and I answered them. I have nothing else to say. We have no concrete plans which we are about to launch. We are simply taking an interest in the matter and want to look at the possibilities which arise."

These few comments were made by Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen after a long meeting of the Foreign Affairs Committee at which the prime minister clarified his statements on a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries.

The prime minister's statements are interpreted as an admission that the Social Democratic Party will continue to pursue foreign and security policy together with a number of parties in the Folketing, including the Conservatives, Liberals, Center Democrats and the Christian People's Party, all of whom have strongly dissociated themselves from the prime minister's statements at the Socialist International meeting in Bonn last week.

The Liberals and Conservatives are critical of the prime minister's remarks in Bonn because they are of the opinion that they create uncertainty about Denmark's attachment to NATO.

After the Foreign Affairs Committee meeting, the two parties issued a joint declaration which must also be seen as further underlining Liberal-Conservative cooperation as an alternative to Social Democratic rule. The joint declaration was issued by former Foreign Minister Henning Christophersen, who is also chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, and former Defense Minister Erik Ninn-Hansen.

In their opinion, there is no need for a separate Danish initiative on the question of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic countries.

"The Nordic countries are already nuclear free and no one wants to change this. The question of the Warsaw Pact nations' nuclear potential in the areas around the Nordic countries must be raised in the talks to be held between NATO and the Warsaw Pact on limiting tactical nuclear arms in Europe," the declaration stated. It ended: "If the government wishes to take a separate Danish initiative or to take part in a separate Nordic initiative, this should not happen before the Folketing has had the opportunity to discuss the matter."

The prime minister's remarks in connection with Denmark's NATO membership also have caused concern among Social Democrats on the party's rightwing. This was reported in BERLINGSKE TIDENDE on Sunday [19 July) and Social Democratic Folketing member Jytte Hilden from the leftwing of the party's Folketing group has called on these party colleagues to make themselves known.

After the meeting yesterday, the prime minister was asked about the concern on the rightwing. He said simply: "Yes, BERLINGSKE TIDENDE reported this. I have not discovered any concern at all in the Social Democratic Party on this issue."

SOLIDARITY OFFICIAL VISITS RED CROSS HEADQUARTERS

PM240934 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 17 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] A representative of the Polish Solidarity trade union movement yesterday visited the Danish Red Cross headquarters where he was briefed on the aid hitherto sent to the Polish Red Cross. Revised lists of materials needed by the Polish Red Cross were presented at the meeting. The need for medicines was stressed and the Nordic countries' Red Cross organizations presently are preparing new consignments of medicines and bandages which cannot be obtained in Poland.

FINLAND

FOREIGN MINISTER COMMENTS ON TALKS WITH HAIG

LD241114 Helsinki Domestic Service in Finnish 0500 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Paavo Vayrynen agreed with U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig on cooperation, including cooperation in winter navigation. The talks also dealt with the Nordic nuclear-free zone. Haig confirmed in the talks that he still has a negative attitude toward the zone project. (Aarne Tanninen) reports:

This is Washington. Although the agreement is termed a cooperation agreement in the transportation sector, in practice, it concerns primarily winter navigation, matters related to the use, maintenance and technology of icebreakers. Icebreakers are, thus, once again included in Finnish-U.S. relations. This is how Foreign Minister Vayrynen described the effects of the agreement:

[Begin recorindg] Experts from our countries can meet, exchange information, acquaint themselves with each other's experiences and achievements. We believe that this will be of (?positive) significance to both countries and, in addition, we hope that better contacts and knowledge between authorities and experts deciding on icebreaker technology will create preconditions for exports of our icebreakers to the United States. [end recording]

The United States has a fairly large icebreaker fleet and plenty of know-how concerning the building of icebreakers. There has been talk of cooperation for a decade and, so far, this is the most tangible step forward. Finnish experts firmly believe that when Finland gets a chance to show its own technology, it will be able to arouse real interest here. In other words, the good stuff will sell itself once knowledge of its spreads. An opportunity will soon present itself for spreading information, for the first U.S.-Finnish expert seminar on icebreakers will be held in the early autumn.

The meeting with Secretary of State Haig was fairly long, lasting about an hour. I asked whether the question of a nuclear-free north was discussed.

[Begin recording] Naturally, it was discussed, particularly because there has been a lot of public talk lately about a Nordic nuclear-free zone. At this meeting, both sides explained their views and, in this context, nothing new was expressed. [end recording]

The United States already stated very frankly to the Norwegian foreign minister that it opposes the plan for a northern Europe free of nuclear weapons. This negative attitude has, thus, now been reiterated to the Finnish foreign minister, with the reasons for it. The reasons are that the debate alone may, so the [words indistinct] states, hamper the forthcoming talks between the United States and the Soviet Union on the so-called Euromissiles. The United States thus fears that its negotiating position will be weakened if this sort of debate continues among its allies. Whether the present U.S. Government really intends to start talks with the Soviet Union on arms limitation has been one of the central topics (?of dispute) in the foreign political debate in Europe and the United States.

This is what the Finnish foreign minister has to say on this matter:

[Begin recording] I received the very clear impression that the present administration is willing to have negotiations. The first high level contact will be in New York during the UN General Assembly session when Foreign Ministers Haig and Gromyko will meet and, in the future, there will be more contacts. Haig made this very clear and he assured me that this is also the stance of the U.S. President. They really do want to have talks, to negotiate and be in contact with the Soviet Union. [end recording]

NORWAY

POLL SHOWS MAJORITY FAVORS NUCLEAR-FREE NORDIC

PM270729 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 17 Jul 81 p 7

[Thor Viksveen report: "69 Percent in Favor of Nuclear-Free Zone"]

[Excerpt] More than two-thirds of those interviewed in an opinion poll are in favor of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic area. Sixtynine percent are in favor, 14 percent are against. This is the result of an opinion poll carried out by the Norwegian opinion research institute for ARBEIDERBLADET. Six percent replied that it makes no difference whether such zones come into existence or not. Ten percent answered "don't know."

This is the first time this question has been asked in an opinion poll. The comments which ARBEIDERBLADET collected show that many people think that the support for the Labor Party's proposal is amazingly high.

Of particular interest is the fact that the proposal wins the support of a majority of voters in all parties. There is even a majority within the Conservative Party--57 percent--in favor of the nuclear-free zone proposal despite the fact that the party leadership has come out strongly against the idea. Twentythree percent of the Conservative voters interviewed are against the zone. The rest replied "makes no difference" or "don't know." Among Labor Party voters 75 percent say 'yes' to nuclear-free zones, 10 percent said 'no.' Support in the Socialist Left Party is total--100 percent. In the parties of the center, there is also a majority in favor of the proposal--86 percent in the Liberal Party, 67 percent in the Center Party and 61 percent in the Christian People's Party.

ARBEIDERBLADET WARNS AGAINST ANTI-AMERICANISM

PM221529 Oslo ARBEIDERBLADET in Norwegian 17 Jul 81 p 4

[Editorial: "Nuclear-Free Zones"]

[Text] At present, the Norwegian opposition is trying--not without a deal of schadenfreude--to make domestic political capital out of the cool reception given in several NATO lands to the Norwegian proposal for nuclear-free zones. An initiative which ought to unite people in joint exertions across party boundaries is now being used in the skirmishes leading up to the election campaign. In an age when the need for new ideas to help achieve control over the arms race is greater than ever, that peculiar Norwegian political provincialism once again comes to the fore. We must be content to express the hope that constructive contributions will soon come from the opposition.

The Labor Party's nuclear-free zone proposal has by no means been put aside. It is a point in its manifesto which will require the party's commitment for the whole of the coming Storting term. There will be many junctures in the work for international disarmament in the next few years, which will revitalize the proposal. The party has never bound the idea to a definite package solution. When U.S. Secretary of State Alexander Haig says that introducing the question at this precise moment in time could complicate the coming negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe, this doesn't necessarily mean that the proposal has been shelved and that it will not be possible to win greater sympathy for it from our allies.

The Reagan administration's foreign policy line has rightly frightened many people. However, very recently there have been signals that the U.S. Government--at least in the field of disarmament--is willing to choose another line than that of confrontation. The speech Alexander Haig delivered on the same day that Knut Frydenlund talked with him in New York has opened the door for disarmament initiatives in an otherwise ICY international atmosphere. The United States is willing to begin negotiations toward the end of the year aimed at preventing or reducing the deployment of new nuclear arms in Europe. Haig has announced support for the French proposal for a European disarmament conference and he has in principle indicated that the U.S. Government is interested in talking to the Russians once again about the SALT treaties.

Both Prime Minister Harlem Brundtland and Foreign Minister Knut Frydenlund have pointed out that disarmament work is a continuous process in which many difference steps could lead to a halt in the arms race. The Norwegian zone proposal must be seen in this light. Nothing must be done which could create difficulties for the imminent negotiations on nuclear arms in Europe. If the zone proposal should turn out to have a disruptive influence on these negotiations instead of being a constructive and positive element in them, it goes without saying that no one is served by keeping the issue alive at precisely this juncture. However, the proposal could be raised with new weight in connection with a European disarmament conference, for example.

Regardless of which regime is in power in the White House, it would be be possible to realize the notion of nuclear-free zones without the understanding of the U.S. administration. Haig's current dismissive attitude must not lead us into a cliche-ridden anti-Americanism. It is now more important than ever before to continue influencing Washington to create greater understanding for the proposal.

It is also important that the growing peace movement here in Norway bears this in mind. The fact that so many people nowadays are united in their demand for a "no" to nuclear arms is precisely because they have succeeded in uniting in action across ideological boundaries. It is important that this unity should be preserved.

Today ARBEIDERBLADET publishes an opinion poll which reveals extraordinary high support for the zone proposal. A total of 69 percent support the proposal. And the majority of voters in all parties--including the Conservatives--are in favor of the proposal. The results are really a salute to the Labor Party because it has shown the capacity for rethinking on disarmament.

This breadth of support, which is an absolute prerequisite for success in future endeavors can only be preserved, however, if we make the same demands on and show the same openness to all involved in the work toward disarmament.

VOA CRITICIZED FOR ANTI-CYPRIOT PROPAGANDA

NC270706 Nicosia O ANEXARTITOS in Greek 27 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Once again the "Voice of America" radio station becomes the carrier of Turkish propaganda against the Republic of Cyprus. In last week's broadcasts, this radio station referred to Denktas' visit to Ankara and described him as "the president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus."

It stated, "Denktas, his official title is president of the Turkish Federated State of Cyprus, was received..." etc. This is what the "Voice of America" reported.

This is not the first time that this radio station for U.S. propaganda strikes at Cyprus in an underhanded way. Earlier--once again after one of our denunciations--the U.S. administration apologized to the Government of Cyprus for the anti-Cypriot broadcasts of the "Voice of America."

This radio station relays its programs from Rhodes. In 1964, under the prime ministership of Yeoryios Papandreou and under the instructions of the minister to the prime minister of that time the present chairman of PASOK, Andreas Papandreou, the operation of this radio station was prohibited because at that time it had also conducted anti-Cypriot propaganda.

SPOKESMAN DENIES ARMS CARGO IN DOWNED PLANE

NC261123 Nicosia CYPRUS MAIL in English 26 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The Argentine plane which crashed into the Soviet Union a week ago had used Larnaca airport on its flights from Tel Aviv to Teheran, but not on its last flight, the government spokesman said yesterday.

The Soviet news agency TASS said that an "unidentified" plane had entered Soviet air space from the direction of Iran and ignored warning from Soviet air control and eventually collided with Soviet planes, crashed and caught fire.

Subsequently the Argentine Foreign Ministry had announced that the aircraft was a cargo plane on contract work and was on the Teheran-Larnaca route.

The government spokesman yesterday confirmed that the plane had first used Larnaca airport for refuelling, coming from Tel Aviv on its way to Teheran, and declared, according to documents, that it was carrying 6750 kgs of pipes. It used Larnaca airport again on July 13 and on the day after, July 14, declaring it carried no cargo.

The spokesman denied any knowledge about the plane carrying any arms cargo, as some press reports suggested. He explained that a civil plane belonging to a member state of the ICAO (International Aviation Organisation) needs no prior permit from the civil aviation of a country for special landing for refueling.

PAPER CLAIMS TURKISH MOVEMENTS ON GREEN LINE

NC251102 Nicosia O KIRIKAS in Greek 25 Jul 81 p 8

[Text] KIRIKAS has received a morning report from Turkish sources that, since last evening and all night, extended movements were noted of the Turkish occupation troops in the Turkish occupied territories. The movement was especially obvious in urban centers and, specifically, in Nicosia.

According to the same reports, only troops from Turkey were participating in the movements together with tanks which were patrolling the streets of Nicosia's Turkish quarters until the early morning hours today.

In fact, in some cases tanks moved in streets inside the green line despite the fact that it is considered a demilitarized zone and on the basis of the cease-fire both sides are bound not to move troops in these areas. In this connection, it is expected that the Cypriot Government will today submit a relevant demarche to the United Nations.

Spokesman Denies Claim

NC251105 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1030 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] An official statement has denied a report by an afternoon newspaper that last evening tanks of the Turkish occupation troops moved in the streets of Nicosia's Turkish quarter and along the so-called green line. The statement added that it concerned two tracked vehicles of the United Nations Peace Force that were carrying out a patrol along the green line.

DENKTAS RETURNS FROM TURKEY, MAKES STATEMENT

TA241354 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in English to Cyprus 1115 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] President Denktas today returned to the Federated State after talks in Ankara with Turkish Government officials on the Cyprus problem.

In a statement at Ercan state airport, Mr Denktas described his talks as very constructive and useful. He said the Turkish Cypriot side would present to the Greek Cypriots meaningful and constructive proposals on the settlement of the Cyprus problem. He expressed the hope that the Greek Cypriots would act with similar intentions. He said, in connection with the territorial aspect of the Cyprus problem, that a map was included in the proposals. The Turkish Cypriot negotiator at the Cyprus intercommunal talks, Mr Onan, and the Turkish ambassador in Cyprus, Mr Batu, who were in Ankara with President Denktas, also returned to the island.

Government Source Comments

NC241630 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 24 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] The Turkish proposals for an overall solution of the Cyprus issue will be submitted on 5 August when a new meeting within the inter-Cypriot talks will be held. An authoritative government source stated this to I DHILINI today and added that yesterday's statement by Denktas has created an optimistic climate for progress on the Cyprus issue. The same source said: What is important now is the content of the Turkish proposals. He further said that these proposals must be truly constructive for the Greek side to accept them.

In answer to what is meant by "truly constructive" proposals, the authoritative government source stated: "First, the territorial percentage that the Turks submit must be proportionate to their population." The source added the proposals must be related to the viability of the two communities and not be confined to some barren areas.

Asked whether the Greek side is also ready to discuss the constitutional issue in conjunction with the territorial issue, the source stated: "We are ready to discuss anything as long as there is a spirit of good will and reconciliation."

Meanwhile, we have information from informed diplomatic sources that the Turkish side's proposals were prepared by Ankara within the framework of the promises that Mr Turkmen made to the UN secretary general, the Greek foreign minister and other of his Western counterparts.

According to the same information, U.S. Secretary of State Mr Haig has assured his Cypriot counterpart, Mr Rolandhis, that the Turks have promised him that the proposals that Denktas will submit will be constructive, realistic and substantive.

Many Western governments that have excellent relations with Turkey have given these same assurances to the Cypriot Government.

Last, information we have received indicates that the efforts of Western officials will be turned toward the starting of substantive negotiations on the Cyprus issue with either side making concessions to achieve a viable solution.

Press Reactions

NC250948 [Editorial report] The following Greek Cypriot Greek-language dailies for 25 July carry comment on Denktas' statement that the Turkish Cypriot side will submit fresh proposals when the intercommunal talks resume.

O AGON carries a commentary entitled "The Turkish Proposals" stressing that "the fact that Denktas promises he will submit proposals should not lead to great hopes and expectations, because critical questions still continue to exist. Precisely when the proposals will be submitted is one question, under what conditions he will submit them is another." The commentary goes on to say that "Denktas reiterated that the proposals they will submit will be based on certain criteria, and specifically mentioned economic viability. Only a few days ago he said that the territories currently occupied by the Turks 'are hardly enough' for the Turkish Cypriots. Consequently, in the best of cases, when the proposals have been submitted, what one should expect is that the Turkish intentions will become apparent which, judging by Turkish statements, are not encouraging."

TA NEA carries a commentary entitled "The Deinternationalization" which notes "the fact that he will 'bring a new set of proposals which will not differ much from the other proposals and so forth' as Denktas stated the day before yesterday once again shows the intentions and the ways he follows in the procedure of the dialogue, something that this column has repeatedly stressed. The transfer of the date for the proposals or of the 'set' is quite obvious." The commentary explains that the delay in submitting the proposals puts the government in the position of "merely making official the withdrawal of the Cyprus problem from the United Nations" and that "the government seems to have lost a sense of time without understanding that the loss of time is used by the Turkish side extortionately and retroactively."

I ELEVTHEROTIPIA carries a front-page editorial entitled "Expectation and Prudence," stressing that "Denktas' statements mark a new phase which naturally is delicate and critical for the Cyprus problem and that there is an imperative need on our part to manifest supreme national responsibility." The editorial goes on to say: "Denktas said something and did not say something else. Soon it will be clear what he wanted to say, what he is proposing and what he is asking. Let us wait, avoiding hasty movements. We should be ready for the moment when the other side will clarify its position." The editorial concludes by noting that the government knows how to handle our problems prudently, "but it should be helped by the necessary cooperation of all. The confrontation of developments through a narrow party yardstick should be avoided; it should not be repeated. Cooperation, prudence and patriotism are currently needed."

ELEVTHERI KIPROS carries a commentary in its "Elevtheri Kipros" column, noting: "We do not know to what extent these proposals will differ from previous ones. But we do not believe the changes will be substantive and constructive unless the Turkish stance has changed so much--something we desire--that at last it wants a just and viable solution to the Cyprus problem."

KIPRIANOU MAKES STATEMENT, DEPARTS FOR LONDON

NC241602 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] President of the Republic Spiros Kiprianou departed for London this afternoon to attend the wedding of the heir to the British throne, Prince Charles. Our correspondent reports:

[Begin recording] In a statement prior to his departure for London, President Kiprianou said:

[Begin Kiprianou recording] I am leaving for London today to attend, on invitation, the wedding of the heir to the British throne. On the occasion of my visit to London, I will meet with British Prime Minister Mrs Thatcher, with whom I will exchange views on various matters of joint interests. I will have the opportunity to present our views on the Cyprus problem, particularly of the current delicate phase.

I will also meet the secretary general of the Commonwealth, in view of next September's Commonwealth conference in Australia. We will discuss various matters that will be dealt with at the conferences--many of which are very serious matters--including the Cyprus issue.

I will also have the opportunity, I hope, to meet with various other heads of state and heads of government who will be in London for the same reason.

In London, I will attend various observances organized by the Cyprus community, and I will speak at some meetings being organized on the occasion of my visit.

I will return to Cyprus next Thursday. [end Kiprianou recording]

The president of the republic was seen off at Larnaca Airport by Chairman of the House of Representatives Ladhas, by members of the cabinet, the British high commissioner, the chief of the National Guard, the chief of police, the Larnaca district commissioner and other officials. [end recording]

CSSR DEPUTY MINISTER CONCLUDES VISIT, DEPARTS

NC241755 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Czechoslovak Deputy Foreign Minister Jablonski departed this afternoon after a 5-day visit to Cyprus. Prior to his departure, he visited with Acting President of the Republic Ladhas.

MISSING PERSONS COMMITTEE MEETS IN NICOSIA

TA242108 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 2000 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] The committee in charge of investigating the missing persons issue in Cyprus has concluded its first round of meetings. According to a report by the Turkish Radio and Television Bureau in Cyprus, the committee, which is composed of a Turkish Cypriot, a Greek Cypriot and an International Red Cross representative, held its third meeting at Ledra Palace today. A statement issued after the meeting that lasted for about 2 1/2 hours said that rules regulating the committee's work were discussed.

The committee will begin its second round of meetings on 12 August.

KARAMANLIS COMMENTS ON DEMOCRACY RESTORATION DAY

NC241932 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] On the occasion of the 7th anniversary of the restoration of democracy in Greece, President of the Republic Karamanlis is giving a great reception at the presidential mansion this evening. On arriving at the site of the reception, the president of the republic replied to questions by Greek radio-televison contributor Kostas Serezis.

[Begin recording] [Question] Good evening, Mr President, and many happy returns.

[Answer] Greetings.

[Question] Every year on this evening, Mr President, you say something concerning this great anniversary. This year...

[Answer] I would prefer that others spoke about this day and not I.

[Question] Have you anything to say to us?

[Answer] [Words indistinct] this day has been linked with my name.

[Question] Today, Mr President, when democracy is 7 years old, how do you assess its course thus far?

[Answer] Satisfactory. Democracy in Greece was not restored painlessly. It has functioned thanks to the moderation and prudence of our people during the following years, and I would say by comparison with the past in a [word indistinct] manner.

[Question] How do you see democracy's future, Mr President?

[Answer] With optimism. Of course, it is understood that democracy's course will depend on the behavior of the parties and especially of the people.

[Question] That is, you see the future of democracy to be certain. Mr President, we insist a little on this point.

[Answer] I do not think that democracy can now be threatened by subversive forces. However, it can be weakened if the people do not protect it from excesses and demagogy.

[Question] In any case, Mr President, we do not conceal the fact--since you have referred to the people--that the people believe that your presence in the presidency constitutes a guarantee for democracy.

[Answer] The people should know that the responsibility for the future of this country and the cause of democracy is to be borne by them and not by me.

[Question] Thank you very much, Mr President, and again many happy returns.

[Answer] In any case, democracy's course so far allows us to be optimistic about the future. [end recording]

The reception is being attended by the country's political and military leadership, representatives of the intellectual world and the productive classes and representatives of various other social groups.

MITSOTAKIS STATEMENT UPON RETURN FROM ROMANIA

NC251836 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1100 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Foreign Minister Mitsotakis returned satisfied from his official visit to Romania at noon today. Deputy Foreign Minster Rendis received him at the airport. In Romania, Mr Mitsotakis was received by President Ceausescu, and discussed bilateral and international issues with his Romanian counterpart, Mr Andrei.

Speaking to journalists after his arrival, Mr Mitsotakis said that his visit to Romania will result in the further development of the two countries' relations which, of course, are excellent. He said: Cooperation between the two countries is not only developing in the economic sector. I was given the opportunity to exchange views with my counterpart, Minister of Foreign Affairs Stefan Andrei not only on bilateral and Balkan issues but also on general world problems. Mr Mitsotakis added: Our talks were cordial, friendly and frank. We exchanged views on these issues, each of us from his own point of view, each of which is of course different since we represent two countries with different political, social and economic systems. However, this does not prevent both our countries from being inspired with the desire to help in the efforts for detente and peace. Mr Mitsotakis stressed: This, in a few words, is the significance of my visit to Romania.

I must also add, the foreign minister continued, that we have frequent contacts on all levels with Romania. We also hold consultations on official levels for special issues, like the sea laws, the Madrid conference, meetings at the ministerial and prime ministerial levels, and particularly meetings of the two presidents, Mr Karamanlis and Mr Ceausescu, who were the first to inaugurate the policy of the Greek-Romanian friendship. It is characteristic that five such meetings have been held so far and probably a sixth visit will take place, with Mr Ceausescu visiting Greece next year.

Answering a question on whether inter-Balkan cooperation was discussed and how he sees its development, Mr Mitsotakis said: Of couse I discussed it, because it is one of the fundamental problems. I would say that the Greek policy of opening up toward the socialist countries, and particularly the Balkans, within the framework of a multifacted foreign policy serves a basic a[illegible], that is, to change the Balkans, which historically were a disturbed region with many pockets of anomaly and danger, to a zone of peace, friendship and cooperation among their countries. This policy was inaugurated by Konstandinos Karamanlis after the restoration of democracy, and Mr Ceausescu was one of the first that embraced this policy. Mr Mitsotakis continued: This policy is not only based on good bilateral relations but also on an effort toward multilateral cooperation which has been underway and is being continued.

Recently we had a meeting in Sofia where we dealt with transportation matters. There is an identity of views on continuing this effort with a meeting in Bucharest next year where energy and raw materials issues will be discussed. I want to point out that the Romanians agree specifically with us in the inter-Balkan cooperation. They firmly support our efforts, and they are our first ally toward this direction.

In answer to a question on whether he intends to go abroad on other visits, Mr Mitsotakis replied: Today a foreign minister has many obligations. I have a large program of visits. But because summer is already here and the elections will follow, I am obliged to confine them to the minimum. Thus, I will definitely go to Cyprus next Friday for a visit that we all in the government consider very improtant. In September I am compelled, for many reasons, to go to the yearly UN Assembly where I will meet with, as has already been agreed upon, Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen.

Mr Mitsotakis continued: As for the rest, the day after tomorrow we expect French Deputy Foreign Minister on European Affairs Mr Chandernagor on a 2-day visit to Greece. FRG Foreign Minister Genscher will definitely come at the end of August on an official visit.

Most probably French Foreign Minister Cheysson will come in the middle of September. These contacts, of course, are not few but are taking place exactly because I limit my time. Moreover, I will take this opportunity to tell you, Mr Mitsotakis said, that a foreign minister is compelled today to make at least a monthly visit to Brussels to follow the international conferences of NATO and the United Nations, and he is compelled particularly to preserve contacts concerning bilateral relations. Because our country has good relations with the world, with all of Europe, with all socialist countries irrespective of political system, a foreign minister is compelled to visit and receive visitors.

He concluded: I would like to tell you that personal contacts help much in exercising foreign policy. It is very different when one holds direct talks with one's counterpart than when one communicates with documents that are cold and souless. Thus, with this significance, any foreign minister of any country, and particularly of a country like Greece, is compelled to make many visits abroad.

SPOKESMAN REPLIES TO TURKMEN ON TURKISH INVASION

NC242220 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] In an interview, Turkish Foreign Minister Turkmen has expressed regret and surprise because President of the Republic Karamanlis stated that 20 July, the date of the Turkish invasion of Cyprus, is a shame for Turkey. Turkmen added that despite his respect for the office and the personality of President Karamanlis, he is obliged to state that the entire world knows for whom the events of July 1974 are shameful.

Replying to Turkmen's statement, a government spokesman tonight made the following statement in Athens: The crime committed by the Greek junta is not an excuse for the crime committed by Turkey.

GOVERNMENT DENIES PERMISSION TO REPAIR SOVIET SHIP

NC251628 Athens RIZOSPASTIS in Greek 25 Jul 81 p 9

[Text] The government, fully conceding to NATO's demands, has definitely canceled the repair of the Soviet oceanograph ship (?Aitandor) at Khalkis shipyard. The ship had remained outside Khalkis for over a month awaiting permission for repairs. Permission was not granted and the Soviet ship left Wednesday night.

THREE TURKS SWIM RIVER, SEEK POLITICAL ASYLUM

NC250928 Paris AFP in English 0915 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Salonika, northern Greece, 25 Jul (AFP)--Three Turks swam a river into Greece in the middle of last night and asked for political asylum, saying they were fed up with living under the military regime in Turkey, police said today.

The two men and one woman, all in their 30's and all from Istanbul, crossed the Evros river into Grecian Thrace late last night.

They told authorities that in addition to their grudge against the military regime, which took over in a coup last September, they wanted to live in western Thrace because the Moslems of the region were "their brothers".

SOVIET FREIGHTER COLLIDES WITH LOCAL FERRYBOAT

TA251450 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1448 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Istanbul, 25 Jul (AA)--A Soviet freighter collided with a local ferryboat off the European shore of Istanbul Saturday morning. The Soviet freighter "Tanya Karpinskaya" was sailing across the Sea of Marmara toward the Bosporus when it hit the passenger ferry "Harbiye" on its way from the Galata bridge landing to the resort isle of Buyukada off the Anatolian shore of the city.

A large number of passengers were injured, but no deaths were reported. The Turkish ferry, damaged in the bow and starboard, was pulled ashore while the Soviet vessel anchored near the scene of collision pending investigation.

More on Collision

TA251533 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1520 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Istanbul, 25 Jul (AA)--Six passengers of the local ferry which was hit by a Soviet freighter south of the Bosphorus this morning were treated for slight injuries without being hospitalized.

Some of the passengers on the ferry, carrying weekend holiday-makers to Buyukada, put on life-jackets and jumped into the water following the collision. Port officials said the Soviet freighter had not requested a pilot for its passage up the Bosphorus.

GENERAL EVREN OBSERVES ERZURUM ARMY EXERCISE

TA241208 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] The exercise codenamed "independence or death," which was planned by the chief of the general staff's office and which was held near Erzurum's Askale district by the 3d Army command, ended today. Today's final part of the exercise was observed by head of state Gen Kenan Evren, National Security Council members Ground Forces Commander Gen Nurettin Ersin, Air Force Commander Gen Tahsin Sahinkaya, Navy Commander Adm Nejat Tumer and Gendarmerie General Commander Gen Sedat Celasun as well as NATO Southeastern Allied Ground Forces Commander Gen Sedat Guneral.

During today's maneuvers, red units were parachuted down and blue units thwarted this operation and conducted a counterattack with the use of live ammunition. The shots fired by warplanes and the coordination between commando units and airborne units in mountainous terrain were successfully concluded.

Foreign military representatives and citizens from the surrounding settlements also observed the "independence or death" exercise.

Evren will leave Erzurum for Trabzon on the afternoon. Evren will address the public in Trabzon.

Addresses Public in Trabzon

TA242013 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Head of state Gen Kenan Evren's speech in Trabzon on 24 July--recorded]

[Excerpt] Dear citizens of Trabzon, my fellow countrymen: As has been the case in every region of our beloved country which we have visited, this meaningful audience you have created has renewed our determination to continue on the road to the goals which we promised to attain on 12 September.

This lofty nation has always embraced and encouraged those who have served it in the right manner. You are encouraging us. You are giving us strength. With this strength derived from you, we will deliver to the new administration a country that has been purged of anarchy and terror, that has based its economic development on strong foundations and that has attained a democratic parliamentary system.

However, I would also like to point out that, while doing so, we will not be rushed into doing things inadequately. I know while saying this that there will be adverse propaganda both inside and especially outside Turkey. Traitors, who have deserted their country and taken asylum in foreign countries and who have united with others of their ilk to form organizations at the expense of the destruction of their country, will use this as a means for propaganda as they use all other issues. They will say that we have not announced the program concerning our activities aimed at reestablishing democracy and that we have not announced the date of normal elections. Our friends also ask us the same question. This is the reply we give: We will announce it when the time comes. We will return to a democratic parliamentary system but we will not do it because you want it. We will return to democracy because this nation wants it and because it is an administrative system which best suits the nation. The second floor of a building is constructed after the first one. Do you know about their strongest desire? They want us to announce our plan now so that they can prepare their treacherous plans accordingly. We will not allow them to prepare such a plan. An army which is planning an attack does not announce the date and venue of its attack a few days in advance. We also are faced with an enemy. We will not announce our plan of attack in advance. We will announce it when the time comes and we will prevent them from preparing their plans. We are advancing with steps toward our goal within the framework of the plan and program which we announced in the beginning. These steps are always going forward. We have never taken any steps backward and we will not do so in the future either. We are sure of it.

Because some people have not lived through the tragic situation and because they were informed only through the brief news carried in the press and on radio and television, they cannot imagine what this nation has suffered. We know that many of our friends are giving various advice with the aim of helping us. We are much obliged. However, we want them not to believe the members of organizations who reside in their country. We want them to listen to the voice of the 45 million citizens living in Turkey. Fire burns where it strikes. Today it struck us. Tomorrow it may strike you. We do not wish it to strike you but, if it does, you will see how it burns its surroundings. If they do not wage an effective struggle against this anarchy and terror and if they are tolerant toward every illegal act committed, thinking it is a prerequisite of democracy--as was the case in our country--I am afraid this fire will burn them as well.

On this occasion, my dear fellow citizens, I would like--here, in your presence--to call on our patriotic citizens abroad. Do not pay any heed to attempts to continue destructive activities in the press, on the radio and television against the lofty Turkish nation and our beloved country. I call on you not to be affected by these disruptive voices until the country is transferred to an administration that will come to power through elections within a free democratic system to be established in accordance with the wishes of our nation and Ataturk principles. Our citizens in Turkey are not affected by this. However, our citizens abroad can be affected because they cannot see the daily occurences here. Therefore, I felt the necessity to call on them from here.

It is imperative to continue martial law throughout the country for a while longer until anarchy and terror are eradicated and until security is ensured in the whole of the country. I would like to clearly point out that martial law activities being carried out in accordance with the historic sense of responsibility of the Turkish Armed Forces are not the major duty of our armed forces. I have pointed out this fact many times in the past.

I am repeating it now and I will continue to repeat it. This is not our duty. It is our intention to transfer this duty to the normal security forces when the time is ripe. One fact should not be forgotten: The martial law administration--as stipulated in our Constitution--has had to [words indistinct] with forceful measures to fully ensure state security. The period of detention will be reduced in the near future.

More on Speech

TA251446 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1430 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Excerpts] 25 Jul (AA)--Head of state General Kenan Evren announced the 90-day detention period without appearance at court would be reduced soon. He made the announcement in a public address at the Black Sea port of Trabzon Friday, before returning to Ankara later in the evening.

With regard to the 90-day detention period without a court hearing, Evren said over the past 9 months in all of Turkey, only 1,500 out of a total of 49,000 detainees had been kept under custody for the full 90 days. Evren denied rumors that judges and public prosecutors would not be allowed to retire before the age of 65, and promised salaries for the judiciary would be improved.

The campaign against inflation had caused stagnation in some sectors, Evren admitted, and the government was taking measures to alleviate the situation for the worst-hit industries such as housing and the motor vehicle industry. One way to fight unemployment was to reduce the rate of population growth, which stood at 2.5 percent annually. The current population of 45 million was more than adequate for Turkey, and family planning was desirable, with two children per family a desirable goal.

SOURCES COMMENT ON DOWNED ARGENTINE CARGO PLANE

TA241707 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1648 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 24 Jul (AA)--Sources close to Turkish authorities say the Argentinian cargo plane which crashed in Soviet airspace last Saturday had deviated from its authorized route over Turkey. The same sources acknowledged the aircraft had asked for permission to fly through Turkish airspace but had deviated into Soviet airspace as it was flying along the Turkish-Iranian border.

DENKTAS DEPARTS ANKARA AFTER TALKS ON CYPRUS ISSUE

TA241352 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] TFSC President Rauf Denktas, who arrived in Ankara on 21 July for talks on the Cyprus issue, concluded his contacts and returned to Cyprus today.

In a statement at Ankara's Esenboga Airport before his departure, Denktas said an assessment of the Cyprus intercommunal talks was made during the talks in Ankara and that the economic and social problems of the Turkish Cypriot community were also discussed in detail. Noting that he is pleased with the outcome of the talks, Denktas said the results will also be evaluated in Cyprus. Denktas expressed the wish that the outcome of the talks in Ankara will prepare the ground for a settlement for the two communities in Cyprus and that they will bring peace.

In his statement, State and Deputy Prime Minister and Cyprus Coordination Council President Zeyyat Baykara said that all the problems concerning the two communities in Cyprus were discussed in detail during the meetings in Ankara and that a definite identity of views has been reached with regard to all matters. Baykara noted that the Turkish Government is confident that Denktas will resolve the problems in a positive manner.

Later, Denktas was seen off by Baykara to Lefkosa [Nicosia].

IRANIANS IN TURKEY VOTE AT EMBASSY, FAVOR RAJA'I

TA251546 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1535 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 25 Jul (AA)--Seventy out of 86 votes cast by Iranians in Ankara were for Prime Minister 'Ali Raja'i, Iranian Embassy officials said.

The polling was held Friday afternoon after Turkish police removed a group of Bani-Sadr supporters, who raided the embassy grounds in the morning.

Eight of the votes were cast for 'Abbas Sheybani, while the remaining ballots were void, embassy officials added. The results were transmitted to Tehran.

ERBAKAN, NSP COLLEAGUES RELEASED; TRIAL CONTINUES

TA241912 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1800 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] At today's hearing on the National Salvation Party [NSP] case, a decision was made to release leader Necmettin Erbakan and mine of his colleagues who were being tried while in detention. The following suspects have been released together with Erbakan: Suleyman Arif Emre, Oguzhan Asilturk, Fehmi Cumalioglu, Sevket Kazan, Recai Kutan, Mustafa Yazgan, Thair Buyuk Korukcu, Temal Karamollaoglu and Ahmet Oguz.

A suit had been filed at the Ankara Martial Law Command 1st Military Court against Erbakan and 34 of his colleagues for attempting to transform the Republic of Turkey into a state based on religious principles, and for engaging in various activities toward this end. Some of the suspects were released some time ago.

The trial of Erbakan and his colleagues will continue without the suspects being under detention.

ABOUT 130 POLITICAL PRISONERS BEGIN HUNGER STRIKE

NC242036 Paris AFP in English 2021 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 24 Jul (AFP)--About 130 jailed political extremists have begun a hunger strike over alleged torture by prison authorities, and about 19 are hospitalized in states of extreme weakness, reliable judicial sources said today.

The protest began in Mamak prison here on July 6 when 60 members of the Marxist Leninist Acilciler group refused to take food, sources said. Prosecutors are demanding the death sentences for 29 of them on terrorism charges.

News of the strikes emerged today in military court when five strikers did not appear as scheduled. A prisoner in court then told the judges about the strike.

Sources said the militants have vowed to fast "until death." Reports said they are denouncing "torture inflicted regularly during incessant interrogations." They also said that they have not been able to consult documents or take notes in preparing their defenses, sources said.

Those already hospitalized are in the Gulhane military hospital in Ankara. Besides the Acilciler group, the members belong to alleged terrorist groups such as the leftist Dev-Sol and Dev-Yol movements. An estimated 5,000 political prisoners are in three blocs of the military prison.

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 144 28 July 1981

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Foreign Minister Discusses Arms Negotiations J 1
Coalition Parties Prepare for Budget Talks J 3
FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE Views Soviet Gas Deal [27 Jul] J 4

FRANCE

France, Mexico Agree on Oil Trade Resumption [LE MONDE 17 Jul] K 1
President Sends Bank Director on Gulf Mission [LE MONDE 14 Jul] K 1
Spokesman on Central African Developments [LE MONDE 22 Jul] K 2
Envoy Leaves for Talks With Chad President K 2
French, Lebanese CP Secretaries Meet in Paris [L'HUMANITE 22 Jul] K 2
LE FIGARO Comments on Ottawa 'Economic Failure' [22 Jul] K 3

PORTUGAL

Social Affairs Minister Submits Resignation M 1
Soares Addresses Oporto District Congress Session [DIARIO DE NOTICIAS 20 Jul] M 1
Government, PS React to Veto on Economic Law [DIARIO DE NOTICIAS 22 Jul] M 2

SPAIN

PSOE's Gonzalez Views Effects of French Policies [LE MATIN 21 Jul] N 1
10th Congress of Spanish CP Opens in Madrid N 2

NORDIC AFFAIRS

DENMARK

Navy Commander Stresses Need for Patrol Force [BERLINGSKE TIDENDE 21 Jul] P 1
AKTUELT: Soviet Troops Must Leave Afghanistan [21 Jul] P 1

NORWAY

Defense Minister on Absence From NATO Exercise [AFTENPOSTEN 23 Jul] P 2
AFTENPOSTEN Comments on Norwegian Poll Results [18 Jul] P 3

SWEDEN

SVENSKA DAGBLADET Criticizes Norwegian Poll [21 Jul] P 3

CYPRUS

Kiprianou Confers With Ramphal in London R 1
UN Envoy Returns From New York Consultations R 1
I DHILINI Comments on Coming Intercommunal Talks [25 Jul] R 1
TA NEA Remarks [23 Jul] R 2
Rapprochement Council Chairman Makes Report R 2
EDEK Party Chairman Returns From Paris Visit R 2
Kliridhis Interviewed on Presidential Race [ELEVTHERI KIPROS 26 Jul] R 3
Cagatay Continues Coalition Formation in North [Bayrak Radio] R 5
DPP Rejects Coalition [Bayrak Radio] R 5
Briefs: New ELDYK Commander R 5

GREECE

PFLP Claims Responsibility for Piraievs Attack S 1
UK Wedding Invitation to King Prompts Protest [ELEVTHEROTIPIA 27 Jul] S 1
Karamanlis Not To Attend S 2
French Deputy Minister Arrives for Official Visit S 2
Papandreou Replies to Washington POST Article [ELEVTHEROTIPIA 27 Jul] S 2
PASOK Advisers Meet To Plan Economic Measures [TO VIMA 26 Jul] S 3

TURKEY

Turkmen Interviewed on Cyprus, U.S. Relations T 1
TERCUMAN on Cyprus Issue [22 Jul] T 2
MILLIYET Discusses Policy Toward Israel, PLO [21 Jul] T 2

OTHER COUNTRIES

CANADA

Quebec's Levesque Meets with French President [LE MONDE 23 Jul] Z 1

UNITED KINGDOM

Missile Destroyer Rammed by Soviet Cruiser [DAILY TELEGRAPH 27 Jul] Z 1

FOREIGN MINISTER DISCUSSES ARMS NEGOTIATIONS

DW271337 Munich Bayerischer Rundfunk Network in German 1645 GMT 25 Jul 81

[Heinz Baeuerlein interview with FRG Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher; date and place not given--recorded]

[Text] [Question] The last days of July, Mr Genscher, are generally calm politically. This is not the case this year; you have just returned from the Ottawa world economic summit meeting and are starting the negotiations on the 1982 budget. This alone is enough to be able to speak of high political activity. A third topic now has been added to all this: the letter addressed to the Federal Government from U.S. President Reagan in which the President assures that negotiations with the Soviet Union will open before the end of the year. Mr Foreign Minister, have you been hoping for this letter or, to phrase my question differently, have you also had difficulty so far in considering the U.S. attitude to be unequivocal?

[Answer] As far as the Federal Government is concerned, the U.S. attitude has always been unequivocal. We never doubted that the U.S. Government regards the negotiating as well as the counterarming parts to be indispensable components of the dual decision of 1979. But I do hope that the letter which the U.S. President sent the chancellor also will convince those in our country who have been harboring doubts, although it is certainly necessary to concede that some voices from the United States definitely nourished such doubts. But as I said, as far as the Federal Government is concerned, there has been no doubt at any time because as early as at the NATO foreign ministers conference in Rome, the U.S. receptiveness to negotiations was expressed quite clearly. In any event, I for my part very much welcome the fact that the United States wants arms limitation just as we do and that it also wants disarmament just as we do.

We in the FRG, and by that I don't mean just the Federal Government but all democratic parties, should now concentrate on ensuring that the manner of negotiations is also in keeping with our German security interests. Even if it is up to the United States alone to conduct these negotiations, we have nevertheless ensured that the European NATO partners will be comprehensively and equally engaged in determining the negotiating mandate and in observing the negotiations. You will probably recall that based on a German motion, a disarmament committee in NATO was set up in 1979 which at the time laid the groundwork for the dual decision, above all, with respect to the part involving negotiations. This disarmament committee now faces an additional and, at the same time, more important task in that it will, jointly with the United States, phrase the negotiating mandate and act as an observer at the negotiations.

In this connection, it is necessary to say that the three countries of Europe which have already declared their readiness to deploy U.S. medium-range missiles--the FRG, Great Britain and Italy--will play a special role in preparing the negotiating mandate and in observing the negotiations. I discussed this with my Italian and British counterparts, Colombo and Lord Carrington, in Ottawa. What we plan to do is to ensure close cooperation in this project so that our interests will be fully protected.

I believe that the German parties now have two levels on which they can actively support the Federal Government: first, by extending support in the preparations for the negotiations and the conduct of the negotiations; and second, by extending support to the Federal Government in its appeal to the Soviet Union to improve the chances of negotiations not only by its receptiveness to such negotiations but also by a readiness to disarm.

[Question] Reportedly--and you just said so--Reagan announced something in his letter which was already definite. Why is it that the U.S. President came out in such clear terms only now? Did this clarity develop in Washington only as time went by and were you and the chancellor able to contribute something in this regard in Washington?

[Answer] I must make it absolutely clear that while I was in Washington in March, the U.S. President expressed this to me in the same clear terms. I said so in public at the time. The same was done toward the chancellor in May and the same happened at the NATO conference. Still I believe that the letter is significant because it documents this once again and surely it will have an impact on public opinion, not only in the FRG but in Europe as a whole.

[Question] I am sure that you also expect Reagan's message to have some impact on domestic policy in Bonn as well. Will this make the so-called dual decision less prone to attack now and will it make the decision easier to promote? After all, the opponents of missile counterarming and the skeptics surely will say that it isn't enough to fix a date for negotiations, but that the will to achieve success is required.

[Answer] It is, after all, the Soviet Union which already has medium-range weapons while the West plans to deploy such weapons in 1983 at the earliest. In this connection, I wish to state quite clearly that the peoples on both sides naturally desire nothing more strongly than a mutual zero option, meaning the mutual renunciation of medium-range missiles. This is our negotiation objective in the alliance as well.

We call on the Soviet Union to contribute to the accomplishment of this objective of negotiations, first, by a halt to any further medium-range armament since any additionally deployed medium-range missiles renders the negotiations more difficult; second, by its receptiveness to the gradual reduction of its medium-range arms lead; and third, by the readiness to declare its assent--as the West has--to the verification of the implementation of agreements reached. I think that a statement now on allowing each side to carry out such verification on the other would constitute an essential contribution on the part of the Soviet Union to a positive influence on the climate of the negotiations and would thus be an important step toward building confidence.

I would like to state clearly once again that we are standing by our position--and by saying we, I mean the West--that negotiations must be conducted without any preconditions by either side. But it goes without saying that negotiations would be facilitated if the Soviet Union made up its mind and declared that it will halt the medium-range armament and gradually dismantle the weapons in place, but even more so if it would state even now that the implementation of the results of the negotiations can also be verified. After all, all of us know that distrust is the worst enemy of any reliable arms limitation agreements and of effective disarmament.

Consequently, really allowing the verification of whether the agreements are observed is foremost among the confidence-building measures. Any step in this direction constitutes an important step toward building confidence.

[Question] What you just said largely corresponds to what opposition leader Helmut Kohl said in defining his stance on Reagan's letter. Kohl said, or demanded, that following Reagan's definite promise, the Federal Government should at long last leave the Americans alone and turn to the Soviet Union with the purpose of stimulating Moscow's receptiveness to negotiations. To what extent would you be inclined to agree with the CDU? And moreover, didn't Willy Brandt already start this prodding in Moscow?

[Answer] I believe that from this aspect; too, it was quite appropriate and useful for Brandt to go to Moscow and to conduct talks there. After all, what he did there was draw attention to our concern. And the parties of the Bundestag do act on a common basis. I would like to remind you of the 25 May 1981 Bundestag resolution which states once again that results negotiated between the United States and the Soviet Union would be easier to accomplish if the Soviet Union would discontinue the construction and deployment of additional SS-20 missiles and gradually reduce the existing medium-range missiles. The resolution further states that the Bundestag supports the request on the subject submitted to the Soviet Union by the Federal Government.

What really matters now is for us, on the Western side, to complete the negotiating mandate and then conduct the negotiations without any interruption under equal cooperation by the European partners as observers of the negotiations and that we jointly appeal to the Soviet Union--the very country which has caused the problem by the forward deployment of its medium-range weapons--to contribute to the success of the negotiations by halting the medium-range armament as the first step and by the gradual reduction of its forward-placed armament with simultaneous receptiveness to verification as the second step.

The broader the political basis for this in our country, the better. I am firmly convinced that the discussion must now turn to these important elements of our security policy. I would like to add at this point that it must always be our objective to work toward a zero solution on both sides, that is, toward a mutual renunciation of medium-range weapons. As members of the government, we have no illusion in this respect. We are aware indeed how difficult this problem is and what obstacles need to be overcome. But I believe that, because of its responsibility, the FRG Government must leave no stone unturned to make any conceivable contribution to a change in security policy, a change which I would be inclined to interpret to mean that we will succeed after all in turning the 1980's into a decade of disarmament. We are willing, and by that I mean not only the Federal Government or the democratic parties in the Bundestag irrespective of their affiliation with the government or the opposition, but all partners in the Western alliance. And this adds up to a strong moral force.

The Soviet Union should realize that true readiness for peace and negotiations prevails over here and that a response to this readiness to negotiate would mean a great opportunity for the peoples of the world because if we succeed by these negotiations in halting medium-range missiles, the vicious circle of advance armament and counterarmament and renewed advance armament, this would encourage headway in other fields as well. You know that I said after the NATO foreign ministers conference in Rome that a signal had been sent there, the signal of Rome. This was and is a signal of the will for peace and cooperation and for detente and disarmament. I can definitely state that any indications of a positive response will be received constructively here.

COALITION PARTIES PREPARE FOR BUDGET TALKS

LD271150 Hamburg DPA in German 1034 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Bonn, 27 Jul (DPA)--SPD and FDP Parliamentary Groups this morning in Bonn prepared to begin talks this afternoon on reorganizing federal finances.

Speaking to the SPD Parliamentary Group, Federal Chancellor Helmut Schmidt again stressed the need for drastic economic measures, but also advocated using the investment part of the budget to reduce unemployment.

Speaking to his party's Parliamentary Group and Federal Executive, FDP Chairman and Vice Chancellor Hans-Dietrich Genscher said it is necessary to stimulate investment in the interest of improving the labor market situation.

Federal Finance Minister Hans Matthoeffer (SPD) presented to the Social Democratic deputies his plans for the 1982 federal budget with savings on the expenditure side, in particular in the social sector, of some DM11 billion, the appropriation of Bundesbank profit amounting to some DM5 billion and the increasing of revenue by raising taxes. His proposals involve a total overall expenditure of some DM21 billion and would lead to the desired goal of limiting new indebtedness to around DM26 billion and the total budget of from DM241 to 243 billion. It is reported that the FDP wants to achieve the same aims almost exclusively by reducing the expenditure side. It has considerable reservations about higher taxes.

FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE VIEWS SOVIET GAS DEAL

DW271405 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 27 Jul 81 p 9

[Commentary signed Vr.: "A Political Deal"]

[Text] Economics and politics often are so close together that the one cannot be separated from the other. Grant', the gas pipeline deal between European companies and the Soviet Union is, above a , a matter concerning the companies involved and economists surely were right in demanding that people desist from intruding into the economic realm with political arguments. Yet, on the other hand, the last negotiations make it quite clear that this deal will be possible only with considerable interest subsidies (through the ceiling of the Federal Bank). True, jobs will be safeguarded or created, desolute companies will be put on more solid ground, yet this will be done under conditions which are in keeping with other yardsticks than laws of the market. If exporters and other bank patrons now get excited and say that they are denied similar assistance, one must indeed ask: Aren't they right?

At the summit meeting in Ottawa, the Americans, for the last time, warned against this transaction. Their concern is backed by the hard political core that a country which becomes 30 percent dependent on Soviet deliveries in its natural gas supply is prone to political blackmail. This argument has an explosive penetrating force. All attempts at refuting it so far have failed to be convincing. This newspaper has always drawn attention to the fact that the Soviets, at least, will hold a remarkable threatening potential. Maybe a bit of political leeway of action is being surrendered in return for an economic advantage which is hard to be offset against it, especially since it is not supposed to be attained at market conditions.

Satisfaction will now prevail in the upper management floors of companies participating in this deal. This is comprehensible because there they have to have the well-being of the individual company in mind above everything else. But anybody viewing the well-being of the citizens in a comprehensive political way will be unable to push apprehensions aside.

FRANCE, MEXICO AGREE ON OIL TRADE RESUMPTION

PM270906 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Jul 81 p 26

[Text] The French Oil Company will resume its oil purchases from Mexico beginning in August. This is the result of talks on 16 July at the French company's headquarters with the directors of the Mexican state company Pemex. Late on Thursday morning, there was talk of the "adjustments" which will be necessary between now and August if the contract between the two companies is to be implemented on the best terms. As is known, the dispute relates both to the Mexican prices, which are regarded as too high, and to the quality of the oil supplied. This meeting, which took place in a "friendly" atmosphere, came 24 hours before the Mexican foreign minister's arrival in Paris.

PRESIDENT SENDS BANK DIRECTOR ON GULF MISSION

PM270746 Paris LE MONDE in French 14 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] Manama--Ironically, the president has chosen a director of a bank which is likely to be nationalized as his envoy to the Gulf leaders. Carrying a verbal message on economic questions, Claude de Kemoularia, adviser for international affairs at the bank of Paris and The Netherlands, but also a personal friend of Mitterrand, is on a mission in the region which has taken him to Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Bahrain and the United Arab Emirates and which is to take him to Oman and Qatar.

Of course, the presidential envoy has been received by top political leaders such as Prince Fahd in at-Ta'if and the emirs of Kuwait and Bahrain, but he has chiefly had talks with those countries' financial and monetary authorities. For instance, in Saudi Arabia, he had talks with Muhammad Aba al-Khayl, who is finance minister and governor of the Saudi Central Bank, and, in Kuwait, with the finance minister and officials from the Kuwaiti investment funds such as the Kuwait International Investment Company.

On month ago, the French president sent an envoy--Andreani, ambassador in Cairo--to hand the Gulf leaders a message explaining the new regime's Arab policy. But while that mission was announced, De Kemoularia's mission is surrounded by the utmost secrecy.

The reason for this is that the total sum of Arab assets in France is estimated to be Fr30 billion. Although there have on the whole been no massive withdrawls of Gulf capital, according to banking circles, there is no doubt that the rate and amount of deposits and investments from public institutions in the Gulf have been seriously reduced. Of the countries in the region, Qatar seems to be the one which has most reacted to the new French political situation, going as far as to make some withdrawals after the presidential election, according to several good sources. It is true that Watar is the most pro-French Gulf country and the oil state has interests in France, such as the Northern Petrochemicals Company (Copenor) in which Qatar has a 40-percent holding and CDF Chemicals in which it has a 60-percent holding.

According to one Gulf diplomat, the attitude is still "wait and see." But, he continued, "there are indicators. The Luxembourg meeting is a bad sign: Europe is now backing down from the Venice statement and that change is Mitterrand's work."

Nonetheless, there has been no slowing down in commercial transactions. The Aerospactiale Company has won the $135-million deal for the supply of three communications satellites to Arabsat, whose headquarters is in Riyadh, and the joint French-Bahraini and French-Watari commissions, which held meetings in June, registered no decline in economic cooperation. The United Arab Emirates-France commission will hold a meeting in September.

But there is no doubt that Arab-French relations are playing a major part in the discussions among political andeconomic leaders during these long evenings which characterize the month of Ramadan--primarily a political month. One indicator to be watched is the readiness with which the Saudi authorities grant visas to French businessmen in the coming months.

SPOKESMAN ON CENTRAL AFRICAN DEVELOPMENTS

PM270705 Paris LE MONDE in French 22 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] On 20 July, authoritative sources in Paris expressed "surprise" at the decisions taken by the Central African Government last Saturday to dissolve the two opposition parties, arrest their leaders and set up an emergency court.

"We are wondering," these circles state, "about the significance of these measures and would like to take this opportunity to recall that during his visit to Paris last week, Central African Prime Minister Simon Narcisse Bozanga stressed the democratic nature of the experiment now being carried out in the Central African Republic and expressed his government's desire to continue the experiment in a multiparty system."

In reply to a question, the External Relations Ministry spokesman stated: "We condemn the cowardly attack perpetrated on 14 July, which is bound to jeopardize the Central African Republic's already difficult economic and political recovery." He then added: "We are wondering about the significance of the decisions taken by the Central African Government."

ENVOY LEAVES FOR TALKS WITH CHAD PRESIDENT

AB271836 Paris AFP in English 1756 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 27 Jul (AFP)--A senior French diplomat, Jean-Pierre Campredon, left here today for Chad as the first envoy of the new French Government to have talks with President Goukouni Oueddei, a reliable source said. Mr Campredon is a former ambassador to Sudan and Madagascar.

Last month Ahdat Acyl, foreign minister in Chad's transitional Government of National Unity (GUNT), gave a message from Mr Goukouni to French Cooperation and Development Minister Jean-Pierre Cot for President Francois Mitterrand.

The French foreign minister also indicated France's readiness to contribute in humanitarian fashion to the reconstruction of war-torn Chad in order to alleviate the difficulties and suffering of the Chadian people.

FRENCH, LEBANESE CP SECRETARIES MEET IN PARIS

PM270908 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 22 Jul 81 p 5

[Excerpt] Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Maxime Gremetz had a meeting at PCF headquarters on 20 June with Lebanese Communist Party [LCP] Politburo member and Central Committee Secretary Karim Marwah. During this warm meeting, Maxime Gremetz reaffirmed the PCF's strong condemnation of the Israeli terrorist raids and its solidarity with the Lebanese and Palestinian peoples, the Lebanese national movement, the LCP and the PLO. He described the efforts being made by the communists to increase the expression of the French people's solidarity with Lebanon against the Israeli aggression.

LE FIGARO COMMENTS ON OTTAWA 'ECONOMIC FAILURE'

PM271027 Paris LE FIGARO in French 22 Jul 81 pp 1, 4

[Alain Vernay commentary: "Opening Our Eyes"]

[Text] The rhetoric of the Ottawa communique, which is neither better nor worse than previous summits' communiques, will soon fade away. What the seven agreed to say, behind the words, is that the constant increase in unemployment, the persistence of an inflation rate in double figures, the doubling of the price of money in 1 year and the developing countries' increasing indebtedness are due not so much to the decisions of individual participant countries, whatever their responsibilities, as to a kind of big, prolonged and perverse social and economic crisis that is causing world disorder. They also hinted that there is some reason to believe that things will improve next year provided fratricidal quarrels are avoided and all the disruptive forces of unemployment and inflation are combated.

In other words, this summit, which began without illusions, ended with no more tangible result than that of having contributed to the reciprocal education of the heads of state and of government, who sometimes have not only limited experience of multilateral meetings but also insufficient awareness of the interdependence of their countries.

In addition, the summit probably made it possible once again to attain the minimal but essential goal which Chancellor Schmidt, the most pessimistic or frankest of the seven, set before the summit began when he said that at best he expected it to "postpone by another year an economic, monetary and commercial war between the participant countries." That is notable, but very little.

This leaves one question which cannot be avoided: Will the cordial failure of the Ottawa summit--at economic if not political level--be useless or profitable? It would be useless if the seven wrongly attributed the failure of the Ottawa meeting to the very form of the summit, which has real advantages--16 hours of discussion among the top leaders--even if it calls for complementary meetings. For instance, there is the possibility, which was apparently envisaged in the corridors, of forming a "standing group" comprising representatives of the United States, France, Germany and Britain to enable emergency meetings to be held in case of strategic necessity with possible additional participation by other countries directly concerned.

It would also be a mistake to attribute the lack of progress to the personalities of leaders incapable of overcoming their differences owing to their ideological concerns. In fact, as was noted, leaders and ideologies have changed in Britain, the United States and France but the problems remain and are even growing worse.

On the other hand, the failure of the summit will not have been in vain if it actually helps the participants to become aware of the overall deterioration in the economic and social situation, which is disguised sometimes by an improvement in the situation of one fortunate country and sometimes by the temporary disappearance of some major source of anxiety, as is the case this year with the difficulties in obtaining oil at a steady price owing to the reduction in demand.

Indeed, the obvious fact which emerges from the summits held so far is not only that the industrial countries cannot overcome their problems by solitary economic recovery--always at the expense of the strength of military and political alliances--but also that their prosperity and their overall security are inconceivable in the context of the disintegration and decline of the oil-importing developing countries. The latter are both the sole reserve of demand and growth for the industrialized world--clients as well as vital suppliers--and, on the other hand, in the event of disturbances, the ferments of major wars.

However, many of these countries, which are preferential partners for Europe and major partners for the United States and Japan, are on the brink of bankruptcy owing to the increase in interest rates, which has increased their debts out of all proportion. So much so that they are likely to carry away part of the private banking system in their misfortune one day--a system which has so far been functioning very well thanks to the short circuits between OPEC petrodollars and the big Western banks, which have now taken the risk of being the Third World's main creditors.

Will 1981, like 1931, be a year in which the curtain is raised on a new stage in the world crisis? Some people will make rather too hasty a comparison with the Roosevelt era, when the great Keynesian remedies were not wrongly used, as they now are. The present crisis follows the excessive use of such methods, notably in Britain under the Labor Party and in the United States under the Democrats. It was only after that that the opposite extremes were used. It is possibly also advisable to forget references to the Marshall Plan, which was conceived to rebuild countries that already had strong structures and did not leave a large part of the production capacity unused.

The best solution now would probably be a return to the Bretton-Woods spirit which gave rise to both the Internatinal Monetary Fund and to the World Bank. For the main failure of these past 10 years, during which the "discontent index" (in other words the unemployment rate added to the inflation rate) has more than doubled in the industrialized countries, is primarily the bankruptcy of an alternative; the replacement of the imperfect system of fixed but adjustable exchange rates by the worse system of floating exchange rates; the latter encouraged extreme currency fluctuations and then, by way of remedy, interest rate fluctuations and gave increased speed and destructive force to the movements of floating capital seeking protection as much as, or more than, profit.

Did the seven finally realize in Ottawa that the solution to the crisis depends above all on a return to a less laxist monetary system? Only some stabilization would make it possible to consolidate the price of money, the Third World's debts and, hence, to restore growth in international trade--the only way to development.

Will this course be adopted? Or will it be impossible to prevent the new leaders like Ronald Reagan and Francois Mitterrand from first trying to attain their national objectives by their own methods, whether it be reviving the economy in France by means of and for employment, which only harms France, or by stabilizing the market in America by hammering inflation, which harms everybody?

Whatever happens, the biggest risk is once again that of forgetting interdependence. Will seven summits have been enough to make the seven heads of state and of government realize that the search for a solution depends on international cooperation--first monetary and then economic cooperation? Will they realize this and accept the challenge of hope without restricting themselves to a somewhat cynical attempt to flee open confrontation. Long live Ottawa's economic failure if it has prompted the powers of this world to open their eyes.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS MINISTER SUBMITS RESIGNATION

LD272152 Lisbon Domestic Service in Portuguese 2100 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Summary] The office of the prime minister confirmed tonight that Carlos Macedo has submitted his resignation as social affairs minister for political reasons.

SOARES ADDRESSES OPORTO DISTRICT CONGRESS SESSION

PM241547 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 20 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpt] "It is inevitable that the Socialist Party [PS] will return to the area of government in the medium term and we must not make the same mistakes as in the past," Mario Soares asserted at the closing session of the third Oporto district congress, at which his viewpoints triumphed. Just as in the northern capital, the Socialist leader saw his position strengthened at most of the 22 federation congresses held over the weekend.

Several main features shaped Mario Soares' speech: the need for unity and internal pacification following the clarifications of the national and district congresses, with the aim of creating conditions to enable the PS to "turn outward"; criticism of those who want an immediate definition of the policy of alliances, which, in his opinion, should rest with the grassroots members; and a return to power only after another election.

However, the PS leader emphasized that he was not "demanding an early election." According to the Socialist leader, the international situation is extremely favorable "to democratic socialism" as is highlighted by Mitterrand's recent victory.

Broaching internal problems, Mario Soares stressed that "the political line is clearly defined for all PS members alike, at both national and district level." Hence, "we are now in a position to transcend the stage when we were turned inward on ourselves and to project ourselves outward." He rejected "entrenchment in superseded positions," pointing out that "the majority respects the minority but there must be party discipline."

Lack of internal organization and the need for grassroots participation "in the party's daily activity and in the major political decisions" were two other matters broached by Soares. With respect to the policy of alliances, he reaffirmed that "the PS leadership will scrupulously respect the opinions and wishes of the grassroots."

Afterwards, he took stock of PS activity in 1974-75 and at the time of its presence in the government, recalling that the governments headed by him "balanced the country financially and created conditions for development." But then "came the Democratic Alliance governments," whose "restrictive and conservative policy of defending the priviledged is leading the country toward a grave crisis."

In Mario Soares' opinion, the model for the present cabinet "is that of Mrs Thatcher and we can see where that has led."

The Socialist secretary general also asserted that "before the vacation everything will increase and after the vacation everything will increase, except workers' wages and social benefits."

"We no longer know what the Democratic Alliance's blueprint is," he added, "nor is there agreement among the parties comprising it. There is even a deterioration in relations." In an indirect reference to the law on sectors [of the economy] rejected by the Council of the Revolution, Soares states that "the government is arranging pretexts for shirking its own responsibilities to the country."

After emphasizing nonacceptance of a return to power without an election, Mario Soares also stressed that "we will not accept shady deals behind the electorate's backs for the formation of hybrid governments." He emphasized that "if there were an election today, the Democratic Alliance would not have a majority for governing."

Again in connection with the same issue, the PS secretary general said: "If, for instance, Dr Balsemao were to say at Tuesday's cabinet meeting that he no longer wished to be in power, the new government would have to be found within the Democratic Alliance because it is still the majority. And if this were not the case, it would have to acknowledge to the country its inability to govern."

At the international level he urged East-West dialogue and the need for an understanding between the industrialized and the poor countries in order to avert "a world catastrophe."

GOVERNMENT, PS REACT TO VETO ON ECONOMIC LAW

PM271510 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 22 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpts] Yesterday's most important political development was the government's "reply," which was previously prepared at a meeting of Social Democratic Party [PSD] ministers, to the Council of the Revolution's veto on the law delimiting sectors [of the economy], which it regards as an "attack on the most elementary rules of democracy." Subsequently, the Socialist Party [PS] reacted critically to the government's stance, describing it as "childish and improper" and aimed essentially at "conducting a publicity operation for whose implementation it has neither courage nor leadership."

The government's stance was learned in the early afternoon through a communique issued by the cabinet, which condemns the fact that a state body not elected by the people has prevented "on exclusively ideological grounds the coming into force of a law approved by parliament and proposed by the government."

After emphasizing its intention not to "enter into polemics with the Council of the Revolution's Marxist wing, since it interprets its constitutional functions differently and with a different dignity," the government says that it does not, however, forgo registering its "repudiation of the insulting accusations which the same Marxist wing has leveled against the assembly, the government, the majority of the Constitutional Committee themselves and, apparently, the president."

At the same time, the communique asserts: "The government, which emanates from a majority freely chosen by the people, does not accept lessons in independence and political uprightness from a body which never submitted itself to the ballot box and on whose urgent elimination the system's full democracy depends."

After stating that "it is well acquainted with the criticisms of the Council of the Revolution's Marxist wing, since it has already heard them countless times from the communist party's benches," the cabinet announces it intention of excluding all nonessential productive investments from the public enterprise sector's investments program "to ensure maximum utilization of public resources in the social sectors."

In addition, it considered adopting measures which may appear appropriate for alleviating the "grave consequences" for the country of the Council of the Revolution's veto.

This note was studied the evening before last at a meeting of PSD ministers and won the "total" agreement of the Social Democratic Center Party [CDS], which was represented by Basilio Horta with whom Pinto Balesmao held a separate meeting.

The meeting aroused considerable expectation since there were people who suggested the possibility of the government's resignation being discussed at it--a hypothesis immediately denied by an official source which asserted that "the PSD and the CDS are in agreement; the government is not resigning."

However, reports were regarding as certain the resignation of Social Affairs Minister Carlos Macedo. Following several denials, Carlos Macedo himself confirmed that resignation, which, however, was withdrawn even before the meeting of PSD ministers, after an exchange of views with Pinto Balsemao during which "there was agreement on many points."

PS Against Government Note

For its part, the PS reacted unfavorably to the government communique on the Council of the Revolution, describing it as "childish and improper" and aimed essentially at "conducting a publicity operation for whose implementation it has neither courage nor leadership."

In the PS opinion, the government leveled "threats" against the public enterprises, which, "if they are realized, will drastically affect the very private sector whose champion it claims to be but whose gravedigger it is proving to be with the restrictions on credit and the lack of real support for investment and exports."

Continuing in the same tone, the PS maintains that, after cutting the enterprises' current budget by 10 percent, the government, under the pretext of the Council of the Revolution's decision, is taking the opportunity to announce the stifling of the public sector's investment potential, in accordance with the economic viewpoint which the CDS has been imparting to government activity."

The consequences for the workers which will result from the "government's antisocial policy" also are mentioned by the PS, which also says that it finds that Pinto Balsemao "is striving to mass produce political developments for the consumption of the weekly press, but the only political development which it is succeeding in making clear in the eyes of the Portuguese people is that of the collapse of the image of the government and of the Democratic Alliance."

Last, "it refrains from commenting on the improper manner in which the government refers to the exercising of constitutional powers by a state body whose existence in the current Constitution also was legitimized by the very party of which the prime minister is chairman."

PSOE'S GONZALEZ VIEWS EFFECTS OF FRENCH POLICIES

PM280659 Paris LE MATIN in French 21 Jul 81 p 10

[Jacqueline de Linares interview with Spanish Socialist Workers' Party Secretary General Felipe Gonzalez in Paris weekend 18-19 July: "Spanish Socialists Still in Favor of Extradition"]

[Text] LE MATIN: You have come here for a private meeting with government leader Pierre Mauroy, whom you know well. What changes could there be in Spain with a leftwing government in France?

Gonzalez: It could have two positive effects. One for the Spanish left of course. The other for democracy in general. We are witnessing a radical change in the situation without any upheavals in society or in the institutions, in a France which has lived under the right's domination for almost 25 years. It is very important for Spain to be able to witness this experience. We will have to wait some time before a serious assessment of the socialist administration can be made, but in principle there will already have been 18 months of French experience when we have our elections in 1983.

LE MATIN: What effects will there be on Franco-Spanish relations?

Gonzalez: There have always been communication difficulties between France and Spain. But relations will improve because I believe they will be based on a new principle--frankness.

LE MATIN: Yes, but there is this problem of the Basque extraditions which Spain has requested of France. The French Government is not very favorable to that. Is your position on extraditions still the same?

Gonzalez: Yes, of course. We are still calling for extraditions. For example there are some extradition requests concerning an affair connected with the Spanish Socialist Workers' Party [PSOE]. One of our comrades was killed. He was really killed in order to provoke the PSOE. Imagine the same situation in France. Imagine somebody killing comrades allegedly for political reasons. The socialists have always been for democracy and against dictatorship. There is also the question of emotion, but basically it is a matter of political analysis.

LE MATIN: If the French Government, which is a socialist government, turns down the extraditions, don't you think the Union of the Democratic Center will try to exploit that against the socialists, against you?

Gonzalez: Of course the right has always behaved in the same way. If relations with France are going well the Spanish Government takes credit for it. If things are not going well, it is the socialists' fault.

LE MATIN: If there are no extraditions, how will you persuade Spanish opinion to accept that?

Gonzalez: It will be very difficult to make people accept that, especially since people say democracy is sometimes not reliable in Spain. But one of the weaknesses of democracy in Spain is precisely the terrorist attacks. In Spain there is at least as much freedom as in the other democratic countries. For instance the extent of freedom of speech can be seen in the press. It ranges from the intolerable fascist extreme right to the terrorist extreme left.

LE MATIN: You are putting forward exactly the same argument as Leopoldo Calvo Sotelo when he said before his visit to France, "Nobody can teach us anything about democracy...."

Gonzalez: I have used that argument with him.

LE MATIN: With regard to the policy of consultation with the Spanish Government which you have been following, particularly since 23 February, you have been criticized for aligning too frequently with the Spanish Government's positions, no longer expressing any criticisms and, all in all not playing your role as an opposition party....

Gonzalez: It is a fair criticism. It is an easy criticism. It is true that we are pursuing a course which cannot be described as an opposition course. I believe the definition of a stable democracy is a democracy in which the executive can govern even if other parties might oppose its measures. We have not reached that stage in Spain.

LE MATIN: But you think you are going the right way about achieving that?

Gonzalez: There is still an authoritarian, centralist state apparatus in Spain. The priority in Spain should be its transformation into a democratic apparatus. Democracy is won with time. Time is crucial for democracy.

LE MATIN: The Spanish courts have just released Saenz de Ynestrillas, a colleague of the putschist Tejero and suspected of hatching another plot. Does that not worry you? Do you think the putschists are going to give you time to "win" democracy?

Gonzalez: In Spain the enemy was usually the left. I was subjected to court proceedings until 1976. It is very difficult for a judge to understand that the enemy is also the violent extreme right. This is an objective explanation of the attitude taken by the judges. Nonetheless I am optimistic about the future. There are plots. There will be plots. Above all there will be plots by civilians who mislead the armed forces--civilians more difficult to pinpoint because they are behind the scenes. But I think democracy rests on a very broad social base. The opinion polls have demonstrated that 74 percent of people want a democratic regime and only 4 percent support the putschists. Spanish civilian society is fragile but there is this social base for democracy.

10TH CONGRESS OF SPANISH CP OPENS IN MADRID

LD280950 Madrid Domestic Service in Spanish 0900 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] The 10th congress of the Spanish Communist Party just began in a Madrid cinema. Executive Committee Member Simon Sanchez Montero greeted those attending. The next item on the agenda will be the job of electing the officials to preside over the congress until the new Executive Committee is elected on 31 July.

Following the election of the congress officials, Santiago Carrillo will deliver a report on his activities as party secretary general since the last congress. The political observers and the 2000 delegates are awaiting this report with great interest.

DENMARK

NAVY COMMANDER STRESSES NEED FOR PATROL FORCE

PM270704 Copenhagen BERLINGSKE TIDENDE in Danish 21 Jul 81 p 3

[Poul Moller report: "Navy Could Not Manage Surveillance With Fewer Ships"]

[Text] An unusually large number of Eastern bloc warships passed through Danish waters last week, perhaps the largest in recent years, and it was necessary to redirect several Danish naval units to follow the East German, Russian and Polish ships.

Naval operational command chief Rear Adm Sven Thiede told BERLINGSKE TIDENDE that it can be difficult on weekends and at other holiday times to make the navy's resources go far enough.

"I think what happened recently emphasizes that there is a need for a watchdog force to monitor Danish waters, so that we can be on the spot to ensure that the regulations concerning Danish sovereignty and passage through Danish waters are observed. This is not something which can be done from a radar station or an aircraft," Rear Admiral Thiede said. "The navy can just about manage this now," he went on, "but if a new defense bill made cuts in the number of ships in the navy--as has been suggested--then we could not watch over Danish waters in a satisfactory manner."

The Eastern bloc ships passed in three groups. It was necessary to use the inspection ship Vaedderen, which was on its way from Frederikshavn to Copenhagen, to follow the ships, and to withdraw two missile torpedo boats and two other patrol vessels from other duties.

The Eastern bloc's ships which passed through Danish waters were of types which could carry nuclear arms, but it is not possible for the navy or any other Danish military force to ascertain whether on this or any other occasion they were carrying arms with nuclear warheads.

The naval operational command chief did not want to comment directly on Prime Minister Anker Jorgensen's recent statements about the Nordic countries as a nuclear-free zone--this is a political question, he said--but militarily it is clear that Denmark is at present a nuclear-free zone, and if the whole issue is to have any meaning it must involve the other parties--the Eastern bloc powers--in removing their nuclear arms from ships in the Baltic and from the Kola Peninsula in the north, for example.

AKTUELT: SOVIET TROOPS MUST LEAVE AFGHANISTAN

PM270831 Copenhagen AKTUELT in Danish 21 Jul 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Stabilization"]

[Text] "Life in Afghanistan continues to stabilize, and social reforms are beginning to bear their first fruits to the benefit of the people in the young republic," official Soviet commentator Dmitriy Ardamatskiy wrote in AKTUELT.

The stabilization of which Ardamatskiy spoke is built on almost 80,000 Soviet invasion troops, who as far as we know have fewer enemies in Afghanistan than previously--in part because around 2 million Afghans have fled the country. Some of them visit their country now and then. In the Soviet version they are called "bands of terrorists." Others call then Afghan guerrillas, fighting for their country.

Ardamatskiy's interpretations of the situation in Afghanistan and of the Soviet Union's Afghanistan policy are possibly an example of how Soviet citizens are kept informed. In Denmark, this form of information does not stand a chance, partly because people here have better all-round information than the Soviet citizen.

Therefore, the Danish Government--and the Danish Folketing--give their support to the position that one of the conditions for general detente in the world is Soviet withdrawal of its army of occupation from Afghanistan. And also because "stabilization" is a torment for the Afghan people.

NORWAY

DEFENSE MINISTER ON ABSENCE FROM NATO EXERCISE

PM260657 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 23 Jul 81 p 8

[Oslav Trygge Sotrvik report: "Norwegian 'No' to Major Naval Exercise"]

[Excerpts] On a bilateral basis the United States and 13 other Western nations will begin in August this year the biggest naval exercise since World War II. The exercise has been discussed within NATO, but Norway has declined to take part on reasons of principle, Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg told AFTENPOSTEN.

According to the U.S. Atlantic Command, SACLANT, in Norfolk, Virginia, 120,000 men, 250 ships and more than 1,000 aircraft will take part in the exercise, NORSK TELEGRAMBYRA reports. The starting date is 1 August and the exercise, which has been christened "Ocean Venture 81," will last until October.

Defense Minister Thorvald Stoltenberg pointed out that the chief of the U.S. Atlantic Command who is organizing the exercise has two functions. He is supreme U.S. commander of all naval forces in the Atlantic and supreme NATO commander for the North Atlantic. "We have said 'no' to taking part in this exercise since it covers geographical areas which obviously lie outside NATO's area of responsibility. I think that it is important here to maintain clear distinctions, both geographically and on matters of principle. This exercise raises the fundamental question of the alliance's activities outside its original area of responsibility. I think this will be a central problem in the coming years and any attempt to extend NATO's area of responsibility is unlikely to unite the alliance, but could in the long term lead to a split," Stoltenberg said. "The position we have adopted is also connected with the whole of our North-South policy, for in the final analysis a failed North-South policy could lead to a situation in which military forces would be used. It is precisely to avoid this that we have gove in for the North-South policy that we have today."

[Question] Could we not have taken part in the part of exercise which will take place within NATO's area of responsibility?

[Answer] Yes, that is true. But it could have created military and political confusion which in the longer term could damage the alliance. We have an area of responsibility we agree on and if we step outside it I believe that disagreement could arise which could seriously damage our defense cooperation in the area we agree on. I think an example of this is to be found in the reports from the Ottawa summit, where the disagreement which did arise chiefly affected North-South question.

[Question] But Denmark is taking part in this exercise. Is there a difference between the Danish and Norwegian views here?

[Answer] At any rate they know what we think, because this has been discussed within NATO. [answer ends]

AFTENPOSTEN COMMENTS ON NORWEGIAN POLL RESULTS

PM270903 Oslo AFTENPOSTEN in Norwegian 18 Jul 81 p 2

[Editorial: "For or Against"--upper case denotes italics as published]

[Text] You get the answer you deserve. If you ask people whether they are FOR peace and AGAINST the use of nuclear arms, there can be no doubt at all about the answer. It is really pretty obvious. It is quite easy to think of a long list of questions to which the answers are known in advance.

In an opinion poll carried out by the Norwegian opinion research institute for ARBEIDERBLADET, the following question was asked: "Proposals have been launched advocating the Nordic countries and parts of Europe as nuclear-free zones. Are you for or against the establishment of such zones?"

As the question stands, it seems natural to answer it positively. For the Nordic countries DO already constitute a nuclear-free zone and none of them has any plans to acquire such arms. So it is hardly surprising that 69 percent of those interviewed answered 'yes' to ARBEIDERBLADET's question. But when the government's mouthpiece presents the opinion poll results under the rubric "No Nuclear Doubts in Public Opinion," this is all too wide-ranging a conclusion to draw on the basis of the material available. The opinion poll contains no question on what should and must be the conditions for a Nordic nuclear-free zone enshrined in a treaty. And it is precisely on this point that the controversy exists.

The Labor Party and the government have presented the affair in such a way that doubts have arisen as to how the zone proposal should be understood. The Labor Party itself designed this lack of clarity. The party has chosen words which consciously avoid concreteness.

Undoubtedly, the opinion poll gives an adequate picture of people's natural dislike of nuclear arms. But the answers tell us little about how the majority of Norwegians view the zone proposal in the broader security policy context. Would, for example, the majority accept an isolated Nordic solution if it were established that such a solution would undermine our own security? Would the majority of the Norwegian people accept an arrangement independent of NATO as a whole, a solution which would mean that Norway's NATO membership would be turned into a mere illusion?

We do not doubt the answer. Nevertheless, we ask these questions because they have the greatest bearing on the political reality of the zone proposal. The debate so far has created dangerous notions about nuclear-free zones and we can only voice our regret that the government and the Labor Party have allowed doubt and uncertainty to proliferate. Precisely because we all are frightened of war and conflict, we must avoid taking panic action. No one benefits from experiments which could create imbalance and uncertainty and thus increase the danger of war.

SWEDEN

SVENSKA DAGBLADET CRITICIZES NORWEGIAN POLL

PM271420 Stockholm SVENSKA DAGBLADET in Swedish 21 Jul 81 p 2

[Editorial: "Zone Fraud"]

[Text] Genuine concern for nuclear rearmament is one thing. This is quite natural. But it is a completely different matter to attempt to manipulate this concern for one's own ends. The opinion poll published in the Social Democratic ARBEIDERBLADET in Oslo the other day and which attracted much attention to Sweden is an example of this kind of manipulation.

ARBEIDERBLADET published the results under the headline: "No Doubts in Public Opinion--Massive Support for Zone." According to the poll, 69 percent of those interviewed supported the idea of nuclear-free zones, while only 14 percent were opposed to such zones. Six percent thought that the question was immaterial and 10 percent "don't know."

For the Labor Party, which seems to be on its way toward an election defeat this fall, the results must have seemed promising. The Norwegian Social Democrats' performance on the zone issue has been deeply divided and the eager, if somewhat contradictory actions on this issue, have the additional goal of attempting to paper over the cracks on the eve of a fateful election party.

However, anyone who takes a closer look at the opinion poll soon realizes what limited value it possesses --It turns out that director Bjorn Balstad of the Norwegian public opinion research institute--which carried out the poll--warned ARBEIDERBLADET of the seriously oversimplified question the newspaper wanted to ask. The institute considers the question altogether too general for the responses to give a correct picture of people's opinions. At this point, ARBEIDERBLADET declared that the newspaper itself would be responsible for the form of the question.

Thus, the question was put in the following terms. "Proposals have been put forward for the Nordic countries and parts of Europe as nuclear-free zones. Are you for or against the establishment of such zones?"

With this question, it is--as some Norwegian commentaries have put it--almost surprising that not more than 69 percent answered positively! In the first place, the Nordic countries today are already a nuclear-free zone, apart from the Soviet submarines in the Baltic. And in the second place, the question doesn't concern a Nordic zone as a first step but refers quite clearly to the old idea of a considerably larger area.

It would seem that it was most important for ARBEIDERBLADET not to take any risks at all--but rather to achieve the right results with as vague a question as possible. What would the results have been if the question had asked, for example, whether the Norwegians were willing to accept a Nordic nuclear-free zone even if it meant the first step away from NATO membership?

It is natural for ARBEIDERBLADET to interpret the results of the poll as support for the Norwegian Social Democrats and the Gro Harlem Brundtland government. But what happiness lasts forever?

For one of the interesting points here is that on the same occasion exactly the same people were asked what government Norway should have after the fall Storting election. Some 52 percent wanted a nonsocialist government and only 40 percent wanted a Social Democratic cabinet. These figures also accord well with the average of the three polls on Norwegian political sympathies carried out in June.

The presumptive government parties--the Conservative, Christian People's and Center Parties--in June had 50.1 percent of the voters behind them against 41.6 percent for the Labor Party and the Socialist Left Party together.

If ARBEIDERBLADET now claims that its zone question was relevant, then the government mouthpiece also will be forced to admit in the name of consistency that the Norwegian people want a nonsocialist government to assume responsibility for the question after the election. So it goes!

KIPRIANOU CONFERS WITH RAMPHAL IN LONDON

NC271612 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] President Kiprianou today met in London with Commonwealth Secretary General Ramphal and briefed him on the latest developments in the Cyprus issue, particularly referring to the expected Turkish proposals. President Kiprianou stressed that the further stand of the Cyprus Government and Greek Cypriot side will be determined in light of these proposals. He also stressed to Mr Ramphal that the Cyprus issue should be discussed at the next Commonwealth conference to be held in Melbourne, Australia, next September as one of the most serious international problems that should be of interest to the Commonwealth.

Mr Ramphal stated after the meeting that the Cyprus issue is one of the questions being considered by the Commonwealth Secretariat, which also looks to the Melbourne conference and means by which it can help. Mr Ramphal said that the two sides will continue their contacts this week to brief each other.

UN ENVOY RETURNS FROM NEW YORK CONSULTATIONS

NC071740 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] Mr Gobbi, the UN secretary general's special representative in Cyprus, returned this afternoon from New York, where he held consultations with Mr Waldheim on the intercommunal talks. Mr Gobbi will begin his contacts tomorrow with the parties concerned.

I DHILINI COMMENTS ON COMING INTERCOMMUNAL TALKS

NC251122 Nicosia I DHILINI in Greek 25 Jul 81 p 1

[Excerpt] Reports from authoritative sources, which have been checked, mention that at the intercommunal talks table the Greek Cypriot side will insist that the territorial aspect be discussed first, regardless of whether or not the written proposals the Turkish side is expected to submit concern all aspects of the Cyprus problem.

According to the same reports, our side is ready to discuss any issues the other side raises, provided a spirit of conciliation and good will exists. Also, the Greek side does not preclude the discussion of the territorial aspect in conjunction with the constitutional aspect.

Meanwhile, according to authoritative diplomatic circles, the Turkish side's stance on the various issues that will be discussed at the negotiations table will be guided by Ankara through the Turkish Cypriot interlocutor's adviser. And because constitutional professor Soysal, who is considered chauvinistic and intransigent, performs the duty of adviser to Onan, it is contemplated that he will be replaced with another, moderate constitutional expert.

According to the same circles, the Turkish side's proposals were prepared in Ankara and Denktas was called to the Turkish capital to make the suggestion to him that he should adopt them and carry them to Cyprus to be submitted at the inter-Cypriot talks table without any reservations.

The same diplomatic circles confirmed reports by I DHILINI that it was stressed to Denktas not to undertake any initiative or take any action on the Cyprus problem before briefing Ankara and obtaining its approval.

TA NEA Remarks

NC230946 Nicosia TA NEA in Greek 23 Jul 81 pp 1, 3

[Excerpt] Diplomatic circles yesterday told TA NEA that the huge gap between the two sides' positions will continue to exist even after submission of the "Turkish proposals on the territorial aspect," about which there has been so much clamor. At this moment, the UN secretary general and the competent government authorities in four capitals (Nicosia, Athens, Ankara and Washington) are actually occupied with the deadlock, which is considered as a certainty, the same circles added.

These appraisals were directly confirmed yesterday by President Kiprianou who, speaking at the presentation of credentials by the new Iraqi ambassador, referred to "various recent reports that the Turkish side would keep its promises about a constructive stand on the territorial issue." Mr Kiprianou's statements yesterday also clarify the reasons for the sudden recall of Mr Gobbi to New York for consultations with Mr Waldheim. These reasons are nothing else but to consider alternatives in rescuing the intercommunal dialogue.

Western diplomatic circles are also working in this direction and in the form of "advice" or "urgings" they suggest to the official Greek Cypriot side that:

--It should not hasten to reject the Turkish proposals, no matter how wide the gap between them and the Greek Cypriot positions, because these proposals could probably constitute the starting point for discussion.

RAPPROCHEMENT COUNCIL CHAIRMAN MAKES REPORT

NC241610 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1400 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Speaking at a news conference today, the chairman of the Central Council for the Rapprochement of Greek and Turkish Cypriots, member of the House of Representatives Galanos, underlined the need for a rapprochement between the two communities within the framework of efforts toward a solution of the Cyprus problem.

Galanos underlined the negative position of the Denktas regime toward efforts for rapprochement and stressed that if this rapprochement is not carried out as soon as possible, there are foreign and local forces, as well as interests, which will work for the final partition of our country. He added the Council's work parallels and assists the work of the interlocutor at the intercommunal talks. He called on the Turkish Cypriots to cooperate in the joint struggle for the salvation of the joint fatherland.

In conclusion, Galanos mentioned that among other things the Council will promote the announcement of the measures established by the government, will ask for the preparation of a charter of intent which will be the social-political and economic contract for the Turkish Cypriots and will plan a pan-Cyprian conference of Greek and Turkish Cypriots, if conditions allow, to discuss the country's future.

EDEK PARTY CHAIRMAN RETURNS FROM PARIS VISIT

NC261712 Nicosia Domestic Service in Greek 1630 GMT 26 Jul 81

[Text] The chairman of socialist party EDEK, Lissaridhis, has returned from Paris where he had talks with government officials and with the leaders of the Socialist Party that governs France.

A statement released by the EDEK press office says that Lissaridhis' talks covered the Cyprus issue, the latest Mediterranean developments, other international issues and cooperation between the two parties.

KLIRIDHIS INTERVIEWED ON PRESIDENTIAL RACE

NC261043 Nicosia ELEVTHERI KIPROS in Greek 26 Jul 81 pp 1, 8

["Text" of Democratic Rally Chairman Kliridhis' interview with Khristoforos Papastilianou in the Nicosia weekly newspaper SINKHRONI POLITIKI on cooperation among parties and proposals for the solution of the Cyprus problem--date and place not given]

[Text] In reply to a question about whether a possibility exists for his party to suggest, following an agreement with any other party or parties, a third person acceptable to the majority of the Cypriot people for the office of president of the republic in the next presidential elections, chairman of Democratic Rally Glafkos Kliridhis let it be understood, in an exclusive interview with the new weekly newspaper SINKHRONI POLITIKI, that he does not preclude such a possibility provided certain indispensable prerequisites exist.

Kliridhis considers the most important prerequisite to be the achievement of an agreement among the parties that will cooperate for this purpose on a common political line both for dealing with the national problem and the internal problems.

The full text of the interview that was given to Khristoforos Papastilianou is as follows:

Question: Mr Kliridhis, since the issue that occupies the Cyprus people after last May's parliamentary elections is the presidential elections of 1983, the following burning question arises: Will you submit your candidacy, and thereby endanger your own political office in the House of Representatives, or is there a possibility that after an agreement with any other party or parties, your party will recommend a third person who will be acceptable to the majority of the Cypriot people?

Answer: First, I must mention that these things are very fluid. For such an agreement to be achieved, an agreement must first emerge on a program for the handling of the many problems the country is facing. If it concerns an agreement with parties merely for the apportioning of positions, then this will not be an agreement. Such an agreement can be made with one or two parties, provided an agreement on a common political line can be made both for dealing with the national problem and the internal problems. Otherwise it would be an electoral cooperation agreement for the apportioning of positions.

Question: Do you consider it improbable for such an agreement to be made and then one for a government of national unity?

Answer: No, I do not consider it improbable, but I put it as a prerequisite for the existence of an agreement.

Question: In such case will you personally or any other DISI [Democratic Rally] cadre participate in a government of national unity?

Answer: Yes, provided there will be a common program. If elections are merely held and everybody has his own positions and then we have disputes, it will not be right. This would mean a deception of the people.

Question: We speak vaguely of the unity of the right. What prerequisites do you believe should exist to achieve this goal?

Answer: The first prerequisite is whether the parties which do not belong in the area of the left can agree on a political program that will concern the handling of the national problem, economic policy, social policy and other essential issues.

Question: Can this goal be achieved in the near future?

Answer: I do not preclude it. However, the will for it should exist and the parties of the right should not merely politicize the issue of the positions. The will can exist if there is frankness that we have a common program. If, however, we only want to see who will be the presidential candidate or the ministers and so forth, that will not be enough to unite the right. Because even if it unites it, it will be a temporary unification. In view of the disagreements on basic issues, division will follow.

Question: You speak about the govenrment's weaknesses. Do you believe that if Makarios were living, the Cyprus problem would be more advanced and there would be the achievement of some solution of the problem in the first stage?

Answer: If Makarios were living, I believe there would be a stronger government and there would be a greater internal unity in the handling of the Cyprus problem.

Question: Many people have claimed that if you are a candidate in the 1983 presidential elections and fail, you will withdraw from political life because of your age.

Answer: I am not in politics because I seek offices and I have proved this since 1976. I am in politics because I love my country. I believe that I can contribute to my country and my position is not influenced by whether I am politicizing or not, whether I shall succeed in attaining office "A" or office "B". From the aspect of how old I am, age is not a yardstick. If someone who is 65 or 67 maintains his powers to the degree that he can contribute, that is, if he is 62 and withdraws from politics when he becomes 67, this is not enough of a yardstick. It depends on how that person feels at the time. For instance, whether he is suffering from fatigue, whether his memory no longer helps him and his nerves are shattered, or he is suffering from one ailment or another. One may be very healthy and robust at 57 and at the same time be exhausted from the aspect of spiritual power, judgement, thought, and so forth. Consequently, my yardstick is not how old I am but the physical state in which I am at a certain period.

Question: What will the Democratic Rally's stance be if there is a plan for the solution of the Cyprus problem within the UN framework or if the Turks submit proposals on a map?

Answer: Great significance is attached to whether the Turks will submit proposals on the territorial aspect or not. This is something, but this in itself does not mean that we are on the threshold of a solution. It all depends on whether these proposals will be reasonable.

In case any third country submits any plan for the solution of the Cyprus problem, we, as a party, will not examine the origin of the plan and if it is Eastern we reject it or if it emanates from the nonaligned we are not interested. We shall examine the content of the plan to see whether it guarantees a just and viable solution to the Cyprus problem, based on the principles agreed to between Makarios and Denktas--that is, on the four guidelines. We would greet the submission of some plan for the solution of the Cyprus problem from the Eastern countries, and we would examine with objectivity whether such a plan would guarantee a just and viable solution to the Cyprus problem, and whether it would be based on the guidelines. We do not examine who proposes the plan but rather the plan's contents, and then we discuss them.

Question: What would you do if there were such a plan?

Answer: I believe that if any plan is proposed by anyone, not matter what its origin is, the government, after it has studied it and after it has heard the viewpoints of all parties, must either accept or reject it and explain the reasons to the people for its rejection or acceptance.

CAGATAY CONTINUES COALITION FORMATION IN NORTH

TA271635 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 1530 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] National Unity Party [NUP] leader and Prime Minister Mustafa Cagatay has said that (?his contacts) directed toward forming the government increased the possibility of the formation of a coalition government. Cagatay met with Democratic People's Party [DPP] leader and Legislative Assembly President Nejat Konuk at the Assembly this morning. Cagatay also met with Turkish Unity Party leader Ismail Sezer at the Prime Ministry this morning. Cagatay later briefed President Rauf Denktas on his contacts.

Replying to reporters' questions after the talks, in which the formation of a government was discussed, Cagatay said that the contacts he has made up to now have been positive and that he will be able to announce the result of his talks by the end of the week at the latest. In reply to a question, Cagatay said that there are no problems within the party but there are various views of deputies, which is natural. He added that it is the duty of the party to assess these views, to regard them as the views of a majority and to determine a mode of action in line with these views.

Noting that aside from contacts concerning the Legislative Assembly Presidency, he had not held contacts with the Communal Liberation Party and the Republican Turkish Party regarding the formation of the government, Cagatay recalled that the parties in question had reached a decision on forming a government outside the NUP, and added that he could not hold any contacts with them on forming a government so long as this decision was valid.

In reply to a correspondent who recalled a press release by Sezer that he wanted the Interior and Housing Ministry to support the government, Cagatay said that Sezer did not make such a request and that he adopted a positive attitude.

DPP Rejects Coalition

TA280915 (Clandestine) Bayrak Radio in Turkish to Cyprus 0900 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] The Democratic People's Party [DPP] has decided not to form a coalition with the National Unity Party [NUP].

Legislative Assembly President and DPP leader Nejat Konuk held a news conference at the Assembly today and announced his party's decision on this subject. Konuk said that the DPP Party congress made the decision not to form a coalition with the NUP unanimously.

BRIEFS

NEW ELDYK COMMANDER--President Kiprianou yesterday received ELDYK [Greek Forces in Cyprus] Commander Brig Gen Epaminondhas Kirkilis, who bid him farewell on his departure from Cyprus. Brigadier General Kirkilis presented to President Kiprianou the new ELDYK commander, Col Dhimitrios Galatas. [Text] [Nicosia I ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 24 Jul 81 p 8 NC]

PFLP CLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR PIRAIEVS ATTACK

NC272301 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 2100 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] One of the Palestinian organizations late tonight claimed responsibility for the attack on 22 July against the Angelikousi travel office in Piraievs, as a result of which the woman owner of the office and one of her employees were killed.

A statement released late tonight in Beirut by the organization Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine [PFLP] says a commando unit of the organization carried out the attack and executed Angelikousi and her employee because, as the Palestinians claim, the office was an Israeli espionage center which aimed at destroying the Palestinian movement. The popular front's statement further says that this Israeli espionage center--as it describes the Angelikousi office--had murdered a Palestinian commando on 18 July 1978 in Glifadha.

The Palestinian organization's statement adds: We informed the Greek authorities about the true perpetrators of that murder and, moreover, that they wrongly had arrested two Palestinians as responsible for the murder. Unfortunately, our warning was not taken into consideration and, following that, we were compelled to undertake ourselves the operation of clearing the den of this Israeli espionage, the statement concludes.

UK WEDDING INVITATION TO KING PROMPTS PROTEST

NC271702 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 27 Jul 81 p 1

[Yiannis Andrikopoulos dispatch]

[Text] London, 27 Jul--A big political issue that is threatening to disturb Greek-British relations has been created by Queen Elizabeth's invitation to the "King of the Hellenes" Constantine to attend the wedding of Prince Charles the day after tomorrow. President Karamanlis is also among those who have been invited to the wedding.

The Greek Government has already asked the British Government to revoke this insult to the Greek people. Constantine is deposed--Ambassador Evstathios Lagakos stressed to the Foreign Office--and the only title he can be given is the title of former king.

Under pressure from the palace, the Foreign Office has rejected the Greek protest, alleging that there are no grounds for a protest since Constantine is addressed as "King of the Hellenes" and not "The King of the Hellenes"!

This differentiation, which has caused laughter among Greeks here, has not satisfied the Greek Government, whose stance is expected to be determined in Athens today.

This is the second incident that has taken place in the past few days between Britain and a foreign country. One week ago, King Juan Carlos of Spain turned down Elizabeth's invitation to attend the wedding in protest over Charles' decision to visit Gibraltar, which Spain claims.

The entire international gang of the "crowned" ones, including the "kings" of Bulgaria and Romania, has been invited to the wedding.

The British claim that the invitations to the "kings" are dictated by tradition and protocol. This tradition and protocol was formulated by the reactionary and interventionist policy of their deceased empire, which of course, continues to be a weapon in their interventionist policy.

In this particular case, they have offered the monarchical knife, which our British "friends" are craftily stabbing in the back of the young Greek republic.

According to an earlier announcement, Karamanlis should be expected here tomorrow. All the Greeks here with whom I have talked would welcome the cancellation of his visit as an appropriate answer to the interventionist policy of British imperialism.

Karamanlis Not To Attend

NC271916 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] The president's office has released the following announcement: President Karamanlis will not attend the wedding of the heir to the British throne, Prince Charles, owing to a slight indisposition. Prime Minister Rallis will represent the president at the wedding.

FRENCH DEPUTY MINISTER ARRIVES FOR OFFICIAL VISIT

NC271940 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] Andre Chandernagor, French minister delegate to the foreign minister charged with European affairs, arrived in Athens at 1930 this evening on a 2-day official visit. Foreign Minister Mitsotakis received the French minister at Ellinikon Airport.

Tomorrow morning the French official will be received by Prime Minister Rallis, and he then will have talks with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. As is known, Mr Mitsotakis will explain to Mr Chandernagor the development of Greek-Turkish relations and, particularly, the Cyprus issue. They will also discuss EEC issues, particularly the agricultural policy and the budget. The talks will also deal with international issues.

PAPANDREOU REPLIES TO WASHINGTON POST ARTICLE

NC271840 Athens ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Greek 27 Jul 81 p 4

[Text] The suspicious article in yesterday's Washington POST concerning PASOK's policy prompted an immediate reaction from Andreas Papandreou, who made the following statement to ELEVTHEROTIPIA in Kerkira late last night:

"Of course, journalist David Broder has the right to express his views on my policy and PASOK's positions. However, he has no right to distort and render to me statements that I have never made.

"Specifically, what he says about the country's armed forces and PASOK's accidental cooperation in the Chamber of Deputies that will arise from the 1981 elections constitute a figment of his imagination. The question that remains is: What aims are served by distorting PASOK's positions?"

In his article, Broder wrote that PASOK Chairman Papandreou had told him:

Papandreou also said "that his silent alliance with the militarists has shaped his political strategy. He expressed the conviction that PASOK will come first in the elections and categorically ruled out cooperation with communists if he does not secure a majority in the Chamber of Deputies."

Broder added that Papandreou also told him:

"While the army accepts PASOK, its cooperation with the communists would undoubtedly lead to army intervention. Moreover, I would not be able to accept cooperation with the communists, because they would daily pressure for the immediate implementation of PASOK's policy program, which cannot be implemented in 10 or 15 years."

It is worth mentioning that the U.S. journalist met Papandreou around 15 April at a social gathering and that his article was published 3 and 1/2 months later.

PASOK ADVISERS MEET TO PLAN ECONOMIC MEASURES

NC261912 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 26 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Andreas Papandreou and a staff of economic advisers are meeting under his chairmanship in Kerkira and are preparing measures for an "emergency plan" to recover the ailing (according to government and opposition confessions) Greek economy. Already, as it arises from statements made yesterday by the leader of the official opposition party, the first measures that PASOK will undertake have been planned, and today, Sunday, this planning is being completed.

It is evident that this is about the planning of "emergency plan measures" that must be implemented immediately when PASOK, as Papandreou stressed, becomes the government. Obviously, these "first aid" economy measures, envisage the creation of conditions that would allow the implementation of PASOK's policy but are not part of PASOK's government policy.

Papandreou's statement yesterday that the budget deficit would ultimately more than double that envisaged by the present government gives the measures of the existing situation that must be faced urgency.

On the other hand, the leader of the official opposition party, speaking yesterday on the outcome of the discussions of PASOK economists, stressed that:

"...We came to the conclusion that in 1982 a quite considerable decrease in inflation will be feasible." But he added the situation that has been created is such that systematic work and probably its escalation in the years 1983 and 1984 will be necessary so that inflation in Greece may fall to the levels of the EEC countries.

However, no extensive statements were made yesterday on PASOK's immediate economic "urgent need" measures, not only because they will be completed today, but also because, as Papandreou stressed, the work of the economic staff in Kerkira goes beyond that of a published PASOK declaration. It is for internal use. (meaning it is evident that the draft measures of PASOK's "immediate action" are still being determined).

It should be remembered that in this conference in Kerkira, the following participate and meet under Papandreou: M. Arsenis (director of the UN assembly for trade and economic development), D. Koulourianos (World Bank official) Y. Papanikolaou (lecturer of Queen Mary University in Britain), L. Katseli (lecturer assistant professor of Yale University in the United States), as well as the chairman of the PASOK Planning and Analysis Committee, Professor Ap. Lazaris and Mr Gr. Varfis (former direction of the Ministry of Coordination) and I. Roumeliotis (former director of the Ministry of Coordination for Greek-EEC Relations.)

Despite the fact that the planned urgent measures at the Kerkira conference are for "internal use and not for public release," Papandreou in his statements yesterday gave certain information on the nature of these measures and their immediate goals.

Specifically, AS HE STATED:

--A broad economic policy is being planned to increase the gross national product by 3 percent in 1982.

--A "very significant simplification in the structure of loan interest," is being planned which will be coupled with a close watch on investments for which loans will be given so that there will be no profiteering.

--A selective policy will be implemented on credits, both in the sectors of economy and according to districts in the country. ("We simplify the system but with control," Papandreou stressed, adding that the Monetary Committee will be abolished).

"The Monetary Committee, Papandreou stressed, is a collective organ whose goal is (basically to erase responsibilities and violate general decisions.... Namely, it is a mechanism for violating the credit policy and its rules, a violation that takes place collectively and nobody is responsible. It is also the remnant of the presence of a foreign force. Once the British and then the Americans used the Monetary Committee as a means of controlling the credit policy of the Greek state.")

--The whole credit system will be restructured. (Papandreou said: "It is very old and as far as rendering is concerned, it is the worst in the West, bureaucratic, scared of responsibilities and dependent on the enterprises that it provided credit and which truly can blackmail the lender with the threat of closure and the sacking of employees," Papandreou added:) [punctuation as published] "All this must be radically confronted with very considerable changes in structure."

Papandreou explained that yesterday afternoon's session of the conference was specifically devoted to the specific measures on the credit system, while this morning's session dealt with the specific measures on the incomes and prices policy that PASOK will implement.

--Control of all public investments under implementation to determine which are worth continuing and which should be terminated. "Our position is to give credits to Nomes [district--FBIS] for area projects." The organizations that will do the work will be either public or private.

Papandreou also explained yesterday that there are other "technical" issues (like the tax evasion problem) with which subcommittees of two to three persons will deal.

TURKMEN INTERVIEWED ON CYPRUS, U.S. RELATIONS

TA271514 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1435 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 27 Jul (AA)--Foreign Minister Ilter Turkmen believed a turning point was about to be reached in the Cyprus issue.

He made the statement in an interview published in the Istanbul daily "TERCUMAN" Monday. The Turkish Cypriot side would be making "concrete and constructive proposals" on "both consititutional and territorial questions" for the first time, and if the Greek Cypriot side responded, concrete progress toward a settlement could be envisaged during August, the foreign minister noted.

If the Greek Cypriot side adopted an adverse attitude and chose to break off negotiations, he warned, then the responsibility for blocking off all possibility of a comprehensive settlement in Cyprus would lie with them.

Greece

With regard to relations with Greece, Turkmen did not believe all of Turkey's disputes with Greece could be settled in the short run, but considered it possible to find "satisfactory solutions for both sides" on some items.

"Above all," he said, "it is important to establish an atmosphere of confidence and dialogue between the two countries." Despite Turkey's continued efforts to this end, however, the attitude of Greece was "inconsistent" in this respect. Nevertheless, Turkey would continue to be "reasonable and restrained" in her policy.

Turkemen did not expect any major progress toward a settlement of disputes at his New York meeting with Greek Foreign Minister Mitsotakis scheduled for September, noting Greece was going into a pre-election period which would make any understanding on bilateral issues highly impossible.

He did not want to comment on statements concerning Turkey made by Greek opposition leader Papandreou but preferred to wait and see who would come to power in Greece after the elections.

Middle East

Foreign Minister Turkmen was critical of Israel for following a policy that tended to disrupt efforts for a settlement in the Middle East. "The policy of faits accomplis, aggression and intransigence obviously cannot contribute to peace," he commented. He hoped other arrangements toward domestic peace and order in Lebanon could follow the implementation of the U.S. security resolution for a cease-fire.

Turkmen suggested there should be (?no resort) to brute force [words indistinct] all parties, including Palestinians, should join negotiations for a political settlement.

Turkey, as well as several other countries, was clear on the main contents of a future settlement which should include Israeli withdrawal from Arab lands occupied in 1967, and recognition of Palestinian rights. Unfortunately, Israel has failed to accept these principles so far, Turkmen added.

Any increase in tension in the Middle East was a threat to Turkey, Turkmen believed, for it disrupted stability in the region, and increased the possibility of outside intervention and of war.

He was satisfied with the strengthening of economic ties between Turkey [words indistinct] countries since November 1980, as well as of feelings of confidence.

U.S.

Turkey's relations with the U.S. had been revitalized after the lifting on the arms embargo, Turkmen noted. He described current U.S. policy toward Turkey, which "derived from NATO solidarity," as "constructive." Turkey desired to strengthen such solidarity, he said, and hoped to upgrade economic and military ties with the U.S. both bilaterally and within NATO.

TERCUMAN on Cyprus Issue

NC241404 Istanbul TERCUMAN in Turkish 22 Jul 81 p 4

[Article by Fahir Armaoglu: "Denktas in Ankara"]

[Text] TFSC President Denktas' contacts, which are due to begin this morning, are full of various problems. These contacts will constitute turning point in the Cyprus dispute.

For one thing, let us point out that the territorial issue in Cyprus is at a crossroads. All signs indicate that the Turkish Cypriot side will present definite territorial plans at the intercommunal talks due on 29 July. Turkey has pledged to the Western powers to submit a "meaningful" plan on the territorial issue. The Turkish foreign minister has also repeated this pledge to his Greek counterpart in their latest meeting. In response to Turkey's territorial proposals, the Greek Cypriot side is expected to submit proposals on the constitution on 5 August. Although Kiprianou told a Greek magazine "the fate of the dialogue will be determined on 29 July," it is understood that there is a general understanding between Turkey and Greece and Turkey and the Western powers that the extent of the territory to be retained by the Turkish Cypriot side should be 28 percent. When this proportion is fixed, what would be of real importance is the way in which the Turkish Cypriot--Greek Cypriot borders will be determined.

There is no doubt that a federal system has been accepted in principle in respect to the constitutional issue. However, as in the case of the territorial issue, so also in the constitutional issue, the important factor will be the details and the implementation of the federal state. When these two factors are determined, it would not be illogical to expect both sides to embark on serious negotiations on both these issues without rejecting each other's proposals.

We must admit that these developments do not wholly conform to the nature of President Denktas or to his views concerning a settlement. The divergence of views between the present Turkish Government and President Denktas is such that it cannot be belittled. But it is up to Denktas to eliminate this divergence, because the internal policy of Cyprus shows an anti-Denktas development. At this moment, he is not in full control of even his own party, the National Unity Party. As is seen in the election of Nejat Konuk, leader of the Democratic People's Party as president of the Legislative Assembly, the leftist parties are dominating internal policy in Cyprus. The game which the Turkish Government was trying to play in Cyprus in 1979 has materialized. It is highly probable that the new government will be formed by the leftist parties--in fact this seems the only way out. Under such circumstance, Denktas will be on one side while the Legislative Assembly and the government will be on the other. This will compel Denktas to resort to a lot of maneuvering and manipulation in order to be able to extricate himself from the Cyprus issue.

MILLIYET DISCUSSES POLICY TOWARD ISRAEL, PLO

NC241418 Istanbul MILLIYET in Turkish 21 Jul 81 p 2

["Viewpoint" column by Prof Mumtaz Soysal: "A Turkish Policy Which Goes Beyond 'Expressing Anxiety' Is Needed Toward Israel"]

[Text] The Foreign Ministry statement on the latest attacks against Lebanon has, as usual, stressed that "Turkey is watching the developments in this area--which is of close concern to it--with deep anxiety."

The statement had also stressed that Israel's grave and dangerous acts are capable of ushering in new elements of instability in the area and also of increasing current tension and entailing serious repercussions.

So far so good. No one can object to this part of the statement. Israel, which is, in a way, spoiled by the attitude of the Reagan administration and which takes advantage of the helplessness of the West, has carried its "grave and dangerous acts to preposterous dimensions in boldness and audacity."

But this escalation cannot be interpreted as insane behavior. There is probably some scheme behind it, a scheme which would serve the interests of the "hawks" in the Pentagon, which has failed to convince even its own allies of the existence of the "Soviet threat." This escalation probably aims at creating a worldwide crisis in the Middle East in order to implement the "Rapid Deployment Force" plan. In other words, it is a plan which plays with a keg of powder right under Turkey's nose which could blow up the entire world.

It is for this reason that Turkey cannot confine itself to merely expressing "anxiety" over Israel's behavior. This does not have to be in the form of complete severance of diplomatic relations, as this would be an unconstructive and sterile move. As a matter of fact, what was needed to be done in this direction has been done. By closing down the Turkish Consulate in Jerusalem and by reducing our diplomatic relations to the minimum, we have completed the "gesture" part of the affair.

Now Turkey, the only member of the Islamic Conference which continues to have diplomatic relations with Israel, even though on a minimum scale, should use these relations in a positive manner and formulate an "Israel policy" independent of Washington. To put it briefly, Turkey, as a state of the region, has to explain to Israel what it can and what it cannot tolerate. Such action would simultaneously be accompanied by a "settlement plan" independent of Washington.

However, the first step should be to get Israel to recognize the Palestine Liberation Organization as a "valid interlocutor." As observed in the Camp David plan, nothing would be more nonsensical than to attempt to solve the Palestine cause with the help of the Egyptians and Americans. This is where Turkey's efforts can be effective and convincing.

Forgetting the past of its own prime minister, Israel views the PLO as a mere terroristic organization and refuses to sit at the same negotiating table with the representatives of an organ it does not deem legal. This is an unacceptable justification which serves to make things more difficult. The Palestine issue can be resolved only by the Palestinians themselves.

When one comes to think of it, in Cyprus, both administrations consider each other as "illegal", but the Turkish side has agreed to sit at the negotiating table with the Greek Cypriot administration which it accuses of trampling on the Constitution and of attempting to form a unilateral republic.

Turkey, which knows where to stop when force has to be used for the settlement of disputes, is in a position to pursue an active policy which would convince Israel to abandon its efforts to crush the PLO through reprisals and bombardments and to sit around the same table as a valid interlocutor. But this is not a matter that can be resolved through simple recommendations and superficial efforts.

The most important trump card in Turkey's hands is its good relations with the PLO and the Islamic countries as well as with the socialist bloc and the Soviet Union. It is a little difficult for begin to oppose a Turkish initiative which carries the weight of such relations. It is even more difficult than listening to some well-meaning Americans, because the United States is too far away from Israel, while Turkey is very close to it, and a nation of 45 million can no longer tolerate watching the impertinence of those who play with a keg of powder right under its nose.

CANADA

QUEBEC'S LEVESQUE MEETS WITH FRENCH PRESIDENT

PM271134 Paris LE MONDE in French 23 Jul 81 p 6

[Text] Ottawa--Mitterrand and Quebec Prime Minister Levesque had a 30-minute meeting at the French Embassy Tuesday, 21 July. Answering journalists' questions, Mitterrand said he did not wish to pay an official visit to Quebec and Ottawa in the wake of the summit because of the "many protocol difficulties which there would have been." "I would like to go to Quebec but I do not want to make a hurried visit," he stated. The president did not say much about the content of the meeting but he gave a few details on the policy he intends to pursue toward Quebec. Rejecting the negative double formula ("noninterference and nonindifference") used by his predecessor at the Elysee, Mitterrand said he prefers to talk of a "policy of friendship and fraternity with the people of Quebec" and of respect for Canada's sovereignty. Cooperation between the two French-speaking communities will be continued and "we will continue with renewed vigor," Mitterrand said, but he showed no enthusiasm for the creation of a "French-speaking commonwealth," proposed by Senghor and supported by Trudeau. Mitterand found the juxtaposition of these two terms awkward to say the least and said he thinks there are other ways of bringing together the French-speaking countries and that "any opportunity would be a good one." He recalled that there is already a cultural and technical cooperation agency in which Quebec participates and which should be "reactivated."

Leveque said that he felt a "warm continuity in French-Quebec relations" since the Socialist victory. After recalling that the Quebec delegation in Paris would be celebrating its 20th anniversary in October (an official visit by Levesque on that occasion has not been ruled out but nothing has been decided yet), he expressed the hope that relations with France will be "further strengthened."

UNITED KINGDOM

MISSILE DESTROYER RAMMED BY SOVIET CRUISER

PM271135 London THE DAILY TELEGRAPH in English 27 Jul 81 p 5

[Text] The 4,100-ton missile destroyer Glasgow has been rammed by the Russian missile cruiser Admiral Isakov, 7,600-tons, while shadowing Russian exercises in the Barents Sea north of Norway. The Glasgow suffered no casualties and only minor damage to her guard rails and upper deck fittings. It is thought damage to the Russian ship was also minimal.

A protest has been made to Moscow by the Foreign Office but a Ministry of Defence spokesman said he could not say what response had been received from the Russians. The Russian cruiser's intentions became clear when it was observed that men on her upper deck had been ordered below and doors and hatches were closed. She then struck the Glasgow a glancing blow, presumably attempting to dissuade her from continuing to watch the exercises, in an area which the Russians have come to regard as their private "lake" although it is in international waters. The Glasgow's surveillance of the exercises was partly in retaliation for many years of tailing of British and other NATO warships by the Russians but it also undoubtedly provided important intelligence material. The prime minister had to approve the Glasgow operating north-east of the Lofoten Islands. This is at least the second time the ship has operated in the Barents Sea as she was there watching Russian exercises last year. Numerous photographs were taken by the Glasgow's Lynx helicopter, particularly of the new Russian nuclear-powered battle cruiser Kirov, 25,000 tons. This is believed to be the first collision between British and Russian warships since 1970 when a Kotlin-class destroyer cut across the bows of the carrier Ark Royal when she was operating aircraft off Malta.

FBIS DAILY REPORT

Western Europe

Vol VII No 145 29 July 1981

CONTENTS

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Police Arrest Black Bloc Terrorists in Frankfurt J 1
DIE WELT: Antiterrorist Commands Set Up in East [27 Jul] J 1
Paper Criticizes Bundeswehr's Austerity Moves J 2
[FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE 28 Jul]
DIE WELT Discusses Plans for MIRV'ed Pershings [28 Jul] J 4
FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU Weighs U.S. Leadership Role [25 Jul] J 4
Paper Comments on Reagan Letter to Schmidt J 6
[SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG 25-26 Jul]

FRANCE

Cheysson Queried on Level of PLO Representation [LE MONDE 17 Jul] K 1
Mitterrand Comments on Nuclear Submarine Plan [LE MONDE 26-27 Jul] K 1
President Accepts Kreisky Invitation for Cancun [WIENER ZEITUNG 25 Jul] K 2
Leaders Meet With Singapore's Lee Kuan Yew K 2
LE MONDE on 'Incoherence' of U.S. Mideast Policy K 3

ITALY & THE VATICAN

Police Identify Red Brigades Commando Members L 1
PCI Aides Confer With French Left Officials [L'UNITA 23 Jul] L 1
Berlinguer Cables Congratulations to PZPR's Kania [L'UNITA 21 Jul] L 1
Berlinguer Discusses Women's Role, Poland [L'UNITA 20 Jul] L 2

SPAIN

Calvo Ortega Sees No 'Crisis' in Center Party [LA VANGUARDIA 12 Jul] N 1
Carrillo's Leadership Challenged at PCE Congress N 2
PCE Paper Analyzes Polish Party Leader Changes [MUNDO OBRERO 24-30 Jul] N 3

GREECE

PLO Disclaims Responsibility for Piraievs Attack S 1
Foreign Ministry Denies King's Invitation Protested [I KATHIMERINI 28 Jul] S 1
Rallis Leaves for Wedding S 1
Foreign Ministry Consults With French Delegation S 1
Rallis Receives Minister Delegate S 1
Chandernagor Visits Papandreou S 2
Part Four of PASOK Government Policy Declaration [TO VIMA 26 Jul] S 2

TURKEY

Government Rejects Request To Extradite 50 Iranians [INA] T 1
Court Arrests Both Captains of Colliding Vessels T 1
Prime Minister Speaks on Exports, Economic Measures T 1
Ulusu Attends Wedding T 2
Meets With Carrington T 2
National Salvation Party Leader Released From Jail T 2
ARAYIS Examines Parliament, Political Party Roles [25 Jul] T 3

OTHER COUNTRIES

NETHERLANDS

CDA Tells Van Agt To Reopen Talks on Coalition [DE VOLKSKRANT 23 Jul] Z 1
Fail To Reach Agreement [DE VOLKSKRANT 25 Jul] Z 1

PORTUGAL

Cape Verdian Prime Minister Departs Early for Moscow Z 1
Social Democrats Voice Solidarity to Balsemao Z 1
[DIARIO DE NOTICIAS 25 Jul]

POLICE ARREST BLACK BLOC TERRORISTS IN FRANKFURT

LD281720 Hamburg DPA in German 1451 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Frankfurt-Karlsruhe, 28 Jul (DPA)--In a swoop on the Black Bloc terrorist association in Frankfurt this morning, the Federal Prosecutor's Office arrested several members. The examining magistrate at the federal court issued arrest warrants for "six or seven" people, the authorities said this afternoon. According to the Federal Prosecutor's Office, the apartments of many suspects were searched on the strength of warrants issued by the judicial authorities. The office said there was no connection with the evacuation of federal post office premises in Frankfurt today when several people were detained and five of them handed over to the Federal Prosecutor's Office.

The aim of the Black Bloc, set up in May 1980, is said to support the terrorist organization the Red Army Group and action against "political and social conditions in the Federal Republic by acts of terror such as arson and bombings." According to the Federal Prosecutor's Office, members of the Black Bloc are strongly suspected of carrying out attacks on two U.S. Army helicopters in Buedingen on 2 January 1981, on the regional court building in Darmstadt on 6 April 1981 and on the Offenbach office of the Darmstadt prosecutor's department on 6 May 1981. During today's apartment search, instructions, materials and components for bombs, stolen air guns and air pistols, other stolen goods and documents on cases of arson and bombings were found.

This morning, Frankfurt police cleared federal post office property occupied by squatters. Five of the 47 squatters who were detained were handed over to the Federal Prosecutor's Office in Karlsruhe because they were on the wanted list. By court order, police using water cannons and an armored bulldozer cleared the administrative building of the former federal railway repair plant which had been occupied by squatters since 11 April. The Frankfurt postal authorities asked for the clearance in order to start work on a new telephone exchange.

DIE WELT: ANTITERRORIST COMMANDS SET UP IN EAST

DW280707 Bonn DIE WELT in German 27 Jul 81 p 7

[Werner Kahl article: "East's Fear of Terrorism"]

[Excerpts] At international meetings where the causes for and the warding off of terrorism are discussed, new faces have appeared the last few months. Among the newcomers are taciturn men who attract attention just because they only appear together.

The newcomers in the circle of Western antiterror experts are coming from East Berlin and Moscow. The Soviets and "GDR" Germans, who are identified as scientific collaborators, are looking for an exchange of information with Western counterintelligence professionals and for the know-how of "capitalist" technology.

At a nonpublic round of talks on terrorism in Geneva among experts from Europe and overseas, the security department of the East Berlin party leadership recently was sitting at the table in the guise of three observers. On behalf of the SED Central Committee, the comrades busily took note of every word. Their participation signals the fact that the terrorism germ furthered by communist intelligence services under various cloaks--alias liberation movements in the Third World--is starting to infect their own system.

With refined defensive methods, the communist security services are seeking to check the growing unrest which becomes manifest in ever more imaginative and more desparate attempted escapes from East bloc states. This, above all, includes aircraft hijackings. Only recently, Polish security authorities once again had to put up with reproaches from the Soviets in the Warsaw Pact's supreme command after a passenger plane of the state airline LOT for the fourth time was hijacked to the West and landed at the Tempelhof military airport in the American sector of Berlin.

When another hijacking attempt occurred in Poland, the Polish counterintelligence was better prepared. Early this year, the Polish mini "GSG 9" [German Federal Border Police Special Detachment 9], which had been set up in great hurry, stood its first test. During a stopover, security officials disguised as mechanics and service attendants overpowered four hijackers of a passenger plane on the Katowice-Warsaw route, which also was to be forced to change course for the Tempelhof airport in West Berlin.

Deterrent Effect Through Penalties

According to the pattern of the Bonn GSG 9 and the British SAS (Special Air Service), the communist security authorities now are organizing mobile operation commands with sophisticated technical equipment.

Though the widely fanned anarchist-terrorist scene is not yet threatening the Soviet-dominated sphere, plots committed by opponents of the regime lately have caused concern. The authorities fear that streamlets of resistance might rapidly form a stream.

This is why the Saxonia district court in Plauen recently sentenced two "GDR" citizens to 2 years and 1 year and 4 months, repectively, because of bomb threats. The West Berlin Information Office reports that the sentences apparently were supposed to have a deterrent effect. Police in the "GDR" recently have been confronted with repeated bomb threats. According to the sentence of the Plauen district court, the two convicts in anonymous phone calls to the people's police and to other institutions repeatedly threatened "acts of violence" to evoke "unrest and insecurity" and to impair the police's and fire department's readiness for action.

Bomb Constructors in the Cellar Workship

Meanwhile, the East Berlin regime proper is confronted with fighting terrorist activities, which are being kept secret from the public, so as not to encourage imitators. Some months ago, police discovered a small workshop for explosives in the cellar of a new apartment building in the Lichtenberg city district located close to the intelligence headquarters of the Ministry for State Security (MFS). This was reported by former prison inmates who were deported to the West. The bomb builders intended to blow up with self-made explosives the Jannowitz bridge in the eastern part of the city over which railroad traffic runs in an East-West direction.

Western security authorities are of the view that official disclaimers cannot alter the fact that a bomb was discovered on the compound of the headquarters of "GDR" Defense Minister Army Gen Heinz Hoffman. Statements conveyed to Western news agencies that this was a "nonsensical" rumor were not carried by the SED central organ NEUES DEUTSCHLAND.

PAPER CRITICIZES BUNDESWEHR'S AUSTERITY MOVES

DW281021 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER ALLGEMEINE in German 28 Jul 81 p 1

[Adelbert Weinstein editorial: "Armed Forces in Financial Crisis"]

[Text] The Bundeswehr is just a quarter of a century old, yet its structures have grown rigid. The military apparatus is guided by a bureaucracy which leaves an individual little leeway for initiative.

A prominent victim of this system is the defense minister. The man in charge of the Tornado project did not have a chance to inform the political leadership in due time about the financial disaster which was taking shape. The table of organization at Hardthoehe made it too difficult for the expert to report directly to the responsible minister. The Waterloo that Apel suffered was inflicted on him by his own apparatus.

Roughly 3,000 civilians and soldiers are working directly under the minister. His ministry is made up of 371 departments. The executive alone consists of 30 departments. They failed to create a leadership instrument but instead set up a "top heavy" administration. The latter produced tensions which are the result of conflicting trends of will. Thus, while the eight departments of the planning staff are supposed to do "planning work," they are considered a "counterforce" to the planning groups of the inspectors. One of the three state secretaries is definitely superfluous. The growth in power on the part of these "princes" is in proportion to the loss of influence by the inspector general.

But the military departments are inflated as well. How should the 3 and a 1/2 dozen departments of the leadership staff of the armed forces be coordinated? Besides, a great deal is tangled up by party interests and hopes for promotion. Plans for changes have been kept in drawers for years. But the proposals of former inspectors general Zimmermann and De Maiziere, who allowed an effective restructuring, have been forgotten.

This ministry must be reformed from top to bottom. No strategy can be handled with an apparatus which suffocates individual suggestion--the elixir of the art of leadership--and which has become a confusing carousel of functions. This is shown particularly by the result of the secluded conference which was characterized by the Tornado panic. The austerity pencil was applied without any regard to strategic requirements and the operational mission of the Bundeswehr was not kept in mind above everything else. All that mattered to the political top was to correct the red figures, with the result that fiscal rather than strategic thinking prevailed. This then cut out the organizations of a leadership system by which the utilization of the available weapons systems could have been increased 60 percent. This example applies to many others.

In his austerity program, the defense minister dared to go as far as paralyzing the armored, mechanized and airborne components, without the "apparatus" stopping him. Nobody seriously questioned whether the mammoth ministry should be thoroughly examined as well. Nobody asked whether the Bundeswehr academies are really necessary. Millions are spent there to create a type of officer whose availability for use in the rank and file is subject to justified doubt. In addition, why hasn't the disproportion of one civilian for every two soldiers been eliminated? The Bundeswehr has 180,000 civilian employees compared with a personnel strength of 495,000 soldiers. The Bundeswehr administrative office as the supreme authority has six defense area administrations which cooperate with six defense area commands. Granted, modern armies cannot do without large-scale administrative organizations. There are 2 million military and civilian items that need to be distributed and a skilled personnel of every branch must relieve the forces. But in the case of the Bundeswehr, thr troop and garrison administrations, the military recruiting headquarters and the defense areas are highly inflated. Operations units also are overstaffed. A corps staff has so much excess personnel that it is impossible to carry out any "relocation" move with it. The savings should be done here and not with funds whose lack would jeopardize the combat readiness of the Bundeswehr.

But even the most radical incision in the present structures would not solve the financial dilemma of the armed forces. All parties involved must change their line of thinking. What matters is to organize the troops with less expenditure. As long as the money kept coming in abundantly, there was little cause to object to the technical high-efficiency army. Surely, the Bundeswehr must also be measured by the standards of quality of its U.S. ally. It must put up something equivalent to the power of the heavily armored Red Army. Such yardsticks are always valid. What is referred to as "arms mixture," however, must be newly defined. It is necessary to add the strength of infantry to the strength of armor. The soldier can substitute for weapons systems and missiles can take the place of ships and airplanes.

But in no case must the Bundeswehr be turned into a "cadre" army for the sake of austerity. Nor must the inventors of the strategic heterodoxy of area defense prevail. (What they propose is filling up the depth of the Federal Republic with lightly armed troop units.) Forward defense must remain the motto of the Bundeswehr. Meanwhile, the computer-controlled, electronic and excessively technicalized army--whose future had already begun--is past history because there is no way of paying for it.

DIE WELT DISCUSSES PLANS FOR MIRV'ED PERSHINGS

DW281345 Bonn DIE WELT in German 28 Jul 81 p 2

[Commentary by correspondent Cay Graf Brockdorff: "Three Warheads and One Answer"]

[Text] Moscow is arming at a speed which leaves insiders in the West breathless. At intervals of 5 weeks, a new Soviet submarine is launched. Every 5th day, Moscow sets up another SS-20 missile as though it were important to bomb the world to oblivion before New Year's Eve. At the moment, 250 SS-20 launching pads are under construction or completed. Horst Ehmke returns from Washington with the finding that the Soviet Union in all probability will deploy far more medium-range missiles than has so far been assumed.

And yet, it cannot be ruled out that the news on the option of MIRVing some or all of the 108 Pershing II missiles of the counterarmament program will again send the militant "friends of peace" out into the streets. Some of them know what they are doing. The majority follow because they do not realize that atomic weapons serve the purpose of preventing the firing of infantry guns.

The option of MIRVing the Pershing missiles is reassuring. NATO has committed itself to introduce 572 new systems, but this has happened at a time when such speed in Soviet arming still was considered impossible. With the--still theoretical--possibility of increasing the number of warheads but not that of the systems, new negotiating assets and a strategic option accrue to the alliance: One can counter the boundless Soviet arms this way without having to deploy additional missiles.

Thereby, one simply follows suit--the Soviet action. The Soviets, after all, not only were the first to introduce these far-reaching medium-range systems but they also MIRV'ed these systems. Unfortunately, the Western "friends of peace" did not protest effectively in time, so that NATO now must think up a technical response.

FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU WEIGHS U.S. LEADERSHIP ROLE

DW271505 Frankfurt FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU in German 25 Jul 81 p 3

[Horst Schreitter-Schwarzenfeld dispatch: "Leadership--in Which Direction?"]

[Text] Washington--The United States isn't doing much; the United States no longer offers any leadership. This complaint was heard in Europe over the past several years.

Its foreign policy is confused; the President is following a zigzag course. And inside and outside the United States, the impression of weakness spread--justly or unjustly--an impression which Jimmy Carter was never able to shed.

Now everything is different. It does exist again, this painfully missed U.S. leadership role, or at least a claim to it. It was with this claim that Ronald Reagan and his political friends came into power, promising to halt the trend of deterioration, be it the alleged deterioration of military strength, that of the dollar or that of the U.S. world prestige. They simply promised to make America "great again." And they are in the process of converting this promise into policy.

Washington is displaying self-confidence again and it is showing ambition to be "number one." It wants to be the first to cross the finish line; victory is permissible again. The very "arrogance of power" with which Jimmy Carter took critical issue has ceased to be a bad word. What, they wonder, is so bad about using power if it benefits America? Doesn't it, by the same token, benefit the world? It isn't just the Russians, the "enemy," who have found out about Washington's new determination. The Ottawa summit showed that the United States will not be "pushed around" anymore, even by its friends.

The Reagan government did not yield one inch from its widely criticized high interest policy and even presented new demands to the Europeans, following the motto that offense is the best defense. What is involved is trade with the East in general; but in particular, it involved the natural gas pipeline deal between the Federal Republic and the Soviet Union. Generally speaking, the following became clear after just a few months of Ronald Reagan: Readiness to yield to German or other West European desires is minimal in Washington. Bonn had to learn this not only in regard to interest rate plicy but also in connection with its timid attempts to accelerate a bit the opening of the missile negotiations with the Soviet Union. Reagan smiles--and remains adamant--and the Germans submit to their fate with the sigh: "There is no hope anyway."

At the beginning of the summit meeting, Reagan reportedly stated that he intends to handle everything in all fields differently than did his predecessor. Naturally, such intentions throw insecurity into the operation of the world. Schmidt, obviously in defense of Reagan's announcement, used the term "convoy" with which the Western alliance must be compared. What is the destination of the convoy now that the captain has been changed again as a result of the U.S. elections?

It is impossible to answer this question. What alone is clearly discernible is the goal applicable to Reagan's America. It is: restoration of the former world position. Since the Soviet Union is the only power which could contest the "number one" role of the United States, the thrust of the entire foreign policy is aimed against Moscow. The United States will defend the Persian Gulf because it fears conquest of the oilwells by the Soviet Union. The United States will support any regime in Latin America and elsewhere in the Third World if and when it offers even a slight guarantee against communist seizure of power and, thus, against a foothold by Cuba and the Soviet Union. The United States will conclude an arms control agreement with the Soviet Union only if that agreement will not impose any unjustifiable restrictions on the efforts toward the modernization of U.S. nuclear weapons.

Is this the "strong hand of Washington" which the Western alliance believed to have been missing for years? Is this the "leadership" for which they called? Are the interests of the United States as a world power not different from those of the European states? What, for instance, is America's interest in the maintenance of the visitor traffic between the Federal Republic and the GDR?

In principle, there is no objection to the U.S. leading role in the Western alliance--especially since the absence of this role has always been lamented. Yet, the time is drawing nearer when "leadership" will have to be redefined. A U.S. Government tackling things entirely in its own national interest, with self-awareness and aggressive confidence, veritably demands a counterpart in Europe. Otherwise, we will some day be led to where we do not want to go.

PAPER COMMENTS ON REAGAN LETTER TO SCHMIDT

DW271553 Munich SUEDDEUTSCHE ZEITUNG in German 25-26 Jul 81 p 4

[Commentary signed Mes: "Reagan Pledges His Word"]

[Text] Ronald Reagan did not write his latest letter to Federal Chancellor Schmidt for him to read it and then just put it away in a drawer. As to the American agreement regarding negotiations with the Soviets, there was no need to make Schmidt believe in this; he and Foreign Minister Genscher have been convinced of this for a long time. Within the SPD, however, growing doubts about U.S. intentions could be perceived and it was the intention of the written message from Washington to counteract this mood. Small wonder that the chancellor decided not to conceal the message from the public.

In the months to come, Helmut Schmidt will be able to make the most of this opportunity. The suspicion that the Americans might possibly take pleasure in getting the German federal chancellor into increasing domestic trouble through delaying tactics can be removed. Schmidt linked his political fate with the implementation of the section on negotiation in NATO's dual decision and now Reagan has pledged his word. This creates additional clarity between the governments and also contributes to removing public distrust which had threatened to assume characteristics of anti-Americanism.

However, as far as the subject at hand is concerned, not all potential for conflict between Washington and Bonn has been removed. Only the course of the negotiations on European medium-range weapons will show whether there is a common denominator in German and American interests: After everything that has been publically stated so far, it may be assumed that Washington in no way considers as an ideal goal a negotiation result which might allow a renunciation of Western counterarmament. The fact that the key to this is above all in Moscow's hands renders Bonn's position even more difficult.

CHEYSSON QUERIED ON LEVEL OF PLO REPRESENTATION

PM281008 Paris LE MONDE in French 17 Jul 81 p 3

[Text] In the National Assembly on 15 July, Gantier (UDF deputy for Paris) asked whether the recent visit to Paris by PLO Executive Committee member Qaddumi was made in reply to "an official invitation" and whether the level of the Palestinian Organization's representation in Paris is "to be raised" and expressed concern at the plan to transfer its office to a location "50 meters from the state primary school in Rue des Belles-Feuilles."

Saying that Qaddumi had not made an "official visit," Cheysson replied: "I met with him, as my predecessors had done, because we want to maintain contacts with an organization which has been recognized by France for years. It is representative but it has not been recognized, nor will we recognize it, as the sole representative of the Palestinian people who have not had the opportunity to choose it as such. On 31 October 1975, the French Government announced its decision to allow the opening of a "PLO information and liaison office" which does not have diplomatic status and enjoys no privileges.

"Since a PLO representative was murdered in August 1978, that office has been given special protection. It has decided to move from the Arab League headquarters in Rue Merimee (16th arrondissement) and it is entitled to do so; it has signed a private lease.... We are anxious to protect its leader.... That protection also will cover his neighbors, including the school. He comes under private law and can reside where he wants. We cannot prevent him from doing that."

MITTERRAND COMMENTS ON NUCLEAR SUBMARINE PLAN

PM281214 Paris LE MONDE in French 26-27 Jul 81 p 6

[Jean-Yves Lhoumeau report]

[Excerpts] The president visited the strategic ocean force's operational base at Ile Longue on the Crozon Peninsula near Brest on 24 July.

Questioned on the possible decision to construct a seventh missile-launching nuclear submarine, Mitterrand said: "This decision has already been made in my mind." The head of state said he considers it "reasonable" to think that this vessel could be operational 5 years after the L'Inflexible, the sixth nuclear submarine, in other words, in 1990. "The decision," he stressed, "cannot be delayed too long."

"This will enable three submarines to be constantly at sea and to be capable of acting if necessary. That probably represents an adequate capability for France at present. This is particularly true since we are also gaining in range, accuracy and communications.... I cannot give all the details but, for the time being, I think that that will be adequate."

The seventh missile-launching nuclear submarine will "necessarily be different" from the previous ones, he said, "since technology has changed in the space of a few years. But it mustn't change too much. It is better to follow the technological course already begun. Otherwise, it would be necessary to change things so radically that it would be beyond our means to do so and, on the military plane, might prove imprudent."

The "essential point," the head of state added, "is always to remain above the deterrence threshold.... The essential thing is that any potential adversary should be sure of being in a difficult situation if he should ever launch an aggression or an attack or take the initiative in an offensive."

Mitterrand then watched Le Terrible get underway as it prepared to leave Brest for a 2-month mission at sea.

PRESIDENT ACCEPTS KREISKY INVITATION FOR CANCUN

AU271130 Vienna WIENER ZEITUNG in German 25 Jul 81 p 2

[Text] French President Francois Mitterrand has sent to Chancellor Kreisky the following letter: I gladly accept your honorable invitation and will personally participate in the international meeting of state and government chiefs in Cancun, Mexico, on 22 and 23 October 1981. I am firmly convinced that the problems of cooperation and development should be given priority treatment at the highest political level. France also will participate in the preparatory conference of ministers, which will be held early in August in Cancun.

LEADERS MEET WITH SINGAPORE'S LEE KUAN YEW

NC281648 Paris AFP in English 1600 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] Paris, 28 Jul (AFP)--France has not yet indicated whether it will sit on the consultative committee on Cambodia established earlier this month, Singapore Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew said today after meeting here with French leaders.

But France and Singapore will soon sign a financial, cultural and technical agreement. The announcement came after a meeting between French Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy and Mr Lee Kuan Yew.

Mr Lee Kuan Yew "stressed the profound satisfaction felt by Third World countries" over the election of French President Francois Mitterrand, a communique said. The Singapore leader expects a "determining role" from France "in the pursuit of the North-South dialogue," it added.

He later told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE that France should play a larger role in a settlement of the Cambodian affair, stressing an invitation by Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) members to Paris to sit on the consultative committee created by the international conference on Cambodia held in New York 13-17 July. Singapore and other ASEAN members have called for a withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia.

Mr Lee Kuan Yew also met with French Foreign Minister Claude Cheysson.

Mr Lee Kuan Yew is to leave Paris this evening for London to attend the wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana. There he will meet with French President Francois Mitterrand, who will be in London for the wedding as well.

The meetings today with Mr Cheysson and Mr Mauroy each lasted one hour.

Trade between France and Singapore tripled during the last five years. France had a surplus last year, but its deficits were common during the late 1970's. France imports electronic equipment and textiles from Singapore, and exports electrical equipment, cognac and luxury goods.

The talks today with Mr Cheysson covered opportunities offered by the North-South dialogue, Mr Lee Kuan Yew said.

Some observers here said that the ASEAN countries currently are divided into a camp resolutely anti-Soviet and favoring dialogue with China (Thailand and Singapore) and a camp equally opposed to Beijing and Moscow (Malaysia, Indonesia and the Philippines). But Mr Lee Kuan Yew said that these differences are just small details that in no way harm ASEAN's unity.

LE MONDE ON 'INCOHERENCE' OF U.S. MIDEAST POLICY

PM280656 Paris LE MONDE in French 26-27 Jul 81 p 1

[Editorial: "Dangerous Uncertainties"]

[Text] The full details of the cease-fire which came into force on the Israeli-Lebanese border on 24 July are not yet known. One thing is certain: It was only under great pressure that Begin's government finally abandoned--temporarily, of course--its plan to destroy the Palestinian Fedayeens' operational capabilities.

The pressures exerted by the U.S. Government--and by a section of the Jewish community in the United States--were probably the determining factor rather than world opinion moved by the massacre of civilians, especially in Beirut. However, even this pressure is just the tip of the iceberg--the decision to suspend delivery of fighter-bombers to Israel--but the possibility that Washington sent Jerusalem an "ultimatum" has not been ruled out.

Some Israeli leaders, clearly embarrassed, are portraying the cease-fire as a "success." Rightly or wrongly, they maintain that a "secret" clause in the agreement forbids the Palestinians to strengthen their positions in southern Lebanon and that, should that clause be violated, the Jewish state would resume its freedom of action.

Nonetheless, the Palestinian network on the Israeli borders remains virtually intact. Even more important is the fact that, despite all the verbal precautions taken by Begin and Habib, the agreement constitutes "de facto" recognition of the PLO. Indeed, it was necessary to negotiate with the Fedayeen "organization" and clearly to offer it adequate guarantees to obtain its agreement on ending the fighting.

Nonetheless, the Israelis are not resigned to taking an additional step--decisive in this case--toward a political solution. They repeat that they will never negotiate with the PLO. In fact, all the statements made after the cease-fire came into force indicate that they are awaiting an opportunity to justify resuming hostilities against the Palestinians.

The support of the latter for the cease-fire is no less superficial. Indeed, they cannot abandon all military activity indefinitely without denying their raison d'etre and without losing all possibility of being included in a peace process. Even if the PLO wants a temporary disengagement, various uncontrollable Fedayeen organizations will make sure the fire is relit.

The United States could have encouraged a negotiated peace had it really wished to do so. Experience has shown that it had the means of moderating its allies' demands or passions when it felt its interests were really threatened. The 24 July agreement bears witness to that. The U.S. administration is, in fact, torn by conflicting forces. It fears that the extension of the Israeli-Arab conflict might alienate conservative Arab states, especially Saudi Arabia. But it opposes recognition of the PLO for fear that it might bring the Soviet Union back onto the Near East stage.

In the final analysis, the incoherence of U.S. policy is doing as much as the Israeli intransigence to maintain dangerous uncertainties in the region.

POLICE IDENTIFY RED BRIGADES COMMANDO MEMBERS

AU281600 Rome ANSA in English 1545 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] Rome, 28 Jul (ANSA)--Naples investigators have identified the members of the Red Brigades commando which on April 27 kidnapped Campania Regional Councillor Ciro Cirillo, killed two of his bodyguards and injured another.

Investigating magistrates have issued 57 arrest warrants on charges of participation in an armed gang. Sixteen of the warrants were issued against members of the commando and they include some of the best known members of the Red Brigades wanted by police--criminologist Giovanni Senzani, believed to be one of the masterminds of the group, Antonio Savasta, Emilia Libera, Marina Petrella, and Pietro Vanzi.

Of the fifty-seven wanted, 21 are already under arrest.

Cirillo was released on July 24 after 87 days in captivity, the longest kidnapping in Italian terrorist history.

PCI AIDES CONFER WITH FRENCH LEFT OFFICIALS

PM270959 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 23 Jul 81 p 1

[Text] Paris--A PCI delegation composed of Secretariat member Comrade Gerardo Chiaromonte, Central Committee members Comrades Romano Ledda and Eugenio Peggio and deputy to the European Parliament Comrade Carla Barbarella visited Paris 19-22 July for contacts with the French leftwing forces. An exchange of opinions was held on the new political situation, with special reference to economic and social issues.

The delegation met with Maxime Gremetz, PCF Secretariat member and foreign relations chief; Philippe Herzog, PCF Politburo member and economic section chief; Jean Poperen, Jean Pronteau and Didier Mochtane, PS secretaries; and delegations of the two trade union confederations; the CFDT, headed by Secretariat member Albert Mercier, and the CGT headed by Secretary Henri Krasucki.

The communist delegation was received by Minister of State for Planning Michel Rocard (Socialist), Transport Minister Charles Fiterman (Communist), Agriculture Minister Edith Cresson, and Claude Esthier, deputy chairman of the National Assembly's Foreign Affairs Committee.

BERLINGUER CABLES CONGRATULATIONS TO PZPR'S KANIA

PM270701 Rome L'UNITA in Italian 21 Jul 81 p 1

[Report on PCI Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer congratulations telegram to Polish United Workers Party (PZPR) First Secretary Stanislaw Kania]

[Text] Comrade Enrico Berlinguer has sent the following congratulations telegram to Comrade Stanislaw Kania:

Please accept the heartfelt congratulations of the PCI and myself personally for your election as PZPR first secretary. I wish you success in your very responsible tasks. We hope that your people and your party will positively surmount the present difficult phase, consolidating the socialist renewal process within a framework of European and world detente and peace.

BERLINGUER DISCUSSES WOMEN'S ROLE, POLAND

PM270702 Milan L'UNITA in Italian 20 Jul 81 pp 1, 5

[Georgio Frasca Polara report on PCI, Secretary General Enrico Berlinguer's 19 July speech in Venice: "Women a Decisive 'Young Force' for Progress and Moral Reform'"]

[Excerpts] Venice--Yesterday evening, Enrico Berlinguer closed the national women's festival, drawing the attention of the party and of all the political forces to the pressing need to resume the political initiative with respect to the major social and civil issues that led to the holding of and the victory in the 17 May referendum against repealing the abortion law. The PCI secretary general emphasized the great innovative element introduced into political life, economic approaches and ideological and cultural attitudes both by matters regarding women's emancipation and liberation and by the necessary action to understand and satisfy the human and social needs expressed by the women's masses. Having recalled the specific achievements in this direction attained by leftwing administrations, Berlinguer discussed the connections linking the aspirations of the women's masses, the morality issue and the democratic alternative.

The existing achievements of the leftwing administrations and the pointers deriving from them demonstrate that the Italian communists do not restrict themselves to talking about a distant future socialism whose characteristics still remain entirely to be defined; but that they are beginning to identify--through the specific experiences (though still incomplete) of the institutions and the masses--elements in a form of socialism that has the following three characteristics; it advances within democracy and must be based on democracy; it adopts a new approach ot the problems of economic life in an era of major and rapid scientific and technological innovations; it sets in motion a process of change in the quality of life, establishing new hierarchies and priorities in the assets and values to be asserted, attained and guaranteed.

All this constitutes an innovative effort by the PCI, which is distinctive within the context of the varied forces of the parties that invoke socialism and communism. Taking advantage of the positive and negative experiences accumulated historically by the socialist countries and the entire European and world workers movement, the Italian Communists, the party secretary said, are seeking to really surmount the limitations and inadequacies (and not to repeat theoretical and practical errors) that have hitherto led to outright constrictions in the worldwide development and expansion of the cause of socialism, i.e.; on the one hand, in many countries where a form of socialism has already been realized, the distortions of power constituted by the restriction of a full democratic life; and, on the other, in several capitalist countries, the constiction constituted by the inability of social democratic-type experiences to transcend capitalist structures and logic.

But in both these different situations, quests and attempts are taking shape, in a direction motivated by the attainment of the objectives which we consider a solution, to surmount both the shortcomings of social democracy and the shortcomings of the countries where socialism has already been realized. Indeed, in the major European socialist and social democratic parties a vigorous debate is in progress precisely on how to emerge from capitalist forms so as to guarantee forms which will achieve a real change in the quality of life; and it is no coincidence that women and young people are often among the most vigorous forces stimulating research in this direction. In the Eastern bloc countries there is the instance of Poland--a country where, amid the turmoil and difficulties of a crisis that began a year ago following an initiative that came directly from the working class, new forms of democratic life are being found and tested in society, the state and now even the party.

CALVO ORTEGA SEES NO 'CRISIS' IN CENTER PARTY

PM280658 Barcelona LA VANGUARDIA in Spanish 12 Jul 81 p 11

[Mary Merida interview with Union of the Democratic Center Secretary General Rafael Calvo Ortega: "I Cannot See UCD Crisis Anywhere"]

[Text] It was being rumored that about now former Prime Minister Suarez would define his stance in the UCD and what his policy for the future will be. At least that is what would please those who support him unconditionally inside and outside the party and would like to secure the votes of the "apparatus," depriving Martin Villa of that opportunity, who is not ruled out as being charged with bringing together and uniting the group again. The fact is that the UCD is still experiencing--apparently uninterruptedly--severe internal tension, and its crisis has not yet begun to be resolved.

Even the continuation of its current chairman, Rodriguez Zahagun, is being questioned, and the possibility of Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo also taking over the chairmanship of the ruling party is being emphasized. However, these solutions and measures are rejected by a considerable section of the UCD, which believes that this would be tantamount to denying the authority of the Palma de Mallorca congress.

The ruling party's local conferences, which will elect the delegates who in turn will appoint at the provincial congerences the political councils and executive committees which will be entrusted with drawing up the lists for the next general election, are continuing. This renewal of cadres is once more giving rise to the personal battles and struggles of all the party's currents and sectors to predominate, and of course this is weakening it further as a political group. The apparatus appears to be winning the posts, and party Secretary General Rafael Calvo Ortega commented on this fact in this way: "We have not concerned ourselves about winning anything, but there has been a massive participation which has mobilized many members, and we are very satisfied with this degree of participation. Moreover, all electoral processes have an obvious competitiveness, but that is the very essence of democracy."

With respect to the persistent talk about the UCD's crisis and possible collapse, he said: "There has been talk about the UCD's crisis since 1977, and we are in the second half of 1981. It would be absurd to say that we have no problems, because there is no political will to resolve them. This very massive holding of local conferences demonstrates the party's vitality. And the fact that there are two or three lists at these conferences, contrary to what people may believe, is positive and this electoral struggle is good not only for the party but also for the country as a whole."

[Question] Is it true that, as matters stand, Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo could decide to hold the UCD chairmanship as well?

[Answer] I only know the rumor, and this rumormongering has generally never been borne out by reality. I sincerely believe that these are unfounded rumors. In all the statements he has made, Prime Minister Calvo-Sotelo has always come out in defense of the party.

[Question] However, you will not be unaware that moves are being attempted to change the party leadership by sectors which disagree with the current team?

[Answer] The UCD is an organization with rules and a code by which it is governed. Its leadership bodies are not changed every day, and what a party congress approves can be canceled only by another congress. So I believe that what is happening is that the media are exaggerating the UCD's problems. Look, we are immersed now, as I was telling you earlier, in a very important electoral process, considerable participation in which demonstrates the party's intense vitality, and, moreover, our principal activity is centered on the implementation of our program in its various aspects of the family, small enterprices, emigration, the economy and culture.

[Question] But the rumor of tension and internal crisis does not stem solely from this electoral process.

[Answer] So where are the symptoms of a crisis? Because I cannot see the crisis which is being talked about anywhere. We do not wish to stifle disagreements, and it is possible that in giving them free rein this is being interpreted as a crisis; but the fact is that there is none.

[Question] To what extent could what happened at the congress with the divorce law, for instance, affect the UCD?

[Answer] A session cannot be judged by what happened with the divorce law. We were already expecting that this law would create those problems, because there are different and very conflicting opinions and different stances and problems of conscience concerning it. But as I said earlier, the political parties are organized with a constant tension, and, for whatever reasons, we have still not become accustomed in this country to knowing what a real political party is. What is happening in the UCD happens every day in all the parties of all the democracies in the world. It puzzles me that people should believe that a party must be calm for there to be no internal crisis in it.

[Question] Do you still believe that it is better to continue with a one-party cabinet and governing alone? Does not the situation prove to you that it would perhaps be advisable to broaden that base by allying yourselves with other political forces, whether rightwing or leftwing?

[Answer] We made a statement at the proper time in which we reaffirmed our stance as a center party, and it is that idea and that stance which we continue to maintain. I personally believe that this government is tackling the problems confronting the country with obvious effectiveness and realistically, and a coalition either with the right or with the left would give us no more strength, because we believe that the center option is the important and valid option now and in the future.

CARRILLO'S LEADERSHIP CHALLENGED AT PCE CONGRESS

LD282140 Madrid in Spanish to Europe 1730 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] The 10th congress of the PCE today began with a strong internal response to the leadership headed by the secretary general, Santiago Carrillo. For the first time at a PCE congress there are four organized tendencies; from left to right they are the "Afghans," the out-and-out defenders of the policy of the Soviet Union; the Leninists, who uphold the thesis of the dictatorship of the proletariat; the Eurocommunists, the group that supports and is supported by Carrillo; and the so-called "renewalist" Eurocommunists, who support the idea of changing the party leadership.

None of the dissident groups is formally proposing the replacement of Carrillo, but they do want the formal approval of currents of opinion or organized tendencies within the PCE. In his opening speech to the congress, the secretary general expressed his total opposition to the formation of groups within the party. The congress has thus become a direct confrontation between supporters of the official line and dissidents to their left and right.

For Carrillo in particular, the PCE could overcome its internal quarrels if it purges itself of factions--and this purge could include expulsions. This is precisely one of the congress's biggest unknown quantities--whether it will be able to maintain a unitarian leadership and whether, at the same time, this will mean a series of expulsions or resignations from the PCE. The tough tone employed by Carrillo to confront the dissident groups did, however, become one of moderation when he spoke of communist policy past, present and future.

On international policy, and together with a call for cooperation from the European left, Carrillo stressed above all his opposition to Spain's membership in NATO and the military policy of blocs. In his analysis of the Spanish transition, he underlined the conquests made by democratic reform. The fundamental conquest emphasized by Carrillo was, of course, the constitution--a constitution which, in his words, allows an important increase in freedoms for all citizens and even permits a leftwing policy or government in this country. And, of course, he insisted on his offer of a government of national consensus because, and here we quote him, it tends to achieve areas of power for the working class, reduces the hegemony of the oligarchy, and ensures a more progressive orientation on the part of the government.

Other positive aspects of the transition were the Moncloa pacts, which in his words were not fulfilled by the government, and the leftwing pact in the town councils. With regard to recent months, and in spite of stressing the drift to the right in the policies of Calvo-Sotelo, Carrillo, in his moderate tone, also set out positive aspects of recent policies:

[Begin Carrillo recording] The divorce law, (?with which we are) becoming bogged down, has been passed; the suspected perpetrators are being prosecuted; the communist parliamentary proposal for the legal defense of those arrested has been taken into consideration; a brigade was formed to pursue rightwing terrorists. It is also true that the left, including the PCE, has moderated its opposition to the government and has given its cooperation in several cases. The recovery of the authority of civil power and the need to forestall the (?so-called attempts) at public demoralization required this. [end recording]

On the internal organization of the party, Carrillo proposed an important reduction in the members of the Central Committee the internal establishment of safeguards against conflicts of interests by party leaders and greater coordination between the territorial organizations and the national organization.

It has to be stressed again that the basic dispute at the congress is centered on the legalization of internal currents, and the first test of this today meant a defeat for the present leadership. After a very tight vote, any group that wins 25 percent of the votes will be able to defend its positions before the plenum. If this majority is maintained in the later votes on the statutes, the PCE will cease to be a unitarian party. This could even mean Carrillo's resignation after 20 years as secretary general although this is not very likely.

PCE PAPER ANALYZES POLISH PARTY LEADER CHANGES

PM271520 Madrid MUNDOOBRERO in Spanish 24-30 Jul 81 p 18

[Pedro Olmedilla commentary: "Democratization Within Socialism"]

[Text] The election of the new [Polish party] Central Committee has been described by some people as a "surprise." It took place on 17 July. Only 18 members of the Polish communists' former leading body were reelected, and only 4 of the 11 Politburo members (the present prime minister, General Jaruzelski, Kania, Barcikowski and Olzowski).

Surprising? Not very. It was not even unexpected, since the previous leadership had split into radically opposed groups on the question of what stances to adopt with respect to the profound political and social crisis affecting the country, and a large proportion of Central Committee and Executive Committee members were directly implicated in past responsibilities and were the subject of fierce criticism not only from the public, the trade union organizations and workers assemblies, but also from the United Workers Party.

The so-called conservatives or hardliners were eliminated from the Central Committee, receiving votes as low as those of some liberals. However, Olzowski (a conservative who apparently changed in time) and Rakowski, whose congress speech was one of the most applauded, were elected to the Central Committee. The latter, however, is not among those elected to the Politburo.

Let us emphasize Kania's victory. Hitherto the first secretary has managed to maneuver skillfully and successfully since he replaced Gierek as party leader. Described by some as "a typical product of the party bureaucracy," without mentioning any facts other than those concerning his party career and the fact that he was in charge of the state security services, Kania managed to tackle the crisis that flared up in the Baltic shipyards by means of negotiation. As he did later, he imposed negotiation with Solidarity's new leadership structures and with the hierarchies of the church--a strong national political party in Poland. Moreover, Kania is surmounting the difficult external crisis due to the opposition, reservations and suspicions with which Poland's process of change is being watched by Moscow.

Some observers have noted that whereas Brezhnev's previous messages to Kania began with a "dear comrade," the greetings message on his election replaces the "dear" with a more diplomatic "esteemed." These may or may not be intricacies perceptible only to "experts." The specific fact is that Kania has clearly and steadfastly supported the rectification and punishment of past errors. And the PZPR has supported him. Kania has supported the new course in the PZPR's policy. And he has defined his function as that of "organizer of the Central Committee's collective wisdom." These important words are strengthened by Kania's opinion that he is not sure whether the party needs leaders, implying providential leaders--because the Polish party, state and people have recently felt acutely the need for representative leaders.

Other observers regard the new PZPR leadership as the result of a balance of forces. They cite the election to the Central Committee and Politburo of Albin Siwak, foreman in a construction concern, an intense and uncompromising speaker and adversary of the liberal Rakowski in the congress debates. Nevertheless, this trade unionist from the setup which has entirely ceased to represent the workers, is fairly isolated in the new leadership. Other new members of the leadership include other trade unionists, members of the PZPR and Solidarity, such as Sofia Grzyb, foreman in a Radom footwear factory, born in 1928, a communist since 1949 and a member of the previous Central Committee.

The leadership elected by the congress should be regarded not so much as a "balance of forces" team but as representing, in its large majority, a positive and open response to the requirements of democratization within socialism and the need for the PZPR to resume contacts with the real situation in Poland, not to yield to destruction of the socialist foundations, to reactionary conspiracies or to the nihilism of desperation, or to outside pressures.

PLO DISCLAIMS RESPONSIBILITY FOR PIRAIEVS ATTACK

NC281850 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] In a statement it issued today, the PLO Liaison and Information Bureau in Athens said that the organization had nothing to do with the dramatic events of 22 July 1981 in Piraievs. The statement stressed: We assure that the steady and unchanged policy of our organization is the confrontation of the Zionists only in our territories occupied by Israel. We condemn all actions that endanger the lives of innocent people, and we are certain that the Greek-Palestinian friendship will remain unchanged and will develop steadily. Once again, we stress that we express our gratitude to the friendly Greek people, who support the just struggle of the Palestinian people in achieving their legal national rights.

FOREIGN MINISTRY DENIES KING'S INVITATION PROTESTED

NC281722 Athens I KATHIMERINI in Greek 28 Jul 81 pp 1, 2

[Excerpt] Reliable government sources stressed yesterday that there was no misunderstanding between the Greek and British Governments because of the invitation to former King Constantine to attend the royal wedding.

Answering a question on a press report yesterday (in ELEVTHEROTIPIA) that a problem has been created by the invitation to Constantine, the same sources stressed that: Once it was clarified that the former king had been invited and will attend as a relative of the British royal family, the government was not disturbed nor will it interfere in matters of protocol at Buckingham Palace.

With regard to the same issue and because of the same press report, the Foreign Ministry has given the assurance that the Greek Embassy in London made no demarche to the British Government. It has been clarified that, 15 days ago, Greek Ambassador in London Mr Lagakos merely asked the Foriegn Office to be informed if Constantine was invited to the wedding and in what capacity.

The answer was that he had been invited as a close relative of the British royal family and with the title, in accordance with Buckingham Palace protocol, "King Constantine," which is used for former kings, and not as "The King Constantine," which is used for kings who are exercising their duties.

Therefore, the Foreign Ministry has stressed, the relevant press report is inaccurate.

Rallis Leaves for Wedding

NC281848 Athens Armed Forces Radio in Greek 1100 GMT 29 Jul 81

[Text] President Karamanlis, owing to a slight indisposition, will not attend the wedding of the heir to the British throne, Prince Charles. The president will be represented at the wedding by Prime Minister Rallis, who left for London at 1300 today.

FOREIGN MINISTRY CONSULTS WITH FRENCH DELEGATION

Rallis Receives Minister Delegate

NC281045 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1000 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] At 0930 today, Prime Minister Rallis received Andre Chandernagor, French minister delegate to the foreign minister, charged with European affairs, who is in Athens on a 2-day official visit as of yesterday.

At 1015 Chandernagor had a private meeting with Foreign Minister Mitsotakis. A large-scale Greek-French meeting followed at the Foreign Ministry, attended, in addition to the two ministers, by Coordination Minister Paleokrassas and Deputy Foreign Minister Rendis; Greek Ambassador to Paris Stathatos and French Ambassador to Athens Rebeyrol, and other officials. The meeting covered international and bipartite issues as well as EEC matters related to agriculture and communal budget issues.

Chandernagor Visits Papandreou

NC281930 Athens Domestic Service in Greek 1830 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] Andre Chandernagor, minister delegate to the foreign minister charged with European affairs, paid a visit to the leader of the official opposition party and PASOK chairman, Andreas Papandreou, at his home in Kastri at 1700. Their talks lasted about an hour. Their discussions dealt with the problems of EEC countries and, particularly, Greece. They also examined matters that concern Greek-Turkish relations.

PART FOUR OF PASOK GOVERNMENT POLICY DECLARATION

NC261633 Athens TO VIMA in Greek 26 Jul 81 pp 7-9

[Part four of PASOK declaration of government policy: sections 5, 6 and 7, respectively, entitled "Social Program," "Quality of Life, Development," and "Levers and Methods for Change"--passages in all capitals denote boldface as published]

[Text] SOCIAL PROGRAM

SOCIAL JUSTICE--REDISTRIBUTION OF NATIONAL INCOME

153. Under today's conditions of economic crisis, the state has the imperative duty to implement social justice in order to protect the workers who are faced with a survival problem. Naturally, our basic goal is to redistribute the national income in favor of the masses which, as analyzed in our development strategy, is an element of progress toward social liberation and, on a short-term basis, contributes to a way out of recession.

154. Under the rightwing's policy, the redistribution of income is always undertaken in favor of the oligarchy of wealth. Inflation functions as an apparatus for sucking off the worker's income. At the same time, the unjust distribution of burdens, undertaken under the antipeople's taxation system, deteriorates the position of the weaker masses. Indirect taxes, which directly strike at these classes, comprise three quarters of the tax revenue, while direct taxes on individuals are primarily based upon the income of the wage earners and pensioners. Any nominal pay increases granted to the wage earners are evaporated both by inflation and by the higher income tax brackets into which their incomes are artifically led. At the same time, legal and illegal tax evasion by the high income earners deprives the state of huge sums of money, favors the further enrichment of the oligarchy and transfers additional taxation burdens upon the wage earners.

The unacceptable financial policy of the rightwing governments is not exclusively confined to the antipeople way in which it raises revenue but also affects the quality and distribution of budget expenditures. The thoughtless increase of expenditures and beneficiary incentives only go to support inflation and cut down the margins for social allocations and the satisfaction of collective needs which could contribute to a redistribution of income in favor of the people's classes.

PROTECTION OF WORKER'S INCOME

155. For the purpose of protecting worker's incomes, on a short-term basis, PASOK will proceed with implementation of an automatic adjustment of worker's remuneration on the basis of the cost of living index, including the income of pensioners, at regular intervals.

A permanent committee will be established, with the participation of all interested parties, to define the method and apparatus for implementing this measure. This committee will also examine and will make recommendations on probable differences in the implementation of automatic adjustments based on the cost of living index.

Automatic remuneration adjustment on the basis of the cost of living index is a regular defense measure for the workers. The widest possible participation of the workers in sharing the national income and strengthening the position of the low incomes and the weaker people's classes remain a permanent strategic goal.

DISTRIBUTION OF BURDENS--TAXATION POLICY

156. PASOK's government will extensively reorganize the taxation system in order to favor the workers in its redistribution function, distribute burdens more justly and increase the state's revenues.

The basic goals of our taxation policy are: suppression of tax evasion; exemption from taxation of incomes which permit only a tolerable standard of living; easing the taxation burden of the middle incomes; and readjustment of the taxation scale based on the cost of living index. Proper coordination of the readjustment of remuneration on the basis of the cost of living index and the tax scale will also assist the protection of workers' incomes. Pensions will not be taxed, naturally, up to a logical level.

The state will stop making gifts of money. All exemptions which have no social or economic purpose will be abolished. Tax facilities will be approved after a proper selection to ensure correct utilization of funds under strict supervision, in order to contribute to the goals of economic and social development.

The code of taxation criteria will be radically readjusted and taxation services will be reorganized. The tax official will be bound to the methods of proof while the "taxation basis" he will be using will not be inviolable.

The value added tax will be introduced gradually by sector to the degree permitted by technical prerequisites, the briefing of the public and the avoidance of inflationary pressures from an untimely implementation. A crusade to inform the public will also be undertaken to develop a taxation conscience so that the role of taxation is widely understood, particularly in reference to improving social allocations and improving the quality of life.

EMPLOYMENT--CONDITIONS OF WORK

157. Employment opportunities for all Greek men and women is a basic component and goal of the social and economic policy and change advocated by PASOK. The gradual creation of new employment positions will be the result of testing or readjustments in the economy and the rate of self-supporting development.

158. Within this framework and in order to cope with the direct problem of unemployment, a direct criterion for the utilization of investments will be the creation of new employment positions. Incentives will be adopted for the creation of such employment positions, primarily within small and medium businesses. Particular care will be devoted to the investigation of opportunities of employment for youths. At the same time emphasis will be given to the policy of regional development, particularly in areas which have a large rate of underemployment or unemployment.

The policy for establishing agriculture-industrial complexes, craft cooperatives and organizations at the people's base, as well as the increased involvement of local self-government in the economic and social sectors (municipal enterprises, people's housing, etc) will also increasingly contribute toward employment.

159. Establishment of self-supporting development will help solve employment problems resulting from dependence on foreign technology. Every imported commodity or piece of machinery as well as any option or decision which come from overseas involves work and processing by foreign scientists (technicians, economists etc), technicians and workers who virtually replace the human potential of our fatherland.

160. Within the general development program there will be the preparation and implementation of medium-term and long-term programs for professional planning; the organization for the utilization of labor potential and employment offices will be radically reorganized.

CONDITIONS OF WORK

161. PASOK's basic political, social and development goal will be to improve work conditions for all workers.

Unlimited strengthening of the trade union movement and the participation of workers in the adoption and control of decisions will have a decisive contribution toward implementation of this basic goal.

PASOK's government will proceed toward adoption of the 5-day work week and toward increased vacation time. After dialogue with all interested parties, it will proceed toward a gradual decrease of total employment hours. This decrease will be coordinated to increased productivity through improvement of working conditions, productivity relationships and technology.

Decisive measures will be adopted to protect health against pollution, noise and so forth, at places of work, and to prevent accidents. Toward this end there will be a detailed definition of the maximum permissible limits for the presence of dangerous chemical substances at places of work, and strict safety regulations will be implemented. There will be effective control and punishment of violators. Representatives of the workers will participate in labor inspection operations.

HEALTH--SOCIAL CARE

162. Protection of the people's health and social care are basic prerequisites for the state and are at the center of priority in PASOK's policy.

163. The rightwing state ignored this basic duty of the state. The people's health was virtually treated as a commercial commodity. It became the object of exploitation and of competition. Medical and social care are dominated by the commercial transaction in urban centers while they are insignificant or nonexistent in the Greek countryside. The geographical division of hospital beds and their concentration in the urban center is unacceptable. Approximately 40 percent of hospital beds belong to private clinics which in most cases have a hotel-like character. Every Greek family has experienced the low grade of available medical and pharmaceutical care. It has come face to face with the unacceptable system of admission to hospitals, and some member of each family has suffered under the inhumane conditions of the "wards" and the corridors where "treatment" is available.

Through individual initiative, hospital personnel attempt to meet the needs of the patients, but they do so without any equipment, deficient training, without the necessary and required specialization, and with serious shortages in hospital staff.

Despite the statistical adequacy of the number of doctors available, their unequal geographic distribution creates great shortages in the countryside. A small number of doctors are getting rich with the tolerance of the state while for the rest, and particularly for the young, the conditions of work and remuneration continue to be discouraging. Medicinal preparations have become the field of exploitation of the people by capital manipulators and constitute one third of the total expenditure for health. This expenditure, in any eventuality, barely amounts to 3 percent of the gross national income and is squandered unequally and without a plan.

GENERAL TRENDS IN PASOK'S POLICY

164. We aim at a socialized health system where health is not the subject of profit. Every citizen, regardless of his social and economic position and regardless of his place of residence, will have the equal right to high quality treatment and social care. Medical and pharmaceutical care will cover all sectors from prevention to the recuperation stage. Realization of the goals is the responsibility of the state. The citizen, however, decisively participates in the establishment of options on health policy and its control and implementation.

NATIONAL HEALTH ORGANIZATION

165. To fulfill our goals, to be able to overcome the deep structural and institutional weaknesses, we will proceed with responsible steps and by stages toward erecting a new system. Under a unified framework of principles for the provision of medical and social care, a national health organization will progressively take over implementation of this policy. Its characteristics will be administrative decentralization with its function at the central, regional and local levels, and it will have people's representatives in health councils at each one of these three levels.

Both the decentralized administration and the people's representation will proceed in parallel and will be coordinated to the broader decentralization of the state and the corresponding organizations of local self-government and democratic planning.

166. The entire country will gradually be covered by a dense network of health and social care centers. Every center will incorporate sections of social care, preventative medicine and treatment and will be operationally connected to the nearest hospital. Their distribution geographically and on the basis of population will be carried out harmoniously so that they will cover even the most distant agricultural area and will provide equal opportunities for treatment. The whole effort will start with this priority. The current agricultural medical centers will be strengthened directly and will then be incorporated into the health centers, and their operations will be coordinated.

167. Adoption of the institution of the family doctor will be another basic function which will complete the operation of the health centers. Operationally, the family doctor will belong to the health center and he will be freely chosen by every Greek citizen.

Every Greek will be supplied with a medical care identity card which will facilitate provision of care by any center whenever he finds himself out of the area in which he resides.

HOSPITAL CARE

168. Our basic goal is to decentralize hospital care. This will be carried out after full planning for the development of modern regional hospitals. At the same time, an effort will be made to modernize and improve the quality of hospital units through a program of building improvements, supply of adequate modern equipment and administrative reorganization of services.

Another basic goal will be to cover the entire urban and agricultural population with emergency medical units with the proper admission procedure and special support facilities.

169. It is certain that the quantitative and qualitative improvement of hospital care will require much time and heavy expenditures. It has, however, been established that protection of health is among the priorities of our government policy. In every given instance we will emphasize quality. Decentralization of care, which is a basic qualitative goal, will contribute effectively both to the coverage of the region and to the decongestion of the units in the capital.

The decisive participation of the workers in the administration of the hospitals will guarantee the harmonious operation of the units as well as the proper conditions of work which are both prerequisites for improving the standard of services offered.

170. Until their final and gradual incorporation under the national health organization the private clinics will operate under strict standards. The granting of loans to these private clinics for expansion will cease, and no more permits will be issued for establishment of such private clinics.

171. Special emphasis will be given to the pregraduate and postgraduate training of doctors as well as to the training and specialization of nursing and administrative personnel. Our goal is to create a medical school in every region and a school for nursing in every hospital. Working conditions will be improved and remuneration will be increased. Exclusive and full employment of doctors at the hospital will be established. Our direct goal will be to strengthen the human potential of the regional hospital.

172. A special program for social care will be established for the children, mothers, the aged, the bodily and mentally handicapped and for all susceptible groups of the population.

PHARMACEUTICAL CARE

173. Our goal is to create a socialized pharmaceutical industry which will gradually develop all the processes for the establishment of a national pharmaceutical industry for the processing of raw materials.

Control of the movement of medicines and adoption of a national prescription policy will defeat proliferation of medicines and will result in the economy of considerable resources which are being squandered today on the altar of private profiteering.

Medical and medicinal care will be coordinated with the social security system and will be made available to all Greeks without distinction.

SOCIAL SECURITY-PENSIONS

174. PASOK believes that the cohesion, solidarity and, in the end, the quality of a society is to be judged by the security provided by the state to the workers and to their families. This is security for old age, to cover accidents and to bring up children. Social protection is an inalienable right of the veterans of labor, of the handicapped, of susceptible groups of the population and of large families. It is our goal to give basic context to this right for security in life and for dignity in old age.

175. The social security system as it has been developed by the rightwing and the method in which it is functioning results in the degrading of our country and is an insult to the Greek citizen. The pensions of a large proportion of the population, like the farmer's pensions are nothing but starvation pensions. The inequalities between various classes of pensioners are unacceptable. The method in which the system is being administered and the quality of the services it supplies are a provocation to the workers. The aim of our policy is to progressively guarantee prerequisites for a national system of social security.

The reorganization of the system will be one of the primary goals of PASOK's government. With speedy and decisive steps we will eradicate the injustices, whether these affect the amount of pensions and family allowances or the prerequisites for their payment.

176. Basic coverage of the entire country and of all categories of workers so that there will not be a single Greek without social security will be our direct goal. The purchasing power of pensioners will be effectively protected through implementation of an adjustment of their pensions on the basis of the cost of living index within the framework of implementation of the measure for all workers.

At the same time, the tax exemption of all pensions up to a logical level will be implemented. The basic goal of our government will be to establish the lowest level of pension which, within the framework of the country's potential, will guarantee a dignified old age for all.

Equally basic will be our goal to make pensions amount to 80 percent of active remuneration after 35 years of social security, and this will also be limited by a maximum logical level.

Specifically, for farmers the goal of PASOK's government will be to overcome the unacceptable difference between their pensions and those of the urban sector. At the same time, we will meet other unacceptable inequalities such as those of the Greek craftsmen's and tradesmen's insurance fund (TEVE) and others.

Simultaneously, we will strive to grant an independent and adequate pension to the farming wife and to underage children of insured members of pensioners of the Farm Insurance Organization (OGA).

177. Differentiations related to the prerequisites for the gradual pensioning of people will cease to exist except in cases where they are justified by the nature of the work. The PASOK government will thus recognize the right to a pension at 55 for those people who work in hard and unsanitary professions. It also will take special measures to protect those who work seasonally and do not have the possibility of completing the required period of work for a full pension after 35 years (construction workers, waiters, hotel employees and so forth. The recognition of the right of continuous insurance coverage will be immediately settled and generalized so that pensions can be calculated on the total working life of the insured.

178. Currently, in the organizational sector, a chaotic and fickled situation prevails in the existence of 380 agents, which fall under various ministries, and a variety of judicial states. The PASOK government will proceed gradually but steadily in reconciling the pensioning and insurance charters without impinging on the acquired rights stemming from workers' contributions.

The participation of genuine workers' representatives to the decisionmaking process that concerns workers will be an immediate measure. The people's elected representatives will form the majority in the administrative councils of insurance agents.

This substantive change, together with the government's other organization measures, will allow an administrative purge and a significant reduction of the operating costs of social insurance, which are unprecedented for European conditions.

179. In addition to substantive controls to avoid waste and circumventions, the current scandalous use of insurance agents' reserves will be ended. The large reserves of the various funds for principal and ancillary insurance have been committed to and invested, in their greatest part, in low interest deposits and have been used for the financing of large capital instead of for the improvement of insurance payments, which is their purpose.

The utilization of reserves for the improvement of insurance protection and the enhancement of projects for the development of social policy connected with the insured will be promoted. For this purpose, a study will be made on the establishment of a credit foundation with the decisive participation of insurance agents.

180. Finally, the PASOK government will examine the issue of the distribution on contributions for social insurance among workers, employers and the state. Our position is that in a truly complete policy of social insurance it is necessary to increase the contribution of the public sector, which currently is the smallest in Europe, although contributions from workers' emoluments are among the highest.

181. The capitalist structure of the economy and the patriarchal viewpoints which define the structure of the family and the organization of society make up the problem of the double oppression of women. For PASOK, no meaning exists in social liberation without the liberation of women.

Socialist transformation, as PASOK envisages it, will eradicate every form of oppression. The goal of the PASOK government will be the implementation of the principle of equality among the sexes at all levels of the country's political, social, economic, family and cultural life. It is together, hand in hand, step by step, that men and women will wage the battle for the great change.

182. Right from the first days, the PASOK government will proceed toward all those institutional changes which promote equality. It will specifically abolish all those legal provisions, particularly family law, which institutionalize the disadvantageous position of women in society. They will be revised on the basis of equality between the sexes. Measures will be taken for educating the family on matters related to its structure and its function. Toward this end, the government, local self-government, people's organizations and the mass information media will all be mobilized.

Equality between the two sexes will comprise one of the basic axes of the new context of education so that education no longer will perpetuate the stereotypes of distinction between the sexes. The institution of parallel education (schools for parents, free open universities, educational television and so forth) will help in this effort.

The equal treatment and remuneration for men and women at places of work, which is the goal of PASOK's measures for the workers, is not in itself enough to achieve true sex equality at work. In addition, there will be a speeding up of the abolition of discrimination of professions into male and female professions and an increase in the participation of women in the labor market will be promoted.

Within the framework of PASOK's social policy, measures will be adopted for the social protection of woman in aid for motherhood (pregnancy, postnatal care, breast feeding), in the upbringing of children (nursery centers), in family planning, social insurance and in protection against abuse. These simultaneously will help promote equality. The broadest and most basic participation of women in decisionmaking centers is, for PASOK, an imperative prerequisite not only for equality between the sexes but also for the very cause of change itself.

183. In an effort to guarantee the implementation of the principle of equality in all sectors, there will be a legislative revision on sanctions in case of infringements and a special organization will be created to oversee the proper implementation of equality. This organization will be responsible for preparing the national program and for informing public opinion.

FOR THE NEW GENERATION

184. Our fatherland's new generation is the guarantee for the future. Its enthusiasm and drive, its militant spirit and rich method of thinking and its progressive orientation make up firm foundations for a sure and creative course toward a better tomorrow.

185. This new generation, our people's future, was condemned by the rightwing through its policy and its raising of obstacles which created dead ends. Unemployment among young workers, exploitation of their labor, unacceptable discrimination, social insurance and obstacles to education oppress the working and studying youth.

Deprivation of the democratic rights of the new generation, the tactics of the ruling class toward enforcing a planned cultural change, the limited prospects of creative utilization of free time and cultural expression only lead to uncertainty about the future They often lead to anxiety, to dead ends, to escape and to the search for "solutions" which irreparably injure the personality of the young person.

186. Having already shown all its trust and respect toward the new generation through the equal integration of youth in its organization, PASOK will deal with the new generations's problems through a complete policy.

The PASOK government will advance the consolidation of the right of young people to vote at 18. At the same, it will proceed to a reduction of the military service period, a reduction, however, that will be in tandem with maintaining the armed forces fighting ability. At the same time, conditions will be created for a constructive term of military service that respects the personality of young people.

At the same time, PASOK will tackle the problem of underemployment and unemployment for young people by implementing a special policy for hiring young people in new jobs. Simultaneously, it will promote the creation of professional guidance services and will establish the participation of responsible young people in social agencies so that their issues can be dealt with effectively and in good time. Furthermore, special possibilities are to be provided for further training of new workers (6-hour workday, night school and so forth) and work and homes to be guaranteed for new couples.

PASOK will confront with determination the spread of narcotics through decisive measures and an enlightenment campaign. At the same time, all causes of crime by young people will be substantively combated.

Local self-government will be encouraged to improve and expand youth centers and to create new ones especially in the countryside. Furthermore camping centers with suitable advanced training programs will be established for young people. Possibilities and prerequisites will be examined for the free expression of cultural creativity and for positive recreation for young people's free time, especially in the countryside.

A coordinated effort will be made, within the framework of the educational program, to stop the loss of students to countries abroad. However, students already abroad will be guaranteed the completion of their studies (deferment of military service for all countries, readjustment of amount in foreign exchange for students, etc.)

A comprehensive medical, medicinal and hospital care scheme will be established so that studying youth can be fully covered.

The establishment of a new ministry for the new generation and the utilization of free time for sports will open up new horizons for people.

SIGNIFICANCE OF SPORTS

187. The establishment of this ministry will help the development of sports and the way sports are viewed by people, in accordance with the athletic idea. Of course, sports concern youth and all ages.

PASOK considers sports to be a basic factor in the education, health and cultural elevation of the Greek people, the correct utilization of free time and a means to friendship among peoples.

Finally, the PASOK government will help in the solution of serious problems in all sectors which the unacceptable policy of the government of the right created for the overwhelming majority of sportsmen.

FOR THE EMIGRANTS

188. PASOK's policy goal ultimately is the return of Greek emigrants and their harmonious social, economic and cultural reintegration into the motherland. However, immediate measures will be taken to create specific prerequisites that will favor return. The development policy to be implemented by PASOK will encourage and certainly accelerate the return process.

The repatriates' problems, however, will be immediately confronted. At the same time, efforts will be made to improve working and living conditions of those who remain and work abroad. Also the struggle of the emigrants to maintain their national and cultural identities will be strengthened in all ways.

189. The right, which after all is responsible for the hemorrage of emigration, didn't care to help this dynamic part of Helenism tackle the multiple problems connected with unequal treatment, difficulties in adjustment to the social environment of the country of work and the education of children.

190. The PASOK government will immediately proceed into a dialogue and negotiations with the countries in which there are emigrants so that bilateral agreements may be concluded to protect the individual, political and social rights of emigrants on the basis of the principles of the agreements and "recommendations" of the International Labor Organization and other international organizations.

At the same time, Greek authorities will be activated for the immediate solution of problems falling within the jurisdiction of the Greek state, for example, the promotion of appropriate educational and cultural programs, taking into consideration the objective living conditions and the social environment of the country of work, the granting of legal help and information on their rights.

The immediate measure to be taken by the PASOK government to protect the right to vote in Greece's parliamentary elections from the emigrants' place of work will be to put an end to their unacceptable political and national detraction.

191. The policy on repatriation will aim at the emigrants' reintegration (finding work, recognition of diplomas and professional specialization, financial facilities, etc) and at solving all the problems of social insurance and adjustment (for instance, education of children, military service). [This concludes section 5 of part four of PASOK declaration of government policy. Sections 6 and 7 will be published in subsequent DAILY REPORTS.]

GOVERNMENT REJECTS REQUEST TO EXTRADITE 50 IRANIANS

JN281202 Baghdad INA in Arabic 1045 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 28 Jul (INA)--The Turkish authorities have turned down an Iranian request to extradite 50 Iranians who occupied the Iranian Embassy in Ankara last Friday.

Citing a responsible source at the Turkish Interior Ministry, the INA correspondent said Turkish law does not allow for extraditing the Iranians or putting them on trial as the charges against them are not considered serious.

Turkish press sources pointed out that Khomeyni does not enjoy any constitutional jurisdiction abroad and that the Iranians' tearing of his pictures in their country's embassy does not warrant any charge being made against them.

The Iranians had earlier occupied the embassy and seized the ballot boxes in which they found ballots bearing the name of Iranian singer (Kukush) instead of Mohammad 'Ali Raja'i, although only Khomeyni's supporters were allowed to cast votes. The Turkish authorities detained the Iranians and later released them.

COURT ARRESTS BOTH CAPTAINS OF COLLIDING VESSELS

TA271638 Ankara ANATOLIA in English 1605 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] Istanbul, 27 Jul (AA)--An Istanbul court decided to arrest the captains of a Turkish ferry and a Soviet freighter which collided off the southern entrance of the Bosporus Saturday. The expert's report to the court, submitted by a pilot from the port of Istanbul, found negligence on the parts of both the captains, assigning more than half the fault to the captain of the Turkish vessel "Harbiye," and less than half to the captain of the "Tanya Karpinskaya."

PRIME MINISTER SPEAKS ON EXPORTS, ECONOMIC MEASURES

TA241338 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Excerpts] Prime Minister Ulusu has said that Turkey's exports during the first 6 months of 1981 have increased by 57 percent compared to the same period last year. Ulusu, who is visiting Erzurum, participated in a meeting at the office of the governor, in which he was briefed on the problems facing the province as well as the integrated Erzurum rural development plan. During the meeting, the Erzurum governor pointed out that special efforts were being made in order to complete projects still under construction.

In a statement at the meeting, Ulusu said Erzurum and vicinity have great agricultural and forestry potential and he added that foreign loans would be used for the implementation of the integrated Erzurum rural development plan scheduled for 1982. He added that 16 billion lira would be spent for the realization of this plan. Recalling that similar plans were already being implemented in Cankiri and Corum, Ulusu said the plan would help the development of agriculture and livestock breeding in the area and would contribute to the economic growth of the country.

Ulusu said that, along with measures to ensure public order and security in the country, important steps were taken to promote the national economy. Recalling that no more complaints were received in weekly economic reports from governors in the provinces for lack of goods, Ulusu stressed the importance of an economic mobilization to increase exports. He noted that exports during the first 6 months of this year had increased by 57 percent compared to last year. Ulusu added that the export of industrial goods had increased by 97 percent and said efforts must be made to reach the same results in the export of agricultural products. Ulusu continued: Our intention is to meet our oil needs by selling grain.

On the subject of inflation, Ulusu said the government would avoid measures that would escalate inflation. He added that, through its tax policies and tight financial policies, the government was trying to control inflation. He appealed to the governors to pay close attention to measures to cut expenses.

Noting that problems had emerged in the field of labor, Ulusu said that a gap had emerged among workers. Ulusu said efforts would be made to bridge this gap. He recalled that from the day his government took office, work was being carried out to solve the problem of wages. He added that legislation on the wages of government employees had reached its final shape. Ulusu said university graduates would be obliged to serve in the eastern regions and government employees, particularly those working in the health or technical fields, would be sent to all parts of the country for a definite period.

From the office of the governor, Ulusu went to the Erzurum municipality for talks with the mayor. Later, Ulusu visited a police housing construction project and a public housing project for 12,000 families currently living in shanty towns, as well as a shoe factory, a coal installation and meat and fish processing installations.

Ulusu Attends Wedding

TA271122 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1000 GMT 27 Jul 81

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu departed Ankara today for London to attend the wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer. Ulusu, who will represent Head of State Evren in the ceremonies, is expected to conduct some bilateral contacts during his stay. He will return home on 31 July.

General Evren received Ulusu today before the latter's departure for London. Evren handed Ulusu a message of good will to be delivered to Queen Elizabeth II.

Meets With Carrington

TA281614 Ankara Domestic Service in Turkish 1400 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Text] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu is in London to participate in the wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana. MEDITERRANEAN NEWS AGENCY [AKAJANS] correspondent Ovul Sezisler sent the following report from there:

[Begin recording] Prime Minister Bulent Ulusu, who is in London to attend the wedding of Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer, met today with British Secretary of Foreign Affairs Lord Carrington at the Turkish Embassy for talks on bilateral relations between the two countries. Turkish Ambassador to London Rahmi Gumrukcuoglu was also present at the talks. The political and economic situation of Turkey as well as the latest developments in the Middle East were discussed during the talks which lasted 1 hour. It has been announced that the Cyprus problem was also taken up during the meeting.

Later, Prime Minister Ulusu went to the House of Commons to meet with the joint British parliamentary delegation. It has been announced that the Turkish prime minister briefed the British parliamentarians on Turkey and replied to their questions. The British parliamentarians were especially curious to know the calendar of Turkey's return to parliamentary democracy.

NATIONAL SALVATION PARTY LEADER RELEASED FROM JAIL

NC242102 Paris AFP in English 2048 GMT 24 Jul 81

[Text] Ankara, 24 Jul (AFP)--Necmettin Erbakan, head of the right-wing religious National Salvation Party, and [word indistinct] other party leaders were released from jail today, it was learned from official sources here.

Mr Erbakan was put in jail last September 12, the day of the military coup. He was accused, along with 35 other party leaders and supporters, of having formed an organization whose aim was to submit the laws of the lay state to those of religion.

Military prosecutor had asked, at the opening of his trial in April, that Mr Erbakan be sentenced to between 14 and 36 years in prison, and requested up to 10 year sentences for the other party members. Further legal actions can still be expected against Mr Erbakan and the others, observers said.

ARAYIS EXAMINES PARLIAMENT, POLITICAL PARTY ROLES

NC280935 Ankara ARAYIS in Turkish 25 Jul 81 pp 5, 6

[Editorial of the week: "Ordered New Clothes"]

[Excerpts] The points of junction in the constitutional life of Turkey are the years 1908, 1923, 1946 and 1971. These dates are recorded in history as closing certain eras and opening others and also as important junctions defining the structure of the years that followed. On these dates, the measurements for the clothes they want the community to wear in the future were taken. Models were chosen and tailors were ordered to make them.

There is a question usually asked by many at this juncture: what kind of community? The answer to this question has not always been the same for each of the dates given above. The answer to this question in 1908 was "a freer society." Various strata in society had then begun to seek a partnership in the palatial administration which centuries had ossified.

Needed in 1923 was "a brand new society," to put it more explicitly, "the introduction of a state structure." A national state was thus emerging within the framework of the national pact from an empire scattered on three continents.

The multiparty political life, which began in 1946, showed a tendency to derail between 1950 and 1960 and the foundations of a freedom-loving democracy whose institutions were assured by the 1961 Constitution were being laid. In this sense, with the basic rights and freedoms ushered in by the 1961 Constitution, Turkey had taken an honorable place among the Western democracies.

The period which began on the morning of 12 September 1980 is of a fairly different character compared with those of 1960 and 1971. Twelve September came at a time when economic crisis in Turkey had assumed enormous proportions and at a time when human beings were disgusted with terrorism which had escalated in a conscious manner.

The difference between 12 September 1980 and the 1971 period is the complete absence of a parliament. The existence of a parliament is, above all, of great importance at a period when measurements for the clothes of the future are taken. For instance, during the 1971 period, the parliament had, despite pressures, refused to accept a presidential candidate whom they were trying to impose on it. The parliament had chosen to exercise its own free will. But now the situation is different. Not only is there not a functioning parliament, but the work of the political parties and other organizations also has been banned. None of the communal forces which have assumed an organized form in recent years have any chance of being represented at the Consultative Assembly. Under the circumstances, the model of the clothes which the Turkish community will wear in the future will be determined by other forces, without consulting the community.

In other words, they will be behaving like a father who would force his now adolescent son to wear clothes which were tailored for himself. But what about the acrimony a mature young man is bound to feel after being treated like this?

Above all, the exclusion of political parties from the Consultative Assembly and even from the constitutional discussions indicates that "there are serious complaints" about these institutions.

The political parties are frequently criticized for failing, even under most critical conditions, to reach a compromise. (We must point out the injustice of putting all the political parties on the same scales when this accusation is made. At least one political party and its leader is known to have worked hard to secure, through several appeals, a common ground for a compromise.

Now it is understood from the speeches made and from the procedure adopted in connection with the drafting of the Constitution that these complaints will be taken into consideration in the establishment of a new political order.

To put it more clearly, adjustments will be made to eliminate complaints concerning the concept of party discipline which the Turkish communal development has introduced, that is, party discipline, which is viewed as the cause of the failure in the past to reach a compromise--is to be eliminated. Efforts are being made instead to develop an assembly, as in the United States, which, far from party discipline, cares for the protection of the interests of specific places, personalities or classes.

To what extent are these speculations valid from the Turkish community's point of view? Will lifting the pressure of party discipline on the National Assembly deputies enable them to render better service to their country?

Such an adjustment is, first of all, contrary to political party traditions in West European countries as well. To some extent, political life becomes meaningful through traditions. It is one of the prerequisites of democracy that political parties should prepare their programs, appear before the people and obtain their approval and that the parties should expect their members to comply with the standing rules, which are the basic means of implementing the party program.

Another prerequisite of "organized behavior," which is the basis of democracy, is the ability to control the extent of loyalty to common principles. And yet, won't the adjustment, which we think they are seeking to implement, destroy the foundations of this kind of common behavior? This gives the impression that we are heading for a fragmentary and loosely organized political life.

An assembly where every deputy "sings a different song" and where various interests based on personal positions and perceptions and not on the interests of the public can only possess an anarchic structure. An assembly devoid of party discipline is as unthinkable as an army without discipline.

When this fragmentation or slackening in political life is combined with restrictions on the work of the syndicates and associations, we form the impression that Turkey's future clothes will be tailored according to an unorganized model. It is observed that we are heading toward a society, every sector of which is deprived of the right to get organized or whose existing organizations are being slackened, spoiled or fragmented.

What will the name of such a system be? In view of the fact that democracy is the name of a regime under which basic rights and freedoms can only be protected in an organized manner, we cannot help being seriously worried about the clothes meant for Turkey in the future.

Trusting the Turkish nation, which is mature and determined enough to reestablish democracy in the true sense of the word, and enabling the various communal forces which comprise the nation to make their voices heard in an organized manner is the healthiest path that can be followed in the period ahead.

[The Turkish court rejected the plea by the Ankara republican prosecutor to remove this issue of ARAYIS from circulation.]

NETHERLANDS

CDA TELLS VAN AGT TO REOPEN TALKS ON COALITION

PM280655 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 23 Jul 81 p 1

[Excerpt] The Hague--On Wednesday evening the Christian Democratic Appeal [CDA] second chamber group jeopardized the formation of a cabinet comprising the CDA, the Labor Party (PVDA), and Democrats '66 (D'66). The group wants the agreement on the distribution of ministerial posts and on the government program to be reopened on three important points. The D'66 parliamentary group also wants some renegotiation of the proposals put forward by the negotiation leaders. The responsibilities of "coordinating minister" in the field of social and economic affairs would have to be transferred from social affairs (Den Uyl) to economic affairs, for which group leader Terlouw is the most important candidate.

CDA leader Van Agt was instructed by his parliamentary group to bring three subsections of the agreement "closer to the CDA program." On Wednesday evening Van Agt said these covered the sections on social and economic policy and defense and the question of the distribution of ministerial posts in a possible cabinet.

PVDA negotiator Den Uyl, whose parliamentary group approved the agreements reached under the leadership of the three negotiation leaders, said he was "dumbfounded, bewildered and amazed" by the CDA's response. "My parliamentary group has given me no more room for negotiations," said Den Uyl, who doubts whether new negotiations under the negotiation leaders are really possible.

Fail To Reach Agreement

PM281558 Amsterdam DE VOLKSKRANT in Dutch 25 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpt] The Hague--The parliamentary leaders of the Christian Democratic Appeal (CDA), the Labor Party (PVDA) and Democrats '66 (D'66) failed to reach agreement on Friday on the so-called "loose ends" which must still be tidied up before the creation of a center-left coalition. But it seems certain that negotiation leaders Lubbers, De Koning and Van Thijn will wind up their activities aimed at forming a CDA-PVDA-D'66 cabinet on Tuesday.

PORTUGAL

CAPE VERDIAN PRIME MINISTER DEPARTS EARLY FOR MOSCOW

LD282118 Lisbon in Portuguese to Europe 1900 GMT 28 Jul 81

[Excerpt] Prime Minister Pedro Pires of Cape Verde, who arrived in Lisbon last night for a 2-day private visit en route to Moscow, left unexpectedly for the Soviet capital today due to a change in the schedule of Aeroflot, without being able to complete his two engagements, one with President Ramalho Eanes today and another with Prime Minister Pinto Balsemo tomorrow. A handful of Soviet officials were the only ones who saw him off at Lisbon airport as, according to a spokesman at the Cape Verdian Embassy, only they know of the flight change in advance.

SOCIAL DEMOCRATS VOICE LOYALTY TO BALSEMAO

PM281520 Lisbon DIARIO DE NOTICIAS in Portuguese 25 Jul 81 p 3

[Excerpt] Democratic Alliance leader Basilio Horta has challenged the Social Democratic Party [PSD] to decide "once and for all" its stance on Pinto Balsemao's leadership: "If it is favorable, let them support him; if it is not, let them replace him." The reply was given indirectly yesterday by the Social Democrats' standing committee, which states in a communique that Pinto Balsemao was elected at a congress and, at least until the holding of another congress, "he fully exercises both functions for which he has the party's loyalty and solidarity."

FBIS DAILY REPORT CONTENTS

Western Europe

Vol VII No 146 30 July 1981

AUSTRIA

Kreisky Discusses Energy, Foreign Policy Problems [DIE PRESSE 29 Jul] E 1
New Austria-Czechoslovakia Tensions Emerge E 2

FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

FRG Supplies Poland With DM100 Million in Food Aid J 1
Expert Advocates Concerted Action Against Dollar [FRANKFURTER RUNDSCHAU 29 Jul] J 1

FRANCE

Cheysson Rules Out Extradition of Bani-Sadr K 1
PCF's Gremetz Criticizes Reagan Monetary Policy [L'HUMANITE 24 Jul] K 1
Officials Hold Talks With Congo's Sassou-Nguesso [Brazzaville] K 2
Presidents Address Newsmen [Brazzaville] K 2
Gabon President Arrives for Working Visit K 3

SPAIN

French Minister Tries To 'Clear Air' on Terrorists N 1
Communique Issued on Talks N 1
Reportage on 10th Communist Party Congress N 1
Lertxundi Hits Carrillo Report N 1
